ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN,

Ligonier, May 29, 1774.

SIR: The panic that has struck this country, threatening an entire depopulation thereof, induced me a few days ago to make an excursion to Pittsburgh to see if it can be removed, and the desertion prevented.

The only probable remedy that offered was to afford the people the appearance of some protection. Accordingly Mr. Smith, Mr. Mackay, Mr. Butler, and some others of the inhabitants of Pittsburgh, with Colonel Croghan and myself, entered into an association for the immediate raising an hundred men, to be employed as a ranging company, to cover the inhabitants in case of danger, to which association several of the Magistrates and other inhabitants have acceded and in a very few days they will be on foot.

We have undertaken to maintain them for one month, at the rate of one shilling and six pence a man per diem; this we will cheerfully discharge, at the same time we flatter ourselves that your Honour will approve the measure, and that the Government will not only relieve private persons from the burthen, but take effectual measures for the safety of this frontier, and this I am desired by the people in general to request of your Honour.

I am, sir, your most obedient, most humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR

Carlisle, June 3, 1774.

HONOURABLE SIR: I am just returned from the back country. I was up at the place where Courts are held for Westmoreland County; I found the people there in great confusion and distress; many families returning to this side the mountains, others are about building of forts in order to make a stand, but they are in great want of ammunition and arms, and cannot get a sufficient supply in these parts. I wish some method would be taken to send a supply from Philadelphia; and unless they are speedily furnished with arms and ammunition they will be obliged to desert the country. There is a fine appearance of crops over the mountains, and could the people be protected in saving them, it would be of considerable advantage, in case we should be involved in an Indian war, and obliged to raise troops, to be able to support them with provisions in that country. Captain St. Clair has wrote your Honour a full state of affairs in the back country, whose letter I send by express from this place.

I am, honourable sir, your Honour's most obedient humble servant,

JOHN MONTGOMERY

To the Hon. John Penn, Esq., Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of Pennsylvania, JOHN MONTGOMERY TO WILLIAM ALLEN, ESQ.

Carlisle, June 3, 1774.

HONOURABLE SIR: I have been lately over the mountains as far as Westmoreland Court House, about thirty miles this side of Pittsburgh. There is nothing to be seen but desolation and distress; hundreds of families are flying to the interior parts of the Province; those who would willingly make a stand are discouraged for want of ammunition and arms; which articles they cannot be supplied in only from Philadelphia, and I beg you would use your endeavours with those gentlemen who have the disposing of the public money, if there be any to send a supply of arms and ammunition.

It is a pity to lose that fine country; I believe there will be an Indian war. and therefore we ought to be prepared for it in time; I make no doubt but the Governour will call the Assembly in order to take proper measures for the protection of our back country. It is certain that a party of Shawanese are out on the frontiers, and it is the general opinion that they will strike some part of Virginia. There is one Campbell killed near Newcomer's Town, and it is feared that the traders in the Shawanese country are cut off. White Eyes is returned to Fort Pitt, and says that the Delaware Indians are well disposed, but the Shawanese are determined on war. Mr. Croghan, I find, has deserted the Virginia cause, although I have little dependance on him, yet he is capable of doing mischief; a number of the principal people over the mountains have agreed to raise one hundred men to range from Fort Pitt to Ligonier. The inhabitants of what is called the town of Fort Pitt is about to stockade it in, and to have no connection with Mr. Conolly. A fort is to be built at Hanna's, thirty miles this side Pittsburgh, one at Captain Proctor's, seven miles from Hanna's, and one at Ligonier, but the want of ammunition is a very great discouragement. There is a great number of men in that country, and I think were they properly encouraged would be able to make a stand. I flatter myself that you will exert yourself on this occasion.

I am, honourable sir, your very humble servant,

JOHN MONTGOMERY

P. S. This and a letter for his Honour goes by express from this place. I hope his expenses will be paid by Government.

INDIAN INTELLIGENCE.

June 5, 1774.

Two messengers from the Newcomer's Town, arrived with an account that, five days ago, one Conner, a white man, who lives at the Snake's Town, upon Muskingum, had returned home from the place the traders were making their canoes, and informed that the traders were all safe to the number of twenty-five or thirty, and that the Shawanese had taken great pains in protecting them, and had sent them off with their peltry, with some of their young men, and some Delawares, to protect them upon their way up the river to Pittsburgh.

These messengers further say, that all their towns, as well as the Shawanese. are now quiet, and that their Chiefs have been strong enough to prevail over their rash and foolish men who warred to take revenge upon the white people for their loss, except two small parties, consisting of thirteen men in the whole, who were friends to the Indians that suffered, and could not be restrained, though their Chiefs did every thing in their power, to prevent them from the bad undertaking; -that they hope that their brethren, the English, would not blame, or think that they countenance any evil that might be committed by those rash men, who have stole away from them to do mischief contrary to their Chiefs' desire, and were all chiefly *Mingo*s who have had the most friends killed; that one party has been out eleven days, and was to return in fifteen, and intended against that part of the river where their friends were put to death, or somewhere else upon Virginia below it. The above party have declared, as soon as they have taken revenge for their people, and returned, that they would then set down and listen to their Chiefs.

The above messengers say; that the day they left home a runner came from five Cherokees that were to be in the day following, upon business, and that the Delawares would inform us of it as soon as it was known. And that, also, they heard that one of the before mentioned parties who had gone to take revenge upon the white people, was returned, and had killed one man.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Laurel Hill, June 7, 1774.

SIR: When I had last the Honour to write to you, I acquainted you with a plan that had been fallen upon to raise some men for the defence of this country. The day before yesterday about forty marched from Hanna's Town to Turtle Creek, where they would be joined by another party. The number I do not exactly know, but it is intended that that post should be sixty men strong; and a number were, at the same time, engaged for the other necessary posts, so as that the whole will form a chain of rangers on our frontier. The subscribers requested me to take them under my direction, and in consequence I did give them orders which I will send to your Honour by the first opportunity - now I have not time to copy them; and, as I know the gentleman who carries this, I came here on purpose to see him, for should this matter go farther, he has connections in town that have weight with the House. Mr. Croghan's views I do not pretend to see, but this you may be assured of, he is at present a friend to this country, and if it depends on him we shall yet have no war; hitherto it has been my opinion we would have no war; I now begin to think otherwise; but my reasons for thinking so depend on such circumstances as can scarce be communicated. The most alarming one, however, is the retreat of the moravian Minister. A great town of the Delawares has been, in some measure, civilized by these people, and spiritual guides in all countries have ways of knowing the intentions of their flocks; another is, that on Sunday last a Council was intended with the Delawares and Six Nations at Mr. Croghan's, but the day before they went off to prevent a party of Shawanese, as they say, from falling on the white people. A little time will show whether that was their design or not. Mr. Jennings, the late Sheriff of Worthampton, who is now here, will, I believe, be in town. It is not improbable he knows more than he discovers to me. He is engaged in the Indian trade, and his partner is beloved by all the Indians. Your Honour will judge if you should see him.

I will not give your Honour any more trouble at present; and in truth I am so fatigued with riding that I doubt much if what I write is legible; but it is necessary your Honour should be acquainted with what is passing here, and I am not fond of sending expresses.

I am, sir, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,
AR. ST. CLAIR.

P. S. In a very particular manner our soldiers are directed to avoid every occasion of dispute with the people in the service of Virginia.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, June 8, 1774.

SIR: Since I wrote to you yesterday I have received two letters from Mr. Croghan, which I now enclose. Though he seems to say that peace may be continued, I believe it is not his sentiments; and the circumstance of his going to Williamsburg, whatever design he may avow, is to be out of the way of danger; for he dare neither trust the white people nor the Indians.

We have a certain account of some mischief having been done up Cheat river. Eight or nine people are killed; but whether it is only designed as revenge, or is really the beginning of a war, we cannot yet judge; I shall, however, take the earliest opportunity to inform you of what passes, and am, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,
AR. ST. CLAIR.
Hon. John Penn, Esq.

GEORGE CROGHAN TO ARTHUR ST. CLAIR.

June 4, 1774.

SIR: The frequent reports brought from Hanna's Town, of two hundred men being raising there, has alarmed Captain Conolly very much, and though I told Mr. Jo Campbell the whole reason and intention was no more than to have a number of men to scout between the river Ohio and of inhabitants down to Ligonier, in order to prevent the flight of that part of said country; and in case of great necessity that those men would be offered to act with the Virginians for the general defence of the country.

FOURTH SERIES.

Now, as both Conolly and Campbell know this measure is the only one to stay the people from flying, and see that the country will condemn Conolly and his officers for not pursuing the same measure, they want to make it appear in another light, and that the intention is to invade the rights of Virginia.

Now, the greatest caution and prudence is necessary, and I request that you will station those parties to scout back of the settlements between Turtle Creek and Ligonier, which was our intention of having them, and take care that no threats against Virginia be made use of by any person concerned, as, since Mr. Jo Campbell came up, I see the design is to create a fresh difference between Governour Penn and Lord Dunmore, which ought to be avoided with the greatest care. Since Campbell came up affidavits are taken of every information that is brought up, and spies employed; though when he was informed of the murders committed on the Indians, he never took any measures to apprehend them. He has made two attacks on me, by letters sent by a Sergeant and twelve men, which letters I answered, but would not gratify him to send them by his party.

The truth is, they found this difference likely to be made up by the Indians, and find that nothing but misrepresenting our measures, and drawing on a fresh dispute between the Government of Pennsylvania and Virginia, can keep this man in command; wherefore I have determined to go to Williamsburg myself, and represent the state of the country, as soon as I hear the event of our last messages to the Indians, by the Deputies, which I believe will be in five or six days, and I flatter myself entirely satisfactory to every well-wisher of the peace and tranquillity of his country.

Before I go you and I must have a meeting, that you may be able to inform the Governour what I am going about; but I would have you settle the scouting party so as to act with prudence, and give no cause for suspicion of any design against Virginia, before you come up.

I am, sir, your most humble servant,

GEORGE CROGHAN,

To Arthur St. Clair, Esq.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM ALEXANDER M'KEE, ESQ., AGENT FOR INDIAN AFFAIRS AT FORT PITT, DATED
JUNE 10, 1774.

You must, ere this, be acquainted with the critical situation of this country; the unhappy disturbances which have lately arose between the Virginians and the Natives, the event of which still continues doubtful whether matters will be brought to a general rupture or accommodation. Hostilities, however, have been committed on both sides, but at present there seems to be a cessation. Some wise interposition of Government is truly necessary, and would undoubtedly restore peace; without it it is impossible, and thousands of the inhabitants must be involved in misery and distress. But to do the Indians justice, they have given great proofs of their pacific disposition, and have acted with more moderation than those who ought to have been more rational, a few Mingoes and Shawanese excepted, who have been long refractory. There are more effectual means of chastising them for their insolence and perfidy, than by involving the defenceless country in a war, which there is too much reason to fear, at this time, will become general, and which must inevitably be the destruction of this country.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, June 12, 1774.

SIR: In my last letter I had the honour to inform you, that in consequence of the ranging company which had been raised here, there was reason to hope the people would return to their plantations and pursue their labours; and for some time, that is, a few days, it had that effect; but an idle report of Indians having been seen within the party, has drove them every one into some little fort or other, and many hundreds out of the country altogether. This has obliged me to call in the parties from where they were posted, and have stationed them, twenty men at the Bullock Pens, twenty men at Turtle Creek, thirty at Hanna's Town, twenty at Proctor's, and twenty at Ligonier: as these places are now the frontier towards the Alleghany, all that great country betwixt the road and that river being totally abandoned, except by a few who are associated with the people who murdered the Indians, and are shut up in a small fort on Connymach, equally afraid of the Indians and officers of justice.

Nothing can be more surprising than the dread the people are under, and it is truly shameful that so great a body of people should have been driven from their possessions without even the appearance of an enemy; for certain it is, as yet, no attempt has been made on what is understood to be Pennsylvania, nor any other mischief done than the killing the family on Whitelick Creek, which I informed you of before, and which, from every circumstance, appears rather to have been private revenge than a national stroke. A fresh report of Indians being seen near Hanna's Town, and another party on Braddock's Road, set the people agoing again yesterday. I immediately took horse and rode up to inquire, and found it, if not totally groundless, at least very improbable; but it was impossible to persuade the people so, and I am certain I did not meet less than a hundred families, and I think two thousand head of cattle, in twenty miles riding.

The people in this valley still make a stand; but yesterday they all moved into this place, and I perceive are much in doubt what to do. Nothing in my power to prevent their leaving the country shall be omitted, but if they will go I suppose I must go with the stream. It is the strangest infatuation ever seized upon men; and if they go off now, as harvest will soon be on, they must undoubtedly perish by famine, for Spring crop there will be little or none.

By a letter from Mr. Mackay, of yesterday, I had a very extraordinary piece of intelligence, "that Lord Dunmore had empowered Mr. Conolly to settle a line of jurisdiction with the Pennsylvania Magistrates." This, it seems, he gives out himself, but it is too absurd to be believed. It would give much pleasure to the friends of Government in this part of the country, to hear that your Commissioners had succeeded in that business, as it seems to be the only thing that can restore us peace and good order.

A very little time will discover the intentions of the Indians, and if they should proceed to further hostilities, I will give you notice by express, if it appears to be necessary. I am, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

P.S. I have just heard that Mr. Conolly has sent a party of militia down to Wheeling, with orders to fall on every Indian they meet, without respecting friend or foe.

DEVEREUX SMITH TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Pittsburgh, June 12, 1774.

SIR: I acknowledge your Honour's favour of the 22d of April, which was forwarded to this place a few days ago from Staunton. Mr. Mackay waited on my Lord Dunmore at Williamsburg, and laid before him some facts relative to Dr. Conolly's conduct at this place, upon which his Lordship thought proper to enlarge us. Mr. Mackay wrote from Staunton, in order to acquaint your Honour thereof, but his letter was returned to this place at the same time I had the pleasure of receiving yours.

It gives me great satisfaction to find that you approve of our conduct, and should be happy to hear that those gentlemen that are gone to Williamsburg might settle with my Lord Dunmore to your satisfaction. I am much obliged by your Honour's kindness in directing Colonel Wilson to procure bail or credit for us. I have been extremely well treated by the gentlemen of Virginia during my confinement.

We are in a miserable situation here at present, owing to the appearance of an Indian war (which we think unavoidable) and the tyrannical treatment we met with from Dr. Conolly. I have wrote to Dr. Smith, and gave him as exact an account of the present state of this country as I am capable of, and shall always strive to render to this Province any services in my power.

I am, with respect, sir, your Honour's most obedient and humble servant,

DEVEREUX SMITH,

DEVEREUX SMITH TO DR. SMITH,

Pittsburgh, June 10, 1774.

SIR: I returned to this place the 11th of May, and found my family in the greatest confusion, owing to the appearance of an Indian war, and the tyrannical treatment they received from Doctor Conolly in my absence. Before I was illegally taken from my family the 10th of April, I understood from some of the Shawanese Chiefs, at a Council with Mr. McKee, the Indian Agent, under Sir William Johnson, that they were much dissatisfied at the rapid progress the Virginians had made down the Ohio in settling the lands below the purchase, viz: below Sciota river, which they looked upon as a great encroachment on their liberties and properties; they also expressed their surprise to see a number of armed men assembled at this place with their colours at different times, making a warlike appearance, and said, that after the first muster of the 25th of January, some of the militia: fired on them at their camps near the mouth of the Sawmill Run.

These Shawanese Chiefs were sent for by Mr. Croghan last summer, and came here about the 25th of December, and remained here till the 1st of April; during which time they often complained to the inhabitants of this place, that Mr. Croghan had sent for them to do business, and kept them in great distress for want of provisions and clothing; upon which the inhabitants were at some expense supplying them during their stay, and when they were going home made a collection of goods for them, in order to send them off satisfied.

On the 15th of April, Mr. William Butler sent off a canoe loaded with goods for the Shawanese Towns, and on the 16th it was attacked about forty miles from here by three Cherokee Indians, who had waylaid them on the river bank. They killed one white man, and wounded another, and a third made his escape. They plundered the canoe of the most valuable part of the cargo and made off; but as they were Cherokees, we were sure they did this for sake of plunder alone, therefore thought no more of it than the loss. As Mr. Butler was under the necessity of sending people to assist in bringing his peltry from the Shawanese Towns, he sent off another canoe on the 24th of April, in care of two Indians, who were well known to be good men, and two white men. On the 27th, about ninety miles from here, they were fired upon from shore, and both the Indians were killed, by Michael Cresap, and a party he trod with him; they also scalped the Indians. Mr. Cresap then immediately followed the above mentioned Shawanese Chiefs some small distance lower down where they were encamped, and fired upon them, killed one and wounded two more. The Indians fled to the Delaware Towns, which were the nearest, and are greatly exasperated at this treatment, as they did not expect any such thing from the English. About that same time, a party, headed by one Greathouse, barbarously murdered and scalped nine Indians at the house of one Baker, near Yellow Creek, about fifty-five miles down the river. Owing to these cruelties committed by Cresap and Greathouse, the inhabitants of Rackoon and Wheeling fled from that settlement, and are chiefly gone to Virginia. After Cresap had been guilty of these cruelties, he returned to Maryland, but has since came back with a party of men. Cresap wrote to Conolly, and Mr. McKee, threatening that if they did not give them security that the Indians would not do any mischief for six months, that he, Cresap, would immediately proceed to commit further hostilities against the Indians. On the 21st of April, Conolly wrote a letter to the inhabitants of Wheeling, telling them that he had been informed, by good authority, that the Shawanese were ill disposed towards white men, and that he, therefore, required and commanded them to hold themselves in readiness to repel any insults that might be offered by them. This letter fell into the hands of Cresap, and he says that it was in consequence of this letter, and the murder committed by the Cherokees on Mr. Butler's people, that he committed the hostilities above mentioned.

I am informed, that on the 6th day of May, Mr. Croghan sent Captain White Eyes, (one of the Indian Chiefs,) in company with some of our traders, to acquaint the Shawanese and Delawares that the outrages which had been committed by some of our ill disposed white people, were without the least countenance from Government. This Indian promised to use his best endeavours to accommodate matters, and returned the 24th of May, and brought with him ten white men, who had been protected by the Delawares eight days, in their towns, and guarded safe to this place. He also brought a speech from the Delawares, from which we have great reason to believe they are not inclined for war. We also believe that they will endeavour to preserve the lives of the traders that are now amongst the Shawanese. He also brought from the Shawanese Chief (called the Hardman) an answer to a speech sent to them by Mr. Croghan upon this occasion, in which he signifies that the Shawanese are all warriors, and will not listen to us until they have satisfaction of us for what injuries they have received from the Virginians, &c.

White Eyes informs us that a Mingo man called Logan, (whose family had been murdered in the number,) had raised a party to cut down the Shawanese Town traders at the Canoe Bottom, on Hockhocking Creek, where they were pressing their peltry; but we have heard since that the Shawanese have taken them under their care until matters are further settled, but God knows what fate they have met with; we hope they are still alive, and if it be so they have a chance to come in, if the outrageous behaviour of the Virginians do not prevent them. The sixth of this month we had an account from Muddy Creek, (empties into the river Monongahela, near Cheat river,) that the Indians had killed and scalped one white man, his wife, and three children, and that three more of the same man's children were missing, and has since been confirmed. We suppose this to be Logan's party, and that they will do more mischief before they return. About the 20th of May, one Campbell, lately from Lancaster, was killed and scalped near Newcomer's Town, and one Proctor, at Wheeling, by a party of Shawanese and Mingoes.

The Virginians in this part of the country seem determined to make war with the Indians at any rate. The one half of this country is ruined to all intents and purposes, which, a few months ago, was in a flourishing way. Conolly has embodied upwards of one hundred men, and will have this fort in good order in a short time. He is gathering in all the provisions he can possibly get from the country, which, he says, will be paid for by the Government of Virginia. The militia here, by Conolly's orders, shoot down the cattle, sheep and hogs, belonging to the inhabitants, as they please; they also press horses, and take by force any part of our property they think proper, and tell us that they have authority so to do; therefore you may judge of our situation at present. Before I returned from Virginia, about the 5th day of May, Mr. Conolly sent an armed guard of men to my house, who attempted to take away a quantity of blankets and bags by force. Mr. William Butler, who lived at my house at that time, had a great dispute in defence of my property, and put them out with great difficulty, on which they complained to Conolly, who immediately despatched a party of twelve men to the house in order to put their villainous scheme in execution, on which my wife locked her doors. Conolly came at the same time, and began to abuse Mr. Butler and my wife. He also threatened to send Mr. Butler to Virginia in irons, and to take every farthing's worth of his property from him; damned my wife, telling her the same, and that he would let her know that he commanded here, &c., &c.

On the 27th day of May, Mr. Mackay and I rode out about seven miles from town, and on our return was met on the road by a man from Mrs. Mackay, who came to tell us that Conolly had sent a party of men to pull down Mr. Mackay's house. When we came home we found a guard of six armed men pulling down two outhouses in Mr. Mackay's back yard. He ordered them to desist, saying that he would defend his property at the risk of his life; upon which the men agreed to wait until we would talk to Mr. Conolly about the matter. We walked toward the fort with that intention, but was met by one Aston, (a Captain of Conolly's.) at the head of about thirty armed men, followed by Conolly. Aston approached, and in a blasphemous manner accosted Mr. Mackay, ordering the Virginia Sheriff to seize him; upon which the Sheriff, Aston, and several others, seized him in a valiant manner; Aston, presenting a rifle at Mr. Mackay, threatened to shoot him down, which some of the bystanders prevented. Conolly came up at the same time in a great rage, telling Mr. Mackay that he would send him to Virginia in irons. We endeavoured to expostulate with him, but all to no purpose, but told him that he would tear down his dwelling house, if he thought proper. He also accused Mr. Mackay with being refractory on many occasions, and a fomentor of sedition, &c., in opposition to the Colony of Virginia, and that he had encouraged his servants to abuse one of his men, who was then present, calling the man to prove what he asserted, but the man cleared Mr. Mackay and his servant, saying that it was a man of Mr. Spear's who had struck him. Conolly being there confuted before upwards of sixty persons, said it was all one, as it was one of the Magistrates' servants.

Aston attempted to run the muzzle of his gun at Mr. Mackay's face, but was prevented; in the mean time Conolly suffered a forsworn rascal (one Reily) to shake a stick at Mr. Mackay, and abuse him in an outrageous manner, without bringing him to an account for so doing. In this manner Conolly enforces all his laws.

The 7th of this inst., one Christy returned to this place from Williamsburg, and brought Conolly a packet from my Lord Dunmore; he also brought some late newspapers, in which we had an account of the House of Burgesses being dissolved by Lord Dunmore. It happened that Mr. Mackay told this news to a neighbour man, and that same evening Conolly came to his house, accompanied by one of his officers, and began to abuse him in a most blasphemous and outrageous manner, accusing him of being the cause of a meeting amongst his men, and alleged that he had asserted there was no provision made by the House of Burgesses for the payment of the men under his command. Conolly continued to threaten Mr. Mackay with confinement. He read a paragraph of a letter to us, in which Lord Dunmore acquaints him of the Commissioners of Philadelphia being at Williamsburg, and the proposals they made in regard of a temporary line were so extravagant that nothing could be done in it, but that he, Conolly, might settle a line at present with the Magistrates of this county, allowing it to be twelve, or at least ten miles east of this place. We told him that no Magistrate in this county could pretend to do any thing of the kind without instructions from the Government of Pennsylvania. At this time the Magistrates had raised a number of men in behalf of the Government for the protection of the frontiers, and to prevent the country from being entirely depopulated. About thirty of them were stationed at the Bullock Pens, seven miles east of this town. Conolly told us that he was determined to go, or send out the next day, with a party, to dispossess our men of that post, and if they did not behave themselves he would not suffer one Pennsylvanian to live on this side the Laurel Hill.

June 12. Mr. Conolly purposes to march from this place to-morrow with two hundred men to build a stockade fort at Wheeling Creek. and another near Hockhocking Creek; and says he will send parties, at the same time, against the Shawanese Towns; and I am of opinion that they will make no distinction betwixt Shawanese and Delawares, as they are determined to have a general war. Mr. Croghan has set off this morning to Williamsburg, as he says, to represent the state of this Country to Lord Dunmore and Council, as also to acquaint them of Mr. Conolly's rash conduct at this place, which he seems to disapprove of. We are this day informed, that the three children before mentioned, that were missing near Muddy Creek, were found dead, and scalped, and two other men, in sight of a fort that is lately built on Dunkard Creek, up the river Monongahela, all supposed to be done by Logan's party. The inhabitants of the town are busily employed in stockading it round about, yet have no reason to expect any thing better than ruin and destruction.

Mr. Mackay wrote to Governour Penn from Staunton, the 5th of May, informing him of our enlargement. I also wrote to you, and Doctor Smith, at the same time, but these letters were since returned to us hereby Colonel Wilson, as also the Governour's letter, which we have answered. I would lie glad to hear the candid opinion of the Governour and Council concerning those extraordinary disturbances.

I am, sir, your most obliged humble servant,
DEVEREUX SMITH.

P. S. Please to present without delay the Governour's letter, which you have enclosed.

June 13. We have this morning received certain accounts from Ten Mile Creek, (which empties into the Monongahela ten miles above Red Stone Fort,) that on the 11th inst. Francis McClure was killed, and one Samuel Kincade badly wounded. These men were heading a party of men in pursuit of Logan, McClure as Captain, and Kincade as Lieutenant; and owing to their bad conduct they advanced some considerable distance ahead of their men, and were discovered by Logan. When the party came up they found their Captain killed and Lieutenant wounded. Part of them staid to take care of the wounded man, and the rest pursued the Indians. It is said that one of Logan's men was wounded.

DEVEREUX SMITH.

The inhabitants of this country are about petitioning Governour Penn by this opportunity.

ÆNEAS MACKAY TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Pittsburgh, June 14, 1774.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: The deplorable state of affairs in this part of your Government, at this time, is truly distressing; we are robbed, insulted, and dragooned by Conolly and his militia in this place and its environs. All ranks share of his oppression and tyranny, but the weight of his resentment falls heaviest on me, because he imagines I oppose his unwarrantable measures most. On the 27th of last May he ordered a party of his militia to pull down and destroy a sheep house and stable of mine, in a violent and outrageous manner, and told me at the time, he would take the house I lived in, if he wanted it, and countenanced a perjured villain, a constable of ours, that deserted to him, before he was three months sworn in, of the name of Reily, to shake a stick at my nose, before his face, without reproof. This circumstance, together with some more of the Doctor's conduct, I have communicated to my Lord Dunmore by letter, but what effect that may have time only will show.

Mr. Croghan, who has been grossly abused by our Bashaw, lately is gone to Williamsburg to represent every part of his conduct to the Governour and Council, in its true light; although others doubt, I am very certain Mr. Croghan is earnest and sincere respecting that intention, for he joins the rest of the inhabitants in charging all our present calamity to the Doctor's account.

On the other hand, we do not know what day or hour we will be attacked by our savage and provoked enemy, the Indians, who have already massacred sixteen persons to our certain knowledge about and in the neighbourhood of Ten Mile Creek. Last Saturday, a party of the militia, consisting of one Captain, one Lieutenant, and forty Privates, were on their march to join Conolly at the mouth of Wheeling, where he intended to erect a stockade fort; when, on a sudden, they were attacked only by four Indians, who killed the Captain on the spot, and wounded the Lieutenant, and made their escape without being hurt, and the party after burying their Captain, returned with their wounded Lieutenant; so that Conolly's intended expedition is knocked in the head at this time.

I am your Honour's most humble and most obedient servant,

ÆNEAS MACKAY.

To Governour Penn.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, June 16, 1774.

SIR: There is very little alteration in the affairs of this country since my last, which was a few day ago, only we have a certain account of two or more people being killed by the Indians, one Mr. McClure and Kincade, the person for whom you lately issued a special commission of the peace. They it seems, were leading a party of forty men to join Captain Conolly at Wheeling, and were attacked by four Indians, who made their escape without so much as being fired at.

Before this accident, Mr. Conolly had determined to march from Fort Pitt, (which he now calls Fort Dunmore) with three or four hundred men he had embodied for the purpose of chastising the Shawanese, and to erect forts at Wheeling and Hockhocking to overawe the Indians, and from thence to carry the war into their own country; of this, he was pleased to inform me by letter, and to desire I would act in concert with him. You may be assured sir, I shall be cautious of taking any step that may have the most distant tendency to draw this Province into an active share in the war they have had no hand in kindling; but I have since received accounts that the above murders instantly changed the plan, and Mr. Conolly remains in garrison. It is said some of his party discovered a very large body of Indians crossing the Ohio, below Wheeling; if that be true, as it is not improbable, we may expect soon to hear of much mischief being done, as there is not the least doubt of several small parties being out at this time. It is some satisfaction the Indians seem to discriminate between us and those who attacked them, and their revenge has fallen hitherto, on that side of the Monongahela, which they consider as Virginia; but least that should not continue, we are taking all possible care to prevent a heavy stroke falling upon the few people who are left in this country. Forts at different places, so as to be most convenient, are now nearly completed, which gives an appearance of security for the women and children, and with the ranging parties which have been drawn in to preserve the communication, has in a great degree, put a stop to the unreasonable panic that had seized them, but in all of them there is a great scarcity of ammuition, and several messengers have returned from below, without being able to purchase.

I am very anxious to know whether the ranging companies are agreeable to your Honour or not, both because the expense of continuing them, will be too heavy for the subscribers, and that I am every day pressed to increase them. This I have positively refused to do, until I receive your Honour's instructions, and I well know how averse our Assemblies have formerly been to engage in the defence of the frontiers, and if they are still of the same disposition, the circumstance of the white people being the aggressors, will afford them a topic to ring the changes on, and conceal their real sentiments.

Last night I received several petitions from several different parts of the country, which I have now the honour to transmit to you by Doctor McKenzie, from Pittsburgh. The disturbances of this country has ruined his business, but should the Province think of raising troops, he would be glad, I believe, to be employed. I can, sir, recommend him to your Honour as an expert surgeon, and gentlemanly man. He has served as a surgeon in the navy.

I was mistaken in saying that two people were killed on Ten Mile Creek. Mr. McClure was killed, and Kincade wounded; however, it would have been no great matter if he had been killed, as he had accepted a commission in the service of Virginia, so soon after the notice you had been pleased to take of him, at the request of his father-in-law, Colonel Wilson. I am afraid there are some more of our Virginia friends that do not play us fair, but it is not a time at present for purgation.

Unless you shall forbid me, I shall continue to write to you in this manner, whatever occurs, as it is the only way I have at present, to show your Honour, that I am, with the greatest respect, your Honour's most obedient, and most humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

P. S. For any thing that has escaped me, I take the liberty to refer you to Doctor McKenzie.

The day before yesterday, I had a visit from Mr. Ward. He informed me Mr. Croghan set out for Williamsburg, the day before, to represent the distresses, he says, of the people of this country. At the same time, he informed me, that the Delawares had got notice of the murder of Wipey, and that Mr. Croghan had desired him to come to me on that occasion, that he advised that they should be spoke to, and some small present made to them as condolence, and to cover his bones, as they express it. I do not well know what to do. Such a present as some few of us would be willing to contribute for, might be thought unworthy of the Province, and such an one as might come up to my idea would be great presumption to offer. This however, is certain, the Delawares are still friendly, and it may perhaps, prevent a general war if they can be kept in temper.

I believe I shall go to Fort Pitt to-morrow, and will consider well of it.

WILLIAM THOMPSON TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Cumberland County. June 19, 1774.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: By James Caveat, Esquire, who is just come down from Westmoreland, there is a certain account of a number of people being killed by the Indians, on the west side of the Monongahela river. Mr. Caveat was on his way to Philadelphia, (believing the Assembly was setting,) to lay the indifferent situation of the people of Westmoreland before your Honour, and the Assembly, and to pray the aid of Government in said country, otherwise, it must be entirely evacuated.

They have at their own risk raised two hundred men, which are stationed in the best manner that number will admit of, to guard their frontier; but they are only raised for one month; and indeed these poor people are not able to pay that expense, much less are they in a condition to support troops for any length of time.

I took the earliest opportunity of acquainting the people over the hills of your friendship towards them, in procuring without loss of time, a quantity of arms and ammunition, which was now on the way up for their use, and also assured them that you would do every thing on your part for their preservation, and hoped the like disposition would be found in the Assembly if called on for assistance.

As that part of the country was entirely without ammunition, Mr. Montgomery and myself purchased and sent off, about ten days since, all the powder and lead we could get in Carlisle, which I expect is safe up before this.

It is said the Indians have fixed a boundary betwixt the Virginians and us, and say, that they will not kill or touch a Pennsylvanian. But it will be best not to trust them, and I am doubtful, a short time will show to the contrary.

I am, your Honour's most obedient, and very humble servant,

WILLIAM THOMPSON.

To the Honourable John Penn, Esquire.

LORD DUNMORE TO CAPTAIN. JOHN CONOLLY.

Williamsburg, June 20, 1774.

SIR: I have received your letter of the 8th instant, by express. I am sorry to hear of the murders committed by the Indians, but hope the prudent steps you have taken, will put a stop to further cruelties of that kind. I entirely approve of the measure you have taken of building a fort at Wheeling, and also of marching into the Shawanese Towns, if you think you have a sufficient force; and I desire you will keep a constant correspondence with Colonel Andrew Lewis, that you may co-operate in such measures as may be thought effectual. I hope you will prevail on the Delawares, and the well affected part of the Mingoes, to move off from the Shawanese.

It is highly necessary that you continue at Fort Dunmore, and I think therefore, that you could not do better than send Captain William Crawford with what men you can spare to join him, and to co-operate with Colonel Lewis, or to strike a stroke himself, if he thinks he can do it with safety. I know him to be prudent, active, and resolute, and therefore very fit to go on such an expedition, and if any thing of that kind can be effected, the sooner it is done the better. I refer you to my letter by Captain Penticost, by whom I sent you some blank commissions.

I would recommend it to all officers going out on parties to make as many prisoners as they can of women and children; and should you be so fortunate as to reduce those savages to sue for peace, I would not grant it to them on any terms, till they were effectually chastised for their insolence, and then on no terms, without bringing in six of their heads as hostages for their future good behaviour, and these to be relieved annually, and that they trade with us only for what they may want. I am, &c., DUNMORE.

To Captain Conolly.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, June 22, 1774.

SIR: In my last I informed you of Mr. Croghan setting out for Williamsburg, since which I had a letter from him from his own house. He therein informed me that he found the country so much alarmed at his going down, that he chose to return, and trust his business to letters, and desired to see me as soon as possible. Accordingly I set out for Pittsburgh, the 17th instant, and had the happiness to find two of the principal traders arrived there with a great quantity of peltry, and that they had been conducted there by some of the Shawanese Chiefs, and that the rest of the traders, with their horses and skins, were got as far as the Newcomer's Town, under the protection of another Shawanese party.

The traders inform us that they have met with no ill treatment from the Shawanese; but on the contrary, they were at the greatest pains to protect them from the Mingoes, who had suffered most from the white people, and who came to their towns several times with the intention to murder them. It seems they did not think it prudent to bring the Shawanese to Pittsburgh, but conducted them from some distance below that place, through the woods to Colonel Croghan's. Mr. Conolly ordered out a party of forty men to make them prisoners, as he says.

The people of the town were alarmed at seeing a party march out the rout they took, and suspected they were intended to attack a party of our people stationed at the Bullock Pens, about seven miles from thence, which it seems has some time been threatened, and acquainted me with what they feared. I immediately waited on Mr. Conolly, and insisted in direct terms, he should tell me if he had any such design, he assured me he had not, but that as the Shawanese had committed depredations on his Majesty's subjects, he had ordered out that party to make those prisoners who had escorted the traders; and that might have been his real intention; but I am convinced those who were to put it in execution would not have made prisoners. We put it out of their power to do either, by sending them over the river.

Your Honour will judge from this circumstance that the crew about Fort Pitt, (now Fort Dunmore,) are intent on a war, for were not that the case, honour, generosity, gratitude, every manly principle, must have prompted them to be kind, and afford protection to those poor savages, who had risked their own lives to preserve the lives and property of their fellow-subjects; but why need I mention this circumstance, one at least as strong is that John Drinning, who publicly acknowledged, or rather boasted, of having killed the Indians, with Mr. Cresop, is one of Mr. Conolly's Lieutenants, and is at the present time out some where with the command of a party to take scalps, from friends I suppose; a murderer, I am sure, will never meet an enemy on fair terms.

I mentioned something of a condolence in my last, and as the Shawanese were up, I suffered myself to be persuaded by Mr. Croghan to collect a small present of goods for that purpose, which was on Sunday morning to have been divided and sent to the three nations, the Six Nations, Shawanese, and Delawares; but Mr. Conolly's frolic prevented it that day. Next morning, the Indians, being some Six Nations, and some Delawares, were brought down to Mr. Croghan's and were shown the condolence, and acquainted that it was ordered for them by you, and that when their Chiefs arrived they would be spoke to, and the present delivered, and a messenger was sent after the Shawanese to acquaint them likewise. As the Indians themselves make a distinction betwixt us and our neighbours, it may perhaps be a means of keeping peace in our quarter at least. I hope your Honour will not be offended at my taking this upon myself. The value of the goods is but trifling, not exceeding thirty or forty pounds. I have inclosed a list of them, but the person from whom I got them neglected to affix the prices.

Whatever may be Mr. Croghan's real views, I am certain he is hearty in promising the general tranquillity of the country, indeed, he is indefatigable in endeavouring to make up the breaches, and does, I believe, see his mistake in opposing the interests of your Government; and I doubt not but a very little attention would render him as serviceable as ever. Real friendship you must not expect, for, by his interest alone he is regulated, yet he may be useful, as by and by you will probably want to make another purchase. I purposely gave him an opportunity of opening a correspondence with me, which he embraced, and from what I can see, he would be glad to be on better terms with your officers than he has been; but this is only conjecture.

With this, your Honour will receive an extract from Mr. McKee's journal of all the transactions with the Indians, from the beginning of the troubles, as also another of Mr. Conolly's advertisements. I know not well what he means by it, but I believe his design is to distress the Indian trade.

It is true what I mentioned about the boundary. Mr. Conolly read me part of a letter from Lord Dunmore on the subject. He says the demands of the Pennsylvanians were so extravagant, that he could do nothing with them, but that he, (Conolly) may settle a line of jurisdiction with the Magistrates of Westmoreland, ten or twelve miles eastward of Pittsburgh, or a more convenient distance, and cautions him at the same time to give no just cause of offence to the Magistrates acting under the authority of this Province. I know not how the Magistrates were to settle lines.

I received your Honour's favour of the 7th instant, and am happy to inform you the panic is in some measure over. The ammunition not yet come to hand; but a quantity arrived from Carlisle, which eased the people's mind a little; but the damage done to the country by the desertion of the people, and the loss of the Spring crop, is very great, and if any thing should happen to interrupt the harvest, we must have an absolute famine - this I hope will not be the case.

I am most respectfully, your Honour's most obedient, and most humble servant, Aa. ST. CLAIR.

P. S. Logan is returned with thirteen scalps and one prisoner, and says he will now listen to the Chiefs.

To Governour Penn.

JOHN CONOLLY'S ADVERTISEMENT,

Whereas, the Shawanese have perpetrated several murders upon the inhabitants of this county, which has involved this promising settlement in the most calamitous distress. And whereas, I have very good reason to believe that certain imprudent people continue to carry on a correspondence with, and supply the said enemies with dangerous commodities to the infinite prejudice of all his Majesty's subjects, and expressly contrary to an act of the Assembly, prohibiting such unwarrantable intercourse: These are therefore, in his Majesty's name, strictly to require and command all his Majesty's subjects to take notice hereof, and to deport themselves as the law directs, as they may be assured that a contrary conduct will draw on them the utmost severity thereof.

Given under my hand at Fort Dunmore, this 15th day of June, 1774. JOHN CONOLLY.

EXTRACT TAKEN FROM A JOURNAL OF INDIAN TRANSACTIONS.

May 1, 1774. Information having been given that sundry depredations had been committed upon several Indian parties going down the river from this place, by the white inhabitants settled upon the Ohio, near Wheeling and Yellow Creek, the following Message was despatched to King Custotoga, Captains White Eyes, Pipe, and such other Chiefs as were most contiguous to this place.

"BRETHREN: We are under the necessity, from some disagreeable intelligence which we have just received, of calling upon your immediate attendance at this place, where we shall have some things of importance to communicate to you, which intimately concerns the welfare of us both; this will be sufficient we expect, to induce your speedy appearance here, as delays upon this occasion may be attended with the most dangerous consequences." (A string of white wampum.)

May 3. A meeting held at Colonel Croghan's house, at which was present, Captain Conolly, the Commandant of the militia, and several inhabitants of Pittsburgh, with Goyasutha, the White Mingo, and a deputation of the Six Nation Indians, who were here upon their way with Speeches from Sir William Johnson to the Hurons and Wabash Confederacy.

"BRETHREN: We are sorry to inform you that we have lately received accounts of some outrages being committed upon several of your people going down the Ohio, by some ill disposed white persons settled upon it; and we take the earliest opportunity of making you acquainted with what we have heard, in order to convince you that we discountenance so barbarous a breach of friendship with you, and we can assure you that it has not been done with the intent or knowledge of Government, and we make no doubt your brother, the Governour of Virginia, when he becomes fully acquainted with the circumstances of the unhappy loss you have sustained in so many of your people, that he and his wise men will fall upon the most salutary measures of doing you every justice that can be expected. In the mean time we have to recommend to you, in the most earnest manner, your affording every assistance in your power to accommodate this unfortunate breach which has happened, as you must be sensible that a general war between us must be attended with the greatest calamity on both sides." (A belt of wampum.)

After some time they returned for Answer:

"BRETHREN: (the English.) We have considered what you have said to us, and as the Chiefs of the Delawares are expected in this night, or to-morrow, we will consult with them, and then know what reply to make. But you may depend upon it, that we shall do every thing in our power to keep things quiet, which we make no doubt can be done, from the general peaceable disposition of our own people, provided you will be strong upon your parts, in preventing your rash people from commencing any further hostilities upon the Indians." (A string of wampum.)

May 4. Arrived Captains White Eyes, Pipe, and Samuel Compass, brother to one of the Delaware Indians lately murdered in the traders' canoe, with several other Chiefs and principal men of the Delawares. The same evening they proceeded to the Six Nation Village, at Pine Creek, in order to consult with the Chiefs there, and be informed of what had passed already between them and us.

May 5. At a Condolence held with the Six Nations, Delawares, Shawanese, Munsies, Mohegans, and Twightwees, who are the several Nations that have been sufferers in the late unfortunate disturbances,

PRESENT:

Captain Conolly, Commandant, and a number of other gentlemen.

SIX NATION INDIANS - Guyasutha, White Mingo, and the Six Nation Deputies as before mentioned, with a number of other Chiefs, and principal men.

DELAWARES. - Captains White Eyes, Pipe, Keykewenum, and Samuel Compass, with a number of other Indians of that Nation.

BRETHREN: It was with the deepest concern that we informed you two days ago of the late unhappy death of some of your friends, and it adds much to our grief upon this occasion, when we consider that some of our rash inconsiderate people have been accessory thereto. We condole with you, and bewail the misfortunes you have suffered, and as a testimony of our sincerity, we deliver you these strings of wampum. (A string to each Nation.)

BRETHREN: We wipe the tears from your eyes, and remove the grief which this melancholy circumstance may have impressed upon your hearts, that you may be enabled to look upon your brethren the (English) with the same friendship as usual, and listen to them with the like goodness of heart, as formerly, when no evil disturbed your minds. (A string to each Nation.)

BRETHREN: We now collect the bones of your deceased people, and wrap them up in those goods which we have prepared for that purpose, and we likewise inter them, that every remembrance of uneasiness upon this head, may be extinguished, and also buried in oblivion. (Delivered a condolence present.)

BRETHREN: We have now conformably to your custom, condoled with you in the usual manner upon such occasions; and we are to request some of your Chiefs present, who have the most influence with the distant tribes to proceed to them with the greatest expedition with what you have now heard, as it is highly necessary that we should be made acquainted without delay, with the result of their Councils upon the present circumstances of affairs, as well as it may be useful for them to be informed of our sentiments thereupon; and that the stroke they have received, is not only contrary to the judgment of every wise man amongst us, but all authority, which consequently will be exerted to do them justice; therefore, these facts ought to have great weight in their determination at this time; and as a further proof of our uprightness towards them. two of the gentlemen here present will accompany you in the execution of this good work. (A string of wampum.)

Captain Conolly then addressed the Indians as follows:

"BRETHREN: I am very sorry to find that a dispute has happened between our people and yours, which has been attended with bad consequences to both parties. You ought to be certain, brothers, that our wise men had no act or part in what has happened, and that it was entirely owing to the folly and indiscretion of our young people, which you know, like your own young men, are unwilling to listen to good advice. As to the particulars of what has happened, we yet do not know; we are sure, however, that people are killed on both sides, but we hope as the dispute happened only between the young and foolish people, that it will not engage our wise men in a quarrel in which none of us had a part. It is, however, brothers, very unlucky that any difference should have happened between us at this time, as the great Headman of Virginia and all his wise people are just going to meet together to counsel about the settling in this country, bought from you the Six Nations; and to give orders to their young men, which may come to be your neighbours, to be kind and friendly towards you. And, likewise, I expect they will buy goods to clothe your old people and children, to brighten the chain of friendship between us, and to convince you that we will be as friendly towards you as your late neighbours from Pennsylvania were. And, therefore, I desire you, brothers, not to listen to what some lying people may tell you to the contrary, for although we are always ready to fight our enemies, yet we will show our true and steady friendship upon every occasion, when necessary. (A string of wampum.)

Captain White Eyes, on behalf of the Indians present, made the following Answer:

"BRETHREN"(the English.) We have heard with satisfaction the several Speeches you have now delivered, to us, and we return you our sincere thanks for the friendship and concern you have been pleased to express for us upon this occasion; we cannot doubt of your uprightness towards us, and that the mischief done to us, has been done contrary to your intent and desire, which we believe has arose entirely from the evil-minded persons who have been the perpetrators of it; therefore it is incumbent upon us to aid you with our best assistance. As the great and good work of peace has been established between us, by the labour and pains of our greatest and wisest men, it ought not to be disturbed by the folly or imprudence of any rash people whatever, who, hereafter, refusing to pay due obedience to good advice, or offering to slip their hands from the chain of friendship), it will be our duty to chastise, should not those examples of violence before their eyes have this effect. Brethren, I will carry your Messages to the other Nations: they are intended for myself, as it is a business too serious to be trifled with, or boys to be employed on; it is the happiness of ourselves, our women and children, and every thing dear to us, that we are endeavouring to preserve. Therefore there can be no doubt that I shall speak my sentiments fully and truly to all Nations upon it."(A large string of white wampum.)

Guyasntha then returned Captain White Eyes thanks on behalf of the Six Nations present, and told him as he had delivered their sentiments fully in the foregoing Speech, it was needless for them to say any thing more upon the subject, but desire him to be strong in restoring the tranquillity of the country, and that one of his people should accompany him in this good undertaking.

May 9. A Speech delivered by several Chiefs, Six Nations and Delawares.

"BROTHER: (the Governour of Virginia.) No doubt you have been informed by the officer commanding at this place of the misfortunes which have lately happened in this country. And we now declare to you, as well as to all our brethren, (the English.) that we had no suspicion of so much mischief being done, as we have always on our parts made it our constant study to promote the peace subsisting between our brethren (the English) and us, and we also assure you that we still continue to preserve that chain of friendship; and we hope that such of you, our brethren, the white people, who are in authority, will do every thing in your powers to prevent your rash people from committing further hostilities upon us.

"BROTHER: We have to request you in a particular manner to be strong, and consider what may be best to be done with those flagrant offenders of our peace.

"As to us, we have the satisfaction to inform you, that we have received a message from the Lower Towns, informing us that all the Indians there remained quiet, and that they have submitted the loss they have sustained to the candour and justice of your wise people."(A belt.)

May 16. A Message delivered by five principal men of the Delawares from Custaloga.

"BRETHREN: (the English.) I have received your several messages since the outrages committed upon the Indians, and with respect to my people, I assure you, that we are perfectly well pleased with them. Our young men are following their employments as usual, relying entirely upon your sincerity and the hopes of your great men doing every thing in their power to redress the breach in our friendship; therefore, we have also to hope that what you have said to us upon this head comes from your hearts, and not with a design to amuse or deceive us, as we are upon our parts heartily disposed to preserve the strictest friendship with you."(A string.)

May 17. "BROTHER: (Custaloga.) We are glad to find by your Message, that you and your tribe are so well satisfied with our endeavours to reconcile the bad conduct of some rash, unthinking people, so injurious to the peace subsisting between you and us. The measures however, as well as concern, we have shown you upon this occasion, must be sufficient to convince you of the desire we have to live in amity with all our Indian brethren, and although the folly of a few individuals have given you some cause of complaint, yet the general conduct of your brethren, (the English.) towards you must evince to you their sincerity as well as justice."(A string.)

May 21. Arrived, two messengers from Newcomer's Town, and delivered the following Speech in writing:

"Newcomer's Town, May 13, 1774.

"This day assembled in Council, King Newcomer, Captain Kill Buck, and Thomas McKee, together with several other chief men of the Delawares. They have received a Speech from John Thompson they did not approve of; and they now thought proper to acquaint their brothers at Fort Pitt of him, and would be very glad that our brothers would not take any notice of what he has to say to them, as he only speaks of himself, and there was none of us present; so we would be glad that our brothers of Pennsylvania and Virginia would not hear his speech. He tells us that he will speak to our brothers of Pennsylvania, that they should speak to the people of Virginia, and give them some physic to drink that will bring them to their senses again; this is what he has to say, but we hope that our brothers will not take any notice, or think any thing of it, as he cannot speak for us all."

"To our brothers Colonel CROGHAN, Captain McKEE, and Captain CONOLLY."

Returned the following Answer:

"May 21. BRETHREN: (Chiefs of the Delawares.) We received your Speech of the 13th instant, by the two messengers you sent us, and we return you thanks for putting us on our guard against the bad man you have mentioned in it, (though he was known to us before,) and you may be assured that we shall not pay any regard to what he says to us, or to any other man that does not come with sufficient authority from you. Brethren, we desire you to be strong, and speak to your grand children, the Shawane, and let them know, that any unruly conduct of theirs at this time will only produce more fatal consequences than has already happened, and that the number of people who yet desire to live and preserve the peace of this country are far superior to those bad people who desire the contrary, so that if they study their real interest they will not delay to inform us of their sentiments, as they must be convinced that our whole country are now collected in bodies and waiting to hear from them. Brethren, we desire your young men may be informed, that we shall be glad to see them come here and trade as usual."(A string.)

May 25. White Eyes, after delivering the Condolence Speeches to the Delawares at the Newcomer's Town, received the following Answer, directed to their brethren, the English:

"BRETHREN: We are glad to receive your messages now delivered to us by Captain White Eyes upon the late disturbances which have happened between our young men, and we return you thanks for the speedy measures you have taken to speak to us upon it. We are entirely satisfied upon this account, and banish every thing which could give us uneasiness from our hearts, as you desire us, and we likewise request that you will do the same, that nothing may remain upon either side to discontent us."(A string.)

"BRETHREN: We have too great a regard for the ancient friendship established between you and us, and which has so long subsisted between our forefather% to suffer the conduct of foolish men to have any bad effect upon it, or to weaken our good intentions in the least, so as to loosen our hands from the hold we have of it; therefore we do not look towards the evil that has been done, with any resentment in our minds, but with a desire to have it buried in oblivion, as well as every thing else which has an appearance of disturbing our future tranquillity. Be strong brethren, and think favourably of our peace as we do, and we shall be too powerful for any bad people, who are not inclined to listen to or preserve it as we do. Brethren, when our wise people concluded the peace which subsists between us, it was mutually agreed between them, that though probably we might lose people on both sides by the rashness or folly of bad men, that it ought not, nor should not, have any evil effect upon the amity settled by them, and this is still what we adhere to. Brethren, last of all we spoke to our grandchildren, the Shawanese, upon this head, and desired them to keep their young imprudent men from doing mischief, and this advice we have again given them at this time. (A belt.)

"BRETHREN: The road which you have cleared between you and us, we now, by this string of wampum, upon our parts, remove every obstacle that may impede our travelling it with satisfaction, and we desire that our young men may be permitted to continue their trade as usual. Those white people who are in our towns to the number of eleven, you will see in a few days, who are going to Pittsburgh under the protection of your brethren the Delawares, and as soon as matters wear a more favourable aspect we shall expect them to return to our towns."(A string.)

The Shawanese then delivered the following Answer to the Condolence Speeches and Message sent them:

"BROTHERS: (Captain Conolly, Mr. McKee, and Mr. Croghan.) We have received your Speeches by White Eyes, and as to what Mr. Croghan and Mr. McKee says, we look upon it all to be lies, and perhaps what you say may be lies also; but as it is the first time you have spoke to us, we listen to you and expect that what we may hear from you will be more confined to truth than what we usually hear from the white people. It is you who are frequently passing down and up the Ohio, and making settlements upon it, and as you have informed us that your wise people were met together to consult upon this matter, we desire you to be strong and consider it well.

"BRETHREN: We see you speak to us at the head of your warriors, who you have collected together at sundry places upon this river, where we understand they are building forts, and as you have requested us to listen to you, we will do it, but in the same manner that you appear to speak to us. Our people at the Lower Towns have no Chiefs amongst them, but are all warriors, and are also preparing themselves to be in readiness, that they may be better able to hear what you have to say.

"You tell us not to take any notice of what your people have done to us; we desire you likewise not to take any notice of what our young men may now be doing, and as no doubt you can command your warriors when you desire them to listen to you, we have reason to expect that ours will take the same advice when we require it, that is, when we have heard from the Governour of Virginia.

"BRETHREN: (of Pennsylvania.) It is some years ago since we had the satisfaction to see you at Pittsburgh, when you came there to renew the ancient friendship that subsisted between our forefathers; and it gave us great pleasure to assist you in the great work, when the path was opened between you and us, and we now tell you that your traders who have travelled it, shall return the same road in peace, and we desire our grandfathers, the Delawares, to be strong in conducting them safe to you."(A string.)

May 26. The Indians expressing a desire of hearing their brethren of Pennsylvania speak to them, Captain St. Clair, on behalf of that Province, addressed them as follows:

"BRETHREN: (Six Nations and Delawares.) We have heard your good Speeches, and I am come from your brother of Pennsylvania to thank you for the care and pains you have taken to preserve the general peace. We are determined to do all in our power to maintain the friendship that subsists between us and our brethren the Six Nations and Delawares entire; but as our people are alarmed at what has happened with the Shawanese, we recommend it to you to prevent your people from hunting amongst us for some time, as our people will not be able to distinguish betwixt them and others. We wish, and will endeavour to keep the path open to our brethren, and keep bright that chain of friendship betwixt us which was so long held fast by their and our forefathers.

"Signed, AR. ST. CLAIR."

The Delawares then returned thanks for the good opinion their brethren of Pennsylvania had expressed of them, and that their sentiments corresponded so nearly with their own, with respect to keeping whole their ancient friendship, and they called upon their uncles, the Six Nations, to be witness to their now declaring that they were determined to preserve it unshaken and unhurt from the attacks of bad people.

Guyasutha then told his nephews, the Delawares, that he was rejoiced to find them so determined upon supporting the good order and peace of the country. That they might always depend upon being backed by the Six Nations in so laudable a resolution, who were so strongly linked in friendship with the English, that it was not to be broken; therefore, what they had now heard from them was very agreeable.

May 26. A Speech delivered the Delawares upon receiving their answer to the Condolence Messages that had been sent them, and which was delivered by Captain White Eyes:

"BROTHERS: We are glad to find that our former friendship is not to be hurt by what has happened between our young people and yours, and as we have been very sorry for it, we now at your request, remove the trouble from our hearts, and desire that you may do the same, so that nothing but friendship may be thought of between us.

"BROTHERS: We are glad to find that you are so friendly and considerate as not to allow the rash actions of young foolish people to break in upon our former friendship, and as you desire it may be forget, we hope it will, and that we never have cause of future disturbance. You may be assured that we are strong on our parts to maintain the strictest friendship with our brethren the Delawares, and are sure that we will be able for any bad people that may want to interrupt it; what you observe as to the good understanding between us and you, we have an eye to, and think as you do, that the rashness of foolish young men should not interrupt. We thank you for the pains you have taken to speak to your grandchildren, the Shawanese, and for the advice you have given them. (A string.)

"BROTHERS: We have heard the Shawanese Answer to our Message by you, and we understand it; we are sorry that they should be so foolish as not to listen to reason; but since we think they will not, we must desire our brethren, the Delawares, to withdraw themselves from amongst them, that no evil may happen them by accident, which would give us great concern. We, likewise, once more desire such of our brethren, the Six Nations, as may be amongst them to come away also, and listen to their own Chiefs as they have been often desired. We are sorry to think that the Shawanese want to destroy themselves, and be no longer a people; for if they attempt to kill any of us, for what has happened owing to bad young men, our warriors will fall upon them, and they must expect nothing but chastisement; therefore, I must desire you my brothers to remove yourselves from those bad people, that we may know our friends. They say that the traders among them shall return safe. I hope they speak true, as that may be a great means to prevent mischief. (A belt.)

"BRETHREN: We clearly see that the road between you and us is open if it were not for bad people, but we hope that will not prevent our intercourse with you as usual. We thank you for the mark of your friendship in bringing in our people, the traders, safe to us; and we promise when matters are better settled, they shall trade with you as formerly." (A string.)

Captain White Eyes then Replied:

"BRETHREN: We are very glad to hear what you have now said, and we find that you would willingly preserve the peace. We shall inform all the Nations in friendship with us of what has passed between us at this time, and in one month will be able to complete this design, and then we shall be able to distinguish those who are inclined to listen to our wise people and preserve the peace from those that choose to speak by their warriors; this will afford time for those who are inclined to remove themselves to their Chiefs, and give an opportunity to the warriors to speak to one another."

June 1. A party of Moravian Indians came in, with one of the missionaries residing amongst them and his family, with a quantity of peltry belonging to our traders.

Those Indians say that they were informed on their way hither, that a principal man of the Delawares, who had gone to the lower Shawanese Town after White Eyes' messages were delivered to the Shawanese, in order to hear news, has returned, and brought an account that the traders there were still alive, and that the Shawanese Chiefs there had spoke boldly in defence of them to the Mingoes, who were the only people constantly attempting to put them to death; but that the Shawanese had told the Mingoes that they had brought the traders amongst them, and were determined to protect them in their bosoms until they could return them safe home; and that if the Mingoes could not be satisfied without taking revenge upon the white people for the loss they had sustained, that they must look for it a greater distance than in their towns upon the people whom they had pledged their faith to preserve. Those Indians further say, that the chief disturbances amongst them appears to be only at a small village upon Muskingum, called Waketummakie, composed mostly of the friends of the people who have been killed. And that the Mingoes, as the greatest sufferers, are most enraged; however, that the party collected to strike the Virginians were not gone a few days ago, and that if they could not be prevented from their rash undertaking, that the Newcomer, Chief of the Delawares, was determined to send runners to apprise us of them, as they attempted to proceed to war.

June 5. Two messengers, from the Newcomer, arrived with an account that five days ago, one Conner, a white man, who lives at the Snake's Town upon Muskingum, had returned home from the place the traders were making their canoes, and informed them that the traders were all safe, to the number of twenty-seven or thirty, and that the Shawanese had taken great pains in protecting them, and was about sending them off with their peltry, with some of their young men, and some Delawares, to protect them upon their way up to Pittsburgh.

These messengers further say, that all the towns as well as the Shawanese are now quiet, and that their Chiefs have been able to prevail over their rash and foolish young men who wanted to take revenge on the white people for their loss, except two small parties consisting of thirteen men in the whole, who were friends of the Indians that suffered and could not be restrained, though their Chiefs did every thing in their power to prevent them from the bad undertaking; that they hoped their brethren the English would not blame them, or think that they countenanced any evil that might be committed by these rash men, who have stole away from them to do mischief contrary to their Chiefs' advice, and are chiefly all Mingoes who have had the most relations killed; that one party has been out eleven days, and was to return in fifteen, and intended against that part of the river where their friends were put to death, or somewhere else below that, upon Virginia. The above party having declared that as soon as they have taken revenge for their people, and returned home, that they would then sit down and listen to their Chiefs.

The above messengers also say that the day they left home a runner came in there from five Cherokees that were to be in the day following upon business, and that the Delawares would inform us of it as soon as it was known. And they also say that they heard that one of the before mentioned parties who had gone to take revenge upon the white people were returned, and had killed one man.

They then produced some belts of wampum, which had been delivered to them by Sir William Johnson, several years ago, desiring them to collect themselves together, and sit in the centre between their brethren the white people, Six Nations, and Western Indians, where they were required to hold fast by the middle of the chain of friendship, and that they were thereby empowered to speak strongly to any Nation who might attempt to disturb it.

Answer:

"BRETHREN: We return you thanks for the trouble you have taken to bring us the news we have now heard from you, and we esteem it as a proof of your sincerity and good inclination to preserve the peace of the country, as well as those belts you have laid before us, convinces us that you still bear in remembrance the former friendship that has been contracted with you. Be strong brethren in doing what you have been desired upon them; you have now an opportunity of exerting your good intentions that way, by speaking to those foolish people, who have not listened to the accommodation our wise people were endeavouring to make of the late unhappy disturbances, for you must be convinced that every mischief that may be committed at this time, is widening the breach, and of consequence involving us on both sides in greater difficulties. Therefore we have nothing more to say to you at present, than to recommend to you to follow the advice that has been sent to you by Captain White Eyes, which was to abstract yourselves from bad people who may be obstinate in pursuing their own destruction."

Answer to the Speech of the Indians of the Six Nations and Delawares, dated Pittsburgh, May 7, 1774.

"BROTHERS: I have been informed of the misfortunes that have lately happened in the neighbourhood of Pittsburgh, and have received your speech on the occasion; and I lament no less those that have befallen my brothers, the Indians, than those that have happened to my fellow-subjects, the English.

From the accounts I have received however, the Indians have been the aggressors, and thereby the occasion of the fatal consequences which have ensued. But as you my brethren say, that you always on your parts have made it your constant study to promote the peace subsisting between you and us, and still continue to preserve that chain of friendship, so I take this opportunity of assuring you that your brethren, the Virginians, do cordially love you, and hope always to live in peace, amity, and good correspondence with you. And to that end, if you can point out the offenders against our peace, we will on our parts omit nothing in our power to overtake the transgressors on our side with the punishment due to such crimes.

I rejoice at the information you give me of the good disposition of the Indians of the Lower Towns, and you may assure them that their complaints when they reach us shall be attended to with that candour and justice to which they submit them, and which is due to them. DUNMORE"

Williamsburg, May 29, 1774.

June 9. A Message sent with Lord Dunmore's Speech to the Six Nations and Delawares.

"BRETHREN: We herewith send you the head-man of Virginia's answer to your message of the 7th May, 1774, who is, you see, much concerned for the unlucky disputes which happened between us and you, and you must observe his speech is very friendly and good towards the Six Nations and Delawares.

"But, brethren, as the Mingoes and Shawanese have since struck us, notwithstanding our endeavours to restore friendship, we have now upon this account, again to desire your people to withdraw from amongst them that no injury may happen to you. Brothers, you will send the head-man of Virginia's speech to Captain White Eyes, and our brothers of the Six Nations, in order to show them that he is determined to hold fast by the ancient chain of friendship."

WILLIAM THOMPSON TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Cumberland County, 22d June, 1774.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: I have, by the bearer, Dr. McKenzie, received many letters from the people of Westmoreland County, informing me of one McClure being killed, and one Kincade being wounded, at Ten Mile Creek, the particulars of which the Doctor will acquaint you with. The people have requested I should lay their distresses before your Honour, and in their names pray your assistance in granting such support as may enable them to keep possession of the country, and say that if immediate relief is not sent them, all the country west of the Alleghany Mountains will be evacuated.

As the Doctor takes down a number of petitions, and I have wrote you a few days since concerning the difficulties of the back inhabitants, I shall trouble you no more at this times and hope their alarming situation, and the expectation they have that I will assist them, as well with your Honour as in the Assembly, will excuse the liberties taken by your Honour's most obedient humble servant,

WILLIAM THOMPSON.

To the Honourable John Penn, Esq.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, June 26th, 1774.

SIR: I have the honour to transmit a memorial from the inhabitants of Pittsburgh to your Honour, with some remarks upon Mr. Conolly's conduct in support of it, which came to my hands a few minutes ago. It is most certain, sir, they are most injuriously treated. The only piece of news from above, since my last, is, that Mr. Conolly sent two parties down the river in pursuit of the Shawanese who escorted the traders, who intercepted them at Beaver Creek, fired on them, and wounded one, and then ran off in the most dastardly manner. What may be the consequence God knows, but it is well if the traders do not suffer yet; their horses and peltry are not yet arrived.

Mr. McFarlane has just arrived from Virginia, and reports that four companies are on their march to Pittsburgh. I think he must be mistaken, both as their militia law is expired, and that it is not an easy matter to conduct so large a body through an uninhabited country, where no magazines are established. Any occurrences worthy of your notice shall be intimated by every opportunity.

I am, sir, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR

MEMORIAL TO GOVERNOUR PENN FROM THE INHABITANTS OF PITTSBURGH.

Pittsburgh, June 25, 1774.

To the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esq., Governour and joint Proprietor of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, &c.

The memorial of the subscribers, in behalf of themselves and the remaining few inhabitants of Pittsburgh who have adhered to the Government of Pennsylvania, humbly sheweth, That your memorialists have suffered in an unprecedented manner by the arbitrary proceedings of Doctor Conolly, since the commencement of his tyrannical Government at Pittsburgh. The principal facts we shall beg leave to lay before your Honour, as followeth: Soon after the return of the Magistrates of this place from Staunton jail in Virginia, Mr. Conolly being extremely enraged that Mr. Mackay should acquaint Lord Dunmore with his tyrannical behaviour, took all opportunities to affront and use Mr. Mackay ill, so that in a few days after he ordered Mr. Mackay's outhouses to be pulled down, and the materials to be carried to his garrison; and when Mr. Mackay complained of such oppressive measures, he was threatened by Doctor Conolly to be sent in irons to Williamsburg.

Mr. William Butler, (one of the subscribers,) and an eminent trader at this place, has been cruelly treated by Mr. Conolly, nay, was threatened to be shot down, for daring to refuse carrying arms at Mr. Conolly's militia array, &c. That your memorialists are of opinion that Mr. Conolly has taken all the pains in his power to foment the disturbance between us and the Indians, for several reasons, particularly when a number of the traders arrived here lately from the Shawanese Towns, escorted by three Shawanese Chiefs, who were sent to the care of Colonel Croghan, till a handsome present was made for them, by the traders for their fidelity, Doctor Conolly ordered out forty-one of his militia to take them at all events, and to send them to his guard honse, which hellish plot being discovered, Mr. Butler, and some other friends, conveyed the Indians and their presents over the river, just as the guard surrounded Mr. Croghan's house, for which Mr. Butler has been severely threatened.

That a number of the subscribers, &c., have been very severely treated by Mr. Conolly for our adherence to the Pennsylvania Government, which, for brevity sake, must be omitted.

The premises considered, your memorialists most earnestly request your Honour will fall upon some speedy method to relieve our distresses, and to send us directions, as soon as possible, how to act on this very critical occasion.

For a further explanation of our distresses we beg leave to refer your Honour to the enclosed remarks, which are absolute facts.

REMARKS ON THE PROCEEDINGS OF DR. CONOLLY.

Pittsburgh, June 25th, 1774.

The distressed inhabitants of this place have just cause to charge their present calamhy and dread of an Indian war entirely to the tyrannical and unprecedented conduct of Doctor Conolly, whose design, as we conceive, is to better his ahnost desperate circumstances upon the distress of the public, and the ruin of our fortunes, as will appear from the following facts:

1st. On the 25th day of January last, a number of disorderly persons assembled themselves here in consequence of his advertisements, (as militia,) who, when dispersing, wantonly and maliciously fired upon some friendly Indians in their huts on the Indian shore, which conduct, together with so unexpected an appearance of so many people in arms, at a time when they expected no hostile intentions on our part, greatly alarmed them, as appeared by a complaint made by them at a council with Alexander McKee, Esq., Indian Agent, and some of the inhabitants of this place, a few days after.

2d. Michael Cresap, in vindication of his own conduct, alleges, that it was in consequence of a circular letter from said Conolly, directed to the inhabitants on the Ohio, that he murdered the Indians, and that in a manner that savage ferocity could scarcely equal, and in cold blood, without the least provocation, amongst whom was some Delawares that had been employed by Mr. William Butler to carry goods and hands to the relief of his brother, who was at that time in the Indian country, all which property they have been deprived of to a considerable amount. Also, every part of said Conolly's conduct to our friendly Indians convinces us that he means to force them to a war, as he both refuses to protect, and endeavours to murder those, that, at the risk of their lives, came with our traders to protect them, and to deliver assurances of their friendship to the publick, which can be produced if required.

3d. A large body of armed men broke open Mr. Mackay's and Mr. Smith's back yard gates, and rescued the villain Reily, who was sworn constable for Westmoreland County at that time, and was confined for abusing said Mackay in his own house; five of those men presented their guns at Mr. Mackay and Mr. Smith. Also, one of the party struck at Mr. Mackay with his gun and broke it in pieces, while another presented his rifle through his parlour window, swearing that he would shoot down Mrs. Mackay if she did not immediately set open the doors of her house; upon which she fled, but was immediately assaulted by one Aston (a Captain of said Conolly's appointment) with a drawn sword, who stabbed her in the arm. Mr. Spear was also abused, and scratched, by said Aston, at the same time.

4th. Said Conolly, with an armed force of two hundred men, surrounded the Court House, &c.

5th. He sent Aeneas Mackay, Devereux Smith, and Andrew McFarlane, Magistrates, under an armed guard, to Staunton jail, in Virginia, then proceeded to shoot down our cattle, sheep and hogs, taking, by force of arms, any part of our property he pleases; also, pressing our horses without applying for them, or rendering any satisfaction to the sufferers for so doing.

6th. He sent an armed guard to town to plunder the house of Mr. Devereux Smith, but was prevented by Mr. William Butler at the risk of his life.

7th. He, Conolly, with his whole force, came to the house of Mr. Mackay, broke open his gates, and pulled down a log stable and sheep house, threatening to pull down his dwelling house if he thought proper. He came again, accompanied by one of his officers, to Mr. Mackay's, and abused him in a blasphemous, outrageous manner, threatening to send him in irons to Virginia the next day.

8th. He sent an armed guard to town with a general search warrant to search every house in town without exception, for the effects of a man that died the evening before in their fort, that some of themselves had robbed his corpse off. In the course of their search they broke open a chest in a man's house that bears a good character here, and took out several articles, and at the same time insulted the owner.

9th. He sent a party who robbed Mr. Joseph Spear's carriers of one horse load of gunpowder, about six miles from town, which was sent by said Spear for the use of the inhabitants of this county, if necessity required. This robbery was committed by a party headed by the aforesaid Aston, who beat and insolently abused the person who had said powder in charge, when he demanded a receipt for the same.

These are but a few of the many distresses we labour under, and without protection and speedy redress cannot long support ourselves under such grievances, persecution and tyranny.

to obtain that relief which our rights as English subjects entitle us to demand.

What those means ought to be, we think the several branches of the American Legislatures, in which the people are constitutionally represented, and who are vested with their whole powers, ought to determine. We, therefore, only presume to give you our private sentiments, which must ever be subject to the amendment and controul of the body, of which we are only members, when we again mix with them.

We hope, and earnestly recommend, that the great cause of American rights may be left to the management of the Representatives of the people in every Colony, as they alone are vested with a constitutional power of inquiring into, and redressing those grievances, under which the subject may at any time be oppressed. Until this measure shall be fairly attempted, and a failure shall ensue, we cannot conceive the present dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies, can, with any propriety or prudence, be assumed by any other person whatever, or that in other hands any good consequences can be rationally expected. And as we are in a state of society where order, reason, and policy, ought to prevail, every measure which can only serve to irritate, and not convince, every act of violence, or even the appearance of it, should be carefully avoided, as they cannot, under our present circumstances, obtain us that relief we desire, and have a right to expect; but, on the contrary, may involve all America in difficulties which no after-wisdom or prudence can surmount.

A Congress of Delegates, chosen either by the Representatives in Assembly, or by them in Convention, appears to us the first proper step to be taken. Nor are we dubious but that it may be happily effected in a short time, should calm and prudent measures be pursued to obtain it. In this Congress, composed of the Representatives, constitutionally chosen, of all concerned, and who would of course act with weight and authority, something might be produced, by their united wisdom, to ascertain our rights, and establish a political union between the two countries, with the assent of both, which would effectually secure to Americans their future rights and privileges. Any thing short of this will leave the Colonies in their present precarious state; disunited among themselves, unsettled in their rights, ignorant of their duties, and destitute of that connection with Great Britain which is indispensably necessary to the safety and happiness of both. We are, &c.,

JOSEPH GALLOWAY, Speaker.

SAMUEL RHOADS,

WILLIAM RODMAN,

ISSAC PEARSON,

*Committee of Correspondence.

To the Committee of Correspondence of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

P. S. The Assembly of this Province are summoned, by the Governour's writs, to meet on the 18th of next month.

THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE OF PENNSYLVANIA TO THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

Philadelphia, June 28, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Your favour of the 28th ult., communicating to us, by order of your House, the Act of Parliament, "To discontinue, in such manner, and for such time, "as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, "lading and shipping, of goods, wares, and merchandise, "at the town, and within the harbour of Boston," &c., is now before us, and we shall take the earliest opportunity to lay it before the House of Representatives of this Province.

We cannot consider this measure in any other light than an additional proof of a resolution in the mother state to draw a revenue from the subject in America without his consent. And, on this principle, we conclude that every British American Colony will esteem themselves intimately concerned in it. Under this idea of the intention of Parliament, it certainly behoooves us coolly and dispassionately to meditate on the consequences, and to leave no rational or probable means unessayed to avoid them, and

* NEW-YORK, July 14, 1774.--The Philadelphia paper of Monday last contains a letter from Joseph Galloway, (who styles himself Speaker,) and three others, who call themselves the Committee of Correspondence in the Province of Pennsylvania, to the Committee of Correspondence of the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

It does not appear by what authority these gentlemen have taken upon themselves to act as a Committee of Correspondence for the Province on this affair. The papers give an account of a more numerous Committee, composed of men of very different characters. The style and substance of the letter itself, though such as might be expected from the author of a well known piece published some years ago, signed Americanus, (in favour of the Stamp Act, and arbitrary power,) is by no means consistent, in style or sentiment, with the letters and resolves of any of the other Colonies; but, on the contrary, has a manifest tendency to discourage the people from doing any thing to the purpose on the present emergency. It does not so much as imply a censure upon the tyrannical Acts of the British Parliament, nor deny their authority, nor propose any means of preventing their effect, but rather suggests a submission to them. It denies the power of the people to do any thing, and absurdly asserts, that the sole power is constitutionally vested in the Representatives chosen by the people for the ordinary General Assembly; as if the people had no right to choose Delegates for any other purpose, or as if those chosen for the ordinary business of Assemblies were without a special commission from the people, authorized to determine upon so extraordinary and important a case as this. In short, it appears that Mr. Galloway, and the three other signers, have officiously taken upon them to write this letter, without any due authority from the people of the Province, who will disown the whole of it, and authorize their true Committee to write a letter that will really be to the purpose.

The present dispute seems confined to these two sentiments: either to pay, or not to pay for the tea. They are very opposite; therefore, without doubt, it will be a long time before we are united on this point. Those who are for paying, bring these arguments to support it: that "the tea belonged to private persons, consequently was "private property, and it is but an act of justice we should "pay for it, by which means our harbour will be opened, "and trade carried on as usual."

Be not deceived, my countrymen; examine well these principles before you endeavour to put them in execution. Our unhappiness in this case is, we do not look far enough - we skim the surface of this Ministerial manoeuvre; but let us drop the plumb and endeavour to find out its sounding. Every one knows the fatal consequences of the East India Company's sending their teas into America. It appeared to be a Ministerial measure to secure the revenue and establish a monopoly. We were alarmed at the consequences, and received it as an attack upon our liberty. Frequent meetings were held to ward off this impending evil, but all to no purpose. Our Committees were treated with disdain, our very Assemblies were looked upon as riots. The people were reduced to this deplorable circumstance, either to submit to their ruin, or destroy it. Could Americans long halt between two opinions? No, they destroyed it. The affair goes over to England; we hear little about it until an Act of Parliament is passed to block up the port of Boston; and all for what? Because we destroyed this cargo of India tea. We hear not a word of any private company appearing in this whole transaction, not a mention of private property, but Government takes the matter up, and chastises us by an Act of Parliament. Ships and troops are sent out on Government expense, and the whole plan of resentment is Governmental.

Considering circumstances as they really are, and viewing all measures from beginning to end, can we with any propriety talk of private interest, or think of paying for it on those principles? As well might we pay for the expense of powder and ball used on the night of the 5th of March to destroy our fellow-inhabitants. Sending the tea was a Ministerial measure to establish the revenue plan, and happily for us we showed our resentment and nipped it in the bud. I cannot see, unless we give up the very point in question, viz: the right of taxation, the propriety of our paying for this tea. Their sending it was as much designed to establish the revenue, as the powder and ball used by the soldiers was designed to destroy. If designed to establish the revenue, our opposition to it was uniform, and we could not suffer it to be landed consistent with our declared sentiments. We have, in the course of this debate with Great Britain, paid for many things we did; destroying the Governour's house, making restitution to the Stamp Master, and many other officers, &c. We have been at great expenses in smaller matters; such as charges on re-shipping goods in the non-importation; all which we have paid, hoping to conciliate measures; but behold what have been their effect. We are loaded with fresh impositions; new plans are entered into, taking encouragement from our former charges, that we shall still continue to do so; therefore try the matter on, not doubting, if we destroy, the conscientious Americans will satisfy all who suffer, by a satisfactory payment. In this way peace cannot be established, but new measures will be for ever plotting to ruin and destroy us. Therefore, in conscience to the cause, the regard I have for the liberties of my country, and my aversion to all measures intended to destroy those liberties, I must declare against paying for the tea, though asked for on much more simple terms than required in the late Act, or without any restrictions of wharfs, &c., whatever. But what greatly astonishes me is, that the people who pretend to be friends to American liberty, should so strongly urge a payment, and comply with the terms of the Act.

No man who understands the nature of the English Constitution, can, with any degree of spirit, read over so arbitrary an edict; the blood of an Englishman must boil at every sentence. Magna Charta, that secures the property and person of the meanest beggar, is basely leaped over, and the people who pretend to the least shadow of liberty, must, so far from feeling any inclination to comply with it, rather starve than harbour such despicable notions. The properties of a people are taken from them, their wharfs or warehouses, which perhaps are their only support, are rendered useless, or, at best, lay at the will of some infamous man in power. Where, then, is our security? The day we pay for that tea, under the present restrictions, that very day we become slaves. Whatever may be our boasted liberties, we are slaves in the most extensive degree. No people are free, when any power can take from them any part of their property without their consent; much more that people, whose whole property lays at the mercy of a foreign edict. Consider, my countrymen, before you take any measures in the case, the liberties of America depend on the determination of this late Act. We are now, though reduced by the stoppage of commerce, freemen, but remember, and let it sink deep into your hearts, the day we comply with the stricture of that Act, we are slaves. Let this consideration stop you in the career of settling this important point. It is the cause of the whole; let not a few individuals pretend to settle a point that so nearly concerns the whole. Our brethren in Virginia view it in this light; they look upon it as an attack upon the liberties of all the Colonies. For the same power that destroys the liberties of one Colony, will destroy the whole.

Here some may stop and say, "We do not mean to "give up the rights of the Colonies; we doubt not, when "we have discharged the debt of the tea, and paid all officers their demands, his Majesty and his Privy Council "will pity our situation, and restore our wharfs, as usual." Dreadful, indeed, at this time of day! An American's property and liberty are become matters of indulgence, rather than right. It then lays entirely at his Majesty's and Privy Council's mercy, whether any freeholder shall enjoy the suffrages of his own estate. I hope these are not the real sentiments of these people, but only flights of confused ideas, which poverty and famine have raised. Such submissive sentiments cannot come from the hearts of friends to American liberties. I must assert that the Act passed for blocking up the port of Boston is a more violent attack upon the liberties of America, than any measure before taken by Administration, and the man who would comply with the terms of it, deserves to have his name erased from the catalogue of freemen, and become unworthy the character of an American. We do not pretend to hold our property on the fickle tenure of indulgences of Parliament, but on the firm foundation of right. Neither can we tamely give our compliance to an edict, let it come from whence it will, that strikes at an essential pier of that foundation. But I will give full scope to this last argument: "They doubt not his Majesty will pity our situation, and restore our wharfs," &c. From whence have they received these strong hopes? I augur we shall find it a much more difficult case to get our wharfs restored by a speedy compliance, than our standing out in opposition. We cannot put our trust in Princes, neither in any son of man. It is hard trusting to some ruling men, and heaving ourselves entirely on their mercy. Before we have some certainty we must doubt it. If measures are pursued correspondent with their declared sentiments, we have great reason to doubt it. A certain noble Lord, I cannot think, would act so inconsistent with his own sentiments, as to give up the darling point of chastising a number of men, by rendering their property useless, when it is in his power so to do. For, remember, you heave yourselves on the mercy of those who made this Act, and all you now ask are matters of indulgence. Please not yourselves with such chimeras. When the rights of Americans hang on the friendly will of men now in power, farewell American liberty.

Let us examine the transactions of late years, and see if we can find any one action that will justify our favourable surmises. Grenville, flushed with the expectation of a large revenue from America, brought forward the Stamp Act. America united to oppose it, and it was repealed, immediately they passed a Declaratory Act, whose intent needs no comments. About twelve months after came out the Revenue Act, and to this day continues in force. Petitions after Petitions were sent, but, far from granting a favourable ear, they were treated with contempt.

Troops and navies have been sent to force us into a compliance; every art has been used to intimidate us. Every one who is acquainted with the late transactions, must be convinced of a settled plan to enslave this country. What expectance, then, can we have on those who have endeavoured to effect this plan? Nothing, I doubt, but a fearful looking for of judgment. A speedy compliance with this Act seems parallel to the case with Sampson and the Philistines, who, after the enticing Delilah, had found where his strength lay, and clipped him of his lock, came upon him, bound the poor man neck and heels, and sent him to prison. So, when a certain noble Lord has found out how nearly affected we are with this plan, he will plume himself on our ready compliance, perhaps reduce us to the condition of prisoners, and draw new terms of reconciliation; construing, in their greatest latitude, the import of several clauses in the Act. Blocking up our harbour will ever be a rod suspended in the British Commons to chastise whatever opposition Massachusetts, or any other Province or Colony, may make to Parliamentary measures. Therefore, my countrymen, be not buoyed up with false notions, be not speedy in your doings, but wait patiently until we can hear from the other Colonies, and I doubt not we shall come into determinations effectually to frustrate this late Act. Be not terrified with the bugbear of your enemies, about troops being quartered in your houses, but convince the world that Americans fear nothing but slavery.

TOWN MEETING IN BOSTON.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the town of Boston, by adjournment, at Fanueil Hall, June 27th, 1774.

Mr. SAMUEL ADAMS, Moderator.

Upon a motion, Voted, That the Committee of Correspondence be directed to lay before the town the Letters wrote to the other Colonies, as well as those sent to the other towns in the Province, since the receipt of the Boston Port Bill.

The Hall not being sufficient to contain all the inhabitants assembled, the meeting was adjourned to the Old South Meeting House.

The town being again met, according to adjournment, a motion was made and passed, that all Letters received, as well as the Answers returned, be laid before the town and read.

After the Town Clerk had accordingly read a number of said letters, a motion was made that the said Vote be so far considered, as that the reading of all other letters previous to the Covenant sent into the country by the Committee of Correspondence, and the letters accompanying the same, be suspended for the present, and that the town proceed to the reading of the said Letter and Covenant, and any other letters that may be particularly called for. The said Covenant, and a number of letters, having been read, a motion was made that some censure be now passed by the town on the Committee of Correspondence, and that said Committee be annihilated.

Mr. Adams, the Moderator, then moved, that as the Committee of Correspondence for this town, of which he had the honour of being a member, was now to be considered, another Moderator might be chosen pro tem..

The Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esq., was accordingly chosen Moderator during that debate.

The motion for censuring and annihilating the Committee of Correspondence, was considered, and the gentlemen in favour of the motion patiently heard, but it being dark, and they declaring that they had further to offer, it was voted that the consideration thereof be referred to the next meeting, and the meeting was accordingly adjourned.

Tuesday, June 28th, ten o'clock: Met according to adjournment.

The motion for censuring and annihilating the Committee of Correspondence was again considered, and after long debates, the question was accordingly put, which passed in the negative by a vast majority.

It was then moved that the following Vote be passed, viz: "That this town bear open testimony that they are abundantly satisfied of the upright intentions, and much ap"prove the honest zeal of the Committee of Correspondence, and desire that they would persevere with their usual activity and firmness, continuing stedfast in the way of well doing."

And the question being put, passed in the affirmative by a vast majority.

The Committee on ways and means for employing the poor, acquainted the town that they had met, and had received very encouraging accounts of the readiness of their sister Colonies to assist us, and various proposals from sundry persons for employing the poor, upon which they were deliberating, but were not yet prepared to report, required farther time, which was allowed them.

Mr. Adams again in the Chair.

A motion made that this meeting be adjourned to Tuesday, the 19th of July, at ten o'clock, A. M., to meet at Fanueil Hall; and the meeting was adjourned accordingly.

Attest, WILLIAM COOPER, Town Clerk.

Protest against the Proceedings of the Town Meeting in BOSTON, on the 27th of JUNE, 1774.

Whereas at a meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of this town, held at Fanueil Hall, the 27th instant, and from thence adjourned to the South Meeting House, copies of certain circular letters, wrote by the Committee of Correspondence, so called, for this town, to the other towns in the Province, and other places on the Continent, and answers thereto from the several towns and Colonies, were read; likewise a certain circular letter, accompanied with a Solemn League and Covenant of a most dangerous nature and tendency, which hath been drawn up by the said Committee of Correspondence, copies whereof have been by them clandestinely dispersed through the Province, without the consent or knowledge of the town, and recommended to the people of the county to execute without loss of time, "least their enemies should defeat its purpose." These points being fully spoke to, with candour and moderation, by gentlemen of different sentiments, it was at length motioned and seconded, that the Committee of Correspondence be censured by the town, and dismissed from any further service in that capacity. After some discussion on the subject, and other letters produced and read, the question was put, and passed in the negative.

Wherefore, we, the dissentients, do now make this public and solemn Protest against the doings of the said Committee, as such, against the Solemn League and Covenant aforementioned, and against the proceedings of the town, so far as they have adopted the illegal proceedings of the said Committee of Correspondence, for the following reasons, viz:

First, because, with regard to the Solemn League and Covenant aforementioned, we look on it to be a base, wicked, and illegal measure, calculated to distress and ruin many merchants, shopkeepers, and others, in this metropolis, and affect the whole commercial interest of this Province; to put a check at once to our industry, by stopping the exportation of all the staple articles of our trade; such as oil, pot and pearl ash, flax seed, naval stores, lumber of all sorts, and likewise codfish, by way of Spain and Portugal, the proceeds of which go to Great Britain as remittances for goods. Also will put an end to a very valuable branch of trade to the Province of ship-builders; to create unhappy divisions in towns and in families; to open a door for the most wicked perjuries, and to introduce almost every species of evil that we have not yet felt, and cannot serve any good purpose.

Secondly, because that the Committee of Correspondence, in many of their letters, held forth principles, which, instead of extricating us from our difficulties, serve, in our opinions, still further to involve us, to which principles we cannot accede.

Thirdly, because that Committee of Correspondence, in some letters that were read from them to New-York, Philadelphia, and other places, particularly two to New-York, of the 28th and 30th May, have falsely, maliciously, and scandalously, vilified and abused the characters of many of us, only for dissenting from them in opinion; a right which we shall claim so long as we hold any claim to freedom or liberty.

PROVINCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

By the GOVERNOUR. - A Proclamation for Discouraging certain illegal Combinations.

Whereas certain persons, calling themselves a Committee of Correspondence for the town of Boston, have lately presumed to make, or cause to be made, a certain unlawful instrument, purporting to be a Solemn League and Covenant, intended to be signed by the inhabitants of this Province, whereby they are most solemnly to covenant and engage to suspend all commercial intercourse with the Island of Great Britain, until certain Acts of the British Parliament shall be repealed. And whereas printed copies of the said unlawful instrument have been transmitted by the aforesaid Committee of Correspondence, so called, to the several towns in this Province, accompanied with a scandalous, traitorous, and seditious letter, calculated to inflame the minds of the people, to disturb them with ill-grounded fears and jealousies, and to excite them to enter into an unwarrantable, hostile and traitorous combination, to distress the British Nation, by interrupting, obstructing and destroying her trade with the Colonies, contrary to their allegiance due to the King, and to the form and effect of divers statutes made for securing, encouraging, protecting and regulating the said trade, and destructive of the lawful authority of the British Parliament, and of the peace, good order and safety of the community. And whereas the inhabitants of this Province, not duly considering the high criminality and dangerous consequences to themselves, of such alarming and unprecedented combinations, may incautiously be attempted to join in the aforesaid unlawful League and Covenant, and thereby expose themselves to the fatal consequences of being considered as the declared and open enemies of the King, Parliament, and Kingdom of Great Britain.

In observance, therefore, of my duty to the King, in tenderness to the inhabitants of this Province, and to the end that none who may hereafter engage in such dangerous combinations, may plead, in excuse of their conduct, that they were ignorant of the crime in which they were involving themselves, I have thought fit to issue this Proclamation, liemby earnestly cautioning all persons whatsoever within this Province against signing the aforesaid, or a similar Covenant, or in any manner entering into, or being concerned in such unlawful, hostile and traitorous combinations, as they would avoid the pains and penalties due to such aggravated and dangerous offences.*

And I do hereby strictly enjoin and command all Magistrates and other officers within the several counties in this Province, that they take effectual care to apprehend and secure for trial all and every person who may hereafter presume to publish, or offer to others to be signed, or shall themselves sign the aforesaid, or a similar Covenant, or be in any wise aiding, abetting, advising, or assisting therein.

And the respective Sheriffs of the several counties within this Province, are hereby required to cause this Proclamation forthwith to be posted up in some publick place in each town, within their respective districts. Given under my hand, at Salem, the 29th day. of June, 1774, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign.

THOMAS GAGE.

By his Excellency's command, T. FLUCKER, Secretary.
GOD save the King.

RICHMOND COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a respectable Meeting of the Freeholders and Freemen of the County of Richmond, Virginia, after due notice to attend at the Court House of the said county, on Wednesday, the 29th of Jane, 1774, in order to give their sentiments to their late Representatives, invited to meet in Williamsburg on the first day of August next, to deliberate on matters of the utmost importance to this country, they, after making choice of the Reverend ISAAC WILLIAM GIBERNE as Moderator, came to the following Resolutions:

1st. That it is the undoubted right of the people of British America to be taxed only by their respective Provincial Assemblies, which right they claim from Charter, natural justice, and constant usage, ever since their first settlement in America; and that an attempt to force one Colony to pay a tax imposed by the British Legislature, where they had not, nor could have, any Representative, is a violent attack on their constitutional rights.

2d. They do respect the Bostonians, in their sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay, as suffering in the common cause of British America; and that the hostile attack now made on them by the Parliament of Great Britain, in blocking up their harbour, and violently taking away the property of many individuals, by preventing them the use of their wharfs, quays, &c., is an avowed intention to reduce all America to a state of slavery.

3d. It is the opinion of this meeting, that nothing Will be more conducive to prevent such oppressions, than immediately to stop all imports from Great Britain, and at a short day, hereafter to be fixed, to stop all exports to Great Britain and the West Indies, until there is a total repeal of not only the Act called the Boston Port Act, but also of all the several Acts of the British Parliament laying taxes on the Americans for the purpose of raising a revenue, and those other Acts made against the rights of the people of Massachusetts Bay, on account of their virtuous opposition to the said Revenue Acts.

4th. It is also the opinion of this meeting, that immediately on the non-exportation plan taking place, the gentlemen of the bar shall not bring any suit for the recovery of any debts, or prosecute further any suit already brought, during the continuance of the former resolution, it being utterly inconsistent with such scheme for a man to be compelled to pay without the means wherewith he may pay.

* So far as the people of this Province from discovering the "high criminality" of "a certain instrument, purporting to be a "Solemn League and Covenant," that it has made more rapid progress through many towns, since Thursday last, than ever before. By what Act of the British Parliament, or clause in the Oath of Allegiance, are we inhibited from raising our own flax and wool, or encouraging our own manufactures in preference to those of any other country? If there be no Act of the British Parliament, or of the Province, against it, what are the "dangerous consequences" which we are told will ensue? A cool observer of the times cannot but smile to hear some connoisseurs say, that the trade of the Colonies is of no more importance to the mother country than a single thread in a whole piece; while others, with as high a tone, assure us, that to "suspend all commercial intercourse" with her, in one Province only, will "distress the British Nation." - BOSTON, July 4, 1774.

5th. This meeting do most heartily concur with their late Representatives in their resolve for the total disuse of tea; and do further Resolve, that they will not purchase any East India commodity whatsoever, except saltpetre, until they have their grievances fully redressed.

6th. They do declare they are ready to submit to any resolution that may be entered into either by the Deputies of the several counties in this Colony, at Williamsburg, or by the Congress of the several Colonies on the Continent, and intended these resolutions only as instructions to their Deputies, that they may know how to conduct themselves.

7th. It is Resolved, that so soon as the non-exportation agreement begins, we will, every man of us, keep our produce, whether wheat, tobacco, or corn, or any thing else, unsold on our respective plantations, and not carry, or suffer them to be carried, to any publick warehouse or landing place, except of grain; where the same be so done an oath being first made that such grain is for the use or consumption of any other Colony in North America, and not for exportation from the Continent, whilst the said agreement subsists. And this is the more necessary to prevent a few designing men from engrossing and buying up our tobacco, grain, &c., when they are low in value, in order to avail themselves of the very high prices that these articles must bear when the ports are open and foreign markets empty.

8th. This meeting do appoint Robert Wormeley Carter and Francis L. Lee, gentlemen, as their Deputies for the purposes aforesaid; and they do request that they fail not to attend in Williamsburg on the said first day of August, and that they do not trust to their meeting in Assembly on the 11th of the same month, as it is in the power of Government either to prorogue the Assembly to a future day, or dissolve the same, by which means the sense of the Colony may not be known.

Ordered, by the meeting, That these Resolves be forthwith transmitted to both the Printing Offices in Williamsburg, to be inserted in each Gazette.

LEROY PEACHEY, Clerk.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON.

London, June 30, 1774.

We are all in high expectation of the event of the late measures adopted respecting Boston, which carry with them rather the harsh and rigid aspect of power, than that of paternal affection, which wishes to reclaim while it chastises. The Crown has, for a long time past, been gaining power, at the expense of the liberties of the people, by a gradual system of corruption, which the people themselves have not virtue enough to counteract. But now the strides towards despotism are enormous. I wish the Americans may be able to fall on some prudent and effectual measures in the present important crisis. But I fear the greatest difficulty will be in the want of an union and confidence among themselves in the different Colonies, without which any expedients they may think proper to adopt will avail little.

PRINCE GEORGE'S COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a General Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Prince George's County, Virginia, the following Resolves were proposed and unanimously agreed to:

.Resolved, That we will, at all times whenever we are called upon for that purpose, maintain and defend, at the expense of our lives and fortunes, his Majesty's right and title to the Crown of Great Britain, and his Dominions in America, to whose royal person and Government we profess all due obedience and fidelity.

.Resolved, That the right to impose taxes or duties to be paid by the inhabitants within this Dominion, for any purpose whatsoever, is peculiar and essential to the General Assembly, in whom the Legislative authority of the Colony is vested.

.Resolved, That every attempt to impose such taxes or duties, by any other authority, is an arbitrary exertion of power, and an infringement of the constitutional rights and liberties of the Colony.

.Resolved, That to impose a tax or duty upon tea by the British Parliament, in which the Commons of the North American Colonies can have no representation, to be paid upon importation by the inhabitants of the said Colonies, is an Act of power without right; is subversive of the liberties of the said Colonies; deprives them of their property without their own consent; and thereby reduces them to a state of slavery.

.Resolved, That the late cruel, unjust, and sanguinary Acts of Parliament, to be executed by military force and ships of war, upon our sister Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, and town of Boston, is a strong evidence of the corrupt influence obtained by the British Ministry in Parliament, and a convincing proof of their fixed intention to deprive the Colonies of their constitutional rights and liberties.

.Resolved, That the cause of the town of Boston is the common cause of all the American Colonies.

.Resolved, That it is the duty and interest of all the American Colonies firmly to unite in an indissoluble union and association, to oppose, by every just and proper means, the infringement of their common rights and liberties.

"Resolved, That a General Association between all the American Colonies, not to import from Great Britain any commodity whatsoever, except negroes, clothing, and tools, Irish linen, medicines, and paper, ought to be entered into, and not dissolved, until the just rights of the said Colonies are restored to them, and the cruel Acts of the British Parliament against the Massachusetts Bay and town of Boston, are repealed.

.Resolved, That no friend to the rights and liberties of America ought to purchase any commodity whatsoever, except as is before excepted, which shall be imported from Great Britain, after the General Association shall be agreed upon.

.Resolved, That every kind of luxury, dissipation and extravagance ought to be banished from amongst us.

.Resolved, That manufactures ought to be encouraged, by opening subscriptions for that purpose, or by any other proper means.

.Resolved, That the African trade is injurious to this Colony, obstructs the population of it by freemen, prevents manufacturers and other useful emigrants from Europe from settling amongst us, and occasions an annual increase of the balance of trade against this Colony.

.Resolved, That the raising sheep, hemp, and flax, ought to be encouraged.

.Resolved, That to be clothed in manufacturers fabricated in the Colonies ought to be considered as a badge and distinction of respect and true patriotism.

.Resolved, That the dissolution of the General Assembly, by order of the British Ministry, whenever they enter upon the consideration of the rights and liberty of the subject against attempts to destroy them, is an evidence of the fixed intention of the said Ministry to reduce the Colonies to a state of slavery.

.Resolved, That the people of this Colony, being by such dissolution deprived of a legal representation, ought to nominate and appoint for every county proper Deputies to meet upon the first day of August, in the City of Williamsburg, then and there to consult and agree upon the best and most proper means for carrying into execution these or any other resolutions which shall be judged more expedient for the purposes aforesaid.

.Resolved, That Richard Bland, and Peter Poythress, Esquires, our late worthy Representatives, be, and they are hereby nominated and appointed Deputies, upon the part of the freeholders and inhabitants of this county, to meet such Deputies as shall be appointed by the other counties and corporations within this Colony, in the City of Williamsburg, upon the first day of August next, or at any other time or place for the purposes aforesaid.

.Resolved, That at this important and alarming conjuncture it be earnestly recommended to the said Deputies, at the said General Convention, that they nominate and appoint fit and proper persons, upon the part of this Colony, to meet such Deputies, in a general Congress, as shall be appointed on the part of the other Continental Colonies in America, to consult and agree upon a firm and indissoluble union and association for preserving by the best and most proper means, their common rights and liberties.

Resolved, That this Colony ought not to trade with any Colony which shall refuse to join in any union and association that shall be agreed upon, by the greater part of the other Colonies upon this Continent, for preserving their common rights and liberties.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this meeting transmit to the Printers of both Gazettes copies of these resolutions, with the earnest request of this county that the other counties and corporations within the Colony will appoint Deputies to meet at the time and place, and for the purposes aforesaid.

THEODORICK BLAND,
Clerk of the Meeting,

THE BRITISH AMERICAN, NO. V.

Williamsburg, Virginia, June 30, 1774.

Friends, Fellow-citizens, and Countrymen:

It is not my intention to inflame your minds by pointing out the many privileges you have already lost, but to rouse you to a steady opposition to the measures now pursuing to deprive you of what few still remain. I shall, therefore, instead of entering minutely into every branch of the old English Constitution, whose sole object is, or rather was, political liberty, confine myself to that part of it which relates to legislation and taxation only. But in order to be thoroughly understood, it will be necessary to premise, that in ancient times, besides the palaces for the residence, there were particular funds and lands set apart, whose yearly profits supplied the domestic expenses and supported the splendour of the Kings of England. These were called the ancient demesne of the Crown, and were not only abundantly sufficient to answer those purposes, but sometimes enabled our Monarchs to repel, at their own private expense, any sudden or unforeseen hostile attacks upon the Kingdom. Thus the great Queen Elizabeth, (under whose reign our ancestors first emigrated,) instead of asking money of her Parliament, generally demanded reimbursement only for what she had actually advanced for the general good. And even these she often generously remitted to her subjects.

The Legislature of England consisted of three distinct branches. The first was the Monarch, whose ample hereditary revenues, enabling him to support the dignity of his rank, removed all temptation to oppress either of the other two, because, nobly provided for himself, he was under no necessity of asking any supplies from his Parliament but such as were necessary for the general good of the whole community. Independent of any power on earth for the support of himself and family, he was equally above the temptation of being corrupted himself, or of endeavouring to corrupt the Parliament.

The second consisted of the House of Lords, a body of men who, on account of their great wealth or merit, and generally both, were ennobled by the Monarch, and their titles and power, when once created, were hereditary, they were not only independent but were equally interested in preserving the legal prerogatives of the Crown, and the just privileges of the People: the prerogatives of the Crown, because as they derived their very existence from the Monarch, if his legal power was annihilated, theirs must necessarily be extinguished with it, as the stream will cease to flow when the fountain from whence it sprung is dried up. As hereditary guardians of the Realm it was equally their interest to preserve the privileges of the people, because however distinguished by rank or title, they themselves, as part of the community, must finally feel any oppression exercised by the Sovereign over their fellow-subjects.

The third branch of the Legislature consisted of the People at large, in which every native had a right to vote, for in those days it was thought unreasonable that the life, liberty, or property of a freeman should be affected by any law which he did not consent to, or at least which he had not a right to oppose.

But these tumultuous assemblies of the People being found from experience not only inconvenient but absolutely impracticable, as a majority of the whole Kingdom could never meet at any one place to deliberate upon the affairs of the Kingdom, it became customary for the inhabitants of different counties and large cities and towns to delegate the wisest of their neighbours to represent them in the Legislature, and to speak the sentiments of their electors on the general concerns of the Kingdom. These formed the House of Commons. In process of time this right of delegation was confined to those who had a freehold in lands, of a particular value, because, as I have observed in a former letter, the owners of the soil were not only supposed to be the best judges of what was for the benefit of the Kingdom, but because they were less liable to be corrupted to prejudice a country in which they themselves were permanently interested.

Happy had it been for England that this wise regulation had never been altered; and happier still if the right for voting for Representatives had been confined to freeholders of counties only, and not extended to towns and corporations, which, however populous and opulent formerly, are now scarce the shadow of what they were. But to return to my subject.

The Monarch was vested with the power of convening the other two bodies of the Legislature, of laying before them the state of the Kingdom with respect to foreign alliances, and of recommending to their consideration all things which he judged for the benefit of the Nation; and after having done this he retired and left them to deliberate and to form what resolutions they pleased, either upon the plans thus recommended or upon any others which they thought proper; and so far as related to legislation only, the Lords and Commons had an equal right of proposing and of altering and amending resolutions proposed by each other. The King had no power of altering and amending, but, by withholding his assent, might reject any resolution of the other two branches altogether.

To have invested him with a power of altering would have been dangerous to liberty; because, of all laws respecting the subject, the Lords, who were the representatives of the higher, and the Commons, who represented the lower ranks of the people, were the most proper judges, because they would share in the advantages and disadvantages of those laws. But as the King might receive the emoluments, but could not share in the inconveniences, if he had been allowed to have interfered in altering and amending such, the Nation might have been cruelly oppressed, for as all honours flowed from the Crown, a desire of acquiring those honours might have induced the Commons. Hope of enlarging those already conferred might have influenced the Lords to have shown such complaisance to the alterations of the Crown as would have been consistent with the good of the community. Wisdom, as well as delicacy, therefore, excluded the temptation. The King's right of rejecting altogether was a sufficient barrier against all encroachments on the rights of the Sovereign, since no resolutions had the force of laws till they received the concurrence of a majority of the Lords and Commons, and were approved of, and assented to, by the King.

Taxation was fixed upon a very different foundation. The House of Commons claimed and exercised the sole right of proposing taxes, of pointing out the ways and means, of levying supplies, and of framing the bills by the authority of which they were to be collected; and so extremely jealous were they of this privilege that they never would suffer either of the other branches of the Legislature to make the smallest alteration, either in the form or substance of a Supply Bill.

This exclusive privilege was founded upon very just grounds. The reasons I have already given in treating of legislation, are doubly cogent to restrain the King (who was to apply, or rather expend, the money raised,) from exercising any other power over a Money Bill than that of rejecting; to which may be added another, that the Representatives of a people must ever be more capable than their Prince of judging of the abilities of their constituents, and of knowing how much, and what species of their property they can spare to preserve the remainder. Nor are there wanting many and just reasons to exclude the Lords from interfering with this right exercised by the Commons. In the first place, the whole wealth of a Nation arises from the farmer, the grazier, the mechanick, and the trader; and as they are the very creators of money they ought to have the publick disposition of it, because they know its value, and have experienced the difficulty with which it is acquired.

On the other hand, the Lords possessed of immense wealth, transmitted to them by their ancestors, and born (if I may be allowed the expression) with silver spoons in their mouths, might be lavish of the national treasures, without duly considering with what anxiety, difficulties, and dangers the bulk of the people have acquired the small share of it they possess. Again, a supply granted to the Crown, which, with respect to the enormous fortunes of the nobility, would scarce deserve the name of liberality, might amount almost to a confiscation of the estates of the lower ranks of the people, and reduce thousands of their fellow-subjects to distress, poverty, and ruin. On the other hand, it is difficult to suppose that the Representatives of the labouring or trading part of the Nation, would, or could, be so extravagant in their supplies as to injure the estates of the nobility; and if such an unnatural case could exist, the House of Lords, by exercising their right of rejecting, would effectually ward off the blow. But if they had a power of even altering a Money Bill, they might model it in such a manner as to exonerate, in a great measure, their own estates, and lay the whole burthen upon the Commons, or at least it would be a constant source of feuds and dissensions between the two Houses, which would offer, to an enterprising Monarch, such opportunities of ingratiating himself occasionally with each as might endanger the Constitution.*

From this state of the English Constitution it is obvious to the most common observer, that if any one of its branches encroached upon the rights of another, it became the interest of the other two to unite in repelling the aggressor, since if either branches are annihilated, or even weakened, the other must necessarily fall a prey to the victor. If the Commons attacked the Lords, the Crown necessarily interposed its authority to support the injured rights of the nobility; for, if they succeeded in destroying the rights of the nobility, such an acquisition of power as would then devolve on them, would soon enable them to weaken, if not destroy, the prerogatives of the Crown. If the Lords encroached upon the privileges of the Commons, our history afforded too many instances of the dreadful consequences of the overgrown power of the Barons to suffer the King to be an idle spectator whilst his nobles, by crashing the Commons, would arrogate to themselves the power of petty Princes, and endanger the safety of the Kingdom with internal commotions. If the King attacked the privileges of either of the other branches, or either of the others encroached upon the prerogatives of the Crown, the third branch was too much interested in the dispute to stand neuter, but readily assisted the injured party, sensible that the only method of preserving the true equilibrium of Government was to suffer neither branch to oppress or even weaken the other.

* I have read other arguments against the House of Lords exercising a right of altering Money Bills, but, I confess, they were not to me so convincing as the above. For instance, one was, that the wealth of the Lords compared to that of the Commons of England, was but as a drop of water to the Ocean. Suppose this to be true, (though, by the by, it is a very large drop, and which, by their intermarriages with the rich heiresses of the Commons, is constantly increasing,) yet a single drop, when incorporated with, becomes as much a part of the Ocean as any other drop, and by the same parity of reasoning, the whole Ocean might drop by drop be excluded till it ceased to be oven a rivulet. I am induced to make this remark from having read a similar argument in a late pamphlet of a Reverend author, who, after observing that each member of the House of Commons, when chosen, becomes the Representative of the whole Kingdom, - he has the following note: "Surely the Nation might have expelled Mr. Wilkes, or have struck "his name out of the list of the Committee, had it been assembled, "or had it thought proper so to do. What then should hinder the "Deputies of the Nation from doing the same thing? And which "ought to prevail in this case, the Nation in general or the County of "Middlesex?" Let it be observed that if the whole body of the people had been assembled upon the National Councils, no such Committee could have existed; the case thus supposed is, therefore, a nonentity. But admitting it otherwise, even a Committee of the House of Commons cannot exclude any member of that Committee, but must apply to the House who constituted them a Committee to make such exclusion. That the House of Commons have a right, by expelling any member, to appeal to the people who sent him whether such member is unworthy to represent them, there can be no doubt, but if, after such an appeal, the people re-elect him, they are surely bound to receive him. In such an Assembly as the Reverend author speaks of, there can be no doubt but a majority of the whole Kingdom may exclude the inhabitants of the County of Middlesex from any share in the National Councils, but from that instant they cannot exercise a constitutional right, either of legislation or taxation, over the County of Middlesex; and just so great a power as a majority of the Nation can exercise over the inhabitants of a single county, a majority of the Representatives of the Nation may exercise over the Representatives of a single county. But the consequence must be the same in both cases.

Thus constituted, thus mutually interested, to support each other, the King, Lords, and Commons of England, formed the wisest system of legislation that ever did, or perhaps ever will, exist; for the three favourite forms of Government, viz: Monarchy, Aristocracy, and Democracy, possessed of their distinct powers, checked, tempered, and improved each other. Nor was this excellence confined to forms alone. The characteristic principles of Monarchy, Aristocracy and Democracy, viz: honour, moderation, and virtue, were here so happily blended as totally to exclude fear, that despicable slave of despotism and arbitrary sway. The honour of Monarchy tempered the impetuosity of Democracy, the moderation of Aristocracy checked the ardent aspiring honour of Monarchy, and the virtue of Democracy restrained the one, impelled the other, and invigorated both. In short, no Constitution ever bid so fair for perpetual duration as that of England, and none ever half so well deserved it, since political liberty was its sole aim, and the general good of mankind the principal object of its attention. Had this happy state but recurred a little oftener to its first principles it would have remained the envy - the admiration of the whole world, and the delight of its most distant Dominions, till time shall be no more. But, alas! all human institutions are subject to decay; the very vitals of this amiable Constitution are wounded, the glorious fabrick already totters, and the time is approaching when it may be said of this beautiful Byzantium:

"That down the precipice of fate she goes,
And sinks in moments what in ages rose."

To trace the steps of this disorder, and point out what is likely to occasion this ever to be lamented misfortune, shall be the subject of my next.

I shall conclude this with a word of advice to my fellow-citizens of Virginia: Since my last the writs have issued for choosing your Representatives, returnable the 11th day of August next. Postpone your meeting in Williamsburg till that day, so short a delay will be attended with little inconvenience. If the Governour should then meet you in Assembly, you will have a constitutional opportunity of declaring the sentiments, and of vindicating the rights, of those you represent. But be not deceived. It is to be feared that the Governour will not, cannot, call the Assembly together till he receives letters from the Minister in England, and that it will be prorogued before the 11th of August. If it should, still let the new Representatives of the people meet at that time; though they cannot as a legislative, yet they may as a collective body, declare the sentiments of their constituents, and it is necessary, not only that our Sovereign, but that the British Parliament should know those sentiments as soon as possible, otherwise an artful Minister may impose upon them, and induce them to believe you have actually submitted to a measure which I am convinced you never will submit to, because you ought not.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON, DATED

I am sorry to learn, by late letters from Philadelphia, that you are likely to have an Indian war, by the imprudence of some of the back inhabitants. I most sincerely wish that steps may be taken to prevent it; for you may be assured the people in power here wish for it. They say it will be the means of humbling and reducing the rebellious Americans to obedience. This they are determined to do, let the consequence be what it may. I am much grieved to hear that the unjust and tyrannical steps taken by Government here, against the Massachusetts Bay, are not, by the other Colonies, looked upon as an attack upon all America, but intended only against that Province. The policy of this country is to divide and conquer; and if the other Colonies sit quiet and suffer the people of New England, for want of their uniting and making it one common cause, to be reduced to the necessity of subscribing to such terms as Government here shall hold out to them, they will attack the other Colonies, and then farewell to the liberties of America; for the Americans will be soon as absolute slaves as the Frenchmen. The infamous Quebeck Bill, which establishes popery and arbitrary power through a country capable of maintaining more people than England, France, and Spain, is intended to keep the old Colonies in awe; and people here in power make no secret of saying, that by keeping the Canadian militia well disciplined, they shall be able with them and the fleet, to keep the Colonies always in subjection. Would you believe, that out of all the Bishops, only the Bishop of St. Asaph had virtue enough to vote against this Bill? I hope we shall never suffer one of them to step his foot in America. Nothing can save America but their uniting and religiously entering into an agreement, and sacredly keeping it, not to import any goods from Great Britain, nor to export any goods either to Great Britain or the Islands, until justice is done them by this country, and their liberties settled on a firm and solid basis. This, in less than twelve months, would bring the people of this country to reason, and force them, contrary to their inclinations, to do the Americans justice; for they have no trade but what is against them, save to Ireland and America.

JAMES CITY COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS,

At a Meeting of the Freeholders of James City County, on the first of July, 1774, at the house of Mr. Isham Allen, in order to consult with their late Representatives what measures were most necessary to ward off the impending evils which seem to threaten all British America, those matters being calmly and maturely entered into, the following Resolves were adopted:

Resolved, That we will not import any article whatever from Great Britain.

Resolved, That we will stop all exports to Great Britain after such a day as shall be appointed by the general meeting on the first of August next.

Resolved, That a subscription paper be handed about among the people of James City to raise money, corn, wheat, or any other commodity which may be most agreeable to the subscribers, for the relief of the people of Boston.

Resolved, That in order to testify our gratitude to our late worthy Representatives, and our entire approbation of their conduct in the late General Assembly, it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting that they be thanked for their former services, and that Robert Carter Nicholas, Esquire, be pleased to accept of a treat from the freeholders of the county on the day appointed for the election of Burgesses.

Portsmouth, New-Hampshire, July 1, 1774.

Last Saturday, June 25th, arrived here Captain Brown, in a mast ship, in eight weeks from London, and unluckily for this place, there were on board twenty-seven chests of that pernicious, destructive, troublesome commodity, called tea, which for a long time has, and still keeps the whole Continent in a ferment, the duty on which, operates in so violent a manner on the minds of the inhabitants, not only in the seaport towns, but the whole country in general, that it will require the most cooling medicines, and the best skill of the ablest political physicians, to prevent the body politic from going into convulsions. However, upon its being certified that there actually were twenty-seven chests of tea consigned to Edward Parry, Esquire, of this town, a meeting of the inhabitants of the town were immediately called, and a Special Committee chosen to wait upon Mr. Parry, the consignee, to know whether he would consent to certain proposals which were made to him; that the tea should not be sold here, but re-shipped; who, in a genteel manner gave them all the reasonable satisfaction they could desire, and a watch of twenty-five men were appointed by the town to watch two days and two nights, and the third day it was put on board another vessel, and sent out of this harbour with a fair wind, committed to the watery element, and hope in due time the owners will receive the nett proceeds, and for the future take care how they send any disagreeable commodity to this Province, with a duty thereon.

Every transaction was conducted with the greatest decency and good order possible, which could have done honour to any society. The whole being of one heart and one mind that the tea should go out of this port and harbour immediately, and not to be landed in this Province.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMERICAN POST OFFICE.

Baltimore, July 2, 1774.

William Goddard, Printer of the Maryland Journal, with great pleasure, acquaints the publick that his proposal for establishing an American Post Office on constitutional principles, hath been warmly and generously patronised by the friends of freedom in all the great Commercial towns in the Eastern Colonies, where ample funds are already secured; Postmasters and riders engaged; and, indeed, every proper arrangement made for the reception of the Southern mails, which, it is expected, will soon be extended thither. As therefore the final success of the undertaking now depends on the publick spirit of the inhabitants of Maryland and Virginia, it is not doubted, from the recent evidence they have given of their noble zeal in the cause of liberty and their country, but they will cheerfully join in rescuing the channel of publick and private intelligence from the "horrid fangs of Ministerial dependents:" a measure indispensably necessary in the present alarming crisis of American affairs.*

The following Plan has been published and universally approved of at the Eastward:

PLAN FOR ESTABLISHING A NEW AMERICAN POST OFFICE.

The present American Post Office was first set up by a private gentleman in one of the Southern Colonies, and the Ministry of Great Britain finding that a revenue

* EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO LORD NORTH, LONDON, FEBRUARY 5, 1774.

MY LORD: As an American, give me leave to assure your Lordship that I think the dismissing Dr. Franklin, from the Postmaster General in North America, at this particular crisis, one of the most fortunate events that could have happened for that county. It was that gentlemen that brought the Post Office in America to be of some consequence, and to yield something of a revenue to the mother country. The people there never liked the Institution, and only acquiesced in it out of their unbounded affection for the person that held the office, who had taken infinite pains to render it convenient to the several Colonies. But what will follow now, my Lord? I will tell you; the Post from Philadelphia to Boston is that alone which produces any profit worth mentioning; the others, taken together, do not more than maintain themselves; and between Philadelphia and Boston you may depend on it, the Americans will immediately set up a carrier of their own, which you, with all your brethren in power, together with Lord Hillsborough's abilities, cannot prevent, and thereby they will entirely starve your Post between those capital cities. And thus will happily end your boasted Post Office, so often given as a precedent for taxing the Americans.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN AT NEW-YORK TO HIS FRIEND IN BOSTON, DATED FEBRUARY 28, 1774.

Your steadiness and activity in the glorious cause of liberty has induced me to address you, without any apology, upon a very interesting matter, in which the cause of American freedom is deeply concerned; I mean the Post Office establishment, upon which every other unconstitutional Act has been grounded, as our tame submission to it has been constantly urged, by the enemies of our country, as precedent against us; and as I am fully convinced of the propriety and eligibility of opposing it at present, and we cannot fail of success if the opposition be made with a manly firmness. I am determined to give the bearer, Mr. Goddard, every aid in my power, towards the execution of his plan, which is so well calculated to save the cause of liberty, and relieve my country from such an arbitrary and unconstitutional Act of the British Legislature. I must therefore earnestly request that you will, provided your sentiments should coincide with mine, use all your influence in the town of Boston, and give him every assistance in your power, to forward so great and necessary an undertaking; and should we succeed in this attempt of abolishing the Post Office, of which I have not the least shadow of a doubt, I am convinced it will put an entire stop to their placing any further unconstitutional burdens upon us; especially when they find that we are determined to make reprisals upon every such occasion, and that they will be reduced to the unfortunate situation of the dog in the fable, who by greedily grasping at the shadow, lost the substance. As I am much indisposed at present, I cannot enlarge upon the subject, nor do I think any arguments necessary to convince you of the propriety of the measure, or to induce you, who have so constantly exerted yourself in the cause of liberty, to afford it your sanction and support.

BOSTON, March 17, 1774. - Last Monday arrived here Mr. William Goddard, Printer in Philadelphia and Baltimore. The cause of that gentleman's tour is interesting to all the Colonies, and we are happy to find that all of them through which he has come are thoroughly engaged in it.

Mr. Goddard has long been noted as the proprietor and employer of a very free press, and some four or five years ago he began to feel himself distinguished on that account, till at length the exactions of the King's post rider became so enormous, that they amounted to an entire prohibition of the continuance of his business in the City of Philadelphia.* Maryland, a great part of Virginia, Pennsylvania, and the Jersies, through which his paper had circulated, became inflamed at the insult; especially when it was known that Mr. Goddard had complained to the Postmaster, the sole arbiter in the case, and could not might arise from it, procured an Act of Parliament in the ninth year of the reign of Queen Anne, to enable them to take into their own hands, and succeeding Administrations have ever since, taken upon them to regulate it - have committed the management of it to whom they pleased, and avail themselves of its income, now said to be at least 3,000 sterling per annum clear.

By this means a set of officers, Ministerial indeed, in their creation, direction, and dependence, are maintained in the Colonies, into whose hands all the social, commercial, and political intelligence of the Continent is necessarily committed; which at this time, every one must consider as dangerous in the extreme. It is not only our letters that are liable to be stopped and opened by a Ministerial mandate, and their contents construed into treasonable conspiracies, but our newspapers, those necessary and important alarms in time of publick danger, may be rendered of little consequence for want of circulation. Whenever it shall be thought proper to restrain the liberty of the press, or injure an individual, how easily may it be effected? A Postmaster General may dismiss a rider and substitute his hostler in his place, who may tax the newspapers to a prohibition; and when the master is remonstrated to upon the head, he may deny he has any concern obtain the shadow of a redress. Nearly the whole town of Baltimore, the first merchants and gentlemen in Philadelphia, assisted Mr. Goddard in establishing a rider between those two capitals, and have recommended the plan to all the Colonies. Mr. Goddard has received the greatest encouragement from every Colony through which he has passed, and all declare their readiness to come into the measure, provided it is adopted here. To be satisfied in this point a very respectable meeting of the principal gentlemen of the town was called, at which an unanimous resolution was come into to second our worthy brethren in the Southern Colonies, to the utmost of our power. Subscriptions will be immediately opened, and every measure taken to demonstrate that, in so glorious a motion for the recovery of American liberty, Boston wilt by no means fall short of the most sanguine expectations of her honest countrymen.

Mr. Hutchinson's declaration, that his Majesty (he should have said Ministry) highly disapproves of Provincial Committees of Correspondence, with the steps above mentioned, and many others, to be related in due season, are sufficient indications of the mind of Administration respecting a free communication of sentiment throughout these much injured communities; a junction of the whole is dreaded; and thanks to Heaven, the measures taken to prevent serve only to hasten it, beyond conception.

How unworthy of the wisdom and spirit of Americans would it be to bear any longer with the insolence of a tool who should impudently tell an assertor of the rights of his country that he could not expect the favours of Government in carrying his papers, while he was so free in defaming its measures? How naturally must such hauteur exasperate a people who consider the Post Office, in its present condition as a dangerous usurpation - as the boasted precedent of all the innovations with which an abandoned Administration have presumed to vex the Colonies - as the stated course of intelligence and information on which our very existence as a free people depends, and on which the enemy depends, and on which the enemy of our rights can lay his hand whenever he pleases? And in consequence, how cheerfully will every well-wisher to his country lay hold on the present opportunity to recover a right of importance conceivable by few, simply considered by hardly any one in its consequences. One of these tremendous consequences is, "the creation of new offices, with new fees, without consent of our Parliaments," and open violation of Magna Charta.

SALEM, March 29, 1774. - Yesterday evening came to town, Mr. William Goddard, Printer at Philadelphia and Baltimore. He has brought letters from the Committee of Correspondence at Boston to the Committee here, on the subject of establishing Post Offices and Post Riders on a new plan, independent of the unconstitutional laws of a British Parliament. We hear that a meeting on the affair will be held some time to-morrow, when there is no doubt that every well-wisher to his country will cheerfully lay hold of an opportunity to arrest the Channel of public and private intelligence out of the hands of a power openly inimical to its rights and liberties.

NEW-LONDON, April 4, 1774. - The following are the heads of a Subscription which was laid before the Committee of Correspondence at Boston:

Whereas, in our present struggles with the British Administration, it is of the last importance to have a free and safe communication throughout the whole extent of English America, a channel established by an Act of the British Parliament for the express purpose of raising a revenue here, and under the absolute controul of the British Minister, being both in principle and operation highly dangerous; and whereas, we are certified from several of the Southern Colonies that a Post Office has been erected in Maryland and Pennsylvania, on the principles of a voluntary subscription, and we have good reason to believe the salutary Institution will be generally adopted by all the intermediate Colonies, as well as those on both extremes; and whereas, the said Institution, if generally adopted, will defeat one Revenue Act, and obviate all its pernicious consequences, will unite all the friends of America in one common bond of alliance, and reduce the postage of letters one-third, as well as insure the transmission of interesting advice to the place of destination: We, the subscribers, do severally promise to pay to the Postmaster, who shall be hereafter appointed by a major vote of our body, the several sums annexed to our names, or to the successor in said office, to be by him, or them, employed in furnishing post riders to the several stages, we may agree upon and securing himself, or deputies, from any losses and damages that may accrue in the matter, and tell the Printer he must make his terms with the Post.

As, therefore, the maintenance of this dangerous and unconstitutional precedent of taxation without our consent - as the parting with very considerable sums of our money to support officers of whom it seems to be expected that they should be inimical to our rights - as the great danger of the increase of such interest and its connections, added to the considerations above mentioned, must be alarming to a people thoroughly convinced of the fatal tendency of this Parliamentary establishment, it is therefore proposed:

1st. That subscriptions be opened for the establishment and maintenance of a Post Office, and for the necessary defence of Post Officers and Riders employed in the same.

2d. That the subscribers in each Colony shall annually appoint a Committee from among themselves, consisting of seven persons, whose business it shall be to appoint Postmasters in all places within their respective Provinces, where such offices have hitherto been kept, or may hereafter be judged necessary, and to regulate the postage of letters and packets, with the terms on which newspapers are to be carried; which regulations shall be printed and set up in each respective office.

3d. That the Postmasters shall contract with and take unto him, or them, by means of their offices; meaning and understanding this present instrument to be a deposite and security to the said Postmaster, to be recoverable by him, in whole or in proportion to the sums subscribed, and to make up the deficiencies, if any there appear to a Committee of our body chosen to inspect accounts, after the whole amount of the moneys received for postage shall have been placed to our credit. In testimony, &c. &c.

PORTSMOUTH., April 15, 1774. - The establishment of a constitutional conveyance of intelligence, public and private, proposed by Mr. William Goddard, of Philadelphia, and so warmly seconded by our Southern brethren, appears, to the friends of freedom in this capital, as necessary and useful, as it is honourable, safe, and practicable. The letters brought by the above mentioned gentleman from the Southward, we find, have been received at Boston, &c., with that cordial satisfaction which brethren, united by common interest, and common danger, experience in finding each part of such combined interest generously sharing its full proportion of the common service; and the letter from the Boston Committee to that of this town, hath met with every possible mark of respectful attention.

At the last meeting of our Committee with the merchants, traders, and other inhabitants of this town, a subscription was unanimously agreed upon, similar to one already opened at Boston; and we doubt not, from the glorious beginning, but it will be soon filled up with the names of the principal inhabitants of all ranks, or their proxies. Mr. Goddard having been furnished with letters from the respective Committees of all the Southern Colonies, set out from hence on Wednesday last, via Newburyport, Salem, and Marblehead, after expressing the respectful and grateful sentiments he entertained of the patriotic spirit and urbanity of those to whom he had the pleasure of being introduced in this; and it is generally thought he will have such report to make of his doings, and their success, as will gratify every friend to the rights of America. Previous to Mr. Goddard's departure he transmitted his plan, with a number of letters, to the friends of liberty at Casco Bay.

We hear that the spirited inhabitants of Newburyport have warmly patronised the plan for establishing a Constitutional Post Office in America. At their last meeting on the business, they agreed to raise a fund sufficient to bring the mails from Boston to that place at least.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN PHILADELPHIA TO HIS CORRESPONDENT IN WILLIAMSBURG. - APRIL 21, 1774.

The vast noise and bustle which has lately appeared in almost all the papers relative to the Post Office in America, without doubt, has alarmed many people on this Continent, who would willingly adopt every prudent measure to redress themselves in so important a matter; and, indeed, I cannot conceive how the mother country can pretend to the profits arising from that Department, nor is it obvious to me, that the money produced therefrom can tend to the emolument of the Crown, as I have been credibly informed the chief part of it goes to the support of a set of harpies at home, who have, in a most unprecedented manner, pretended to claim thereto, and are upheld therein by every ministerial influence. Doubtless the Post office, thus established, is an infringement upon the liberties of America, and no man can wish more fervently than myself for a total abolition of it upon so unjustifiable a footing. But when I reflect upon the consequences that will naturally ensue in bringing this about, from a pretty thorough knowledge of the principles and character of the gentleman who seems most to interest himself in the affair, I cannot say I have very flattering ideas of its success. I believe, sir, you are entirely unacquainted with Mr. Goddard, who has been lately so much complimented, indeed you need no intimacy with him; hard is the lot of that man who has not one well-wisher. Mr. Goddard may have received his encomiums from two or three intimates, but, confident I am, he is not regarded even by those who once caressed and supported him. A private post is set up from this city to Baltimore, but the merchants here would not suffer Mr. Goddard to have the direction of it, notwithstanding his early application and profusion of patriotism; they have more prudently preferred Mr. Bradford.

BOSTON, April 21, 1774.--Yesterday arrived in this town from the Eastward, Mr. William Goddard, by whom letters are received from the Committees of Correspondence of Portsmouth, Newbury, Newburyport, Salem, &c., expressive of the hearty concurrence of the gentlemen of those towns with the proposal of erecting a Post Office, upon constitutional principles, throughout the Continent. Subscrip-bonds, with sufficient securities, of suitable persons to perform the same duty as hath heretofore been performed by Post Riders, subject to the regulation and controul of the Committee.

4th That the several mails shall be under lock and key, and liable to the inspection of no person but the respective Postmasters to whom directed, who shall be under oath for the faithful discharge of the trust reposed in them.

5th. That a Postmaster General shall be annually chosen by the written votes of all the Provincial Committees; enclosed and sent to the Chairman of the New-York Committee, who, on receiving all the votes, and giving one month's publick notice in all the New-York papers, of the time and place appointed for that purpose, shall open them in Committee, in presence of all such subscribers as shall choose to attend, and declare the choice, which choice shall be immediately communicated to all the other Provincial Committees by a certificate under the hand of the said Chairman.

6th. That the Postmaster General shall be empowered to demand and receive the accounts from the several Post-tions are set on foot in each of them, and they have already succeeded beyond the most sanguine expectation in all.

The removal of Dr. Franklin from the Post Office had added fresh spirit to the promoters of this salutary plan, as several viewed an opposition to his interest, at a time when he had signally served the cause of America, as a very disagreeable object; but all reluctance from that quarter must now vanish, and all the friends of liberty rejoice that they have now an opportunity of taking up a gentleman, discarded by an unrighteous Ministry for the faithful discharge of his duty, and placing him above a dependence on their caprice, in the grateful arms of his applauding countrymen.

BOSTON, May 5, 1774. - We have the pleasure of assuring the public that the subscription for establishing a new American Post Office, was opened late on Saturday last, April 30th, and hath been patronised by the first gentlemen of character and fortune in town. The second gentleman to whom it was presented generously engaged fifty pounds, lawful money, and many others have done as handsomely in proportion to their circumstances. With this indubitable evidence of the disposition of Bostonians, added to the noble conduct of the patriotick inhabitants of Portsmouth, Newburyport, Salem, &c., Mr. Goddard will set out on his return homeward this week, rejoicing in the great success which has attended his endeavours to rescue the channel of publick and private intelligence from the horrid fangs of ministerial despotism.

NEW-YORK, May 19, 1774. - A report having been industriously propagated, that several of the principal merchants in Philadelphia had withdrawn their subscriptions from the Constitutional Post Office, ou are desired to inform the publick, that the said report is entirely false, as appears by letter from thence on that subject.

It may not be improper, at this time, to mention, that the account which was invidiously inserted in some of the papers, that the Constitutional Post Rider between Philadelphia and Baltimore had absconded with a large sum of money entrusted to his care, was a misrepresentation. The person who absconded with the money was not the undertaker of that business, whose name is Stinson, a man of property and character, well known and respected in Philadelphia, but a villain he had the misfortune to hire, whose name is Bryan. And should he escape with his booty, there is no doubt but the friends of the institution will open a subscription for the indemnification of the master, who is known to be a man of integrity.

Accidents similar to the above have often happened to the Government Post Office, particularly one lately in England. But that office refuses to be accountable for money delivered to the riders.

NEW-YORK, June 2, 1774. - On Saturday last, Mr. William Goddard arrived here from Boston, with important despatches for all the Southern Colonies, for which he set out on Monday morning. The plan for establishing a Constitutional American Post Office, having met with the greatest success in all the great commercial towns in the Northern Colonies, it is not doubted, from the encouragement already given to the Southward, but the important design will, in a few weeks, be carried into complete execution.

LONDON, June 16, 1774. - In the Boston papers of 2d May, is inserted a Plan for the establishment of the now American Post Office, in opposition to that established by Government. It is, however, supposed, that as soon as General Gage arrives he will stop the career of the new Post Riders, and their employers; for, by the ninth of Queen Anne, chapter 10th, section 17th, it is decreed, "that no person or persons, "body politick or corporate whatsoever, in Great Britain, Ireland, the "West Indies, or America, other than the Postmaster General, appointed by his Majesty, shall presume to take up, order, despatch, "convey, carry, re-carry, or deliver, any letter or letters, or set up or "employ any foot post, horse post, or packet-boat, in pain of forfeiting "five pounds British money for every several offence; and also the "sum of one hundred pounds of like British money, for every week "during the continuance of the offence. Ship-masters are also made liable to a penalty of five pounds British money, if they do not deliver their letters at the General Post Office.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM PHILADELPHIA TO WILLIAMSBURG, DATED JULY 6, 1774.

I confess that no man wishes more for the establishment of a Constitutional Post Office in America, than myself; yet, as I anticipated in a former letter, Mr. Goddard's scheme seems to bear but an indifferent prospect of success. He returned here a few weeks ago. At Boston, and other parts of New England, he told them the Philadelphians had unanimously resolved to establish a Constitutional Post; and, for a confirmation of his assertion, a merchant at Boston wrote to a gentleman in this city. I am not acquainted with the contents of the masters throughout the Colonies connected with this Post Office, and shall adjust and liquidate the same, and by his order, transfer in just proportion, the surplusages of one office to make good the deficiencies of another, if any such should appear; and in case of a deficiency upon the whole, he shall have power to draw for the same on the several Committees in proportion to the amount of the subscriptions in their departments; and, at the year's end transmit to the said Committees a fair and just account of the whole Post Office under his inspection.

7th. That the several Postmasters shall charge * * * per cent. on all the monies received into their respective offices, for their services; and also, * * * per cent. for the use of the Postmaster General, which they shall remit to him quarterly, with their accounts.

8th. That whatever balances may remain in the hands of the several Postmasters, after all charges are paid, shall, by the direction of the subscribers in the Province or Provinces where such Postmasters reside, be appropriated to the enlargement of the present Institution within their respective Provinces.

answer, though I have great reason to conclude them unfavourable to Mr. Goddard. He attended a meeting of mechanicks here one night, pretending to have letters of consequence from Boston, New-York, &c., two or three of which were read, and gave some satisfaction; but the others, mentioning the regulation of the Post Office, they refused to read them through, observing America had enough upon her hands without meddling with the affairs of a Post Office. Mr. Goddard was much chagrined and vexed, and shortly after left the city.

BALTIMORE, July 16th, 1774. - The present Deputy Postmasters General of North America, are, it appears, in great distress, least their unconstitutional Institution, by which America hath been so long fleeced, should be annihilated by the publick spirit and consistent firmness of the people, who, since the infamous dismission of the worthy Dr. Franklin, and the hostile attack of the town and port of Boston, are unalterably determined to support a new Constitutional Post Office, "on the ruins of one that hath for its basis the slavery of America. To frustrate the endeavours of those who are now exerting themselves to bring about an event of this kind, and from a vain hope of reconciling the inhabitants of this place to their Parliamentary establishment, which levies a tax in the very heart of the Colonies, and is, in fact, more oppressive and arbitrary than the tea duty, the high and mighty Deputies in office, from their own free Will and mere motion, without waiting to be most humbly petitioned, are now about employing an additional Post Rider to come hither weekly from Philadelphia; a measure, by the way, the town could not be indulged in, until these Generals began to tremble for the emoluments of their places. This instance, therefore, of their grace and favour, being so much out of season, will not, it is presumed, gain them much credit with a discerning people, especially as a new Post Office will shortly be opened in this, and every considerable commercial town from Virginia to Casco Bay, and riders, of the most unexceptionable character, be set going with the Provincial mails, when letters, &c., will be carried with the utmost safety, much cheaper than the Ministerial prices of a Foxcroft or a Finlay. Thus much it is thought necessary to mention at this time. On the return of a particular agent, who is just setting off for Virginia, the publick will have further intelligence of the state of the enterprise in question, which the friends of freedom and their country wish to see completed by the first of September next, that being the time appointed for the meeting of the grand Congress at Philadelphia; a body that cannot, with any degree of consistency or safety, entrust or encourage the tools of those who have forged our chains, and are striving to rule us with a rod of iron.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED AT WILLIAMSBURG, FROM BALTIMORE TOWN, IN MARYLAND, DATED JULY 25, 1774.

It is with inexpressible pleasure that I can, at this juncture, from indubitable authority, assure you, and the respectable people of Virginia, that a complete plan of establishing a new American Post Office, has been lately executed throughout the different Governments in New England. It has been liberally encouraged, and warmly patronised, by a very considerable number of our principal gentlemen; and no doubt seems now to remain of its soon being carried into execution all over the Continent. Indeed, under the present dreadful situation of our affairs, the great and general utility of such an establishment must be obvious to every one; for, if we consider the footing on which the present American Post Office is, we must hold it to be a specious, baneful, and unjust taxation; at least equally dangerous with any other that we have opposed. Mr. William Goddard, Printer, here, who has conducted this business hitherto, intends setting out for Williamsburg in a few days, that he may be present at the general meeting of your late House of Representatives, and to lay before your Committee of Correspondence the several approving and recommendatory letters he has received from other Committees on this subject; and if they give their sanction to this scheme, (of which I have little doubt, when we reflect upon the noble struggles in support of their country's freedom,) it will be immediately executed, in a manner, it is presumed, that will give general satisfaction, and rescue American correspondence out of the hands of our wicked and designing enemies.

WILLIAMSBURG, August 11, 1774. - Mr. Goddard's proposals and plan for establishing an American Post Office on constitutional principles, which appears, by Letter's from the Committees of Correspondence, and principal gentlemen of many respectable Provinces and towns, to have met with the most generous patronage and warmest approbation, were agitated at the late Convention of the Representatives of this Colony, who justly considered the object Mr. Goddard is pursuing of great importance to America, highly worthy the attention of the general Congress, and, as such, particularly recommended it to the gentlemen appointed Delegates from this Colony,

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN NEW-YORK, DATED
BOSTON, JULY 3, 1774.

I arrived at this devoted town a few days ago; every thing here has a most melancholy appearance, except the countenances of the worthy inhabitants, which are as calm and serene as if they were in the height of their trade, though they are really distressed more than you can easily imagine; every method has been used for that purpose by those engines of tyranny, who have done almost every thing in their power, short of open hostilities, to intimidate and frighten them into compliance.

Their conduct upon this occasion is worthy of themselves; their patience, resolution, and firmness, under the present oppression, and the many insults they daily meet with from different quarters, is truly astonishing to their friends; and confounding to their enemies, It is highly mortifying to the Jacobites, Tories, and some of the military, to see the people here, in general, act with so much prudence, calmness, and at the same time determined resolution, never to submit to tyranny. This conduct entirely frustrates the wicked scheme of provoking the inhabitants to become the aggressors. Their unexampled patience and discretion, has reduced the director of this extraordinary expedition, to such a terrible dilemma, that I believe he hardly knows how to act. A non-consumption agreement has circulated through almost every county in this Province; and it is very generally signed, in some counties almost to a man. In this agreement they do in the most solemn manner engage not to purchase nor use any British manufactures that shall arrive after a certain time, I think the last of August next.

The Governour on hearing of the above, issued his Proclamation (without advice of the Council - a stretch of prerogative never before exercised in this Province) cautioning every person from signing the agreement, (which he calls a Solemn League and Covenant,) and commanding all Magistrates to prosecute any person who should attempt to sign it, calling it a traitorous combination, and the Committee who proposed it a set of traitors. But the Proclamation had an effect quite contrary to the design of it - many who did not before now intend to sign it - so that almost every measure taken by arbitrary power to subject the people here to slavery, has an effect directly opposite to the intention of the contrivers. A report prevails in town, that as soon as the soldiers are landed, six or seven of the leading men are to be taken up, and put on board of the man-of-war, to be sent home, or executed here; and that the Governour intends to erect his standard, and order the inhabitants to bring in their arms. Whether the report is true or not, I do not know, but some of the principal people here firmly believe it; and all the manoeuvres for some days past, seem to indicate such an intention. For my part, I think it only intended to intimidate; but, if so, it will certainly be lost labour.

The train of artillery landed yesterday, and encamped on the Common, with the other two regiments that were there before. The fifth and thirty-eighth arrived last week, and are to be landed to-morrow. Admiral Graves in the Preston, of fifty guns, arrived on Friday; and next Wednesday Admiral Montagu sails for England - perhaps this is the ship intended to carry home the state-prisoners. God forbid that any such attempt should be made, as the consequences would certainly be very terrible.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED AT PHILADELPHIA,
DATED CARLISLE, JULY 4, 1774.

Our last accounts from Fort Pitt, are very good in one sense: the traders are all arrived safe with their goods at that place, being escorted and protected by some Shawane Indians, who were sent to Colonel Croghan's, as it was imagined they would not be safe at the Fort; the Virginians having a party of militia under arms at that place. Conolly, their Captain, as soon as he heard of the Indians being at Croghan's, sent forty of his men to take them prisoners, notwithstanding their kindness to our people; but the traders giving them notice of the design, they immediately went off; Conolly's party followed and overtook them, fired upon and wounded one of them; the other two took the wounded Indian off, and made their escape, and a day or two afterwards met a party of Indians, escorting another of the traders with his effects from the lakes. The escorting party of the Indians no sooner saw the wounded man, but they immediately ordered the skins to be unloaded, and held a Council what was best to be done. But the traders who had arrived at Fort Pitt, fearing some bad consequences might happen from the conduct of the party, which Conolly had sent out, immediately followed the Indians, and came up with them the day after they had met with the other party, and advised them to return to their own country; at the same time telling them, that Pennsylvania had no part in the mischief already done, and that the Virginians were entirely in fault.

We hear from Virginia, that a large body of men are going out against the Indians by order of Government; the rendezvous to be at the mouth of the Great Kanhawa river, and there to build forts and fortify themselves.

We are informed that young Cresap, who first began the quarrel with the Indians, and murdered a number of them in a cowardly manner, has received a letter of thanks from Lord Dunmore. From hence it appears that a scheming party in Virginia are making a tool of their Governour, to execute the plans formed by them for their private emolument, who being mostly land-jobbers, would wish to have those lands which were meant to be given to the officers in general.

ORANGE TOWN (NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Orange Town, and Province of New-York, on Monday; the 4th day of July, 1774, at the house of Mr. Yeast Mabie, in said town, the following Resolves were agreed upon and passed, viz:

1st. That we are and ever wish to be, true and loyal subjects to his Majesty George the Third, King of Great Britain,

2d. That we are most cordially disposed to support his Majesty, and defend his Crown and dignity, in every constitutional measure, as far as lies in our power.

3d. That however well disposed we are towards his Majesty, we cannot see the late Acts of Parliament imposing duties upon us, and the Act for shutting up the port of Boston, without declaring our abhorrence of measures so unconstitutional and big with destruction.

4th. That we are in duty bound to use every just and lawful measure, to obtain a repeal of Acts, not only destructive to us, but which of course must distress thousands in the mother country.

5th. That it is our unanimous opinion, that the stopping all exportation and importation to and from Great Britain and the West Indies, would be the most effectual method to obtain a speedy repeal.

6th. That it is our most ardent wish to see concord and harmony restored to England and her Colonies.

7th. That the following gentlemen, to wit: Colonel Abraham Lent, John Haring, Esquire, Mr. Thomas Outwater, Mr. Gardiner Jones, and Peter T. Haring, Esquire, be a Committee for this town, to correspond with the City of New-York; and to conclude and agree upon such measures as they shall judge necessary, in order to obtain a repeal of said Acts.

EXTRACT FROM LONDON, DATED JULY 4, 1774.

Private letters from Boston give us rather an unfavourable account of the state of that town, in a mercantile view. The generality of the faction have little trading intercourse with England, being mostly composed of men who are engaged in smuggling companies, or mechanicks; yet there are some merchants among them, but these merchants are mostly indebted in England, are violent party men, and attribute the non-payment of their debts to the three-penny duty on tea, and to the exercise of the just rights of the British Legislature over them; therefore, the merchants who either will not, or cannot make remittances, the smugglers the mechanicks, and those who are fascinated with the extravagant notion of independency, all join to counteract the majority of the merchants, and the lovers of peace and good order. Seditious Committees have been appointed, who have endeavoured to influence the other Colonies to shut up their ports, to ruin themselves, and to starve the West Indies, in order to enable the herd of faction at Boston to conquer ungrateful England. In this extraordinary scheme, the unsuccess of the Boston rebels has been adequate to the folly of the proposal.

Some of the other Colonies have publicly declared that they will not enter into any non-importation agreement with the people of Boston, because the faction of that town had most infamously deceived them in a former agreement of the same kind. What the Boston faction themselves have published concerning the Colonies of Rhode Island and New-Hampshire joining in their frantick scheme, is partly true. These Colonies have verbally joined the Bostonians; but, if we can credit private letters from Boston itself, it is not expected that those Colonies will observe in practice what they have promised in writing; and there are also letters in town from merchants, who constitute part of the faction (that is to say, the honest and the misled part, whose eyes are now partly opened,) and they declare amidst their asseverations of defending what they call their rights and privileges, that they will take proper care not to be cheated by their brother confederates, as they were in the last non-importation agreement. From this intelligence we may readily conceive that no consistent, permanent, or vigorous measures, will be adopted by the Boston rebels; for where there exists a suspicion in the minds of men acting together, of a want of faith among themselves, or, to speak in plainer terms, where one party of them expects to be cheated by the other, in such an association, unanimity cannot long subsist, more especially as their confederacy is fundamentally wrong and unwarrantable; - a house built upon a sandy foundation, and divided against itself, cannot stand.

Such are the contents of many letters from Boston by the two last vessels; and such advices have had a proper effect, or at least, it is supposed, will have, on the merchants here, as several vessels that were expected to sail in a few weeks for the Massachusetts, will either be obliged to remain here, or to sail in ballast. Private letters also mention, that some owners of vessels have laid up their ships on the supposition that the English merchants will not ship any goods till the faction has submitted, and till the blockade is withdrawn. Other letters hint that some who are called merchants have in contemplation a removal to the banks of the Ohio and the Mississippi, as in such remote regions they will have little chance of hearing from their friends in England. In general, the private accounts bear the complexion of the writers; some who wish for the opening of the port, are nevertheless, well pleased that such an effectual measure has been taken as the most seditious, now begin to feel their own littleness; and have also drawn upon themselves the reproaches of the more moderate. And as some of the heads of the faction have no concerns in lawful trade, the majority of the merchants complain much against them for involving the town in such distress. It is likewise said, that if the Act had been conditional, and if, upon their voting the compensation for the tea, its operation would have been prevented, that the money would have been instantly granted; for the real cause of all the rebellious insolence committed at Boston was, the continued assurances sent to Boston by their agent, that Britain was too enfeebled, and Administration too timorous, for to take any spirited measures to repress them. The fatal effects of listening to such insidious advices are now clearly seen by every person possessed of common sense.

The publick accounts, which the faction have published from their friends, (as they mistakenly call them) in London, give us the strongest evidence of the base falsehoods employed to mislead the ignorant people of Boston. Among these many pages of falsehoods, we shall only select one article, which is, "that when the regiments "were ordered to embark for Boston, many of the officers "resigned their commissions, refusing to be the instruments "of oppression." This may serve as a specimen of the encouragement which the factious miscreants here infuse into the Bostonians on purpose to seduce them. Another piece of admirable advice given them, by some knave here, is, "that as their port was to be blocked up, it would be "wise in them not to pay any of their debts to this "country." Thinking men now will act be surprised that there have been the most unjustifiable commotions and insurrections in Boston, as they find that the people whom the Bostonians confide in, and entrust with the management of their affairs here, have written their correspondents the well established truth of the officers resigning their commissions; and also sent them the honest advice not to pay their just debts!

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE PROVINCE OF SOUTH-CAROLINA, ABOUT TO ASSEMBLE ON THE 6th OF JULY.

Charlestown, July 4, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The hour is approaching, the determination of which will affect posterity to the remotest generation. An unparalleled stretch of arbitrary power has lately taken away the chartered privileges of a sister Colony, and granted to his Majesty the property of thousands against whom nothing had been proved. The same Ministerial tools who refused to admit the Letters of Hutchinson and Oliver to be evidence in support of the Assembly's Petition against them, have condemned a whole town unheard, on the sole evidence of their private Letters. The last evening of May, thousands of brave Americans lay down possessed of lands, wharfs, &c., confirmed by Royal Charters; the rising sun of the ensuing day beheld them stripped of all legal right to those possessions. The loyal sufferers supplicate our aid, to concert some general plan of conduct. An auspicious day will soon behold the numerous Sons of Liberty assemble at her call.

Give me leave to present to your view our happy situation before the year 1765. When money or troops were wanted, a requisition was made to our Assemblies, whose compliances in general did them great honour, particularly in the last war, when they were supposed to have contributed more than their quota.* A mutual confidence reigned between British subjects on both sides of the Atlantick. Taxation being mutually acknowledged to reside in the Deputies of each, and legislation in the Parliament of Great Britain. Within these few years, such is the encroaching nature of power, they began, for the first time, to lay taxes for the raising of a revenue. Hence the accursed Stamp Act, Declaratory Act, and the imposition of duties on paper, paints, glass, tea, &c. The Americans, determined to oppose the raising a revenue of them by Representatives they never chose, agreed to parry the Tea Act, by stopping the importation of it, The Ministry, unwilling thus to be balked, request the aid of the East India Company. They, knowing the measure to be dangerous, because it was unjust, hesitate; but, after they were indemnified from all losses, they undertake to export large cargoes of tea, loaded with a duty for the raising a revenue, to be paid in our ports, with our money. In what light is the East India Company to be considered in this matter? As merchants trading here under the sanction of the law of nations, or as a banditti hired to attack our privileges? In what light could the Americans consider their commodity? As the sacred property of the honourable trader? No; but as an engine by which the enemies of America meant to subvert its privileges. Tea, so circumstanced, brought with such a design, so involved in the dispute, lost the sacred sanction of common property, and may figuratively be said to have changed its nature, and become an instrument of war. In this view of the matter, the Bostonians seem to have done no more than the spirited traveller who breaks the sword or pistol of a robber presented to the breast. Pardon the comparison, ye pensioned hirelings of power, though interest blinds your eyes, the free-born sons of America know, that, notwithstanding the vast Atlantick rolls between, a subject born in this Continent has a constitutional right to the same privileges as if he had received his first existence in the Island of Great Britain; and that, of consequence, no power on earth has any more right to demand his money, without his consent, than the assassin who robs on the highway. They also know, that Great Britain claims a right of obliging the Colonists to buy manufactures of none but British merchants; and that, of consequence, a duty laid on them for raising a revenue, is a* tax to all intents and purposes.

* In the year 1690, New England alone furnished three thousand troops, and forty transports, against Canada. They sent six thousand men, under General Hill, for the same purpose, in Queen Anne's wars. In 1739, they raised four thousand men to serve against Carthage. In 1746, they alone made a conquest of Cape Breton. In 1759, at the request of Admiral Saunders, sailing against Quebeck, they sent him a number of their best sailors, who served in the fleet during the remainder of the war. They also sent a large body of troops, under the command of General Lyman, to the Havana. All this they did willingly.

Figure to yourselves, my countrymen, the abject situation you are in. It is inconvenient to manufacture for yourselves; indeed Great Britain says you shall not, as in her prohibition of slitting mills, and the transporting of any American woollen manufactures whatsoever, or hats, by land or water, from one Colony to another, she also commands you to buy from her. How complete, then, is your slavery, if she has a right to lay taxes at pleasure on those articles of commerce, which she will neither permit you to make for yourselves, nor buy from any but herself? This short review of the dispute evinces the justice of our opposition to the payment of taxes on British manufactures. By tamely submitting to this usurped claim, you not only reduce yourselves to be tenants at will to the British House of Commons, but also lay a foundation for overturning the Constitution of England herself. Her excellent form of Government is supported on the tripple pillars of Kings, Lords, and Commons; either of these being defective or overgrown, the fabrick will at least totter, if not tumble. The Americans, in one century, will exceed the inhabitants of England. If, then, their property should be at the disposal of the House of Commons, they will grow too strong for the other branches of Legislature, and erect a Government of five hundred and fifty-eight tyrants in the place of the present admirably equi-poised Constitution.

From what has been said, it appears, that the duty on tea is founded on the same principles with the Stamp Act, and ought to be opposed with equal firmness. America, through a long tract of two thousand miles, remonstrated against the precedent, and resolved that the tea should sooner be destroyed than landed. Hapless Boston! Not one whit more guilty than the other towns, thy fate was predetermined! Thou wert deliberately ensnared, that thou mightest be superlatively punished. † Delenda est Carthage, was the motto of thine enemies. Thou didst break the dagger that was pointed at the heart of American liberty, and therefore the property of the innocent, as well as the guilty, has been ravished from them, and their lives made to depend on those "whose tender mercies are cruelty."

Here let me pause, and ask, why is the attack made on only one Province, when all are equally guilty? Divide and destroy, is the only answer which can be given. Why are they ptmished so much beyond the demerit of the offence? To intimidate every American who would dare to dispute the omnipotence of Parliament. Why is the duty on tea so warmly supported, when it scarcely pays the cost of collecting? ‡ Not for the trifling sum of three pence a pound, but to establish a precedent to tax us at pleasure. Yes, my countrymen, you may depend on it, a design is formed against your liberties; and that, one by one, you will be victims to Ministerial despotism, unless you unite in the most vigorous self-denying opposition. The exhausted treasury of England is unequal to the

* I reject the division of taxes into external and internal. Any duty laid to raise a revenue is properly a tax. What is commonly called an external tax, is no more than a regulation of trade; and though the revenue might be accidentally increased by such regulations, they are very different from duties laid expressly to raise money.

† Many things make this probable. Admiral Montagu, writing concerning the destruction of the tea, has these words: "During the whole of the transaction, neither the Magistrates, owners, nor revenue officers, ever called for my assistance; if they had, I could easily have prevented the execution of the plan." Why did Hutchinson necessitate the destruction of the tea by the refusal of a pass? His letters complaining of their Charter; the clauses in the Bill designed to impoverish Hancock, Rowe, &c., and many other things, make it highly probable that the whole was a premeditated juggle between Hutchinson and the Ministry.

‡ The expense of the American Board of Commissioners is between four and five thousand pounds a year; and yet, says the Author of support of the increasing number of placemen and pensioners, and therefore they would fain augment their resources by plundering the fair possessions which your industrious forefathers have hewn out of the wilderness of uncultivated America. Golden showers have rained down on the abettors of these accursed schemes, and disgrace fallen on every honest man who opposed them. Witness the promotion of Bernard, Oliver, and the expectations of Hutchinson. Pardon me, illustrious Franklin! if I mention thy venerable name in the same unhallowed page which is stained with those of Hutchinson and Bernard. Though you disarmed the Heavens of her thunder, and taught the lightnings to play harmless around our heads, yet, because you opposed the subjugation of your native land, therefore you have been disgraced.

The Regulations of the Colonies, the whole remittance from all the taxes in the Colonies before this establishment, at an average of thirty years, did not amount to one thousand nine hundred pounds a year. The smallness of this sum proves that these duties were regulations of trade; and the coeval existence of the new Revenue Laws, and the Board of Commissioners, make it obvious to every man that the trifling tax on tea is designed only to try our temper, and to prepare the way for much heavier.

Suppose the Bostonians were wrong in destroying the tea; we should vigorously unite against the present measure, as that mode of punishment is a fatal precedent. If a few people, even if the whole town was guilty, will this justify the taking the Charter from the whole Colony? If restitution was to be made, is that a sufficient reason that the lands, wharfs, and property of thousands, should be given to the King for ever? If these Acts of Parliament are suffered to operate, landholders may consign the deeds by which they hold their property to the tallow chandlers and pastry cooks. If the security of property is the object, why is it not tried at common law? No, my countrymen, nothing less is designed than to beggar three or four worthy patriots of that town, new-model their Constitution, and establish a precedent for the enslaving this free country. Do you need arguments to prove that it is a common cause, and that we should all unite, heart and hand, in some vigorous measures of opposition? Surely no. Methinks I hear almost every one resolve, that tyranny and injustice should not enter in till the body of the last freeman lies in the breach. Sorry am I to hear, that some, insulting the misery of the Bostonians, ludicrously compare them to a fox, "who, having lost his tail, largely inveighed against the use of tails, and persuaded "the other foxes to cut off theirs." Ye assassins of America! (for I cannot forbear,) who, though you have received your existence from her indulgence, trample on her rights! What name shall I give you? Ye are not men; for, is it manly to hug yourselves in wanton ease, unconcerned at the sufferings of your brethren, bleeding in the common cause! Ye are not brutes! for "the ox knoweth "his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but ye neither "know nor consider." The surly dog will lick the hand and fawn upon the man who gives him bread; but you, more ungrateful, join in the most unnatural opposition to that country, the bounty of which enables you to bask in the sunshine of prosperity. I trust, my countrymen, you have too much good sense to be influenced by such unfeeling wretches, and that neither ease nor interest will deter you from affording vigorous assistance to your injured brethren. At your proposed meeting, make the plan of operation as perfect as possible. Perhaps it is the last time you will be indulged the liberty of consulting together, on pain of being fired upon, by malicious men, privileged to murder. A Ministerial Parliament has made it unlawful for your neighbours to assemble; and many reasons make it highly probable that this is but act one of the begun tragedy of American liberty. I would, therefore, recommend to you the passing of some resolves on the late oppressive Acts of Parliament; the choosing of Deputies for a general Congress; the entering into solemn agreement not to import goods; (a very few articles excepted;) the appointment of Committees to procure subscriptions to this agreement, and to enforce the observance of it; and also to collect money for the suffering poor in Boston and amongst yourselves. These measures are hard; but unless we willingly impose them on ourselves, much harder are likely to be imposed by our unrighteous task-masters. I repeat it, again (for it cannot be too often insisted upon,) that all evils of this kind fly up, and kick the beam, when weighed against the consequences of our giving up the point. What though you should be obliged to wear the same garb your slaves hitherto have done, or though every fourth man, thrown out of business, should be supported by the liberal and wealthy. Better to remain in this state, calling the little we have our own, than to commit treason against the Majesty of Heaven, by tamely acknowledging the claim of Parliament to dispose of your houses, lands, wharfs, money, and even your lives, at their discretion.

The inconveniencies of non-importation, however discouraging they may appear to the imagination of the timid, shrink into nothing when compared with those it will prevent. The planters are greatly in arrears to the merchants; a stoppage of importation would give them all an opportunity to extricate themselves from debt. The merchants would have time to settle their accounts, and be ready with the return of liberty to renew trade. We can live independent, as our country abounds with all things necessary for our support. Who that has the spirit of a man, but would rather forego the elegancies and luxuries of life, than entail slavery on his unborn posterity to the end of time? If gentlemen of influence lead the way, the honest industrious patriot will appear more graceful in sober homespun, than the gayest butterfly-dressed in all his gaudy decorations. Nothing but custom makes the curl-pated beau a more agreeable sight with his powder and pomatum, than the tawney savage with his paint and bear's grease. Too long has luxury reigned amongst us, enervating our constitutions and shrinking the human race into pigmies. "Hysterick and hypochondriack diseases, "were formerly confined to the chambers of the great, are "now to be found in our kitchens and workshops." Our gray-headed fathers tell us, that, in the present generation, there is a sensible diminution of the strength and stature of their predecessors, "who nobly independent lived."

Let us, then, be content to eat, and drink, and wear, what our country can afford, at least till it is determined whether we are to work for ourselves, or the devouring bloodsuckers of another quarter of the globe. Thus circumstanced, a non-importation agreement will not only prove a means of restoring our liberty, but also be productive of many salutary purposes.

The number of people in England has been computed to be equal to seven millions, and that the cultivation of the land cannot employ more than every seventh man, the other six millions being supported by manufacturing. Writers on trade suppose that America consumes nearly one half of their wares, and, therefore, virtually supports almost three millions of the inhabitants of that Island. By a strict observance of a prudent non-importation agreement, we can reduce this number to a starving condition; and if non-exportation should also take place, it would lessen the revenue two millions sterling a year. Thus, Hannibal like, we can plant the war in our oppressor's country. Think with yourselves, my countrymen, how confidently you may expect redress, when you have the eloquence of three millions of such miserable subjects pleading in your behalf! A despotic Ministry has been deaf to your cries; but how can they be deaf to the cries of so many of their own subjects pinched with poverty and hunger? Will it suffice that Lord North should exhort them to patience till he subjugates three millions of free born Americans? Surely no. Something more than bare words and empty promises is necessary to satisfy the inexorable cravings of a hungry belly. In vain has Chatham plead, in vain has Camden exhausted the powers of language in demonstrating our right of exemption from Parliamentary taxation; but not in vain will these pinched millions plead. If we can subdue pride and luxury in ourselves, and withhold our commerce, in six months we can distress the West Indies and Great Britain, so that the cry of famine, re-echoed from thousands, rising in mobs, will oblige the Parliament to adopt other measures. These are "the constitutional weapons with which we can fight the enemies of our Continent. Courage, then, my countrymen. Remember the success that crowned your opposition to the Stamp Act. Unanimity and perseverance, in our good cause, will make us invincible. Think of your ancestors who fled from tyranny and persecution to this uncultivated land, fearing less from savage beasts and savage men, than slavery, the worst of savages. By their industry this wilderness has blossomed as a rose. Will you tamely suffer your possessions, improved by their labour, and bought with their blood, to be wrested from you, and given to placemen and pensioners? Think of your posterity, and transmit to them the fair inheritance of liberty, handed down from your glorious progenitors. Kindle with the complicated idea, and, upon this trying occasion, sacrifice every private consideration to the publick good.

When I review the annals of the world, I am constrained to believe that great things await America. When Liberty was well nigh banished from every quarter of the globe, she found an asylum in this savage land. Learning, liberty, and every thing that ennobles the human mind, have constantly been travelling westward. I never can believe, that in this sacred land slavery shall be so soon permitted to erect her throne on the ruins of freedom. It is contrary to the analogy of things, which gradually have their rise, progress and declension. Be firm, be of one mind; abandon luxury and indolence, encourage industry and frugality. Choose your Deputies for a general Congress; solemnly enter into a non-importation agreement, and religiously adhere to it. Thus persevering, as sure as God is in Heaven you will obtain a speedy redress of all your grievances.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

New-Hampshire, July 4, 1774.

On the 25th of June, at night, arrived here the Grosvenor, mast-ship, from London, with twenty-seven chests of bohea tea, consigned to a merchant in Portsmouth; sometime before the arrival of the ship, it was reported that a quantity of bohea tea was expected. Hereupon I took effectual precautions to counteract the universal disquiet of America, from contravening the Acts of Parliament in this instance, or destroying the property. By my desire the consignee wrote a letter to the master of the ship, with directions how to proceed on his arrival. This letter I gave to Captain Cochran of his Majesty's Castle William and Mary, who effected my orders in delivering it at sea. The 26th being Sunday, nothing was done. On the 27th the master and merchant went early to the Custom House, and entered the ship and cargo. At noon day the ship's boats came to the wharf with twenty-seven chests of tea; carts were prepared and the tea immediately carried to the Custom House and there stored before any people could assemble to obstruct it. The town, not suspecting any movement until my return from Dover, about ten miles off, where I purposely staid during this first operation to secure the event, which I foresaw would be carried quietly, by withdrawing suspicion, having confided my plan to proper Magistrates, who I knew would not be disappointed. In the afternoon a town meeting was convened upon the occasion. I came into town and passed on horseback through the concourse, who treated me with their usual kindness and respect. At the meeting, it was represented to the people, that the tea being now lodged in the Custom House, the question was totally changed; that nothing could be done, but by the consent of, and agreement with, the merchant. The meeting proceeded with coolness and temper beyond almost my hope. It was proposed that a Committee should be chosen and invested with powers to treat with the merchant. In this Committee of eleven, were many principal gentlemen, discreet men, who I knew detested every idea of violating property; men disposed to prevent mischiefs. The town also chose a guard of freeholders, to protect and defend the Custom House and the tea from any attempt or interruption, which being sincerely intended, was faithfully executed. On the 28th the consignee accepted and agreed to the proposals of the Committee, to export the tea to any market he chose, upon condition the town would re-ship and protect it while in the harbour. This they gladly acceded to, and the town upon adjournment confirmed the proceedings; accordingly the Committee and the consignee, together, were at the Custom House, where the duty was openly and regularly paid, and the tea again carted through the streets publicly in the day time, without noise, tumult or insult. About nine o'clock P. M., three overheated mariners (two of them strangers) endeavoured to excite a mob, to destroy the tea and vessel hired to export it. Whereupon I sent for Colonel Fenton who gathered a few gentlemen, repaired to the vessel, and with laudable spirit and prudence they personally guarded both vessel and cargo in safety till the next morning. On the 29th, A. M., the Comptroller of the Customs informed me that these mariners had got drums, and were assembling thoughtless people to destroy the tea and sloop. At the same time I received a letter, No. 1, a copy herewith enclosed, from the consignee, desiring my aid and assistance to take possession of the sloop and cargo. Hereupon I directed the Sheriff instantly to summon the Council and every Magistrate and peace officer to meet me forthwith on the wharf, where the vessel lay, determining to disperse any riotous attempts, and order the vessel to the Castle; while I was going out on this my duty: a messenger came to tell me that some Magistrates and two of the Council, Mr. Warner and Mr. Rindge, who happened to be in the way, hearing the noise, had repaired to the place, and, with many other freeholders silenced the drums, and prevailed on the people to disperse, without any outrage. At this time I received a second letter, No. 2, herewith, from the consignee, to the same purport as the first. I lost no time in writing an order to Captain Cochran, immediately to take possession, defend, protect, and safely deliver the said vessel and cargo to the merchant, or to his orders; and the Sheriff, John Parker, Esq., to take command of the Castle in his absence, as will appear fully by the enclosure, No. 3. In the evening, about half past six, observing the wind to be contrary, I despatched a second order to Captain Cochran, still to continue in the orders of the morning, as by the enclosure, No. 4. Those orders were directly carried into effect, with a prudence and firmness that does honour to both the officers. On the 30th the owner of the sloop, the master, and the supercargo, to whose care the consignee committed the tea, came on board, with proper Custom House clearances, and authority from the consignee. Captain Cochran examined the twenty-seven chests of tea, found them perfectly safe, and in good order, desired the three last mentioned persons to examine the same, which they did, and then received both vessel and cargo into their possession; and forthwith sailed for Halifax. Mr. Parker, the Sheriff, and Captain Cochran, returned to their respective duties, and have made return of their doings on my orders, as in the enclosures, No. 5 and 6. During these transactions, viz.; on the evening of the 27th, and morning of the 28th, I told the Collector and Comptroller, also the consignee, that if they wanted any aid or assistance, or were apprehensive of danger, I was ready, whenever they would apply to me, and would not only issue orders, but would in person defend them; that I was confident the magistrates and freeholders would not desert me: but they would not apply, declaring they then apprehended no danger.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A VERY RESPECTABLE GENTLEMAN IN LONDON, TO A CORRESPONDENT IN PHILADELPHIA, London, July 5, 1774.

The present state of political affairs furnishes nothing less disagreeable than my last informed. The Quebec Bill, we apprehend, will produce the most distressing jealousies among the Protestant inhabitants of that country, and indeed of all America. With us the staunchest friends to Hanoverian succession have not scrupled publicly to pronounce it the most daring stretch of the prerogative of the Crown, and the most sinful violation of the rights of a free people, that the annals of Britain, or any other Nation in the world, register. Enclosed you have the address and petition of the Lord Mayor, Alderman and Commons of this city to his Majesty, which is considered one of the grandest and most spirited addresses ever handed to a Throne, insomuch that many hundreds of them, elegantly framed and glazed, have been purchased as household pictures by the nobility, gentry, &c., to transmit to future ages the virtue, sincerity, and honest boldness of so respectable a body of men. The coin of prophecies is now become current here, and we have too much reason to fear, that some presage, of dreadful import, will, ere long, be realized. Very much, all, indeed, depends on the hardihood and publick virtue of the Americans. If the brave Bostonians maintain theirs, at this trying juncture, all will be well; for their conduct will furnish a criterion whereby to regulate Government here, in a judgment of the success of the iniquitous measures they purpose adopting throughout the Continent. It is strongly imagined that many presses, I mean printing presses, in the Colonies, are at present fettered in golden chains, sent over by the Ministry for that purpose. One or two to the Northward of you have been publicly mentioned, but as a little time must discover the truth or falsity of this suspicion, I shall forbear entering into particulars. The publick prints from your city, as well as those from Virginia, are in admired request with all ranks of people, except the tools of despotism; but should the Ministry succeed in the enterprises they have already undertaken, with respect to the Colonies, you will assuredly be robbed of that darling privilege the freedom of the press; for effecting which, a scheme, I am well informed, is now agitating in the Cabinet, upon a new plan, lately hatched by a certain Lord, whose name is always opposite to the sun in its meridian, and who has publicly declared, that he is determined strenuously to oppose the meridian of your glory in the Western world.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM DEPUTY GOVERNOUR PENN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Philadelphia, July 5, 1774.

MY LORD: In my last, of the 31st of May, I had the honour to inform your Lordship of my expectation that a petition would be presented to me for calling the Assembly. I have since received such a petition, and herewith transmit you a copy of it, as also of my answer. In consequence of my refusal to call the Assembly, there was a general meeting of the people of this city and county, which, I am informed, was not so full as might have been expected on such an occasion.

Their proceedings I am only acquainted with by the newspapers, one of which I send your Lordship, which contains the transactions of the day. The general temper of the people, as well here as in other parts of America, is very warm. They look upon the chastisement of the people of Boston to be purposely rigorous, and held up by way of intimidation to all America; and, in short, that Boston is suffering in the common cause. Their delinquency in destroying the East India Company's tea, is lost in the attention given to what is here called, the too severe punishment of shutting up the port, altering the Constitution, and making an Act, as they term it, screening the officers and soldiers shedding Americau blood. The plan which seems to be universally adopted is the procuring a general Congress, in order to state the rights, and represent the grievances of America to the Throne; and to agree upon such measures as may be thought most likely to relieve Boston, and restore harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies.

The measures generally talked of is the non-importation and non-exportation from and to England. Some are for making it general, and others for limiting it, but all for associating against the use of East India goods of every kind, except saltpetre and spices. In the mean time, as great numbers of people will be reduced to absolute indigence for want of their usual employment, collections are making here, and in all other parts of America, for their relief.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Salem, July 5, 1774,

MY LORD: Since my letter, No. 3, of the 26th ultimo, a number of the better sort of people attended a town meeting at Boston, with design to make a push to pay for the tea, and annihilate the Committee of Correspondence, but they were out voted by a great majority of the lower class. The minority drew up a Protest, which I transmit your Lordship from a newspaper.

The above Committee had sent a circular letter through the Province, accompanied with a paper called a League and Covenant, of so pernicious a tendency, that I judged it proper, without loss of time, to publish a Proclamation to prevent the ill effect of it as much as possible. I enclose your Lordship a copy of the Proclamation, together with printed copies of the letter and covenant, and also part of the newspaper, containing as much of the proceedings of the above mentioned town meeting as the faction chose to publish, and a Protest of a number of gentlemen of the County of Worcester, against all riotous disorders, seditious practices.

Your Lordship will perceive, that the Proclamation is not published with the advice of Council. There was no time to lose; I had a right to issue it without their consent, as I was confident I could not obtain it. I gave notice afterwards for a Council to assemble, intending to lay the letter and covenant before them; but, on the day appointed for the meeting, one who had been summoned did not appear, so that there was not enough to make up a quorum; some of those who attended gave me to understand that they should desire a General Council to be called before they entered upon such business.

I have done all in my power to spirit up every friend to Government, and the measures taken by Administration encourage many to speak and act publicly, in a manner they have not dared to do for a very long time past. Your Lordship will observe, that there is now an open opposition to the faction, carried on with a warmth and spirit unknown before, which it is highly proper and necessary to cherish and support by every means; and I hope it will not be very long before it produces very salutary effects. Your Lordship is acquainted with the usurpation and tyranny established here by edicts of town meetings, enforced by mobs, by assuming the sole use and power of the press, and influencing the pulpits; by nominating and intimidating of juries, and, in some instances, threatening the judges; and this usurpation has, by time, acquired a firmness that, I fear, is not to be annihilated at once, or by ordinary methods. A free and impartial course of justice, whereby delinquents can be brought to punishment, I apprehend to be the chief thing wanting; the terrour of mobs is over, and the press is becoming free.

Although I do not credit many reports and opinions sent me, yet I do not hold it prudent totally to disregard them; and, on that account, I have ordered the transports which brought the fourth regiment here, to proceed to the port of New-York, and wait their for further orders. I intend, if I see occasion for it, to bring a regiment here from thence and the transports of the forty-third are kept in readiness to sail for Halifax on the same errand; these motions, I hear, give spirit to one side and have thrown a damp on the other.

I heard yesterday, that all the transports from Ireland had come in, except one of the fifth regiment, with Lord Percy on board, and she was seen a day or two past, so that I hope to find her in the harbour to-morrow, on my getting to Boston, where I propose to pass some days, finding that my presence there will be necessary.

I have, &c.

THOMAS GAGE.

POSTSCRIPT. - Boston, 6th July. - I have the pleasure to acquaint your Lordship, that the last transport with Lord Percy on board, is arrived; as, also, the store-ship, with many officers belonging to the regiments in America.

T. G.

ADDRESS OF THE JUSTICES OF THE COUNTY OF PLYMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS, TO GOVERNOUR GAGE, PRESENTED JULY 6, 1774.

To his Excellency the Honourable Thomas Gage, Captain-General and Commander-in-chief in and over the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England; Vice Admiral of the same, and Lieutenant-General of his Majesty's Forces in North America:

May it please your Excellency to accept the cordial congratulations of the Justices of the Courts of the General Sessions of the Peace, and Inferiour Court of Common Pleas, for the County of Plymouth, on your appointment to the high office of First Magistrate of this Province, and upon your safe arrival. And permit us to acknowledge our gratitude to our most gracious Sovereign, that he has been pleased to place at the head of our affairs a person in whom are centered all the qualifications necessary for the discharge of that important trust.

We are sensible that the unwearied endeavours of your immediate predecessor to support the dignity of Government, and to maintain peace and good order, were not attended with the desired success; and we fear that the various arts and stratagems of some designing persons (who persevere in their plan of subverting the Constitution) will, in some degree, perplex your Excellency's Administration. But we console ourselves with the consideration that your Excellency has not only inclination but also authority to check the clamours of the seditious, and to secure to us all our constitutional privileges.

Of late we have seen with serious concern the inhabitants of some of our towns - influenced by certain persons calling themselves Committees of Correspondence, and we are sorry to say, encouraged by some whose business it is to preach the Gospel of Christ, and to inculcate principles of loyalty and obedience to the laws,) entering into a league which seems to us calculated to increase the displeasure of our Sovereign, to exasperate our parent country, and to interrupt and destroy the harmony of society. Against this league and covenant, and all such illegal combinations, their aiders and abettors, we do bear our testimony, and we assure your Excellency that we will endeavour, by every means in our power, to discountenance such proceedings; and we will exert ourselves that justice be duly administered, the laws kept inviolate, and good order maintained in this country.

THE GOVERNOUR'S ANSWER,

GENTLEMEN: This very loyal and affectionate Address claims my best thanks, and my warmest acknowledgments. I cannot but lament that so many people, by nature well inclined, should be so far led astray by the stratagems and artifices of designing persons, as to forget the duty and obedience they owe their King and country, and become blind to their interest and happiness; but when men, from whose mouths we ought to expect the doctrines of sound religion, peace, virtue, and morality, so shamefully pervert the duties of their sacred functions, as to employ themselves to ensnare the weak, and captivate the unwearied to the commission of actions unworthy of faithful patriots and honest citizens, it is no wonder that ignorant people should be prevailed upon to do things which, if not deceived, they would detest and abhor.

That such an usurpation and almost total subversion of all legal Government should make confusion in the Province is not surprising; but you will be satisfied, that you have a gracious Monarch, who sees your distress, and who holds forth his hand to protect and defend his loyal subjects, and that I will take every step in my power to secure to you the peaceable enjoyment of all your constitutional privileges, and to give that free course to the laws, on which every state depends for its support, and without which no Government can subsist.

GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, New-Hampshire, July 6, 1774.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR LORDSHIP: Upon hearing the Committee of Correspondence, chosen by the late Assembly of this Province, had issued letters to those members to meet this day in the Representatives' Chamber, in Portsmouth, there to deliberate and act, particularly to choose Delegates for a general American Congress, and that some of the said persons were convened, I have considered it to be my duty to his Majesty to use my endeavours to disperse and separate so illegal and unwarrantable an attempt. I have, therefore, convened his Majesty's Council, ordered the Sheriff to attend me, and requiring their attendance on me, I went into the room, and immediately read the enclosed Speech to them; afterwards I directed the Sheriff to make open proclamation, for all persons to disperse and keep the King's peace, which was done before they had entered on any business, and I expect will be obeyed. As this letter must be forwarded by express sixty-six miles to Boston, and reach there to-night, in hopes to have conveyance by Admiral Montagu, what further may occur I shall take due care to transmit to your Lordship as soon as possible. All which is most humbly submitted, dutifully hoping your Lordship's favourable representation of my best zeal, unremitting diligence and fidelity, in discharge of my duty, may happily be honoured with his Majesty's approbation. I have the honour to be, with the most perfect respect, &c.,

J. WENTWORTH.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR COLDEN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

New-York, July 6, 1774.

In my letter of June 1st, I informed your Lordship that the people of this city had chosen a Committee of fifty-one persons to correspond with the sister Colonies on the present political affairs; that many of this Committee were of the most considerable merchants, and men of cool tempers, who would endeavour to avoid all extravagant and dangerous measures. They have had a continual struggle with those of a different disposition, and having for several weeks succeeded in suspending any resolutions, I was in hopes they would have maintained the only conduct which can excuse them. But accounts repeatedly coming to hand from different parts of the Continent, of the appointment of Deputies to meet in a general Congress, this measure was so strenuously pushed, that it was carried in the Committee of fifty-one on Monday last, and five persons were named for the Deputies from this Province; the persons named are, James Duane, and John Jay, two eminent lawyers, Isaac Low, Philip Livingston, and John Alsop, merchants. I am told that a violent effort was made in the Committee to have John Morin Scott, an eminent lawyer, and Alexander McDougall, named in the place of Jay and Alsop; it is said that the people are to be invited to meet on Thursday, to approve of the Deputies named by the Committee. These transactions are dangerous, my Lord, and illegal, but by what means shall Government prevent them? An attempt by the power of the Civil Magistrates would only show their weakness, and it is not easy to say upon what foundation a military aid should be called in; such a measure would involve us in troubles, which it is thought much more prudent to avoid; and to shun all extremes, while it is yet possible things may take a favourable turn. The purpose of the Congress, it is said, is to petition for a redress of grievances, and to consider of a plan for settling the controversy with Great Britain. But no instructions for the Deputies have yet appeared that I know of.

The present political zeal and phrenzy is almost entirely confined to the City of New-York, the people in the counties are no ways disposed to become active, or to hear any part in what is proposed by the citizens. I am told all the counties but one have declined an invitation sent to them from New-York, to appoint Committees of Correspondence. This Province is every where, my Lord, except in the City of New-York, perfectly quiet and in good order, and in New-York a much greater freedom of speech prevails now than has done heretofore. An opposition has been declared to the vile practice of exhibiting effigies, which I hope will prevent it for the future.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN BOSTON.

Alexandria, Virginia, July 6, 1774.

The following subscription for the benefit and relief of those (the industrious poor of the town of Boston) who, by a late cruel Act of Parliament, are deprived of their daily labour and bread, to prevent the inhabitants sinking under the oppression, or migrating, to keep up that manly spirit which has made them dear to every American, though the envy of an arbitrary Parliament, is from the County of Fairfax, in this Colony, viz: two hundred and seventy-three pounds sterling, in specie, (equal to lawful thirty-eight barrels of flour, and one hundred and fifty bushels of wheat. This subscription being but a few days on foot, we have not had an opportunity to present it to the country in general; a large sum will be given. Mr. Henly yesterday returned from Dumfries, after consulting the Committee of Prince William County, in which a subscription is going on generously; this day he sets out to consult the Committees of Loudoun and Frederick counties, in each of which a spirit, becoming generous and freeborn sons of liberty, are in the like manner testified. Indeed, all Virginia and Maryland are contributing for the relief of Boston. The subscription is to be laid out in corn and flour, to be shipped and consigned to the Hon. James Bowdoin, and John Hancock, Esqrs., Mr. Samuel Adams, Isaac Smith, Esq., and the gentlemen Committee of Correspondence in Boston, to be distributed in such manner as they shall think most proper, among the persons reduced to want and indigence, by means of the cruel and unjust Act of Parliament. We are in the expectation of our schooner Nassau every day, and shall load her with a cargo to be presented, as by the enclosed paper. Our Association was put off, as the people from the country could not attend, being in the midst of harvest, and bad weather, they would have lost much grain. But be assured Virginia and Maryland are determined to unite with the Colonies. Firmness and intrepidity is their character.

NORFOLK BOROUGH (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders, Merchants, Traders, and other Inhabitants of the County and Borough of Norfolk, held at the Court House, on Wednesday, the 6th of July, 1774.

THOMAS NEWTON, JUN., Moderator.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of America, and that every Colony on the Continent is in duty bound to unite in the most effectual means to obtain a repeal of the late Act of parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston, which we deem a most tyrannick exercise of unlawful power.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the Acts for altering the Constitution of the Massachusetts Bay, and for the suppression of riots and tumults, are most violent and dangerous infractions of the solemn chartered rights of these Colonies; utterly destructive of trials by the vicinage, and a very melancholy proof of the despotick spirit of the times.

Resolved, That our late Burgesses be hereby instructed to use their utmost endeavours at the ensuing Convention at Williamsburg, to procure a general Association against all hportations and exportations (medicines excepted) to and from Great Britain, as the most effectual means to ensure redress; and that the said Association against importations may take place in as short a time as possible after the opening of the said Convention; also, that the Association against exportation may take place at so long a day as may give time for the discharge of British debts, leaving it to the discretion of the Convention to fix the day.

Resolved, That our late Burgesses be hereby instructed to procure a like Association against every such town, county, or Province, on this Continent, as may decline or refuse to adopt similar measures with the majority of the Colonies, within one month after the opening of the intended Congress of Deputies from the several Governments on the Continent.

Resolved, That our late Burgesses be hereby instructed to use their utmost endeavours, that the Deputies to be sent from this Colony to the intended Congress, be particularly instructed by the Convention, that, if necessary, the whole sum exacted by the Boston Port Bill, may be parcelled out into different quotas, to be raised by the publick spirited, charitable, and humane, in the several Colonies, according to the respective abilities and circumstances thereof; and that such moneys be paid to the several Colonies, into such hands as the people of Boston may direct.

Resolved, That our late Burgesses be hereby instructed to use their utmost endeavours, that subscriptions be opened in the several counties of this Colony for the relief of the starving distressed poor in the blockaded town of Boston.

Resolved, That our late Burgesses be hereby instructed to recommend Annapolis to the Convention as the proper place to be proposed to the other Colonies for the holding of the Congress; which we earnestly desire may be as soon as possible after the first day of August.

Resolved, That our late Burgesses be hereby instructed to use their endeavours that the Convention may particularly recommend it to the several counties, that large Committees of respectable men, fixed and settled inhabitants of their respective counties, be appointed to guard against, and take every lawful step to prevent, any breach of such agreements or Association as may be adopted,

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the measures determined on at the approaching Convention ought to be observed by the whole Colony, as acts of a most solemn nature: and that it is the declared intention of this meeting, faithfully to adopt such Association as may then be agreed on.

Resolved, That the above Resolutions be printed for the inspection of all the freeholders of the county.

WILLIAM DAVIES, Clerk.

THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO DEPUTY GOVERNOUR PENN,
Whitehall, July 6, 1774.

SIR: I have received your letters of the 3d and 31st of May, and have laid them before the King, and I have the satisfaction to acquaint you that his Majesty is graciously pleased to acquiesce in the apology you make for having omitted to transmit to me an account of the proceedings at Philadelphia upon the arrival of the tea ship.

By the account contained in your letter of the 31st of May, of the reception given to the proposal that came from the town of Boston, there did not appear then to be any strong inclination to adopt it. What has since passed in Virginia may perhaps, as in other like instances, become an example to the neighbouring Colonies, and should this be the case it will be your duty to exert every power which the Constitution has placed into your hands to defeat any attempt to trample upon and insult the authority of this Kingdom. I am, sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Deputy Governour Penn.

THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR COLDEN.
Whitehall, July 6, 1774.

SIR: I have received your letters No. 1 and 2, and have laid them before the King.

As there is nothing in these letters which requires any particular instruction, I have only to express my wishes that his Majesty's subjects of New-York may not be led into any further rash and hasty proceeding, that may expose them to the just resentment of Parliament, and that persons of credit and character in the Colony will exert their influence to put a stop to that licentious spirit which has led to measures so disgraceful to the City of New-York.

Sir William Johnson having acquainted me that two Seneca Indians have been committed to the jail in Tryon County, as accomplices in the murder of four Frenchmen in the last year, his Majesty is graciously pleased, upon report to him of the circumstances of their case, to signify his pleasure that they be both set at liberty forthwith, and you will not fail to take the proper steps for that purpose.

It being under consideration to re-establish the Military Posts; either at Crown Point or Ticonderoga, or at both, it is the King's pleasure that the lands reserved by Sir Jeffery Amherst for the convenience and accommodation of these posts, be excepted out of any future sales or grants of lands whatsoever. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH

Lieutenant Governour Colden.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN, NO. VI.

Williamsburg, Va., July 7, 1774

Friends, Fellow-citizens, and Countrymen:

It is the general opinion, that the great defect in the present Constitution of Britain is the enormous power of the Crown. However singular I may be thought in so doing, I consider this as a vulgar error; for the first stab given to the Constitution was the Crown's losing its independence on the other two branches of the Legislature. Queen Elizabeth transmitted the English Constitution, in its highest purity, to her successor, James the First; but he; equally a stranger to its true principles, his own interest, and the arts of Government, in his first Speeches to his Parliament, arrogated to himself powers he was not entitled to, and soon after indiscreetly lavished away those which would have rendered the others he claimed unnecessary, for, by alienating a great part of the ancient revenues of the Crown in ill-placed, unnecessary; and extravagant grants to its favorites, tools and parasites, he made himself dependent, in some measure, for the very support of his household, upon the other two branches of the Legislature, at the very time he alarmed them to unite against him, by arbitrary and impotent threats of governing absolutely; and then, to increase that weight his own folly had lessened, and to replenish his coffers, he had recourse to the last expedient of weakened majesty, that of creating a number of Peers, which, though it put off the evil day, increased the disorder of the state. His successor, Charles the First, nurtured in the principles of his father, pursued the same plan of lessening his hereditary revenues, and of provoking those upon whom he was dependent, till they would no longer support him; and then, by endeavouring to carry into execution those measures his father had threatened only, he fell a sacrifice to the errors of education. Monarchy, and nobility its attendant, being thus extinguished, when it was restored in the person of Charles the Second, was it surprising that the Nation, still bleeding at the wounds it had received from the usurpations of the Crown, contented itself with restoring it to those prerogatives only it possessed at its fall, without adding the independent hereditary revenue, which its two preceding Kings had indiscreetly alienated? Untaught by his own misfortunes, and the fate of his father, Charles the Second adopted the plan of Government pursued by his House; only, as he was sagacious enough to see he could not force, he endeavoured to corrupt the Nation to submit to despotick sway; and in so doing dissipated so great a part of what few ancient demesnes of the Crown his ancestors had left, that his brother James was reduced to the necessity of giving up the hereditary despotick notions of his family, or of recurring to force. He chose the latter, and by that means was obliged to abandon his Crown, but left the Constitution with a stab in its vitals, which has been festering ever since; for, at the accession of his glorious successor, though the Nation recurred to many of its first principles, it had suffered too much from its four preceding Kings to think of restoring the ancient independence of the Crown. Succeeding Monarchs, therefore, in order to preserve any kind of weight in the state, were reduced to the necessity of corrupting the people, by creating lucrative offices, granting pensions, and increasing the number of Peers; this, though it increased the power of the Minister, really weakened that of his master.

The great increase of manufactures, arising from the settlement of America, by drawing the inhabitants to the sea ports and other towns more conveniently situated for carrying them on, in a great measure depopulated the ancient boroughs of the Kingdom, so that the entire property of many of them were purchased up by the nobility, who, by that means, acquired a right of naming their Representatives in Parliament; the electors of others were so reduced in their numbers and circumstances, that it became easy for the wealthy, with a majority of their voices, to purchase seats in the House of Commons, and, by treating with the Prime Minister for some of the newly created lucrative offices, they were generally reimbursed the purchase money.

Thus the spirit of traffick extended itself to all ranks of people, and, as it too often happens in commercial nations, all those things which ought to have been the reward of merit were given only for money, and the people universally corrupted by the dint of it, grew indifferent to publick concerns; the electors and elected, passionately tend of lucre, grew careless of the Government, and every thing belonging to it, and waited, quietly for their salaries. As soon as it became obvious that wealth would purchase a majority of the seats of the Representatives of the people, Sir Robert Walpole endeavoured to apply the national wealth to that purpose, and succeeded to admiration in it for a long time, but, too open in the practice of corruption, he overshot his mark, and pointed out to the wealthy, that, by uniting together, they could wrest the power, even of appointing his own Minister, and other servants, out of the hands of their Sovereign, and by that means arrogate to themselves not only the persons who shall fill all lucrative offices, but of directing the whole concerns of the Nation. The nobles who possessed boroughs, and the wealthy Commons who could purchase them, united cordially in this scheme, and, inviting some of their ablest dependants to join them, soon carried all before them, destroyed that beautiful system of legislation I described in my last, and set up an absolute aristocracy in its place. *

Had Mr. Pitt directed the reigns of Government a few years after the conclusion of the war, if his talents in the arts of peace had been equal to his abilities in carrying on a war, or (if I may be allowed the metaphor) could he have been as wise in taking every advantage of wind and tide, as he was skilful in avoiding rocks and quicksands in a storm, (and the noble stop he put to corruption during his administration give us strong reason to think he would,) Providence, at that period, pointed out to a wise and upright Minister the means of placing the natural, the necessary independence of the Kings of England, upon a permanent foundation. But the Minister who succeeded that great man was too intent upon enriching his countrymen to serve his Prince, and, more like a pedlar than a statesman, sold an inheritance of his master (which would have restored him to a King of England's ancient weight in the national councils) for a mess of pottage; and the present Minister is at this instant either unblinkingly or diabolically pursuing the same infernal plan. Was our Sovereign, even now, to place a little more confidence in his American subjects, there are many amongst them whose knowledge of their country would enable, and whose affectionate loyalty to him would impel, them to point out constitutional modes of placing him in a very different situation from what a corrupt, selfish British aristocracy wish to see; for, however humiliating the reflection may be to a Briton, it is the virtue of America only that can preserve Great Britain from becoming the prey of the most despotick aristocracy that ever yet was erected, which will be the more firmly established, because, by retaining the ancient forms of the Constitution, it will not easily alarm the Nation to rouse, and to recur to its first principles, whilst the aristocracy posted in both Houses of Parliament, possessed of a large majority in the House of Commons, of a superiour influence in the House of Lords, and of an absolute command over all the powers of monarchy, with swarms of placemen and pensioned authors to trumpet forth their praises without doors, bears down all before it with such irresistible impetuosity, that I should not be surprised if, after the next general election, † it should pursue its late victory over the County of Middlesex, nominate the Representatives of every shire in Britain, and utterly exclude from the House of Commons every member that should dare to arraign its conduct, if it should rapaciously seize the remaining wealth of the East India, and every other trading Company, and oblige every merchant and shop-keeper in Britain to account with its officers for whatever share of the profits, of their trade it should think proper to demand. In short, nothing can put a stop to its carrying into execution every act of despotism it shall attempt, but the check it is likely to receive from the opposition of America.

It is not, therefore, the interest of the people of Great Britain that America should surrender up her liberties, and submit to the jurisdiction of this arbitrary, self-created aristocracy, though assuming the specious name of a British Parliament. But before I enter upon the measures necessary to be taken to ward off the blow aimed at American liberty, I shall consider the connections between Great Britain and her Colonies, in order to consider how far those Colonies may legally and constitutionally oppose the acts of a British Parliament.

As the laws of every country are made for the benefit of its inhabitants, and the privileges, the advantages and protection they expect to receive from those laws, are the considerations which induce a submission to them, any one, or any number of those inhabitants, may, by a voluntary banishment, and by renouncing the protection, with all

* If any one doubts that the British Constitution is now purely aristocratical, let him attentively read the history of England, and the debates of Parliament from the decision of the Chippenham election to the present time, and carefully compare facts with the characteristic attendants of a corrupt aristocracy, which, by being destitute of its principles of moderation, is become despotick, and he will no longer withhold his assent to the above position.

† For the distemper of the state is too far advanced to hope for any relief from a new election. The Representatives, indeed, may be changed by a nabob's outbidding an Alderman; but the only real difference will be, the nabob becomes one of the aristocracy, and the Alderman is excluded, or in other words, the master may be changed, but the slavery will remain.

other advantages of the laws, withdraw themselves from the subjection of the country in which they were accidentally born, if they find it for their interest so to do. And even admitting that, like vegetables, they cannot remove from the spot that produced them without the consent of the state, no man will deny that any subject of England formerly might, and that any subject of Great Britain may now, with the leave of their Sovereign, quit that Kingdom, and settle in any foreign Dominion; that our ancestors, therefore, when they, with the leave of Queen Elizabeth, and of King James the First, left England and discovered America, if they had been so disposed, might have incorporated themselves with the native inhabitants, laid aside all thoughts of returning, and dropped all correspondence with England, is undeniable; and if they had done so, in all human probability, neither their former Sovereign, or his Parliament, would have ever given themselves the trouble of inquiring what was become of them.* And as they had a right to incorporate themselves with the natives, so, with respect to England, they had an equal right, at their own private risk and expense, to acquire, by purchase or conquest, from nations not in alliance with England, a settlement for themselves and their posterity, totally independent of England; for as they were no longer under her protection, they no longer were under subjection, and, therefore, might have provided for their own safety by any laws they thought proper. But, instead of doing this, a natural fondness for their native country, a predilection for her laws, an admiration of the most beautiful system of Government in the world, and the hopes of protection, induced them to wish to remain connected with England. But how? As partakers of her Constitution, by acknowledging allegiance to her King; as friends to their brethren, by reciprocal acts of kindness; but not as slaves to their fellow-subjects, by a humiliating, servile subjection to a British Parliament, in which, from their situation, they neither were; or could be represented.

With these views they generously offered to let England partake of the advantages of these conquests, in consideration of securing to themselves the rights of Englishmen in their new settlements, (not made at the expense of the Nation, as hath been falsely suggested, but) discovered at the risk, and acquired by the blood and treasure of private adventurers, who, having left their native country with the consent of their Sovereign, now returned to him, not as repenting prodigals begging to be received and forgiven, but as generous conquerors, offering to make him Sovereign of a new world upon reasonable and equitable conditions.

Is it to be wondered at, that, thus circumstanced, he acceded to their terms? Or, had the British Parliament any right to complain of the Charters granted to them, by which the Colonies have always enjoyed a supreme Legislature of their own, and have always claimed an exemption from the jurisdiction of a British Parliament. But even suppose that the territories of America (though conquered by private adventurers) became subject to Great Britain, because those adventurers were English subjects, still it by no means follows that those territories were dependent upon the British Parliament; and as this is proved to a demonstration by a late ingenious author, I shall not injure him so far as to repeat his arguments, but conclude this Letter with requesting the printer to republish the following Extract of his work. †

CULPEPPER COUNTY, (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Culpepper, in Virginia, assembled on due notice, at the Court House of the said County, on Thursday, the 7th of July, 1774, to consider of the most effectual method to preserve the rights and liberties of America:

HENRY PENDLETON, Esq. Moderator.

Resolved, That we will, whenever we are called upon for that purpose; maintain and defend his Majesty's right and title to the Crown of Great Britain, and all other

* For it is observable that each Colony was suffered to struggle with every difficulty in their new settlements. unprotected, unassisted, and even unnoticed by the Crown itself, from twenty to fifty years, and even then the Royal care was no further extended towards them than to send over Governours to pillage, insult and oppress them.

his Dominions thereunto belonging, to whose royal person and Government we profess all due obedience and fidelity.

Resolved, That the right to impose taxes or duties, to be paid by the inhabitants of this Colony for any purpose whatsoever, is peculiar and essential to the General Assembly, in whom the Legislative authority is vested.

Resolved, That every attempt to impose taxes or duties by any other authority is an arbitrary exertion of power, and an infringement of the constitutional and just rights and liberties of the Colony, and that we will at all times, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, oppose any Act imposing such taxes or duties, unless we are legally represented; and that the Act of the British Parliament imposing a duty on tea to be paid by the inhabitants of the Colonies upon importation, is evidently designed to fix on the Americans those chains forged for them by a corrupt Ministry.

Resolved, That the late cruel and unjust Acts of Parliament, to be executed by force upon our sister Colony of the Massachusetts Bay and town of Boston, is a convincing proof of the unjust and corrupt influence obtained by the British Ministry in Parliament, and a fixed determination to deprive the Colonies of their constitutional and just rights and liberties.

Resolved, That the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of the American Colonies.

Resolved, That an Association between all the American Colonies not to import from Great Britain, or buy any goods or commodities whatsoever, except negroes, cloaths, salt, saltpetre, powder, lead, nails, and paper, ought to be entered into, and by no means dissolved, until the rights and liberties of the Colonies are restored to them, and the tyrannical Acts of Parliament against Boston are repealed.

Resolved, That it is our opinion that no friend to the rights and liberties of America ought to purchase any goods whatsoever, which shall be imported from Great Britain, after a General Association shall be agreed on, except such as are before excepted.

Resolved, That every kind of luxury, dissipation, and extravagance, ought to be banished from amongst us.

Resolved, That the raising sheep, hemp, flax, and cotton, ought to be encouraged; likewise all kinds of manufactures, by subscriptions, or any other proper means.

Resolved, That the importing slaves and convict servants, is injurious to this Colony, as it obstructs the population of it with freemen and useful manufacturers, and that we will not buy any such slave or convict servant hereafter to be imported.

Resolved, That every county in this Colony ought to appoint Deputies to meet upon the first day of August, in the City of Williamsburg, then and there to consult upon the most proper means for carrying these or any other resolutions which shall be judged more expedient for obtaining peace and tranquillity in America into execution.

Resolved, That Henry Pendleton, and Henry Field, Junior, Esquires, be appointed upon the part of the freeholders and inhabitants of this county, to meet and consult with such Deputies as shall be appointed by the other counties.

Resolved, That the Clerk transmit these Resolves to the press, and request the Printer to publish them without delay. By order of the Meeting,

JOHN JAMESON, Clerk.

By his Excellency the Right Honourable JOHN Earl of DUNMORE, his Majesty's Lieutenant and Governour-General of the Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice Admiral of the same.

A PROCLAMATION. - VIRGINIA, to wit:

Whereas the General Assembly is summoned to meet on Thursday, the 11th of next month, but I find no urgent occasion for their meeting at that time, I have therefore thought fit, by this Proclamation, in his Majesty's name, farther to prorogue the said Assembly to the first Thursday in November next.

Given under my hand, and the seal of the Colony, at Williamsburg, this 8th day of July, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign. DUNMORE.

GOD savethe King.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN BOSTON, FROM GOVERNOUR HUTCHINSON, DATED LONDON, JULY 8, 1774.

Let the tea be paid for, by, or in behalf of the town, as soon as may be; and I hope you will do as much to promote this as possible. I find myself every where to have more weight than I could expect, and the prospect of your speedy relief to be fairer every day: if finally obtained, I shall think it one of the most happy circumstances of my life.

HUNTERDON COUNTY (NEW JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS.

The Freeholders and Inhabitants of Hunterdon County, in the Province of New-Jersey, convened by advertisement, at the house of John Ringo, in Amwell, in said County, on Friday, the 8th July, 1774, SAMUEL TUCKER, Esq., in the Chair, came into the following Resolutions, without a dissenting voice, viz:

1. We do most expressly declare, recognise and acknowledge his Majesty Kingo George the Third, to be the lawful and rightful King of Great Britain, and of all other his Dominions, and that it is the indispensable duty of this Colony, under the enjoyment of our constitutional privileges and immunities, as being a part of his Majesty's do minions, always to bear faithful and true allegiance to his Majesty, and him to defend to the utmost of our power, against all attempts upon his person, crown, and dignity.

2. That it is the undoubted hereditary right of an English subject to give and grant what is absolutely his own, either by himself or his Representative; and that the only lawful Representatives of the freemen of this Colony are the persons they elect to serve as members of the General Assembly thereof.

3. That any Act of Parliament for the apprehending and carrying persons into another Colony, or to Great Britain, to be tried for any crime, alleged to be committed within this Colony, or subjecting them to be tried by Commissioners, or any Court constituted by Act of Parliament or otherwise, within this Colony, in a summary way, without a jury of the vicinage, is unconstitutional, and subversive of the rights and liberties of the free subjects of this Colony.

4. That it is our indispensable duty, which we owe to our King, our country, ourselves, and our posterity, by all lawful ways and means in our power, to maintain, defend and preserve our loyalty, rights and liberties, and to transmit them inviolate to the latest generations; and that it is our fixed, determined and unalterable resolution faithfully to discharge this our bounden duty.

5. That it is our unanimous opinion, that it would conduce to the restoration of the liberties of America should the Colonies enter into a joint agreement not to purchase or use any articles of British manufacture, nor any commodities imported from the East Indies, under such restrictions as may be agreed on by a general Congress of Delegates from all the Colonies, hereafter to be appointed.

6. That as the town of Boston is now suffering in the common cause of American freedom, it is the opinion of this meeting, that subscriptions be hereafter opened in every town in this county, and the money subscribed to be applied towards the relief of the suffering poor in said town of Boston, until they may be relieved, by being restored to their just rights and privileges.

7. That this county will appoint a Committee to meet the Committees of the several Counties of this Colony, at such time and place as maybe agreed on, in order to elect and appoint Delegates to represent this Colony at the general Congress, whose resolutions and determinations we will most strictly adhere to, and abide by. And we do hereby unanimously request the following gentlemen to accept of that trust, and do accordingly appoint them our Committee for the purpose aforesaid, viz: Samuel Tucker, John Mehelm, John Hart, Isaac Smith, Charles Coxe, Joachim Griggs, Benjamin Brearly, Abraham Hunt, and John Emley.

As we apprehend New-Brnnswick is not so convenient to the members of the lower counties, and that all the counties will hardly have sufficient time to appoint their Committees, by the 21st of July, with submission, we would propose Princeton, as most central, to be the place, and Thursday, the 11th of August, the time of meeting of the several Committees. THOMAS SHELTON, Committee Clerk.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN NEW-YORK.

Charlestown, S. C., July 8. 1774.

On the 6th instant, according to proper notices dispersed all over the Province, began at Charlestown our general meeting of Delegates from all the counties, for agreeing upon gerreral Resolutions, and for the appointment of Deputies to represent and act for us at the general Congress.

This meeting was perhaps one of the most respectable ever held in America, and continued with very little intermission till this afternoon, when the business was concluded with the enclosed Resolutions. Do not be surprised at not seeing any non-importation or exportation resolves. We had such, but gave them up, to succeed in the allowing full powers to our Deputies, which was gaining a grand point. They were chosen by ballot, which kept us up till after midnight. At this election, the Merchants appeared with us for the first time; but miscarried in their choice. The voters names were all taken down. They have, by voting in the appointment of Deputies SO fully empowered, acceded to non-importation or exportation, if the Congress Should adopt those measures. The people, nevertheless, were so uneasy for agreements to be entered into, that it was at last declared, on the part of the Trade, that they would (of their own motion) countermand their orders, and would not import while the present troubles continue.

Captain Hunt has behaved so exceeding clever upon the present occasion, by staying three days for the result of our meeting, and for our letters, that he this day received publick thanks in our full meeting. His stay has given me this opportunity of subscribing myself, &c., &c.

SOUTH CAROLINA RESOLUTIONS,

Resolutions unanimously entered into by the Inhabitants of South Carolina, at a General Meeting held at Charlestown, in said Colony, on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of July, 1774:

Resolved, That his Majesty's subjects in North America owe the same allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain that is due from his subjects born in Great Britain.

Resolved, That his Majesty's subjects in America are entitled to all the inherent rights and liberties of his natural born subjects within the Kingdom of Great Britain.

Resolved, That it is repugnant to the rights of the people, that any taxes should be imposed on them, unless with their own consent, given personally or by their Representatives.

Resolved, That it is a fundamental right which his Majesty's liege subjects are entitled to, that no man should suffer in his person or property without a fair trial, and judgment given by his peers, or by the laws of the land.

Resolved, That all trials of treason, misprision of treason, or for any felony or crime whatever, committed and done in this his Majesty's Colony, by any person or persons residing therein, ought of right to be had and conducted in his Majesty's Courts held within the said Colony, according to the fixed and known course of proceeding; and that the seizing any person or persons residing in this Colony, suspected of any crime whatever, committed therein, and sending such person or persons to places beyond the sea to be tried, is oppressive and illegal, and highly derogatory to the rights of British subjects; as thereby the inestimable privilege of being tried by a jury from the vicinage, as well as the benefit of summoning and procuring witnesses on such trial, will be taken away from the party accused.

Resolved, That the statute made in the thirty-fifth year of Henry the Eighth, chapter two, entitled, "An Act for the trial of treasons committed out of the King's Dominions," does not extend, and cannot, but by an arbitrary and cruel construction, be construed to extend to treasons, misprisings of treasons, or concealment of treasons committed in any of his Majesty's American Colonies, where there is sufficient provisions by the law of the land for the impartial trial of all such persons as are charged with, and for the due punishment of those offences.

Resolved, That the late Act for shutting up the port of Boston, and the two Bills relative to Boston, which by the last accounts from Great Britain, had been brought into Parliament, there read and committed, are of the most alarming nature to all his Majesty's subjects in America - are calculated to deprive many thousands Americans of their rights, properties, and privileges, in a most cruel, oppressive, and unconstitutional manner are most dangerous precedents; and though levelled immediately at the people of Boston, very manifestly and glaringly show if the inhabitants of that town are intimidated into a mean submission to said Acts, that the like are designed for all the Colonies; when, not even the shadow of liberty to his person, or security of his property, will be left to any of his subjects residing on the American Continent.

Resolved, Therefore, that not only the dictates of humanity, but the soundest principles of true policy and self-preservation, make it absolutely necessary for the inhabitants of all the Colonies in America to assist and support the people of Boston by all lawful ways in their power, and especially, to leave no justifiable means untried to procure a repeal of those Acts immediately relative to them, also of all others affecting the constitutional rights and liberties of America in general, as the best means to effect this desirable end.

Resolved, That Henry Middleton, John Rutledge, Christopher Gadsden, Thomas Lynch, and Edward Rutledge, Esquires, be, and they are hereby nominated and appointed Deputies on the part and behalf of this Colony, to meet the Deputies of the several Colonies of North America, in general Congress, the first Monday of September next, at Philadelphia, or at any other time or place that may be generally agreed upon; there to consider the Act lately passed, and Bills depending in Parliament, with regard to the port of Boston, and Province of Massachusetts Bay, which Act and Bills, in the precedent and consequences, affect the whole Continent; also the grievances under which America labour, by reason of the several Acts of Parliament that imposes taxes or duties for raising a revenue, "and lay unnecessary restraints and burthens on trade; and of the Statutes, Parliamentary Acts, and Royal Instructions, which make any invidious distinction between his Majesty's subjects in Great Britain and America - with full power and authority, in behalf of us and our constituents, to concert, agree to, and effectually prosecute such legal measures, (by which we for ourselves and them, most solemnly engage to abide) as in the opinion of the said Deputies, and of the Deputies so to be assembled, shall be most likely to obtain a repeal of the said Acts, and a redress of those grievances.

Resolved, That we will agree to pay the expenses of those gentlemen who may be fixed upon to be sent upon this business.

Resolved, That while the oppressive Acts relative to Boston are enforced, we will cheerfully from time to time, contribute towards the relief of such poor persons there, whose unfortunate circumstances, occasioned by the operation of those Acts, may be thought to stand in need of most assistance.

Resolved, That we will, by all means in our power, endeavour to preserve harmony and union amongst all the Colonies.

Resolved, That a Committee of ninety-nine persons be now appointed to act as a General Committee to correspond with the Committees of the other Colonies; and do all matters and things necessary to carry these Resolutions into execution; and that any twenty-one of them together may proceed to business - their power to continue till the next general meeting; and in case of the death, departure from the Province, or refusal to act, of any or either of them, the parish or district for which such person dying, removing, or refusing to act, was chosen, shall fill up the vacancy.

Names of the Committee then chosen for Charlestown: Miles Brewton, Esquire, George Abbott Hall, John Edwards, Esquire, Charles Atkins, John Dawson, Thomas Shirley, John Neufville, John Smyth, Alexander Gillon, Peter Bacot, Gideon Dupont, Esquire, Roger Smith, Esquire, Major William Savage. Thomas Corbett Davidd Deas, Esquire, Colonel Charles Pinckney, Messrs.

Peter Timothy, Daniel Cannon, Bernard Beekman, Theodore Trezvant, John Fullerton, Joseph Verree, William Trusler, William Johnson: Anthony Toomer, Timothy Crosby, John Berwick, Joshua Lockwood, James Brown, and Edward Weyman; and sixty-nine for the several Parishes of this Province.

ESSEX COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of Essex County, Virginia, at the Court House thereof, on Saturday, the 9th of July, 1774, seriously to consider the present dangers which threaten ruin to American liberty:

Mr. JOHN UPSHAW, being chosen Moderator,

The following Resolves were proposed, and unanimously agreed to:

1st. Resolved, That we will at all times and upon all occasions bear true and faithful allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third, and that, as freemen, we always have been, and ever shall be, willing constitutionally to give and grant liberally our property for the support of his crown and dignity, and the preservation of our parent state, but that we can never consent to part with it on any other terms.

2d. Resolved, That the Legislature of this Colony, for the purpose of internal taxation, is distinct from that of Britain, founded upon the principles of the British Constitution, and equal in all respects to the purposes of legislation and taxation within this Colony.

3d. Resolved, That the people of this Colony, in particular, and of America in general, have a clear and absolute right to dispose of their property by their own consent, expressed by themselves or by their Representatives in Assembly, and any attempt to tax or take their money from them in any other manner, and all other acts tending to enforce submission to them, is an exertion of power contrary to natural justice, subversive of the English Constitution, destructive of our Charters, and oppressive.

4th. Resolved, That the town of Boston, in our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay, is now suffering in the common cause of North America, for their just opposition to such Acts, and it is indispensably necessary that all the Colonies should firmly unite in defence of our common rights,

5th. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that an agreement to stop all exports to, and imports from Great Britain and the West Indies; firmly entered into and religiously complied with, will, at all times, prove a safe and infallible means of securing us against the evils of any unconstitutional and tyrannical Acts of Parliament, and may be adopted upon the principles of self-preservation, the great law of nature.

6th. Resolved, That the inhabitants of this county will firmly join with the other counties of this Colony, and the other Colonies on this Continent, or a majority of them, to stop all exports to, and imports from Great Britain and the West Indies, and all other parts of the world, except the Colonies of North America, if such a measure shall be deemed expedient by the Deputies at the general Congress, and that whatever agreement the Congress shall come to for the advancing the common cause of North America, relating to exports, imports, or otherwise, ought to be considered as binding as any act of the Legislature; and that we will use our utmost endeavours to support and maintain such general agreement at the expense of our lives and fortunes.

7th. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the several Courts in this Colony ought not to proceed to the forwarding or trial of civil causes until our exports are opened.

8th. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the East India Company, having a design to monopolize a great part of the American trade to the injury of the other merchants of Britain trading to America, and knowing well the fatal consequences that must have resulted from their fixing a precedent for future taxes, by importing tea into the Colonies, became the willing instrument of the Ministry to destroy American liberty, and deserve the loss they have sustained.

9th. Resolved, That we do most heartily concur with our late worthy Representatives in their resolve for the disuse of tea; and that we will not hereafter purchase any East India commodities whatsoever.

10th. Resolved, That the spirited conduct of the town of Boston hath been serviceable to the cause of freedom, (all other methods having failed,) and that no reparation ought to be made to the East India Company, or other assistants, for any injury they have sustained, unless it be the express condition on which all our grievances shall be removed.

11th. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that any general censure upon the conduct of the town of Boston respecting the tea, without allowing to them the motives of resistance upon the principles of publick virtue and necessity, is inimical to American liberty; and we are persuaded that none but Ministerial hirelings, and professed enemies of American freedom, will adopt a language so impolitick, which manifestly tends to create a disunion of sentiments, at this time fatal to America.

12th. Resolved, That the Parliament have no right to pass an Act to remove our persons to Great Britain, or any other place whatsoever, to be tried for any offence, and that we are determined not to submit thereto.

13th. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting that no merchant in this, or any other Colony on this Continent, shall advance the goods now on hand higher than they are at present, or have been for some time, and that the merchants in the several counties sign an agreement to that effect.

14th. Resolved, That a subscription be set on foot for raising provisions for the poor of Boston who now suffer by the blocking up of their port, and that Robert Beverly, John Lee, and Muscoe Garnett, in Saint Anne's Parish, and Archibald Ritchie and John Upshaw, in the upper part of Southfarnham Parish, and Meriwether Smith and James Edmondson, in the lower part thereof, take in subscriptions for that purpose; who are to consign what may be raised to some proper persons to be distributed; and the before mentioned gentlemen are empowered to charter a vessel to send it to Boston.

15th. Resolved, That this meeting have the deepest sense of the injuries in Which the merchants and manufacturers of Great Britain must necessarily be involved by a non-importation resolution, they having placed an almost unlimited confidence in us for a series of years, and by that means have the greatest part of their fortunes lodged in our hands, and that nothing but the desire of preserving our rights and liberties could induce us to adopt a measure big with such melancholy consequences.

16th. Resolved, That James Edmondson and William Roane, Esquires, the late Representatives of this county, be, and they are hereby appointed Deputies to represent us at the general meeting of Deputies for the several counties in this Colony, on the first day of August, in Williamsburg; and we desire that they will exert their best abilities for the security of our constitutional rights and liberties, and to appoint Deputies to meet at the general Congress the Deputies of the other Colonies on this Continent.

17th. Resolved, That the Clerk transmit the foregoing proceedings to the Printers to be published in their Gazette.

WILLIAM YOUNG, Clerk of the Meeting.

FAUQUIER COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a General Meeting of the Freeholders of the County of Fauquier, in Virginia, on the 9th of July, 1774, at the Court House of the said County:

Mr. WHARTON RANSELL, being chosen Moderator,

The following Resolutions were unanimously agreed to:

Resolved, That it is an undoubted right of British subjects, and without which freedom cannot exist, to be taxed only by their own free consent, either personally given, or by their Representatives legally assembled.

Resolved, That as the British subjects in America are not, and from their situation cannot ever be, represented in the British Parliament, any Act of Parliament laying a tax on them is subversive of their natural rights, and contrary to the first principles of our free Constitution.

Resolved, That the Act of Parliament laying a duty on tea, &c., exported from Great Britain to these Colonies, for the avowed purpose of raising a revenue in America, will, if submitted to, fix a precedent, whereby the Parliamentary claim of taxing America may be established, arbitrary power introduced, and the liberty of the British Colonies laid at the feet of a despotick and execrable Minister.

Resolved, That the hostile invasion of the town and port of Boston, in New England, is a dangerous attack on the liberty of the British Colonies in America in general, strongly tending to dissolution of Government, and totally to alienate the affection of the Colonies from the mother country; and as our humble Petitions, Memorials, and Remonstrances, have hitherto failed to procure us that redress which the oppressions we suffer, and the justice of our cause entitles us to,

Resolved, And it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, that till the said Act of Parliament shall be repealed, and till the ships of war and troops be withdrawn from the said town of Boston, and the rights and freedom of the same be restored, all exports whatsoever from this Colony to Great Britain, and imports from thence be stopped, and that the Courts of Justice ought to decline the trial of civil causes, except attachments, where the attached goods are perishable, and motions against the Collectors and Sheriffs for money actually in their hands.

Resolved, That any person who, contrary to the general sense of the country, expressed by their late Representatives, shall purchase, vend, or make use of tea, till such time as the Act of Parliament laying a duty on that article for the purpose of raising a revenue in America, shall be repealed, shall be deemed an enemy to American liberty, and the common rights of mankind, and ought to be publickly stigmatised as such.

Resolved, That the town of Boston aforesaid, is now suffering in the common cause of American liberty, and ought to be supplied with such articles as are necessary for their support by the voluntary contribution of the Colonies in general.

Resolved, That these our sentiments be, by the Moderator of this meeting, delivered to our late Representatives, who, notwithstanding they were, by the sudden intervention of the Executive power of this Colony, deprived of their legislative capacity, are still possessed of our confidence, and desired to appear at the general meeting, at Williamsburg, on the 1st day of August next; and that they be assured, in the most solemn manner, of our hearty concurrence in, and firm support of, all such measures as by a majority of the late Representatives of this Colony, then and there to be convened, shall be thought proper and necessary for the security of our liberty, the improvement of our manufactures, and to procure a redress of American grievances.

PETER GRANT, Clerk.

NANSEMOND COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a General Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Nansemond, on the 11th day of July, 1774, the following Resolutions were proposed and unanimously agreed to:

Resolved, That we will at all times, whenever we are called upon for that purpose, maintain and defend, at the expense of our lives and fortunes, his Majesty's right and title to the Crown of Great Britain and his Dominions in America, to whose royal person and Government we profess all due obedience and fidelity.

Resolved, That the right to impose taxes or duties to be paid by the inhabitants within this Dominion, for any purpose whatsoever, is peculiar and essential to the General Assembly, in whom the Legislative authority of the Colony is vested.

Resolved, That every attempt to impose such taxes or duties by any other authority is an arbitrary exertion of power, and an infringement of the constitutional rights and liberties of the Colony.

Resolved, That to impose a tax or duty upon tea by the British Parliament, in which the Commons of the North American Colonies can have no representation, to be paid upon importation by the inhabitants of the said Colonies, is an act of power without right, is subversive of the liberties of the said Colonies, deprives them of their property without their consent, and thereby reduces them to a state of slavery.

Resolved, That the late cruel, unjust, and sanguinary Acts of Parliament, to be executed by military force and ships of war upon our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay and town of Boston, is a strong evidence of the corrupt influence obtained by the British Ministry in Parliament, and a convincing proof of their fixed intention to deprive the Colonies of their constitutional rights and liberties.

Resolved, That the cause of the town of Boston is the common cause of all the American Colonies.

Resolved, That it is the duty and interest of all the American Colonies firmly to unite in an indissoluble union and association, to oppose, by every just and proper means the infringement of their common rights and liberties.

Resolved, That a general Association between all the American Colonies not to import from Great Britain any commodity whatsoever, ought to be entered into, and not dissolved until the just rights of the said Colonies are restored to them, and the cruel Acts of the British Parliament against the Massachusetts Bay and town of Boston, are repealed.

Resolved, That no friend of the rights and liberties of America ought to purchase any commodity whatsoever which shall be imported from Great Britain, after a certain time hereafter to be limited by the Congress, which is shortly expected to meet, nor ought such to have any kind of dealing or connection with any merchant who shall refuse to agree to the measures hereafter to be adopted by said Congress.

Resolved, That every kind of luxury, dissipation, and extravagance, ought to be banished from amongst us.

Resolved, That manufactures ought to be encouraged, by opening subscriptions for that purpose, or by any other proper means.

Resolved, That the African trade is injurious to this Colony, obstructs the population of it by freemen, prevents manufacturers and other useful emigrants from Europe from settling among us, and occasions an annual increase of the balance of trade against this Colony.

Resolved, That the raising sheep, hemp, and flax, ought to be encouraged.

Resolved, That to be clothed in manufactures fabricated in this Colony ought to be considered as a badge and distinction of respect and true patriotism.

Resolved, That the dissolution of the General Assembly by order of the British Ministry, whenever they enter upon the consideration of the rights and liberties of the subject, against attempts to destroy them, is an evidence of the fixed intention of the said Ministry to reduce the Colonies to a state of slavery.

Resolved, That the people of this Colony, being by such dissolution, deprived of a legal representation, ought to nominate and appoint, for every county, proper Deputies to meet upon the 1st day of August, in the City of Williamsburg, then and there to consult and agree upon the best and most proper means for carrying into execution these, or any other Resolutions, which shall be judged more expedient for the purposes aforesaid.

Resolved, That Lemuel Riddick and Benjamin Baker, Esquires, our late Representatives be, and they are hereby, nominated and appointed Deputies upon the part of the freeholders and inhabitants of this county, to meet such Deputies as shall be appointed by the other counties and corporations within this Colony, in the City of Williamsburg, upon the 1st day of August next, or at any other time or place, for the purposes aforesaid.

Resolved, That at this important and alarming conjuncture it be earnestly recommended to the said Deputies, at the said General Convention, that they nominate and appoint fit and proper persons, upon the part of this Colony, to meet such Deputies, in a general Congress, as shall be appointed upon the part of the other Continental Colonies in America, to consult and agree upon a firm and indissoluble union and association, for preserving, by the best and most proper means, their common rights and liberties.

Resolved, That this Colony ought not to trade with any Colony which shall refuse to join in any Union and association that shall be agreed upon by the greater part of the Colonies upon this Continent, for preserving their common rights and liberties.

Resolved, That a copy of these Resolutions be transmitted to each of the Printers of both the Gazettes, with the earnest request of this county that the other counties and corporations within this Colony will appoint Deputies to meet at the time and place, and for the purposes aforesaid.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN BOSTON, DATED
CHARLESTOWN, S. C., JULY 11, 1774.

In consequence of the advertisements lately published by the General Committee, and other proper means used to obtain the sense of the whole Colony on the present alarming state of American affairs, on Wednesday last, the 6th instant, the largest body of the most respectable inhabitants that has ever been seen together upon any public occasion here, or perhaps any where in America, (for gentlemen of the greatest property and character, animated with an ardent zeal to relieve their suffering brethren, and to preserve their own freedom and the birth-rights of their posterity, notwithstanding the extreme inconvenience of the season, from even the remotest parts of the country attended) met at the Exchange, in this town, in order to "consider of the Papers, Letters, and Resolutions that "had been transmitted to the said Committee from the "Northern Colonies; and also of the steps necessary to be "pursued in union with the inhabitants of our sister Colonies on this Continent, to avert the dangers impending "over American liberties in general, by the late hostile "Act of Parliament against Boston, and other arbitrary "measures of the British Ministry," and, after choosing the Honourable Colonel Powell, (who had presided at all the former general meetings) for their Chairman, and the same Secretary as had hitherto served, continued in solemn deliberation upon these important matters, on that and the two succeeding days, during which the following Resolves were unanimously entered into.* [See Folio 525.]

* The 6th day of July now arrived; and Charlestown was filled with people from the country. One hundred and four Deputies represented all parts of the Colony, except Grenville County, St. John's Colleton County, and Christ Church Parish. These districts sent no Deputies; and, in behalf of Charlestown, the General Committee joined the Deputies from the country. The meeting was held under the Exchange, on the 6th of July, 1774, and a crowded meeting it was. At nine o'clock in the morning, Colonel George Gabriel Powell took the Chair, and it was carried the votes should be given by each person present, and not by parishes. It was also further determined, that whoever came there might give his vote. The business of the day then opened, with reading the communications from the Northern Colonies. They then proceeded to consider certain resolutions touching American rights and grievances. These being agreed to, declared, That his Majesty's subjects in North America owe the same allegiance to the Crown of Great Britain, as is due from his subjects born within that Kingdom. That the King's subjects in America are entitled to all the inherent rights and liberties enjoyed by natural born subjects within the Kingdom of Great Britain. That taxes should not be imposed on the people, but by their own consent, given personally, or by their Representatives. That all trials, for any crime whatever, committed and done in the Colony, ought to be had and conducted within the Colony, according to the fixed and known course of proceeding. That the statute of thirty-fifth of Henry the Eighth, chapter 2d, entitled "An Act for the trial of treasons committed out of the King's Dominions," does not, and cannot, extend to any crimes committed in any of his Majesty's American Colonies, That the three late Acts of Parliament, relative to Boston, are of a most alarming nature to all his Majesty's subjects in America; and although levelled at the people of Boston, they glaringly show, if the inhabitant of that town are intimidated into a mean submission to those Acts, the like are designed for all the Colonies, when not even the shadow of liberty to his person, or of security to his property, will be left to any of his Majesty's subjects residing on the American Continent. Wherefore, every justifiable means ought to be tried to procure a repeal of those Acts, immediately relative to Boston; and, also, of all others affecting the constitutional rights and liberties of America in general.

To effect these great points, two measures were proposed: to adopt the Boston vote of the 13th of May - and to send Deputies to a general Congress. Upon these subjects, there was great dissimilarity of opinion. All parties agreed on the proposition of sending Deputies; but the Boston vote did not meet so universal a support. This last measure was, therefore, first taken up and considered.

In favour of the Boston vote it was urged, that American lives and property were exposed to be taken at the mandate of a British Minister; that the men would be exposed to slavery; their wives and daughters to the outrages of a soldiery. To avert these dangers something vigorous was to be done; something that might shake even Majesty itself. That a measure of non-exportation and non-importation seemed above all others best calculated to force a repeal of the late Acts. It was a constitutional measure, for what power had a right to compel the people to grow, export, and sell commodities of any kind; or to purchase, or import commodities from any state? That such a measure taking place in America would ruin the British trade to those Dominions; and thereby shake the firmness of Parliament.

It was further unanimously resolved, that copies of all the foregoing Resolutions be transmitted to every Colony on this Continent, from Canada to West Florida, accompanied with a letter to each respectively, signed by the Chairman, inviting them to unite with us; and that as Captain Hunt had voluntarily detained his vessel for some days on purpose to carry an account of the transactions of the present meeting to New-York, copies of the whole should be delivered to him, together with the thanks of the meeting, which he received accordingly. The thanks of the meeting were also given to Colonel Powell, the Honourable Rawlins Lowndes, and the Secretary, after which the general meeting was dissolved.

Upon the ninth Resolve, (for naming the five Deputies) three several questions were put, viz: 1st. Whether the appointment of Deputies was a necessary measure? 2d. Whether they should be invested with the full powers therein expressed? 3d. Whether the number of Deputies should be five? All which passing unanimously in the affirmative, it was proposed and agreed to unanimously, that the Deputies should be chosen by ballot, and that every free white person residing in the Province should be entitled to vote. That the poll should be opened at two o'clock, and close at six. A balloting box was accordingly provided; the votes were received, and at midnight, in presence of several hundred spectators, the election was declared in favour of the gentlemen whose names are inserted in the Resolution.

And that Lord North may not be misinformed in the case, as he had been in most others, by being told that this was the meeting of a rabble, and the election of a mob, we shall take the liberty here to subjoin a list of the members of our present honourable Commons House of Assembly, all of whom voted except five, who were by sickness or accident prevented from attending. Besides these there were at least as many gentlemen who had been Representatives of the people in former Assemblies, who voted on this occasion.

In the course of the debates during these important

That should the measure be not adopted, the Colonies, by their importations, would preserve to the British manufacturers that support which they had been accustomed to receive from the American trade, whereby they would be supine and not join the American demand for a repeal. In addition to this, the remittances from the Colonies would enable the people of England to employ those means to assist them in enslaving the Colonies; whereas, being withholden, the national credit of Great Britain would be shaken, and the measures of Administration be infinitely embarrassed.

To these arguments it was answered, that such a measure ought not to take place until all others had failed of success; for its operation would be violent, both among ourselves and the people of England. That thousands in this Colony would be ruined by it. That the people of the interior were averse to so harsh a measure; neither was it certain whether united America would approve and support it. That nothing less than unanimity among all the Colonies, in executing one general plan of conduct, could affect measures in Great Britain; and as the general opinion seemed to point to a general Congress, so only, in that Congress, could such a plan of conduct be formed and agreed upon.

By similar arguments the matter was warmly contested; when, without forming any determination, the subject was dropped, and the meeting turned their attention to consider the proposal of sending Deputies to the intended Congress. Here another cause of warm debate arose, as to the number of Deputies who should be appointed, and the powers with which they should be invested; and, without coming to any conclusion on these points, the meeting adjourned to an hour in the afternoon.

In the afternoon the meeting again convened to determine on the points they were considering, and by a majority of eleven, it was carried that there should be five Deputies, and that they should have unlimited power; but that these points should still be subject to the vote of the meeting.

On the 7th of July the meeting was again holden, and the measures of non-exportation and non-importation were again warmly debated. And it was urged, that before the measure should be adopted, the general Congress ought to send a deputation with a petition and remonstrance to the Throne; and if, after that, America remained unrepressed, it would be time enough to break off all commerce with Great Britain. The vote was now taken on the subject, and the proposition of non-exportation and non-importation was rejected. It was then resolved, that five Deputies should, by ballot, be elected on the part and behalf of this Colony, to meet the Deputies of the other Colonies of North America in general Congress, the first Monday in September next, at Philadelphia, or at any other time or place that may be generally agreed on, with full power and authority in behalf of them, and their constituents, to concert, agree to, and effectually prosecute such legal measures as, in the opinion of those Deputies, and of the Deputies of the other Colonies, should be most likely to obtain a repeal of the late Acts of Parliament, and a redress of American grievances.

A poll was now opened to all persons, and at midnight it appeared that Henry Middleton, John Rutledge, Thomas Lynch, Christopher Gadsden, and Edward Rutledge, were chosen Deputies to represent this Colony in General Congress.

transactions (for every point underwent the fullest discussion) the greatest unanimity appeared; each one considered his neighbour as a free-born American, and overlooked all distinctions. As in the deluge of old, the wolf and the lamb swam together, so the sense of our common danger extinguished all private considerations. The set of advocates for the present misguided Administration, whose chains had often been heard to clatter in private companies, were all struck dumb, and kept aloof from the publick debates. The Colony was ready to go into resolutions of non-importation if it had been found absolutely necessary, but it was thought most proper to invest our Deputies with absolute power, to agree with the other members of a Congress in any measures; that so they might take place from one end of this extensive Continent to the other, on one and the same day. And several of the principal merchants made a publick declaration in behalf of the rest, that, in order to quiet the minds of the people, they were ready and willing to enter into any agreement, not only to desist importing British or East India goods, wines, and slaves, but also to countermand all orders already sent, till the event of the Congress should be known; which declaration was received with a loud and general plaudit.

Rejoice ye friends of Freedom in Georgia! and hasten to do likewise. Be comforted ye oppressed Bostonians! and exult ye Northern votaries of Liberty! that the sacred rays of Freedom, which used to beam from you on us, are now reverberated, with double efficacy, back upon yourselves from your weaker sister Carolina, who stands foremost in a resolution to sacrifice her all in your defence. And tremble, ye minions of Slavery! a blow will soon be struck, if you urge us to that extremity, which will convince you, that one soul animates three millions of brave Americans, though extended over a long tract of two thousand miles. Ye vainly thought we were a rope of sand; but, you will find, unless we are put on the same footing with Englishmen, before nine months, millions of people, who depend on America for their daily bread, will curse you with their dying groans.

During the debate this day, touching the powers of the Deputies, it was strongly contended their powers should be limited. To this purpose, among other arguments, it was urged by Mr. Rawlins Lowdes, who was then Speaker of the Commons House of Assembly, that it was well known the Northern Colonies in general totally denied the superintending power of Parliament, a doctrine which no one here admitted. And, unless the Deputies from this Colony appeared in Congress with limited powers, being outnumbered by the Northern Deputies, they, and consequently their constituents, would be bound by votes upon points which they at present absolutely denied. But, to obviate this danger, the resolution vesting the Deputies with power was so worded that no vote in Congress could bind this Colony, but such as was agreeable to the opinions of our Deputies. This sentiment from Mr. Lowdes is here brought into view as being from a gentleman of prudence and consideration; and who, at that time, declared the prevailing opinion of the Colony. It will also serve as a point in publick opinion for tracing the rapidity with which the Colony, in a few months after, adopted the contrary idea.

Antecedent to the meeting of the people, the Chamber of Commerce had resolved not to accede to any measure of non-exportation or non-importation; they, therefore, dreaded nothing so much as that such a measure should take place in Congress. Hence they aimed that such men should be elected Deputies as were against the adoption of that measure. They wished that Mr. Middleton, Mr. Lowndes, Colonel Charles Pinckney, Mr. Brewton, and Mr. John Rutledge, might be chosen. To contribute their endeavours to this end the merchants assembled, and in a body went to the poll; they also sent for their clerks to come and vote. The zeal of the merchants in this transaction blinded their prudence, as they did not observe, that by their appearing in a body the opposite party would take the alarm; and that by voting for Deputies they would be bound by the conduct of such as might be chosen. The meeting accordingly took the alarm, and many of them ran to all parts of the town to collect people, and bring them to the poll; in consequence of which the merchants were defeated, and, except two gentlemen, other Deputies than those they supported were chosen.

On the 8th of July the meeting again assembled. They now resolved, that a Committee of ninety-nine persons be appointed to act as a General Committee, and who should continue in authority until the next general meeting. This Committee had power to correspond with the Committees of the other Colonies, and to do all other matters and things necessary for carrying the Resolutions of the general meeting into execution; a form of words which virtually vested the Committee with unlimited powers during their existence. The general meeting now proceeded to nominate the members of the General Committee. They named fifteen Merchants and fifteen Mechanicks, to represent Charlestown, and sixty-nine Planters to represent the other parts of the Province. This proceeding was rather unconstitutional, as the different districts and parishes did not choose the sixty-nine Planters who were to represent them. They, however, acquiesced in the nomination, being sensible it proceeded from the best intentions, and the urgency of the occasion; And now, the general meeting having sat for three days, and brought those matters to a conclusion for which they had been convened, Colonel Powell prepared minutes of the proceedings against a future occasion, and, agreeably to the wishes of the general meeting, dissolved the same. - Drayton.

Three of the present Deputies appointed to represent this Colony in a general Congress, to be soon held at the northward, viz: Christopher Gadsden, Thomas Lynch, and John Rutledge, Esquires, were our Deputies at the former Congress.

Friday evening the new General Committee met, and chose Colonel Charles Pinckney, (one of the Representatives for the Parish of St. Philip, Charlestown,) for their Chairman, and Peter Timothy for their Secretary. The said Committee also met this day, when they agreed to have stated meetings, and to sit again on Wednesday, the 20th instant, at six o'clock in the evening, at the house of Mr. Charles Ramage, and on every other Wednesday after, at the same hour and place.

Copies of the Resolutions of the late general meetings, accompanied with a Circular Letter, have already been despatched to every Colony on this Continent, from Canada to Georgia inclusive.

Three hundred a fifty more barrels of rice are now ready to be shipped, as soon as a proper vessel can be procured to carry it for the relief of the poor sufferers in Boston.

MILES BREWTON TO JOSIAH QUINCY, JR.

Charlestown, S. C., July 12, 1774.

DEAR SIR: I this day received your polite favour of the 29th of May, and can only say I wish it had been in my power to show more civility to a gentlemen I so much esteem as I do Mr. Quincy. You have my best thanks for your pamphlet. Too many cannot step forth at this alarming crisis, in defence of the much injured rights of America; and those that do, should, and no doubt have, the united thanks of the friends of America.

Your situation at this time is truly hazardous and alarming, but you will not fall for want of friends, because all British America are your friends. For God's sake be firm and discreet, at this time. The good people of this Colony have sent for your port one sloop load of rice, and we shall send more soon.

The 6th, 7th, and 8th instant, we had the greatest Assembly of the inhabitants of this Colony I ever saw. After much debate it was determined that Henry Middleton, John Rutledge, Thomas Lynch, Christopher Gadsden, and Edward Rutledge, should, on the 1st of September, meet the general Congress at Philadelphia. Their powers are unlimited, and I hope the other Colonies will do the same, and place entire confidence in their Deputies; they can do nothing effectual without such powers. I should suppose the first step taken by Congress would be to remonstrate, and petition King, Lords, and Commons. Our grievances should be all stated in the way of a Bill of Rights, and some of the Deputies should go to England with the petition. If redress does not come, then all to enter into a non-import and non-export agreement. I think this seems to be the sense of almost all the Colonies.

Our fears are only about you: that you may despond and give up; for I am sorry to see you have so many adders in your own bosom, who may sting you to death. We have our share also of internal foes. Pity it was that Hutchinson should have gone home with so many good names to petitions; it will do you no good, but much harm I fear.

I beg to hear as often from you as business permits. It is not trifling to write or speak upon publick affairs at this time of imminent danger. Politicks should be the theme of the day; and our dreams at night should be of the hapless situation of our country. However, bad as it is, if Boston does but persevere, and be prudent, her sisters and neighbours will work out her salvation, without taking the musket. Unanimity must be our leading star.

I am, with great regard, your most obedient and obliged servant,
MILES BREWTON.
J. Quincy, Jan.

Boston, July 11, 1774.

At a Town Meeting at Portsmouth, last week, eleven persons were appointed as "a Committee of Inspection, to examine and find out if any more tea is imported there, and upon discovery, to give the earliest notice to the "Town."

We learn from Portsmouth, that one day last week, the Members of their late House of Representatives meet at the State House in that place, in order to choose Delegates for the general Congress; but before they had time to proceed to business, his Excellency Governour Wentworth, attended by the Sheriff, came to them, when the former read a Proclamation, requiring them to disperse, and the latter the Riot Act; upon which they adjourned to a Tavern, and agreed that letters be sent to their respective towns, to appoint a person out of each, to meet together and join in the choice of Delegates for that Government for the Congress proposed.

NEW-KENT COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of New-Kent, at the Court House of the said County, on Tuesday, the 12th day of July, 1774:

THOMAS ADAMS, Esq., chosen Moderator, and WILLIAM CLAYTON, Esquire, Clerk.

The present state of America being seriously and duly considered, the following Resolutions were proposed and agreed to as an Instruction to our Deputies hereafter named:

Resolved, That our Sovereign Lord, King George the Third, is lawful and rightful King of Great Britain and all his Dominions in America, to whose royal person and Government we profess all due subjection, obedience, and fidelity; and that we will at all times defend and protect the just rights of his Majesty with our lives and fortunes.

Resolved, That the inhabitants of the British Colonies in America are entitled to all the rights, liberties, and privileges, of free born English subjects.

Resolved, That the right to impose taxes, or duties, to be paid by the inhabitants of this Dominion, for any purpose whatever is peculiar and essential to the General Assembly, in whom the legislative authority of the Colony is placed, and that taxation and representation are inseparable.

Resolved, That a trial by a jury of the vicinage is the glory of the English law, and the best security for the life, liberty, and property, of the subject, and is the undoubted birth-right of all his Majesty's free born American subjects.

Resolved, That the several Acts and Resolutions of the Parliament of Great Britain, made during his present Majesty's reign, imposing taxes on the inhabitants of America, for the express purpose of raising a revenue, and for altering the nature or punishment of offences committed in America, or the method of trial of such offences, are unconstitutional, arbitrary, and unjust, and destructive of the rights of America, and that we are not bound to yield obedience to any such Acts.

Resolved, That the late cruel, unjust, and sanguinary Acts of Parliament, to be executed by military force and ships of war, upon our sister Colony of the Massachusetts Bay and town of Boston, is a strong evidence of the corrupt influence obtained by the British Ministry in Parliament, and a convincing proof of their fixed intention to deprive the Colonies of their constitutional rights and liberties,

Resolved, That the cause of the town of Boston is the common cause of all the American Colonies.

Resolved, That it is the duty and interest of all the American Colonies firmly to unite in an indissoluble union and association, to oppose, by every just and proper means, the infringement of their rights and liberties.

Resolved, That we do heartily approve of the Resolutions and Proceedings of our several late Assemblies for asserting and supporting the just rights and liberties of America, from their patriotick Resolves in 1765 to this time.

Resolved, That we will most firmly unite with the other counties in this Colony in such measures as shall be approved of by a majority, as the best and most proper method of preserving our rights and liberties, and opposing the said unconstitutional Acts of Parliament.

Resolved, That the most effectual method of opposing the said several Acts of Parliament will be to break off all commercial intercourse with Great Britain until the said Acts shall be repealed.

Resolved, That the several counties within this Colony ought to nominate and appoint for every county, proper Deputies, to meet upon the first day of August next, in the City of Williamsburg, then and there to consult and agree upon the best and most proper means for carrying into execution these or any other Resolutions which shall be best calculated to answer the purposes aforesaid.

Resolved, That it be earnestly recommended to the Deputies of the said General Convention to nominate and appoint fit and proper persons on behalf of this Colony to meet such Deputies as shall be appointed by the other Colonies in General Congress, to consult and agree upon a firm and indissoluble union and association for preserving, by the best and most proper means, their common rights and liberties.

Resolved, That Burwell Basset, and Bartholomew Dandridge, Esquires, our late and present worthy Representatives, be and they are hereby nominated and appointed Deputies, on the part and behalf of the freeholders and inhabitants of this county, to meet such Deputies as shall be appointed by the other counties within this Colony, in the City of Williamsburg, on the first day of August next, or at any other time or place for the purpose aforesaid.

Resolved, further, That our said Deputies agree to join in any proper means that shall be adopted for the immediate relief of the present necessities of the inhabitants of the town of Boston.

Resolved, That the Clerk transmit the foregoing Resolutions and Instructions to the Printer, to be published.

WILLIAM CLAYTON, Clerk of the Meeting.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH, TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED NEW-HAMPSHIRE, JULY 13, 1774.

The Convention mentioned in my despatch, No. 63, immediately dispersed without attempting to enter into any measures. Those gentlemen with some others dined at a tavern, and there in private agreed to recommend to the several Parishes in the Province, that they choose persons to meet at Exeter on the 21st instant, for the purpose of appointing Delegates to attend, and be part of an American Congress, intended to assemble the 1st of September next, in Pennsylvania or New-Jersey. The towns were desired to collect voluntarily, and send by their agents to Exeter, certain sums of money in proportion to their Province tax, amounting to three hundred pounds sterling, to pay the Delegates. It was also recommended to the Parishes, that the 14th instant be observed as a day of fasting and prayer. It is yet uncertain how far these requisitions will be complied with, but I am apt to believe the spirit of enthusiasm, which generally prevails through the Colonies, will create an obedience that reason or religion would fail to procure.

Williamsburg, Va., July 14, 1774.

An express which arrived last Sunday from the frontiers, brought letters to his Excellency the Governour from the County Lieutenants of Augusta, Botetourt, and Fincastle, which advise that skulking parties of Indians (supposed to be Shawanese and Delawares) had been discovered lately among the settlements, some of them venturing within twenty-five miles of Botetourt Court House; Upon receiving this intelligence, we hear that his Excellency has directed the militia of those counties to be draughted out, in order to compose a body of men sufficient to go against the Indian towns, and drive off, or extirpate the blood-thirsty and savage inhabitants. By the same express, we learn that there have been two skinnishes between our people and the Indians, one of which happened at the head of the Monongahela, wherein three Indians were killed, and Captain Wilson, who commanded the party against them, received a shot in his body, but it was hoped would not prove mortal. The other skirmish was on the head of Greenbrier, in which the Lieutenant of the party was wounded, and one man killed; none of the Indians fell.

His Excellency left this city, on the 10th instant, in order to take a view of the situation of the frontiers of this Colony. It seems his Lordship intends to settle matters amicably with the Indians, if possible, and purposes to have conferences with the different Nations, to find out the cause of the late disturbance. *

CHESTERFIELD COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the Freeholders and others, Inhabitants of the County of Chesterfield, at the Court House of the said County, on Thursday, the 14th of July, 1774, to take into consideration the present very alarming situation of this Colony:

The Reverend ARCHIBALD M'ROBERT being unanimously chosen Moderator,

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That we are ready and willing, at the expense of our lives and fortunes, to defend and maintain his Majesty's right and title to the Crown of Great Britain, and his American Dominions, against all his enemies, and we do profess all just obedience and fidelity to his sacred person and Government.

Resolved, That the sole right of making laws for the Government of this his Majesty's ancient Colony and Dominion of Virginia, and for raising and levying taxes on the inhabitants thereof, ought to be, and is vested in the General Assembly of the said Colony, and cannot be executed by any other power without danger to our liberties; subject, nevertheless, as of custom has been, to his Majesty's approbation.

Resolved, That every other of his Majesty's Dominions in America, ought to be, and of right is entitled to, the same privileges as this Colony.

Resolved, That the present demand of money as a duty upon tea imported into this, or any other Colony in America, under the authority of the British Parliament, "for the sole purpose of raising a revenue in America," without the consent of our Representatives, is arbitrary and unjust, a subversion of the ancient and constitutional mode of levying money upon British subjects, and evidently calculated to fix a precedent for future demands of the same nature, and by that means to reduce the Colonies to a state of slavery, and that all persons aiding in the execution of such laws be considered as enemies to the freedom of British subjects.

Resolved, That the Act of the British Parliament for depriving the inhabitants of the town of Boston, in our sister Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, of their lawful trade, as also the Bills brought into the House of Commons of Great Britain, one of which Bills is entitled, "A Bill for the impartial administration of justice in the "cases of persons questioned for any act done by them "in the execution of the law, or for the suppression of "riots or tumults in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England," are unjust, arbitrary, and unconstitutional; and although levelled particularly against one of our first Colonies, yet ought to be resented with the same indignation by this, and every Colony, as if all of them were included in the said Act and Bills.

Resolved, That an extensive Association ought to be entered into, and that no goods or commodities of any kind whatsoever ought to be imported from Great Britain into this Colony after the first day of August next, except medicines, paper, hooks, needles, cotton, wool, and clothiers' cards, steel, gunpowder, German oznabrigs, hempen rolls, negro cotton and plains, Dutch blankets, saltpetre, and implements necessary for the manufacturing of woollens

* Fredericksburg, July 17, 1774. - His Excellency the Earl of Dunmore, arrived here in perfect health on Friday evening, the 15th, and this morning, at eight o'clock, set out on his way to the back country.

His Lordship's care for the poor inhabitants that are settled in the frontier counties, which are now exposed to the horrors of an Indian war, partly induces him to take this journey; hoping that he may, after getting acquainted with the situation of affairs in that country, be able to give such directions as will in some measure secure them and their families from the cruelties of the Savages, who have already done a good deal of damage. The skulking parties that have hitherto been discovered, do not consist of many in a body; and it is thought they intend some grand stroke soon, as they have been seen pretty low down in the settlements, in small parties, of five and six, and sometimes not more than three and four together, without doing any mischief; from which it is judged their business was to make themselves acquainted with the country, and find out the settlements, so that they may, at any time, bring in a party sufficient to destroy them at once, and retreat before any body of men could be collected to go against them.

and linen; and that all and every person who has sent orders to Great Britain for any articles except such as are already excepted, ought to embrace the first opportunity to countermand such orders.

Resolved, That any inhabitant of this Colony who shall import any article not allowed by this Association, or purchase from any other person who shall import such article, except already ordered, shall be deemed a betrayer of the liberties of his country; and that we will not hold friendship, or have any connection with such offending person.

Resolved, That every kind of luxury, extravagance and dissipation, should now, and at all times, be carefully discouraged, and that an extensive plan of establishing manufactories amongst the inhabitants of this, and the other Colonies in North America, should immediately be adopted as the only possible means of avoiding that dependent commercial connection which hath hitherto subsisted between the Colonies and Great Britain, which hath induced an arbitrary and designing Administration to attempt the total destruction of our rights and liberties; and that to carry the same more effectually into execution, subscriptions be opened for that purpose under proper regulations.

Resolved, That to dissolve the General Assembly of the Colony setting for the despatch of publick business, "because they enter into a consideration of the grievances "under which they labour, and nobly assert their right "to freedom," is arbitrary and oppressive, a manifest proof of a fixed intention to destroy the ancient constitutional legislative authority in the Colony, and directly contradictory to the spirit of the acknowledgments made in favour of the rights of a British people.

Resolved, That this Colony ought not to hold any commercial intercourse with any of the Colonies in North America that shall refuse to adopt proper measures for procuring a redress of our grievances.

Resolved, That the town of Boston is now suffering in the cause of American liberty; that her safety and protection is, and ought to be, the common cause of the other Colonies; and that their relief ought to be attempted by all proper and constitutional ways and means in our power.

Resolved, That we do most heartily concur with the late Representatives of this Colony in their sentiments delivered at the meeting held in Williamsburg after the dissolution of the last Assembly. We return them our warmest thanks for their spirited conduct on that and every other occasion, and entreat their steady and determined attention to the same principles, at the meeting to be held on the first day of August next in the City of Williamsburg.

Resolved, That Archibald Cary and Benjamin Watkins, our late worthy Representatives, together with the Representatives to be chosen for this county in the next Assembly, be, and they are hereby appointed Deputies on the part of the freeholders and inhabitants of this county, to meet such Deputies as shall be appointed by the other counties and corporations in this Colony, in the City of Williamsburg, on the first day of August next, to take under their consideration the several grievances under which this, and the other American Colonies, are at present labouring, to concert and deliberate upon proper ways and means to procure redress of those grievance, and that they, together with such Deputies as shall be then and there assembled, do nominate proper persons on the part of this Colony, to meet such Deputies as shall be appointed upon the part of the other Continental Colonies in a general Congress, to consult and agree upon a firm and indissoluble union and association for preserving, by the best and most proper means, their common rights and liberties.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this meeting transmit to the Printers of both Gazettes copies of these Resolutions, with the earnest request of this county that the other counties and corporations within the Colony will appoint Deputies to meet at the time and place, and for the purposes aforesaid.

JERMAN BAKER, Clerk to Meeting.

GLOUCESTER COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a general and full Meeting of the Inhabitants of the County of Gloucester, at the Court House of the said

County, after due notice, on Thursday, the 14th of July, 1774,

JAMES HUBBARD, Esquire, Judge of the said County Court, being unanimously chosen Moderator,

They came to the following Resolves:

Resolved, That we will ever maintain and defend his Majesty's right and title to the Crown of Great Britain, and his Dominions in America, to whose royal person we profess the firmest attachment.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that taxation and representation are inseparable; and that as we are not, and, from the nature of things, cannot be, represented in the British Parliament, every attempt of that body to impose internal taxes on America, is arbitrary, unconstitutional and oppressive.

Resolved, That the Act for blocking up the harbour of Boston, and other purposes therein mentioned, is cruel and unjust, and a convincing proof of the fixed intention of Parliament to deprive America of their constitutional rights and liberties.

Resolved, That the cause of Boston is the common cause of all America, and that we will firmly unite with the other counties in this Colony, and the other Colonies on this Continent, in every measure that may be thought necessary on this alarming occasion.

Resolved, That we do most heartily concur with our late Representatives in their resolve of the total disuse of tea, and do farther resolve against the use of any East India commodity whatsoever, except sahpetre.

Resolved, That we will not import, or purchase when imported, any merchandise or commodities from Great Britain; and that, at a short day hereafter to be fixed, we will stop all exports to Great Britain, until there is a total repeal of the Boston Port Act, all the several Acts imposing taxes on America, for the purpose of raising a revenue, and those other Acts made particularly against our brethren of the Massachusetts Bay, on account of their noble opposition to the late Revenue Acts.

Resolved, That should our sister Colonies of Maryland and North Carolina determine not to export their tobacco to Great Britain, we will be far from availing ourselves of their patriotick resolution, by continuing to export ours.

Resolved, That we will submit to any resolutions that may be entered into either by the Deputies of the several counties in this Colony at Williamsburg, or by the general Congress of the Colonies on the Continent.

Resolved, That we will not deal with any person or persons in this county who will not sign this Association, and strictly and literally conform to every distinct article thereof; nor with any other person or persons who will not sign, and strictly conform, to the particular resolves of their respective counties, but will for ever despise and detest them as enemies to American liberty.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that immediately upon the non-exportation plan taking place, neither the gentlemen of the bar, nor any other person, ought to bring any suit for the recovery of any debt, or prosecute farther any suit already brought, during the continuance of these resolutions, it being utterly inconsistent with such scheme for any man to be compelled to pay without the means wherewith he may pay.

Resolved, That we do most cordially approve of the intended meeting of the late Burgesses on the first of August next, at Williamsburg, and do depute Thomas Whiting, and Lewis Burwell, Esquires, our late worthy Representatives, to consult with the Deputies of the several counties of this Colony, and to adopt such measures as are agreeable to the foregoing resolutions, hereby engaging, on our parts, to conform thereto, and to support the same to the utmost of our power.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this meeting transmit to the Printers of both Gazettes, copies of the above Resolves, with the request of the county to insert them in their papers.

JASPER CLAYTON, Clerk.

CAROLINE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a General Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Caroline, at the Court House, on Thursday, the 14th day of July, 1774, assembled for the purpose of deliberating and giving their sentiments upon the present state of affairs in America, and what ought to be done at this most alarming crisis, the following points were agitated and agreed to as the opinion of this county:

That the design of our Meeting may not be misinterpreted, we think it proper to declare, what would otherwise be unnecessary, that we will preserve all due obedience and fidelity to the royal person and Government of his sacred Majesty, King George the Third; and that we will at all times when called on for that purpose, maintain and defend, at the expense of our lives and fortunes, his Majesty's right and title to the Crown of Great Britain, and his Dominions in America.

That a firm union and mutual intercourse, and reciprocation of interests and affections between Great Britain and her Colonies is desirable and beneficial to both; and that whoever shall go about to dissolve that union, by attempting to deprive the Colonists of their just rights on the one hand, or to effect their independence on the other, ought ever to be considered as a common enemy to the whole community.

That for Americans to be exempted from every kind of taxation, except by the consent of their own Representatives in their several Provincial Assemblies, to be heard in their defence when accused of crimes, and tried by their peers, are rights they derive from natural justice, the British Constitution, (to which they are equally entitled with their fellow-subjects in Great Britain,) and from constant usage, so long as the true principles of the Constitution have been suffered to direct the publick councils.

That the British Parliament in their several Acts for imposing a duty upon tea, to be paid in America; for blocking up the harbour and stopping the commerce of the town of Boston in the Massachusetts Bay, for supposed offences, with which they were charged and condemned unheard; for altering the form of that Government established by Charter and long usage; and for empowering his Majesty to order persons charged with certain offences committed in America to be carried to Great Britain and there tried, have been influenced by evil counsellors to depart from the true principles of the Constitution, and to violate the most sacred and important rights of America, from which they can never depart; that those Acts, whether intended to operate only in one Province, or generally in all, ought to be considered as the common cause; and that a firm and indissoluble union and association of the whole ought to be formed to oppose their operation by every just and proper means; to effect which, we think the sending Deputies from each Province to meet in a general Congress, will be a very proper measure, and we desire our Delegates may unite with others in the General Meeting for this Colony in electing such Deputies.

That tea being the subject of the tax complained of, and the East India Company having acted ungenerously in sending great quantities of it to America, to fix the precedent of taxation, though desired to forbear, we most cordially concur with the late Representatives of this Colony to disuse tea, and not to purchase any East India commodities from henceforth, until the just rights of America be restored.

That a General Association between all the American Colonies not to import from Great Britain any commodity whatsoever ought to be entered into and not dissolved till the just rights of the Colonies are restored to them, and the cruel Acts of the British Parliament against the Massachusetts Bay and town of Boston are repealed.

That it is the undoubted privilege and indispensable duty of the Representatives of the people of this Colony, when met in General Assembly, to deliberate freely upon all invasions of the rights, liberties, or properties of their constituents, and consider of the proper means of redress; and therefore, that the interposition of the Executive power here, by mandate from the Ministry to dissolve the Assembly whenever they complain of attempts to destroy those rights, tends to deprive us of all benefit from a Legislature, and is an evidence of the fixed intention of the Ministry to reduce the Colonies to a state of slavery.

That in this distressed situation of our affairs, all luxury, dissipation, and extravagance, ought to be banished from among us, and every kind of manufacture, industry, and economy encouraged.

That the African trade is injurious to this Colony, obstructs our population by freemen, manufacturers, and others, who would emigrate from Europe and settle here, and occasions an annual balance of trade against the country, and therefore that the purchase of all imported slaves ought to be associated against.

Though we are happily allowed to proceed to the choice of new Representatives, yet as the return of the writs is made to the 11th of August, and there is reason to doubt the Assembly may not be held at that time, we think it highly expedient there should be a meeting at Williamsburg on the first of August, as appointed, to consider fully of the several matters herein before mentioned, and appoint Edmund Pendleton and James Taylor, Esquires, Deputies on our parts, to meet such as shall be named for other Counties and Corporations, at Williamsburg, or such other place as may be agreed on, on the day aforesaid, or any other time, to deliberate freely, and agree to the above Resolutions, or any other that may be judged more expedient for the general purpose intended.

WILLIAM NELSON, Clerk.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN, NO. VII.

Williamsburg, Va., July 14, 1774.

Friends, Fellow-citizens, and Countrymen:

The true state of your case is now fully before you, and the questions naturally resulting from it, for your determination are:

1st. Question, Will you acknowledge that the British Parliament have a right to make laws to bind you? Or will you, from a dread of the consequences of an opposition, submit to those laws?

2d. Question, If you are determined not to submit, what mode of opposition, will you adopt as the most rational and effectual to shake off the jurisdiction usurped over you?

These questions require the coolest attention, and the most deliberate wisdom to determine on, a steady and unshaken intrepidity to carry the resolutions you form on them into execution - resolutions which will, in all human probability, preserve or sink the greatest Empire in the world, and extend happiness or misery to myriads of millions yet unborn. With regard to the first question, if you really think that the British Parliament have a right to make any laws whatsoever to bind you, give up the matter, and submit to slavery at once; for the distinction between the right of taxation and that of regulating trade is merely nominal and not worth contending for, since a regulation of trade can as easily restrain you from manufacturing the smallest article for your own use, as it hath already prevented you from erecting slitting mills; can as easily strip you of every shilling of your property as it hath already rendered useless the whole property of the town of Boston; can deprive, you of your liberty by subjecting you to new modes of real, and erecting Courts of Admiralty, invested with powers unknown to the Constitution, and can sacrifice your lives, by marking you out for slaughter to a licentious soldiery, who are to be rescued from the justice of the country offended, and to be carried to England, with a certainty of being screened, and with a hope, if not with a promise, of being rewarded for the murders they are to commit in America.

But still if your ancestors unthinkingly placed you in this deplorable situation, and by settling in America have debased you so low as that you are become the slaves of your brethren in Britain; if the King, at the head of his respective American Assemblies, no longer constitutes the Supreme Legislature of the Colonies; if you are subject to two Supreme Legislatures; if the King may, at the head of the British Parliament, abrogate laws, which, as the head of his American Parliament, he hath assented to; revoke Charters more solemnly granted than those of Magna Charter to Britain; deprive his American subjects of that property, which, under the faith of those Charters, they have expended their best blood and treasure in acquiring; and if, to conclude all, you are to consider yourselves as dependent upon the British Parliament, and have hitherto only dreamed of liberties which you had no right to enjoy; why then, my countrymen, let us patiently acquiesce in our unhappy lot, let us deprecate the wrath of the British aristocracy by instant submission, and seriously and solemnly implore the God of all Mercies to inspire the minds of our lords and masters with some slight sentiments of moderation, some little degree of tenderness and compassion, towards those who were once their equals, are still their brethren, and are not conscious of having merited the base, the abject, the humiliating state, they are reduced to, or the rigorous treatment they are now suffering.

But it may be said, that though convinced that you have justice on your side, and though sensible that the jurisdiction claimed by the British Parliament over you is an unjust and arbitrary usurpation of the strong over the weak, yet you are not ripe for opposition; that, too feeble to resist the power of Britain, and to assert your title to freedom, you can at present only protest against the oppression, but must leave it to your growing prosperity to enforce those rights, which you can only claim. If these sentiments, my countrymen, prevail amongst you, if in order to avoid slight, temporary evils, and imaginary consequences, you are determined only to make an imaginary shew of resistance, and if that will not induce the British Parliament to withdraw her claim, to submit to that claim, and acknowledge the supremacy they contend for, let your submission be made immediately. With a good grace express contrition for your former obstinacy, humbly entreat forgiveness for what you have already done, promise implicit obedience for the future, and, if determined to submit to slavery at last, be careful how you exasperate your masters with the semblance of an opposition you do not intend to persist in; for I will venture to prophecy, that if America is not now ripe for asserting her just rights, she will be rotten before she is so.

The arbitrary laws which will be imposed upon you immediately upon your submission, the swarms of placemen and pensioners which you will be obliged to pay to enforce those laws, and the rigour with which they will be executed, by suppressing every idea of patriotism, before it can shoot up to maturity, and by stifling it in its cradle, every dawn of virtue will effectually restrain posterity from even wishing to emerge from that state of slavery which, by being habituated to from their infancy, will at length become familiar to them.

Be not deceived by imagining, that the submission of Boston to the three Acts of Parliament lately passed, arbitrary and humiliating as they are, is the ultimate end of the British aristocracy. No, it is only a part of the general plan they have formed for enslaving all America, by attacking each Colony singly; for as every Colony have refused to submit to the duty imposed upon tea, they will all, one after another, feel the resentment of, and be called upon for, the same submission to Parliament, if you do not cordially unite in supporting the first sufferer. And here permit me to address myself in a particular manner to such of my countrymen whose own industry, or the frugality of their ancestors, have blessed them with immense wealth. I confess your situations are truly alarming, for as you have more to lose, so you have more to fear than those of your fellow-subjects to whom Providence hath been less liberal of the goods of fortune. In as happy a state as your most sanguine wishes could have placed you, with a reasonable expectation of providing for a family deservedly dear to you, and of transmitting to your posterity those blessings of fortune, which, by tasting yourselves, you have experienced the value of, you wish not for a change. Satisfied that with your ample estates, you can ward off the evils of the most arbitrary Government, and, that though much may be taken from you unjustly, still there will remain abundantly sufficient to supply you with all the necessaries, with all the elegancies of life; whereas, on the other hand, even a slight commotion may expose part of your wealth to the ravages of the populace, or the plunder of a licentious army, and if you are unfortunate enough to choose the weaker party, however innate virtue may have directed your choice, you are sure to lose the whole, and, in your old age perhaps, be reduced to poverty, aggravated with the corroding reflections on the enjoyments you once possessed. You therefore endeavour to dissuade every struggle for liberty, and if you cannot accomplish this, you sagely determine, by observing a strict neutrality, to avoid giving the slightest ground of offence to either party; and this you think a prudent method of preserving the blessings you at present enjoy.

When Cæsar, Pompey, and Crassus, (says a celebrated writer) were making large strides towards overturning the Constitution of Rome, the people were divided into two factions; the middle ranks, who are always the most wise and virtuous people in a state, opposed; the populace supported them; whilst the wealthy, who if they had thrown their weight into the scale, might have restrained the errors of the populace, and checked the ruinous designs of the triumvirate, observed a strict neutrality; foolishly imagining by doing so that their houses, their fish-pounds, their parks, their villas, and their gardens, would remain untouched when the laws of their country were abolished; instead of which, those safest fences of every man's property were no sooner broke down, by overturning the Constitution, than in the second triumvirate of Augustus, Anthony, and Lepidus, they found themselves foremost in the list of proscriptions, and a confiscation of that wealth (which they vainly imagined would have secured to them all the enjoyments of life) marked them for destruction, and deprived them of life itself; leaving to those of their rank in succeeding Empires this useful lesson, that the surest means of securing wealth in every country is to unite firmly in opposing every attempt to overturn the laws, and that the greater opulence they possess the more they are interested in preserving the liberty of the state they belong to; because upon all occasions of this kind the old maxim, That he that is not for us is against us, prevails so far as to subject the wealthy neutrals to the confiscations of which ever party gains the superiority.

Can you suppose you sordid sons of Avarice, that three millions of people will surrender their liberties without a single struggle? Or if they should, when the British aristocracy have beat down every barrier of property in America, do you really imagine that your fertile fields will escape their rapacious hands? Or that they will not find or make some pretext for sacrificing the present owner, to gratify their interested views, by dividing his spoils amongst them? If these are your sentiments, pursue the delusion, and experience the consequence. But if, on the other hand, my countrymen, all ranks of you are convinced that it is not only dangerous but absurd to subject yourselves to a double taxation, and to two supreme Legislatures; if you think that your Sovereign ought to be considered as supreme Ruler of the whole Empire, providing for the welfare of his subjects within the Realm, at the head of his British Parliament, and of those without, at the head of his American Assemblies, by laws adapted to the local situation, and suited to the emergencies of each, and by that negative with which he is invested by the Constitution, restrain the different states of his extensive Dominions from enacting laws to destroy the freedom or to prejudice the interest of each other; if you are satisfied that the independence of America upon the British Parliament is essentially necessary to check the growing power of aristocracy in Great Britain, and to restore your Sovereign to that weight in the National Councils which he ought to possess; if you still retain a just sense of your best birth-right, that of being governed only by such laws as you or your ancestors have or had a share in framing; if you deem it incompatible with every idea of liberty to trust the legislative power with men you have not chosen, and who, from their situation, will reap the advantages, but cannot share in the inconveniences of the laws they make to oppress you; if you look upon slavery as the greatest evil that can possibly befall you in this world; and if reposing your trust in the Supreme Being, to assist a just cause, you are determined to unite firmly in asserting your native rights, coolly consider the second question: "What mode of proceeding will you adopt as the most rational and effectual to shake off the jurisdiction usurped over you?"

Three plans have been proposed to you:

1st Plan. That all the Colonies in America, except New England, shall agree to pay for the tea destroyed by the people of Boston upon the repeal of the duty imposed upon that article to be paid in America, and upon the repeal of the Act for shutting up the port of Boston.

2d Plan. That you should immediately stop all exports and imports to and from Great Britain and the Islands, till the Tea and Boston Acts are repealed.

3d Plan. That you shall absolutely determine, at once, that you will not in future submit to any Act of the British Parliament, made to be executed in the Colonies since the fourth of James the First; that if any Judge of any Court whatsoever, shall presume to pronounce any judgment to enforce such Acts of Parliament, he shall incur the resentment of an injured people, and be treated as an enemy to America; that the judgment so pronounced by him shall be absolutely void; that the person injured by such judgment shall by force repel the execution of such judgment, and that you will, at the risk of your lives and fortunes, support him in repelling such execution.

A moments reflection will convince you, that to pursue the first plan proposed may be productive of evil, but cannot possibly be attended with any good consequences. Is it reasonable to imagine that the East India Company intended to erect a number of booths or little grocers' shops in America, for the convenience of retailing their tea by the ounce? For if they only intended to deal in the wholesale way, by supplying the different stores in America, that they not only might, but actually have done, for many years from their warehouses in Great Britain; it is therefore generally supposed that the project of the East India Company's sending ship loads of tea to America was concerted between the Minister and them; to establish a glaring precedent of your having submitted to an internal tax, imposed upon you by the British Parliament, for the sole purpose of raising a revenue, or, in case of resistance, to furnish a plausible pretext for dragooning you into obedience. If this was really the case, that Company (as tools of arbitrary power) have suffered no more than they deserved, and to indemnify their losses would only be to invite fresh injuries of the same kind. Again, as their consignees had trifled with the people of Boston till they became liable for the duty, they would add that duty to the price of their tea; and if the Minister can extract the duty, and the East India Company receive the price, whether the tea is destroyed by the populace of one Colony, and paid for by the Assemblies of the others, or whether it is purchased and consumed in the regular course of business, will be a matter of no greater concern, either to the Minister or to the Company, than that, in the first case, it will, by becoming the avowed act of different Assemblies, be a more dangerous precedent than that of private consumption, which might be supposed to proceed from the want of virtue in a few individuals. But even supposing that the East India Company were in no combination with the Minister to enslave you, and that, convinced of the danger of sporting with the liberties of their fellow-subjects, they are determined to relinquish their project of sending tea to America, still the plan proposed cannot be attended with any good consequences.

The British aristocracy have already proceeded to great lengths in endeavouring to enforce implicit obedience from the Colonies to be diverted from their despotick views, with any trifling concessions you can make, or any timid measures you can pursue. The language they now use is, that the honour of Parliament is at stake, and nothing but an implicit submission to its authority, and an absolute surrender of your liberties, will preserve that honour, or, in the words of their insolent demagogue, America is not even to be heard till she prostrates herself at their feet; and the two Acts of Parliament, altering the Charter of New England, abrogating the rights solemnly granted by it, and instituting new modes of trial to encourage the British soldiers to murder the inhabitants of America in general, leave you no room to doubt of their hostile intentions.

Timid or temporizing measures will answer no other end than to swell their pride, heighten their arrogance, and increase their contempt of you. The first plan proposed cannot, therefore, be effectual to relieve us.

In my next I shall consider whether the second can be adopted with greater propriety.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Thursday, July 14, 1774:

Present, the Honourable John Penn, Esq., Governour, Rich. Peters, Benj. Chew, and James Tilghman, Esqrs.

The Governour laid before the Board several late Letters from Arthur St. Clair, Esq., at Ligonier, containing very favourable accounts of the disposition and temper of the Indians, as also an Extract of Mr. Alexander M'Kee, the Deputy Indian Agent's Journal, of all the transactions with the Indians at Pittsburgh, since the first of May last.

The Governour then acquainted the Board, that the Assembly being to meet, by summons, on Monday next, on occasion of the late Indian disturbances, he thought it would be necessary that a Message should be prepared to be sent them immediately on their meeting. Whereupon, Mr. Chew, Mr. Tilghman, and Mr. Shippen, were appointed a Committee to prepare a draught of the same.

CORRESPONDENCE LAID BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

At a Meeting held with the Indians at Pittsburgh, the 29th of Jane, 1774:

Present, Captain Aston, Major McCulloch, Captain Crawford, Mr. Valen. Crawford, Captain Nevill, Mr. Edward Cook, Mr. John Stevenson, Captain Hogeland, Mr. David Shepherd, Rev. Mr. Whiteaker, Mr. Joseph Wells, Mr. James Innis, Mr. Aeneas Mackay, Mr. Joseph Simons; with a number of the Inhabitants and Traders.

Indians - Captain White Eyes, Weyandahila, Captain Johnny; with sundry other young men.

Captain White Eyes first informed us that he was returned from transacting the business which he had been sent upon by his brethren, the English, and that he now had the satisfaction to tell us that he had succeeded in his negotiations with all those tribes of the several Nations of Indians whom he had since seen and conferred with upon the unhappy disturbances which unfortunately arose this Spring between the foolish people of both parties; and that he had found all Nations fully disposed to adhere to their ancient friendship, and the advice of their wise men.

"BROTHERS: When the late unhappy disturbances happened, you desired us to be strong, and to speak to the other tribes of the Indians to hold fast the chain of friendship subsisting between the English and them. I now inform you that we sent for our uncles, the Wyandots, and our grandchildren, the Shawanese, and also the Cherokees, and we have desired them to be strong, and to inform all other Nations, and hold fast the chain which our grandfathers made, and you may depend our King still continues to go on in that good work.

As things now seem to have a good prospect, and peace likely to be restored again, Brothers, we desire you to be strong, and also on your parts to hold fast the chain of friendship, as you may remember when it was made it was agreed that even the loss of ten men's lives on any side should not weaken it. If, for the future, we are all strong and brighten the chain of friendship, our foolish young men will not have it in their power to disturb it. We cannot inform you any more of our grandchildren the Shawanese, than that they are gone home, and intend soon going to Fort Pitt, to hear of the disturbances which have happened between your foolish people and theirs, when you will then hear from their own mouths what they have to say.

"Brothers: As things now seem to be easy, and all the Nations have now agreed to hold fast the chain of friendship, and make their young men sit quiet, we desire you to consider of what you have to say when our grandchildren the Shawanese come to speak to you. The head men of the Shawanese are gone to Wagetomica, and intend to send their King up to Fort Pitt, that he may himself hear what his brothers the English have to say.

" WHITE EYES, KILLBUCK,

" THOMAS McKEE, WILLIAM ANDERSON,

" EPALOINED, SIMON GIRTY.

"To Geo. Croghan, Alex. McKee, and J. Conolly, Esqrs."

FOURTH SERIES.

White Eyes again addressed the People:

"BRETHREN: It was with pleasure I heard you when you first desired me not to look towards the mischief that had been committed by foolish men, and I looked upon it as a convincing proof of your desire to preserve that chain of friendship which has so long subsisted between us. Be strong, brethren, and let us both be strong in continuing so to do, and not only overlook the indiscretion and folly of our rash inconsiderate men, but take pity of them, that our young people, as they grow up, may hereafter enjoy the blessings of that peace and friendship established between us; and to this end let us call to our remembrance the amity made by our forefathers and their wise people, which is no doubt still impressed upon the hearts of our great men, to whom let us apply to reconcile our uneasiness, as this is the sure way to prevent our friendship from being destroyed, or contracting rust. Therefore, brethren, let us rely upon them for our future welfare. Every thing is so far now settled upon our parts, that it only requires a meeting of our prudent men to restore that peace and tranquillity to our country we so much wish for, Brethren, we desire that no imprudent action may now destroy the agreeable prospect of this desirable event. (A Belt.)

"I have to inform you that the Chiefs of all Nations still continue to hold by that chain of friendship which has been put into their hands by Sir William Johnson, in the name of their father, the King of Great Britain, and that it was only the actions of a few individuals, contrary to their Chiefs' intentions, that had bred this confusion amongst them; who have, in the violence of their grief and passion, taken revenge for the loss of their friends; but the Chiefs of all Nations assured me, that as soon as those bad people, who were yet scattered amongst them, were in their power, they would secure them from doing further evil, and that those they have seen are sorry for what they have done, begging the pity of their Chiefs, and I have reason to expect that you will see them shortly upon this occasion."

A true copy,

ALEXANDER MCKEE.

JOHN MONTGOMERY TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Carlisle, June 30, 1774.

SIR, MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: I received your two letters, as also the arms, ammunition, &c., for the use of the back inhabitants, which I have forwarded to Captain St. Clair; shall settle for the carriage when I go down in September next; our accounts from Fort Pitt are favourable. The traders who were at the Lower Towns are on their way to (and some of them are arrived at) Pittsburgh, with all their property. They are guarded by a number of Shawanese and Delawares. The Mingoes attempted to cut off the traders at the Canoe place, but were prevented by the Shawanese, who told the Mingoes that the traders were under their protection, and if they struck them: they would resent it and punish them for it. The Shawanese seem well disposed and inclinable for peace, and will continue so unless provoked by the Virginians. The Delawares are all for peace. Logan's party was returned, and had thirteen scalps and one prisoner. Logan says he is now satisfied for the loss of his relations, and will sit still until he hears what the Long Knife (the Virginians) will say. I am in hopes that the storm will blow over, and that peace and tranquillity will be restored to the back inhabitants.

I am, honourable sir, your Honour's most obedient and humble servant,

JOHN MONTGOMERY.

To the Honourable John Penn, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of Pennsylvania.

RICHARD LEE, PRESIDENT OF THE MARYLAND COUNCIL,
TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Maryland, 2d July, 1774.

SIR: The enclosed depositions will show that some disorders have happened, and the subject which has been the occasion of them. The Proprietary of this Province being a minor, is under the care of guardians, deriving their authority from the appointment of the Lord High Chancellor of England, and is under the especial protection of his Lordship; and as the guardians have declined doing any act merely in their capacity of guardians, by which the right or estate of their ward may be affected, I presume no person in Maryland can think it proper for him to do such an act.

Whether it may not be expedient to suspend the execution of any measure which may be the occasion of disturbing the peace, I must refer to your prudent consideration. Conceiving it to be my duty, I shall, by the first opportunity, transmit to the guardians an account of what has happened, and of the occasion of it. And have the honour to be, with great regard, sir, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD LEE,

The Honourable John Penn, Esq.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, July 4, 1774.

SIR: I have the honour to enclose you the last piece of Indian intelligence, which came by Captain White Eyes, a few days ago, and am very happy that affairs have so peaceable an aspect; yet I cannot but express my fears that it will soon be interrupted, as a large body of Virginians are certainly in motion. Colonel Henry Lewis is ordered to the mouth of Kenhawa to build a fort there, and Major McDonald, with about five hundred men, is to march up Braddock's Road, and down to Wheeling, to build another there, and Cresap, with three others, are appointed to raise ranging companies. With such officers as Cresap no good can be expected; so that it is very doubtful but all attempts to preserve the tranquillity of the country will be fruitless.

The men that have been raised here we have thought proper to continue another month, as the harvest will by that time be over. They have orders to assist and protect the people in the different quarters where they are posted, and I hope by that means it will be secured. The arms and ammunition are not yet arrived, but I hear they will reach this place to-morrow or next day.

I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

P. S., Last week Mr. Conolly issued an order to prevent any skins being removed from Pittsburgh till they paid a duty, as in Virginia. There has been some appearance of the old seed of the Black Boys. A number of people had assembled to stop Mr. Simons's goods, but I had got notice of it, and sent a party to protect them, and have issued warrants against them; their ringleader will certainly be taken this day.

ÆNEAS MACKAY, JOSEPH SPEAR, AND DEVEREUX SMITH, TO JOSEPH SHIPPEN, JUN.

Pittsburgh, July 8th, 1774.

SIR; Since our memorial to his Honour, the Governour, of the 25th of June, accompanied by some notes, there has several occurrences of so extraordinary a nature happened, that we hope no apology is necessary, for giving you this trouble. The traders who were coming by land are all come in safe. Captain White Eyes is returned, with the strongest assurances of friendship from the Shawanese, Delawares, Wyandots and Cherokees, with whom he had been treating on our behalf. Upon his return he found his house broken open by the Virginians, and about thirty pounds worth of his property taken, which was divided and sold by the robbers at one Froman's Fort, on Charlton's Creek.

Doctor Conolly continues to exercise his authority as usual. Our persons are daily insulted, our property forcibly taken, and even our lives threatened. We had a remarkable instance of this on the first instant. A horse, the property of Messrs. Richard and William Butler, having been taken by a vagrant fellow at this place, was secreted by him in the town, which, when Messrs. Butlers were informed of, they went and took their horse, but not without obstinate resistance on the side of the thief, who, in their own defence, they were obliged to strike; upon which the fellow applied to Doctor Conolly, who sent a sergeant to Richard Butler, commanding him to appear immediately in the garrison; but Mr. Butler refused to go, and denied Doctor Conolly's authority; whereupon a certain Captain Aston was sent for them, with a party from the fort, and orders to break their house and take them at all events. Messrs. Butlers, after much debate, and repeated threats from Captain Aston, at the entreaty of their friends, consented to go down to the garrison; and when they demanded the cause of such treatment were answered that they must go immediately to jail, but they were afterwards allowed to give bail for their appearance at August Court. The same day Mr. Conolly informed them, and the other traders, they must pay him a duty of four pence per skin before they could remove one from this place, and immediately ordered the roads to be stopped, which was accordingly done, and a number of horses belonging to Mr. Blaine and others, were seized and brought back. A few days ago, one of the traders who went to meet his people, and some Indians that were bringing his peltry from Newcomer's Town, was, upon his return, waylaid by about forty Virginians, who took him, three of his men, and five Delaware men, prisoners, telling him they would for the future treat as savages and enemies every trader that they should find in the woods. About this time two Delaware men, who had come from the towns up to assist some of the traders with their horses, were pursued by a party of Virginians to Mr. Smith's house, where they flew for protection. The party followed them to the door, demanded entrance, and swore they would burn the house if they were refused. The Indians, notwithstanding, were kept in the house till night, and then dismissed in safety.

Mr. Wm. Butler, being insulted by a worthless drunken fellow, was under the necessity of chastising his insolence. Whereupon Mr. Conolly issued a King's warrant for him, and his Sheriff came to Mr. Smith's, where Mr. Butler then was, between eight and nine o'clock at night, and after an unsuccessful attempt to take Mr. Butler, ran out and called a guard that was waiting for that purpose, who immediately surrounded the house, remained there till after nine o'clock, and then dispersed. The Virginians, from their conduct, appear determined on a war. Colonel Lewis is supposed to be at the Kenhawas with fifteen hundred men, and several parties have gone from this place to join him. Major McDonald, Mr. Cresap, and others, are expected here shortly, who, it is said, are going down the river to build forts and station men at different places.

We have no room to doubt that Doctor Conolly has, by order of Lord Dunmore, sent a Speech to the Shawanese, importing that Logan and his party be immediately delivered up, with the three prisoners that he has taken, and some other Shawanese that are supposed to have committed a murder last winter. That on a refusal they (the Virginians) are determined to proceed against them with vigour, and will show them no mercy. Doctor Conolly has expresses constantly on the road between this and Williamsburg, whereby he has been able to impose on his Lordship the flagrant misrepresentations of Indian affairs that appear in the Williamsburg paper of the 9th of June, which has been publickly confuted at this place by several persons well acquainted with the present state and sentiments of the different Nations.

We hope that it is not necessary to say any more to convince you how unhappy we are at present circumstanced, not only from the prospect of an Indian war, which the Virginians appear determined to bring upon us, but from the apprehension of further insults from Doctor Conolly's extraordinary conduct, of which we have given several specimens, and which, without the interposition of Government, we shall not be long able to support.

We are, sir, with profound respect, your humble servants,

ÆNEAS MACKAY,

JOSEPH SPEAR,

DEVEREUX SMITH

To Joseph Shippen, Jun., Esq., Secretary to his Honour the Governour.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Hanna's Town, July 12, 1774.

SIR: On Friday last I was honoured with your letter of the 28th ult., and I have now the satisfaction to acquaint you that the panick seems entirely over, and that numbers of people are returning daily.

It must be very grateful to every person concerned, as it is in a very particular manner to me, that their endeavours on this occasion has met with so full approbation from your Honour, and will most certainly induce them to exert themselves on future ones. I had yesterday an opportunity to acquaint them, as also a very respectable body of people who were assembled here in consequence of a letter from the Committee of Philadelphia, of your determination to afford them every necessary assistance and protection. I read to them that part of your Honour's letter, and they received it with great satisfaction and thankfulness.

I shall probably have occasion to write you again to-morrow, as I had, yesterday, a letter from Mr. Croghan, desiring a conference on matters of great importance to the Province, which he would not trust in writing. I believe, however, it is a proposal to open some trading place; that is, to form a town some where up the Alleghany, as the trading people must leave Pittsburgh. Henkston, with about eighteen men in arms, paid us a visit at Court last week, and I am very sorry to say got leave to go away again, though there was a force sufficient to secure two such parties, at the Sheriff's direction. I had got intelligence that they were to be there, and expected to be joined by a party of Cresap's people, for which reason the ranging party that were within reach had been drawn in, but none of the Virginians appeared. It is said a commission has been sent him from Virginia; certain it is he is enlisting men for that service.

I believe there was something else I ought to have informed you of, but I am surrounded by a crowd of people, which has put it out of my head.

I have the honour to be, sir, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, July 17, 1774.

SIR: The business Mr. Croghan had to communicate was this, that the Virginians are determined to put a stop to the Indian trade with this Province, and that Messrs. Simons, Campbell and Conolly, have obtained an exclusive privilege of carrying it on on the frontiers of Virginia. He recommends the laying out a town up the Alleghany at the Kittaning, to which the traders might retire, as they will certainly be obliged to abandon Pittsburgh, and from which the trade might be carried on to as much advantage as the distance from thence to Kaskaskies is much the same as from Pittsburgh, and a very good road. He further recommends the building a small stockade there to afford them protection in case of a war. The Indians will certainly quit Pittsburgh, as it is at the risk of their lives they come there, to which I was an eye-witness. Croghan further says, unless somebody is sent up by the Government to speak to the Indians very soon, that we shall see no more of them, and that the Delawares, who are still friendly, will be debauched.

I beg you to excuse this incoherent scrawl, as I am obliged to be held up whilst I write it.

I am, sir, your very humble and most obedient servant,
AR. ST. CLAIR.

P. S. Henkston has left the country.

Savannah, Georgia, July 14, 1774.

The critical situation to which the British Colonies in America are likely to be reduced, from the alarming and arbitrary impositions of the late Acts of the British Parliament, respecting the town of Boston, as well as the Acts that at present extend to the raising of a perpetual revenue, without the consent of the people or their Representatives, is considered as an object extremely important at this critical juncture, and particularly calculated to deprive the American subjects of their constitutional rights and liberties, as a part of the British Empire.

It is therefore requested, that all persons within the limits of this Province do attend at the Liberty Pole at Fondee's Tavern, in Savannah, on Wednesday, the 27th instant, in order that the said matters may be taken under consideration; and such other constitutional measures pursued as may then appear to be most eligible.

NOBLE W. JONES, JOHN HOUSTON,
ARCHIBALD BULLOCH, GEORGE WALTON.

New-York. July 14, 1774.

We hear from Albany, that all the Chiefs and Head Warriors of the Six Nations are now on their way to Sir William Johnson's, to hold Congress on the alarming news they received of the murders committed by Cresap and others, his associates, in Ohio; that a considerable number are already assembled at Johnson's Hall, and it is expected the whole will amount to six or seven hundred; and that notwithstanding the disorders which the unprovoked barbarity of Cresap and others have occasioned to the Southward, there is reason to hope that, through the endeavours of Sir William, the fidelity of the Six Nations will be preserved, and the Northern frontiers secured from the dangers and distress now experienced on the frontiers of Virginia, &c. It is, however, earnestly wished by all persons concerned in new settlements or trade, that nothing may, in the interim, happen to defeat their sanguine expectations from the intended Congress.

HENRICO COUNTY (VIRGINIA) INSTRUCTIONS TO THEIR DELEGATES.

At a Meeting of the Loyal and Patriotick People of the County of Henrico, in Virginia, at the Court House, on the 15th of July, the following Address to their late worthy Representatives was agreed on, and signed by a great number of Freeholders:

To RICHARD ADAMS and SAMUEL DUVAL, Esqrs.:

We, the subscribers, freeholders of the County of Henrico, assembled for the purpose of deliberating on the present posture of publick affairs, return you our thanks for the part you acted in the late Assembly as our Burgesses.

When we reflect on the alarming and critical situation of things respecting the mother country, our minds are filled with the most anxious concern. The Acts of the British Parliament, made for punishing the inhabitants of Massachusetts Bay, are repugnant to the first principles of justice; and if they are suffered to have a full operation, will not only crush our sister Colony, and involve the guilty and innocent in one common ruin, but will stand as a fatal precedent to future times for adopting the same fatal measures towards this and every other British Colony. We have, therefore, passed this determination, and shall conduct ourselves conformably, that the cause of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay in general, and of the town of Boston in particular, is the cause of this and every Colony in North America.

We hope, gentlemen, that the exceeding importance of the present crisis will plead our excuse for giving you our sentiments touching that conduct which we wish you to observe in the ensuing Congress on the first day of August next at Williamsburg, to which we depute you to act on our behalf.

With grief and astonishment we behold Great Britain adopting a mode of Government towards her Colonies totally incompatible with our safety and happiness. We cannot submit to be taxed by her Parliament. We cannot sit still and see the harbour of Boston blocked up by an armed force. We cannot behold, without indignation, the charter rights of a sister Colony violated, or the form of its Government changed by an Act of Parliament, as derogatory to the honour of the mother country, as it is repugnant to justice. And lastly, we will not suffer our fellow subjects to be seized and transported beyond sea to be tried for supposed offences committed here. If these things are suffered to be reduced to practice, we shall account ourselves the most miserable of men, unworthy the name of freemen; we shall not wonder if, in future, we are treated as slaves.

We therefore most solemnly charge and conjure you to use your best endeavours to save us from these calamities. We earnestly entreat you for your utmost exertion to procure, by all possible ways and means, a total repeal of the late oppressive and detestable Acts of Parliament. We heartily trust you will concur in such measures as the said Congress shall judge most efficacious to preserve our ancient rights; for be assured, gentlemen, that nothing shall ever induce from us a submission to tyranny, and that we resolve, once for all, to live and die freemen.

In order to effect those desirable ends, we give it as our opinion, that the most effectual method of opposing the said several Acts of Parliament, will be, that a General Association between all the American Colonies, ought immediately be entered into, not to import from Great Britain any commodity whatsoever, except such articles as the general Congress shall judge necessary, until the just rights of the Colonies are restored to them; and the cruel Acts of the British Parliament against the Colony of Massachusetts Bay and town of Boston are repealed.

A love of justice, and the tender regard we have for our friends the merchants and manufacturers of Great Britain, to whom we are indebted, and who must, of course, suffer in the common cause, prevents our recommending the stopping our exports at this time; but at a future day we will heartily concur with the other counties of this Colony to stop all exports as well as imports, to and from Great Britain, unless what we have already recommended to you shall be found effectual.

We most cordially recommend that no time be lost in administering every comfort and aid to our distressed brethren of Boston, that their unhappy state may require, and may comport with our situation to afford.

We further recommend to you, that you will, in conjunction with the Deputies from the different counties of this Colony, chuse fit and proper persons on the part of this Colony, to meet the Deputies from the other Colonies in a general Congress, at such convenient time and place as shall be agreed on, then and there to advise and consult upon such measures, as, under circumstances of things at that time, they shall deem expedient.

We strictly charge and enjoin, that at all times, and on all occasions, which may present, you testify our zeal for his Majesty's person and Government, and that we are ready and willing, with our lives and fortunes, to support his rights to the Crown of Great Britain and all its dependencies.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

After the Freeholders of the County of Middlesex had proceeded in the most decent and orderly manner to the election of Representatives for the county, on the 15th of July, they were summoned to meet at the Court House, to take into their consideration the present state of the Colony, and America in general; and upon mature deliberation, many of the most respectable of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the county being present, they entered into the following Resolutions:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting that all allegiance is due to the person and character of the King of Great Britain; and that we acknowledge a constitutional dependence on the Parliament, conceiving it not incompatible with the condition of Colonists to submit to commercial regulations in consequence of the protection that is given to our trade by the superintendence of the mother country; but we apprehend there is a clear distinction between regulations of trade and taxation, and in no degree admit the latter under the colourable denomination of the former, well knowing that the nature of things is not alterable by the changes of terms.

Resolved, That representation and taxation are inseparably connected by the essential principles of the British Constitution; and that every attempt of superiour power to levy money on the British Americans, otherwise than by the consent of their Representatives, delivered in Assembly, is an infraction of that Constitution, a violation of the rights of freemen, and a subversion of property.

Resolved, That the Act imposing a duty on tea, for the avowed purpose of revenue, is a tax; and that every opposition should be expressed that may move to the repeal of the said Act, or that may render its operation inefficacious.

Resolved, That the late Act of Parliament suspending the trade and shutting up the port of the town of Boston, is an alarming circumstance to the Colonies in general, in as much as it marks out a settled plan in the British Parliament to enforce submission to their power of taxation.

Resolved, That we do not approve of the conduct of the people of Boston in destroying the tea belonging to the East India Company; and notwithstanding the tax on tea must be esteemed a violent infringement of one of the fundamental privileges of loyal and free subjects; yet we apprehend violence cannot justify violence: reason and policy reclaim against it. A desistance from the consumption of tea, and a confidence in the virtue of our countrymen, whose sense of the spirit of the law will no doubt induce a total disuse of it, are much more eligible means, and more probably will work a repeal of the Act, than disorders, outrages, and tumults.

Resolved, As the Records and reiterated Resolutions of the House of Burgesses will testify to posterity, our idea on this long agitated and contested question of the supremacy of the Parliament to tax the Colonies, that it be the opinion of this meeting that our Representatives should oppose, and they are hereby instructed to oppose, all measures that will bring on an abrupt dissolution, whereby the business of the country will be impeded; a savage enemy ravaging our frontiers; the publick creditors unpaid; a stagnation of justice, by reason of the lapse of the Fee Bill; the Courts of Law occluded; every thing that is held sacred in civil society confounded; the just creditor deprived of property; and the dishonest debtor triumphant; these are the bitter fruits of the late dissolution.

Resolved, That an unlimited non-exportation and non-importation scheme is impracticable; and were it not so, would be irreconcilable with every principle of justice and honesty, injurious to the commerce, and fatal to the credit of this Colony.

Resolved, That an Association be forwarded, to prohibit the importation of all unnecessary and luxurious articles of British manufacture, and (except saltpetre and spices,) all kinds of East India commodities.

DINWIDDIE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) DECLARATION.

At a General Meeting of the Inhabitants of the County of Dinwiddie, at the Court House, on Friday, the 15th of July, in consequence of previous notice from their late Representatives, and an intimation of their desire to be advised and instructed relative to the differences now unhappily subsisting between Great Britain and her Colonies, after mature deliberation on this most interesting subject, they unanimously came to the following declaration of their sentiments, which are intended to manifest to the world the principles by which they are actuated in a dispute so important, as that they conceive on its decision, depends the political existence of all America:

We, the inhabitants of the County of Dinwiddie, do entertain the most cordial and unfeigned affection and loyalty for his Majesty's person and Government, which, together with his right to the Crown of Great Britain and its dependencies, we will at all times defend and support, at the risk of our lives and fortunes; and under so true a conviction of the firmest allegiance, we think ourselves entitled, as a constitutional right, to protection from the Sovereign to whom we have been ever attached by the strongest ties of duty and inclination. But however happy we may consider ourselves under the auspices of the Supreme Magistrate, we cannot help being apprehensive of the ill effects which may flow from some recent and dangerous innovations, imagined and contrived in the House of Commons, against those rights to which the Americans have a just and constitutional claim in common with his Majesty's subjects of Great Britain. Amongst these instances of oppression, we cannot omit the Parliament's retention of a duty on tea, accompanied by an Act declaratory of their right in the fullest manner to tax America, thereby asserting in other terms, their claim to whatever property the Americans may by their labour acquire, which, if submitted to, would reduce us to a degree of servility unexampled but in a state of despotism; and yet, inconsistent as this plan of substituting power for right may appear with the noble and liberal spirit of the British Government, it has been adopted for some time by Administration, and pursued with a perseverance that becomes truly alarming. A late and striking proof of which we have to lament in the unprecedented Acts of Parliament for cutting off the people of Boston from every privilege valued by freemen, and subjecting them to hardships unknown but in arbitrary Governments. In pursuance of which Acts their town and harbour are blocked up; all commerce interdicted; and articles merely essential to life imported, and as a matter of favour, and an inducement to submission, a part of their property may be held at the King's pleasure, on the humiliating condition of their living in obedience to such laws. To aggravate these evils, should atrocious murder be committed in enforcing the execution of any of these Acts, the civil power is forbid to punish, but the criminal is to be sent to Great Britain for trial, or to any Colony at the will of the Governour; if to the former, the distance will operate to his acquittal for want of testimony; if the latter method is adopted, it is equally a subversion of the legal form of trial. This proves in what estimation our lives are held with a British Parliament, as the first law shows in what light they consider our property.

Upon these distressful circumstances, we sincerely sympathize with our fellow-subjects of Boston, and will concur with them and the rest of the Colonies in any measures that may be conducive to a repeal of laws so destructive to our common rights and liberty.

And though we do not pretend to justify the outrage committed by the people of Boston in destroying the private property of the East India Company, to which they might have been impelled by an apparent intention in the Parliament of fixing on them a precedent of arbitrary taxation; yet we cannot see the good policy or right reason that could dictate the depriving a whole people of their rights for a trespass committed by a few, when the civil laws of the community were amply provident of redress for the injury.

The result of our opinion upon these violent measures is, that we do protest against every Law or Act of the British Legislature that shall authorize the imposition of taxes on the Americans without their consent, which cannot be had in Parliament as they have no representation, nor ought not to have in that body from local circumstances, and other considerations; and because it is the proper, exclusive, and indefeasible right of every free state, especially under the British form of Government, to be taxed only by themselves or their Representatives.

We further declare, that upon all occasions where requisitions shall be made to us by the Crown, for aid in support of his Majesty's just rights, or those of Government, we will most cheerfully comply with them to the utmost of our ability; but we cannot think a British Parliament fit judges of the mode by which, or the degree in which, we ought to be taxed.

And whereas a Convention of the late Representatives of this Colony was judged expedient, and was appointed after their dissolution to be held the first day of August next, at Williamsburg, there to consult upon the most plausible means of avoiding the dangerous precedents of acts of power now intended to be established against us. To promote on our part this laudable design, we do appoint our late Representatives, Robert Bolling and John Banister, Esquires, Deputies, to act for us on this important occasion, recommending it to them to concert with the Deputies from the other counties a firm and prudent plan of opposition to every invasion of our rights, and particularly to those Acts of Parliament we have pointed out. Confiding in their vigilance and attention, we wish them in their endeavours the success that so good a cause merits.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY (NEW-JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS.

According to notice, which had been given to the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Middlesex, New-Jersey, a great number from every quarter of the county met at the Court House in New-Brunswick, on Friday, the 15th day of July, 1774, at 2 o'clock, and chose John Moores, Esq., to the Chair; but as the Court House could not contain half the number, the meeting adjourned to the Presbyterian Meeting House; where, after some deliberation upon the dangerous situation of the publick affairs in America, the meeting unanimously Resolved as follows, viz:

Resolve 1st. That the members of this meeting, their fellow-subjects in this Province, and they are persuaded the inhabitants of America in general, are firm and unshaken in their allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third. That they have ever demonstrated their readiness to support his Majesty's Government over them, and also to grant aids to his Majesty, on any emergency, by their own Representatives, to the utmost of their power.

2d. That all other modes of taxation, in the Colonies, by a British Parliament, under whatever name or form attempted to be introduced, is not only arbitrary and oppressive, but has a direct tendency to alienate the affections of the Colonies from the parent country; to widen the breach already made by Ministerial influence, which it is earnestly wished may speedily be healed, and a permanent union re-established, on a solid constitutional foundation.

3d. That the unexampled distresses brought on the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, particularly that of blocking up the port of Boston, and depriving them of all trade and commerce, in virtue of an Act or Acts of Parliament, is a cruel oppression, in which all the Colonies are intimately concerned; tending by a numerous train of consequences, to fasten on them the chains of vassalage and slavery; or lay prostrate at the feet of an unjustly incensed Ministry the inhabitants of this wide extended country, who would triumph over their liberties, sport with their lives, and claim their properties at will.

4th. We concur in the general opinion of our brethren, that the Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies, should present a dutiful Address to his Majesty, praying for a general redress of the grievances complained of.

5th. We are of opinion (which we submit to be considered in the general Congress) that a general stop of all imports and exports of merchandises, especially to Great Britain, by all the Colonies, is the only probable, if not the only possible measure, to preserve the liberties of this country, at present in such imminent danger of being annihilated.

6th. That an immediate subscription be set on foot, throughout this country, towards the relief of the suffering families in the town of Boston. For which purpose sundry gentlemen in the different townships and precincts of the county, are named and appointed to take in the same, and to make return of such subscriptions and collections to James Wilson, Esq., by the 1st day of September next, in order that such collections may be sent to Boston as early as possible.

7th. We agree with our brethren of all the counties in this Province, in the method of choosing Committees of Correspondence, and also that such Committees from the several counties do meet, at a place convenient, by them to be agreed on, and when so met to elect proper persons to represent this Colony in the proposed Congress, for which purpose the following gentlemen, viz: John Moores, John Wetherill, John Johnson, Michael Field, William Pecke, James Wilson, John Combs, Jun., Jonathan Balding, William Smith, John Dennis, and Rune Runyon, Esqrs., are requested to be, and are hereby appointed, a standing Committee of Correspondence, and that any five of them are a sufficient number to act. Signed by order of the meeting,

JOHN MOORES, Chairman.

Immediately after the meeting, the members of the County Committee present met, and agreed to meet the Committees fi'om the other counties, at New-Brunswick, on Thursday, the 21st of July, instant.

New-London, July 15, 1774.

The Honourable Committee of Correspondence for the Colony of Connecticut, met at this town on Wednesday, the 13th instant, and by virtue of authority from the Honourable Lower House of Assembly, in May last, for that purpose, nominated the Honourable Eliphalet Dyer, and William Samuel Johnson, Erastus Wolcott, Silas Deane, and Richard Law, Esqrs.,* that is to say, any three of them, on behalf of this Colony, to attend the general Congress of Commissioners, of the English American Colonies, proposed to be holden at Philadelphia, on the 1st of September next; with them to consult and advise on proper measures to promote the general good and welfare of the whole, and for obtaining a redress of the grievances under which we labour. Being a matter of great expectancy, a number of gentlemen from the neighbouring towns attended. About four o'clock, P. M., the gentlemen Committee declared to the expecting people their choice; upon which a royal salute was fired from our battery, and also a salute from the shipping in the harbour. Decency, good order, and loyalty, were conspicuous in all ranks and degrees of the people.

* HARTFORD, July 23. - The Honourable William Samuel Johnson, Major Erastus Wolcott, and Richard Law, Esq., chosen by the honourable Committee of Correspondence for that Colony, at their late meeting in New-London, to meet the Delegates from the other Colonies in general Congress, at Philadelphia, having declined that service. The Committee have agreed to meet in this town, on Wednesday, the third of August next, to appoint three other gentlemen in their stead.

August 3. - The following gentlemen were appointed at Hartford, viz: the Hon. Roger Sherman, Esq., and Capt. Joseph Trumbull; one of which gentlemen, with the Hon. Eliphalet Dyer, Esq., and Silas Deane, Esq., who were appointed at the former meeting, are to represent the Colony of Connecticut at the general Congress.

By his Excellency the Honourable THOMAS GAGE, General and Commander-in-Chief of all his Majesty's Forces in NORTH AMERICA, &c., &c., &c.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas some Soldiers have deserted his Majesty's service, belonging to the Regiments late arrived from Great Britain and Ireland. This is to give notice, all soldiers who deserted from said Corps previous to the tenth day of this instant, month of July, shall receive their pardons upon surrendering themselves before or on the tenth day of August next ensuing; and on failure of so doing, they are not to expect mercy.

Given under my hand at Head Quarters at Boston, this fifteenth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four. THOMAS GAGE.

By his Excellency's command,

GAB. MATURIN, Secretary.

THOMAS WILLING, Chairman,
CHARLES THOMSON, Clerk.

Agreed, That in case of any difference in sentiment, the question be determined by the Deputies voting by counties,

The Letters from Boston of the 13th of May were then read, and a short account given of the steps taken in consequence thereof, and the measures now pursuing in this and the neighbouring Provinces. After which the following Resolves were passed:

Unanimously, 1. That we acknowledge ourselves, and the inhabitants of this Province, liege subjects of his Majesty King George the Third, to whom they and we owe and will bear true and faithful allegiance.

Unanimously, 2. That as the idea of an unconstitutional independence on the parent state is utterly abhorrent to our principles, we owe the unhappy differences between Great Britain and the Colonies with the deepest distress and anxiety of mind, as fruitless to her, grievous to us, and destructive of the best interests of both.

Unanimously, 3. That it is, therefore, our ardent desire, that our ancient harmony with the mother country should be restored, and a perpetual love and union subsist between us, on the principles of the Constitution, and an interchange of good offices, without the least infraction of our mutual rights.

Unanimously, 4. That the inhabitants of these Colonies are entitled to the same rights and liberties within these Colonies, that the subjects born in England are entitled to within that Realm.

Unanimously, 5. That the power assumed by the Parliament of Great Britain to bind the people of these Colonies, "by statutes, in all cases whatsoever," is unconstitutional, and, therefore, the source of these unhappy differences.

Unanimously, 6. That the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, is unconstitutional, oppressive to the inhabitants of that town, dangerous to the liberties of the British Colonies; and, therefore, that we consider our brethren at Boston as suffering in the common cause of these Colonies.

Unanimously, 7. That the Bill for altering the administration of justice in certain criminal cases within the Province of Massachusetts Bay, if passed into an Act of Parliament, will be as unconstitutional, oppressive and dangerous, as the Act above mentioned.

Unanimously, 8. That the Bill for changing the Constitution of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, established by Charter, and enjoyed since the grant of that Charter, if passed into an Act of Parliament, will be unconstitutional, and dangerous in its consequences to the American Colonies.

Unanimously, 9. That there is an absolute necessity that a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies be immediately assembled, to consult together, and form a general plan of conduct to be observed by all the Colonies, for the purposes of procuring relief for our suffering brethren, obtaining redress of our grievances, preventing future dissensions, firmly establishing our rights, and restoring harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies on a constitutional foundation.

Unanimously, 10. That, although a suspension of the commerce of this large trading Province, with Great Britain, would greatly distress multitudes of our industrious inhabitants, yet that sacrifice, and a much greater, we are ready to offer for the preservation of our liberties; but, in tenderness to the people of Great Britain, as well as of this country, and in hopes that our just remonstrances will, at length, reach the ears of our gracious Sovereign, and be no longer treated with contempt by any of our fellow-subjects in England, it is our earnest desire that the Congress should first try the gentler mode of stating our grievances, and making a firm and decent claim of redress.

11. Resolved, by a great majority, That yet, notwithstanding, as an unanimity of counsels and measures is indispensably necessary for the common welfare, if the Congress shall judge agreements of non-importation and non-exportation expedient, the people of this Province will join with the other principal and neighbouring Colonies, in such an Association of non-importation from, and non-exportation to, Great Britain, as shall be agreed on at the Congress.

12. Resolved, by a majority, That if any proceedings of the Parliament, of which notice shall be received, on this Continent, before or at the general Congress, shall render it necessary, in the opinion of that Congress, for the Colonies to take farther steps than are mentioned in the eleventh Resolve; in such case, the inhabitants of this Province shall adopt such farther steps, and do all in their power to carry them into execution.

Unanimously, 13. That the venders of merchandise of every kind, within this Province, ought not to take advantage of the Resolves relating to non-importation, in this Province, or elsewhere; but that they ought to sell their merchandise, which they now have, or may hereafter import, at the same rates they have been accustomed to do within three months last past.

Unanimously, 14. That the people of this Province will break off all trade, commerce, and dealing, and will have no trade, commerce, or dealing of any kind, with any Colony on this Continent, or with any city or town in such Colony, or with any individual in any such Colony, city, or town, which shall refuse, decline, or neglect to adopt, and carry into execution, such general plan as shall be agreed to in Congress.

Unanimously, 15. That it is the duty of every member of this Committee to promote, as much as he can, the subscription set on foot, in the several counties of this Province, for the relief of the distressed inhabitants of Boston.

Unanimously, 16. That this Committee give instructions on the present situation of publick affairs to their Representatives, who are to meet next week in Assembly, and request them to appoint a proper number of persons to attend a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies, at such time and place as may be agreed on, to effect one general plan of conduct for attaining the great and important ends mentioned in the ninth Resolve,

Saturday, July 16, 1774.

The Committee for the Province of Pennsylvania met according to adjournment.

John Dickinson, Doctor William Smith, Joseph Read, John Kidd, Elisha Price, William Atlee, James Smith, James Wilson, Daniel Broadhead, John Okeley and William Scull, are appointed to prepare and bring in a draught of Instructions.

Monday, July 18.* - The Committee appointed to bring in Instructions, reported, that they had made a draught, which they laid upon the table.

Moved, That they be read, which was done.

Tuesday, July 19. - Upon a motion made and seconded, agreed, that the draught of Instructions brought in by the Committee, and which were read, be re-committed to the same Committee.

Wednesday, July 20. - The Committee having brought in a draught of Instructions, the same were debated, amended, and agreed to.

Thursday, July 21. - The Instructions were signed by the Chairman, The Committee, in a body, waited on the Assembly, then sitting, and presented the same.

It having been moved, that the Essay of the Instructions first proposed to be given to the Honourable Assembly of Pennsylvania, by the Provincial Committee assembled at Philadelphia, the 18th instant, might be abridged, leaving out the Argumentative part, so as to be more proper for instructions, the same was agreed to; but resolved, at the same time, that the whole work ought to be published, as highly deserving the perusal and serious consideration of every friend of liberty within these Colonies.

Agreed, unanimously, That the thanks † of this Committee be given from the Chair to John Dickinson, Esquire, for the great assistance they have derived from the laudable application of his eminent abilities to the service of his country in the above performance.

Extract from the Minutes,

CHARLES THOMSON, Clerk of the Committee.

* The Committees of the counties having been invited, by the Committee for the City and County of Philadelphia, to meet them at Philadelphia on the 15th of July, this Committee thought it their duty to make some preparation in the business, that was in be laid before the Provincial Committee by them. On the 4th of July they appointed a Committee for this purpose; and this measure enabled those appointed by the Provincial Committee to bring in a draught so soon.

† Mr. Dickinson being absent this day, on account of the funeral of a relation, the next day the Chairman, in a very obliging manner, delivered to him from the Chair the thanks of the Committee; to which he replied:

"Mr. CHAIRMAN: I heartily thank this respectable Assembly for 'the honour they have conferred upon me, but want words to express 'the sense I feel of their kindness. The mere accidents of meeting 'with particular books, and conversing with particular men, led me 'into the train of sentiments which the Committee are pleased to 'think just; and others, with the like opportunities of information, 'would much better have deserved to receive the thanks they now 'generously give. I consider the approbation of this company as an 'evidence that they entertain a favourable opinion of my good intentions, and as an encouragement for all to apply themselves, in these 'unhappy times, to the service of the publick, since even small 'endeavours to promote that service, can find a very valuable reward.

I will try, during the remainder of my life, to remember my duty to 'our common country, and, if it be possible, to render myself worthy 'of the honour for which I now stand so deeply indebted.

"I thank you, sir, for the polite and affectionate manner in which 'you have communicated the sense of the Committee to me."

INSTRUCTIONS

From the Committee to the Representatives in Assembly met.

GENTLEMEN: The dissensions between Great Britain and her Colonies on this Continent, commencing about ten years ago, since continually increasing, and at length grown to such an excess as to involve the latter in deep distress and danger, have excited the good people of this Province to take into their serious consideration the present situation of publick affairs.

The inhabitants of the several counties qualified to vote at elections, being assembled on due notice, have appointed us their Deputies; and in consequence thereof, we being in Provincial Committee met, esteem it our indispensable duty, in pursuance of the trust reposed in us, to give you such Instructions, as, at this important period, appear to us to be proper.

We, speaking in their names and our own, acknowledge ourselves liege subjects of his Majesty King George the Third, to whom "we will be faithful and bear true allegiance."

Our judgments and affections attach us, with inviolable loyalty, to his Majesty's person, family, and Government.

We acknowledge the prerogatives of the Sovereign, among which are included the great powers of making peace and war, treaties, leagues and alliances, binding us - of appointing all officers, except in cases where other provision is made, by grants from the Crown, or laws approved by the Crown - of confirming or annulling every Act of our Assembly within the allowed time - and of bearing and determining finally, in Council, appeals from our Courts of Justice. "The prerogatives are limited,"* as a learned judge observes, "by bounds so certain and notorious, that "it is impossible to exceed them, without the consent of "the people on the one hand, or without, on the other, a "violation of that original contract, † which, in all states

* 1. Blackstone, 237.

† And though we are strangers to the original of most states, yet we must not imagine that what has been here said, concerning the manner in which civil societies are formed, is an arbitrary fiction. For since it is certain, that all civil societies had a beginning, it is impossible to conceive, how the members, of which they are composed, could unite to live together dependent on a supreme authority, without supposing the covenants above mentioned. - BURLAMAQUI'S Princ. of Pol. Law, vol. 2. p. 29.

And in fact, upon considering the primitive state of man, it appears most certain, that the appellations of sovereigns and subjects, masters and slaves, are unknown to nature. Nature has made us all of the same species, all equal, all free and independent of each other; and was willing that those, on whom she has bestowed the same faculties, should have all the same rights. It is therefore beyond all doubt that in this primitive state of nature, no man has of himself an original right of commanding others, or any title to sovereignty.

There is none but God alone that has of himself, and in consequence of his nature and perfections, a natural, essential, and inherent right of giving laws to mankind, and of exercising an absolute sovereignty over them. The case is otherwise between man and man; they are of their own nature as independent of one another, as they are dependent on God. This liberty and independence is therefore a right naturally belonging to man, of which it would be unjust to deprive him against his will. - Id. p. 38.

There is a beautiful passage of Cicero's to this purpose: * - "Nothing is more agreeable to the Supreme Deity, that governs this universe, than civil societies lawfully established."

When therefore we give to Sovereigns the title of God's viceregents upon earth, this does not imply that they derive their authority immediately from God, but it signifies only, that by means of the power lodged in their hands, and with which the people have invested them, they maintain, agreeable to the views of the Deity, both order and peace, and thus procure the happiness of mankind. - Id. p. 40.

But it will be here objected, that the scripture itself says, that every man ought to be subject to the supreme powers, because they are established by God.† I answer, with Grotius, that men have established civil societies, not in consequence of a divine ordinance, but of their voluntary motion, induced to it by the experience they had had of the incapacity which separate families were under, of defending themselves against the insults and attacks of human violence. From thence (he adds) arises the civil power, which St. Peter, for this reason, calls a human power, ‡ though in other parts of scripture it bears the name of a divine institution, ¶ because God has approved of it as an establishment useful to mankind. §

All the other arguments, in favour of the opinion we have been here refuting, do not even deserve our notice. In general, it may be observed, that never were more wretched reasons produced than upon this subject, as the reader may be easily convinced by reading Puffendorf on the law of Nature and Nations, who, in the Chapter corresponding to this, gives these arguments at length, and completely refutes them, ¶ Id. p. 42, 43.

"impliedly, and in ours most expressly, subsists between 'the Prince and Subject. - For these prerogatives are 'vested in the Crown for the support of society, and do 'not intrench any farther on our natural liberties, than is 'expedient for the maintenance of our civil."

But it is our misfortune, that we are compelled loudly to call your attention to the consideration of another power, totally different in kind - limited, as it is alleged, by no "bounds," and * "wearing a most dreadful aspect," with regard to America. We mean the power claimed by Parliament, of right, to bind the people of these Colonies by statutes, "in all cases whatsoever" - a power, as we are not, and from local circumstances, cannot be represented there, utterly subversive of our natural and civil liberties - past events and reason convincing us, that there never existed, and never can exist, a state thus subordinate to another, and yet retaining the slightest portion of freedom or happiness.

The import of the words above quoted needs no desecant; for the wit of man, as we apprehend, cannot possibly form a more clear, concise, and comprehensive definition and sentence of slavery, than these expressions contain.

This power claimed by Great Britain, and the late attempts to exercise it over these Colonies, present to our view two events, one of which must inevitably take place, if she stroll continue to insist on her pretensions. Either, the Colonists will sink from the rank of freemen into the class of slaves, overwhelmed with all the miseries and vices, proved by the history of mankind to be inseparably annexed to that deplorable condition: Or, if they have sense and virtue enough to exert themselves in striving to avoid this perdition, they must be involved in an opposition dreadful even in contemplation.

Honour, justice, and humanity, call upon us to hold, and to transmit to our posterity, that liberty which we received from our ancestors. It is not our duty to leave wealth to our children: But it is our duty to leave liberty to them. No infamy, iniquity, or cruelty, can exceed our own, if we, born and educated in a country of freedom, entitled to its blessings, and knowing their value, pusillanimously deserting the post assigned us by Divine Providence, surrender succeeding generations to a condition of wretchedness, from which no human efforts, in all probability, will be sufficient to extricate them; the experience of all states mournfully demonstrating to us, that when arbitrary power has been established over them, even the wisest and bravest Nations, that ever flourished, have in a few years, degenerated into abject and wretched vassals.

So alarming are the measures already taken for laying the foundation of a despotick authority of Great Britain over us, and with such artful and incessant vigilance is the plan prosecuted, that unless the present generation can interrupt the work while it is going forward, can it be imagined that our children, debilitated by our imprudence and supineness, will be able to overthrow it, when completed? Populous and powerful as these Colonies may grow, they will still find arbitrary domination not only strengthening with their strength, but exceeding, in the swiftness of its progression, as it ever has done, all the artless advantages that can accrue to the governed. These advance with a regularity, which the divine Author of our existence has impressed on the laudable pursuits of his creatures: But despotism, † unchecked and unbounded by

* 1. Blackstone, 270.

† As virtue is necessary in a Republic, and in a Monarchy honour, so fear is necessary in a Despotick Government; with regard to virtue, there is no occasion for it, and honour would be extremely dangerous.

Here the immense power of the Prince is devolved entirely upon those to whom he is pleased to intrust it. Persons capable of setting a value upon themselves would be likely to create revolutions. Fear must therefore depress their spirits, and extinguish even the least sense of ambition: - MONT, Spir. of Laws, vol. 1. book III. ch. 9. An idea of despotick power.

When the savages of Louisiana are desirous of fruit, they cut the tree to the root, and gather the fruit. * This is an emblem of despotick Government. - Id. book V. ch. 13.

The principle of despotick Government is fear; but a timid, ignorant, and faint-spirited people have no occasion for a great number of laws.

Every thing ought to depend here on two or three ideas; therefore there is no necessity that any new notions should be added. When we want to break a horse we take care not to let him change his master, his lesson, or his pace. Thus an impression is made on his brain by two or three motions, and no more. - Id. book V. ch. 14.

* Edifying Letters, II coll. p. 315.

any laws - never satisfied with what has been done, while any thing remains to be done for the accomplishment of its purposes - confiding and capable of confiding, only in the annihilation of all opposition - holds its course with such unabating and destructive rapidity, that the world has become its prey, and at this day, Great Britain and her Dominions excepted, there is scarce a spot on the globe inhabited by civilized Nations, where the vestiges of freedom are to be observed.

To us, therefore, it appears, at this alarming period, our duty to God, to our country, to ourselves, and to our posterity, to exert our utmost ability in promoting and establishing harmony between Great Britain and these Colonies, on a constitutional foundation.

For attaining this great and desirable end, we request you to appoint a proper number of persons to attend a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies, appointed, or to be appointed, by the Representatives of the people of the Colonies respectively in Assembly, or Convention, or by Delegates chosen by the counties generally in the respective Colonies, and met in Provincial Committee, at such time and place as shall be generally agreed on; and that the Deputies from this Province may be induced and encouraged to concur in such measures as may be devised for the common welfare, we think it proper particularly to inform you how far we apprehend they will be supported in their conduct by their constituents.

The assumed Parliamentary power of internal legislation, and the power of regulating trade, as of late exercised, and designed to be exercised, we are thoroughly convinced will prove unfailing and plentiful sources of dissensions to our mother country and these Colonies, unless some expedients can be adopted to render her secure of receiving from us every emolument that can in justice and reason be expected, and us secure in our lives, properties, and an equitable share of commerce.

Mournfully revolving in our minds the calamities, that, arising from these dissensions, will "most probably fall on us and our children, we will now lay before you the particular points we request of you to procure, if possible, to be finally decided; and the measures that appear to us most likely to produce such a desirable period of our distresses and dangers. We therefore desire of you:

First. That the Deputies you appoint may be instructed by you strenuously to exert themselves, at the ensuing Congress, to obtain a renunciation, on the part of Great Britain, of all powers under the statute of the thirty-fifth of Henry the Eighth, chapter the second, of all powers of internal legislation - of imposing taxes or duties, internal or external - and of regulating trade, except with respect to any new articles of commerce, which the Colonies may hereafter raise, as silk, wine, &c., reserving a right to carry these from one Colony to another - a repeal of all statutes for quartering troops in the Colonies, or subjecting them to any expense on account of such troops - of all statutes imposing duties to be paid in the Colonies, that were passed at the accession of his present Majesty, or before this time, which ever period shall be judged most advisable - of the statutes giving the Courts of Admiralty in the Colonies greater power than Courts of Admiralty have in England - of the statutes of the fifth of George the Second, chapter the twenty-second, and of the twenty-third of George the Second, chapter the twenty-ninth - of the statute for shutting up the port of Boston and of every other statute particularly affecting the Province of Massachusetts Bay, passed in the last session of Parliament.

In case of obtaining these terms, it is our opinion that it will be reasonable for the Colonies to engage their obedience to the Acts of Parliament, commonly called the Acts of Navigation, and to every other Act of Parliament declared to have force at this time in these Colonies, other than those above mentioned, and to confirm such Statutes by Acts of the several Assemblies. It is also our opinion, that taking example from our mother Country, in abolishing the "courts of wards and liveries, tenures in capite, and by knight's service and purveysnce," it will be reasonable for the Colonies, in case of obtaining the terms before-mentioned, to settle a certain annual revenue on his Majesty, his heirs and successors, subject to the controul of Parliament, and to satisfy all damages done to the East India Company.

This our idea of settling a revenue arises from a sense of duty to our Sovereign, and of esteem for our mother country. We know and have felt the benefits of a subordinate connexion with her. We neither are so stupid as to be ignorant of them; nor so unjust as to deny them. We have also experienced the pleasures of gratitude and love, as well as advantages from that connection. The impressions are not yet erased. We consider her circumstances with tender concern. We have not been wanting, when constitutionally called upon, to assist her to the utmost of our abilities; insomuch that she has judged it reasonable to make us recompenses for our overstrained exertions; and we now think we ought to contribute more than we do to the alleviation of her burthens.

Whatever may be said of these proposals on either side of the Atlantic, this is not a time either tbr timidity or rashness. We perfectly know that the great cause now agitated, is to be conducted to a happy conclusion only by that well tempered composition of counsels, which firmness, prudence, loyalty to our Sovereign, respect to our parent state, and affection to our native country, united, must form.

By such a compact, Great Britain will secure every benefit that the Parliamentary wisdom of ages has thought proper to attach to her. From her alone we shall continue to receive manufactures. To her alone we shall continue to carry the vast multitude of enumerated articles of commerce, the exportation of which her policy has thought fit to confine to herself. With such parts of the world only as she has appointed us to deal, we shall continue to deal; and such commodities only as she has permitted us to bring from them, we shall continue to bring. The Executive and controlling powers of the Crown will retain their present full force and operation. We shall contentedly labour for her as affectionate friends, in time of tranquillity, and cheerfully spend for her as dutiful children, our treasure and our blood, in time of war. She will receive a certain income * from us, without the trouble or expense of collecting it - without being constantly disturbed by complaints of griev-

* The train of officers employed by Great Britain, consume a very large part of what she takes from us. She therefore increases our distresses to make up for that consumption. They will hereafter grow more and more oppressive; we more and more uneasy; she more and more disturbed. We could raise the same sum in a much more easy, equal, and cheap manner, than she can do. The attention of small States extends much more efficaciously and beneficially to every part of the Territories, than that of the administration of a vast Empire. The Representatives in Assembly, who are taxed when the People are taxed, and accountable to them, will have double motives to take care that the raising and expending money is managed in the best way. The House of Commons would not bear to examine every particular relating to the just taxation of every county on this Continent, and to settle all the accounts fairly. If they could go through the immense labour, it would be impossible for them to do any other business. In short, by not doing it, they would be unjust; by doing it, they would be useless. Equity and reason demonstrates that such a power belongs not to them. We have had some remarkable instances on this Continent, some few years ago, of the Crown being, according to all the forms of business, charged with articles that never went to the use of the Crown. These were perquisites; and who could be so puritanical as to blame the civil word? It is said our barracks cost about eight thousand pounds of this money; and that the barracks at another place, not deserving a comparison with ours, cost forty thousand pounds sterling. We built our own ourselves, and were as saving and careful as we could be, it may be supposed. If money is raised upon us by Parliament; of one thousand pounds taken out of our pockets, not one hundred, in all probability, will be usefully applied to the service of the Crown. Deficiencies will ensue - they must be supplied; other Acts are made - still others, till our * "unrepresented blades of grass," too frequently and closely cut down and exposed to the burning heat of an unsetting sun, ever "in its meridian," perish to their deepest roots.

"There is not upon earth" says the excellent Gordon, "a Nation, which, having had unaccountable Magistrates, has not felt them to be crying and consuming mischiefs. In truth, where they are most limited, it has been often as much as a whole People could do to restrain them to their trust, and to keep them from violence; and such frequently has been their propensity to be lawless, that nothing but a violent death could cure them of their violence. This evil has its root in human nature; men will never think they have enough, whilst they can take more; nor be content with a part, when they can seize the whole. †"

"That the business of most Kingdoms has been ill managed, proceeds from this; it imports the lower rank of men only, and the People (whose cries seldom reach the Prince till it is too late, and till all is past remedy) that matters should be frugally ordered, because taxes must arise from their sweat and labour. But the great ones, who heretofore have had the Prince's ear and favour, or who hoped to have antes which she cannot justify, and will not redress. In case of war, or in any emergency of distress to her, we shall also be ready and willing to contribute all aids within our power; and we solemnly declare, that on such occasions, if we or our posterity shall refuse, neglect, or decline, thus to contribute, it will be a mean and manifest violation of a plain duty, and a weak and wicked desertion of the true interests of this Province, which ever have been, and must be, bound up in the prosperity of our mother country. Our union, founded on mutual compacts and mutual benefits, will be indissoluble, at least more firm, than an union perpetually disturbed by disputed rights and retorted injuries.

Secondly. If all the terms above mentioned cannot be obtained, it is our opinion that the measures adopted by the Congress for our relief, should never be relinquished or intermitted, until those relating to the troops; internal legislation; imposition of taxes or duties hereafter; the thirty-fifth of Henry the Eighth, chapter the second; the extension of Admiralty Courts; the port of Boston and Province of Massachusetts Bay, are obtained. Every modification or qualification of these points, in our judgment, should be inadmissible. To obtain them, we think it may be prudent to settle some revenue as above mentioned, and to satisfy the East India Company.

Thirdly. If neither of these plans should be agreed to in Congress, but some other of a similar nature shall be framed, though on the terms of a revenue, and satisfaction to the East India Company; and though it shall be agreed by the Congress to admit no modification or qualification in the terms they shall insist on, we desire your Deputies may be instructed to concur with the other Deputies in it; and we will accede to and carry it into execution as far as we can.

Fourthly. As to the regulation of trade, we are of opinion, that by making some few amendments, the commerce of the Colonies might be settled on a firm establishment, advantageous to Great Britain and them, requiring and subject to no future alterations, without mutual consent. We desire to have this point considered by the Congress, and such measures taken as they may judge proper.

In order to obtain redress of our common grievances, we observe a general inclination among the Colonies of enter-

"him in their possession, were swayed by another sort of interest; they like profusion, as having had a prospect to be gainers by it, they can easily set their account even with the state; a small charge upon their land is more than balanced by a great place, or a large pension."*

See the Lord Keeper North's account of abuses in the conduct and disposal of the publick money, in the time of King Charles the Second. † Those who, in our times, are the conductors of the same kind of dirty work, may compare the modern ingenious ways and means with those of their worthy predecessors.

Among others, pretended want of money in the Treasury, in order to have a pretence for giving an exorbitant price for necessaries. Lending the Crown at eight per cent., money which was raised at five and six. Paying with the publick money, pretending it to be private, and taking interest. Depreciating the publick debts and funds; buying them of the holders at half their worth, and afterwards, by interest, getting them paid in full. Pretending to give up all power in recommending to places for a consideration, and then insisting on recommending still; and so getting both ways; Rolling over losses upon the Crown or publick, while the gain was to sink into private pockets. A father stopping a large sum in his own hand, which was to have been paid the publick creditors. Before he can be brought to account, he dies; the money sinks into the pocket of his heir; he obtains a pardon of all his father's debts. Gross frauds in office found out; then new officers and salaries set up as checks. The new prove as great knaves as the old, and form a scheme of collusion and mutual understanding. But the publick pays for all, and the power of the Court is strengthened. An old placeman begs leave to sell; pockets the money, and by and by, through interest, gets a new place gratis. Extravagant men squander their own money in their publick employments of Ambassadors, Governours, &c., and charge the publick with more than they really spent; while what they really spent was ten times more than necessary. The business of old offices transferred to new; but the profits of the old still kept up, though become sinecures. An old servant of the publick retires upon a pension; he who succeeds him, by interest, gets it continued to him. Another gets an addition to his salary, and then sells his place for a great deal more than it cost him, and so an additional load is laid on the publick; for the addition must be continued, because the place was bought. An annual sum is granted by the publick for a publick use, as keeping up a harbour, or the like; a private man, by interest, gets a grant of the job; the publick concern is neglected, and the publick pocket picked. Crown lands perpetually begged and given away to strengthen the Court interest. The Crown constantly kept in debt, and Parliament solicited to pay those debts occasioned by the voracity of the Court. Commanders of fleets order a superfluous quantity of stores; by collusion between them and the store-masters, this superfluous quantity is sold again to the King, and the money sunk in their pockets. Sometimes the store-masters gave ing into agreements of non-importation and non-exportation. We are fully convinced that such agreements would withhold very large supplies from Great Britain; and no words can describe our contempt and abhorrence of those Colonists, if any such there are, who, from a sordid and ill-judged attachment to their own immediate profit, would pursue that to the injury of their country, in this great struggle for all the blessings of liberty. It would appear to us a most wasteful frugality, that would lose every important possession, by too strict an attention to small things, and lose also even these at the last. For our part, we will cheerfully make any sacrifice, when necessary, to preserve the freedom of our country. But other considerations have weight with us. We wish every mark of respect to be paid to his Majesty's Administration. We have been taught from our youth to entertain tender and brotherly affections for our fellow-subjects at home. The interruption of our commerce must distress great numbers of them. This we earnestly desire to avoid. We therefore request, that the Deputies you shall appoint, may be instructed to exert themselves at the Congress, to induce the Members of it to consent to make a full and precise state of grievances, and a decent yet firm claim of redress, and to wait the event before any other step is taken. It is our opinion that persons should be appointed and sent home to present this state and claim at the Court of Great Britain.

If the Congress should choose to form agreements of non-importation and non-exportation immediately, we desire the Deputies from this Province will endeavour to have them so formed as to be binding upon all; and that they may be permanent, should the publick interest require it. They cannot be efficacious unless they can be permanent; and it appears to us that there will be a danger of their being infringed, if they are not formed with great caution and deliberation. We have determined, in the present situation of publick affairs, to consent to a stoppage of our commerce with Great Britain only; but in case any proceedings of the Parliament, of which notice shall be received on this Continent, before or at the Congress, shall render it necessary, in the opinion of the Congress, to take further steps, the inhabitants of this Province will adopt such steps, and do all in their power to carry them into execution.

This extensive power we commit to the Congress, for receipts for more than was received into the King's stores, and the money was divided among the plunderers. The King's works done by the day, whereas it would have been cheaper by the great. Money pretended to be coined gratis; lists of large sums newly coined produced; but the contrivance was to make the pieces unequal, and then the too heavy pieces were carried back to the Mint, and the profits sunk in private pockets, &c.

Secret service is a huge cloak thrown over an immense scene of corruption; and under this cloak we must not peep. Our Court men tell us there must be large sums expended in this way, and those sums cannot be accounted for; because the services done by them must never be known. But we find, that the Commons, Anno Domini 1708, addressed Queen Anne for accounts of pensions paid for secret service to Members of Parliament, or to any persons in trust for them; and that "the Queen ordered said. account to be laid before the House."

Contracts are a great fund of Ministerial influence. It is well known that our Ministry do not accept the most reasonable offer; but the offer which is made by those who have the greatest Parliamentary interest; and that in war time, every man who furnishes for the Government is enriched. In France, the contrary, which shows that we manage our publick money much worse than the French Ministry do theirs. In the late war it is notorious that several of our Purveyors and Commissaries got estates sufficient to set them up for Earls and Dukes. But as Burnet † says, "the regard that is shown to Members of Parliament among us, causes that few abuses can be inquired into "or discovered."- POL. DISQ. b. v. p. 274, 277.

What redress could a poor, plundered, unrepresented Colony obtain against a Verres, supported by a strong Parliamentary influence. We know what several Governours of Minorca have dared to do. A Governour of Gibraltar has ventured to oppress even the garrison of that important place. The very drudgery of examining accounts would probably secure him. If cast, the injuries could not be recompensed. A successor might prove as bad - "Victrix Provincia plorat."

It has been said in Great Britain, that Lord Chatham, Lord Camden, and some other great men, have taught the Colonies to despise her authority. But it is as little true as the multitude of invectives vented against the Colonies. The constant practice in these publications, is to confound facts and dates, and then to rave. It should be remembered, that the opposition in America to the Stamp Act, was fully formed, and the Congress held at New-York, before it was known on this Continent that our cause was espoused by any man of note at home. We should be glad to count such venerable names in the list of our friends. They are the true friends of our mother country, as well as of this; and ages unborn will bless their memory. But if every man in Great Britain is carried by the stream of prejudices into sentiments hostile to our freedom, that freedom will not be the less esteemed, or the sooner relinquished by Americans.

the sake of preserving that unanimity of counsel and conduct that alone can work out the salvation of these Colonies, with a strong hope and trust that they will not draw this Province into any measure judged by us, who must be better acquainted with its state than strangers, highly inexpedient. Of this kind we know any other stoppage of trade, but of that with Great Britain, will be. Even this step we should be extremely afflicted to see taken by the Congress, before the other mode above pointed out is tried. But should it be taken, we apprehend that a plan of restrictions may be so framed, agreeable to the respective circumstances of the several Colonies, as to render Great Britain sensible of the imprudence of her counsels, and yet leave them a necessary commerce. And here, it may not be improper to take notice, that if redress of our grievances cannot be wholly obtained, the extent or continuance of our restrictions may, in some sort, be proportioned to the rights we are contending for, and the degree of relief afforded us. This mode will render our opposition as perpetual as our oppression, and will be a continual claim and assertion of our rights. We cannot express the anxiety with which we wish the consideration of these points to be recommended to you. We are persuaded, that if these Colonies fail of unanimity or prudence, in forming their resolutions, or of fidelity in observing diem, the opposition by non-importation and non-exportation agreements, will be ineffectual; and then we shall have only the alternative of a more dangerous contention, or of a tame submission.

Upon the whole, we shall repose the highest confidence in the wisdom and integrity of the ensuing Congress. And though we have, for the satisfaction of the good people of this Province, who have chosen us for this express purpose, offered to you such instructions as have appeared expedient to us; yet, it is not our meaning, that by these, or by any you may think proper to give them, the Deputies appointed by you should be restrained from agreeing to any measures that shall be approved by the Congress. We should be glad the Deputies chosen by you, could, by their influence, procure our opinions hereby communicated to you to be as nearly adhered to as may be possible. But to avoid difficulties, we desire that they may be instructed by you to agree to any measures that shall be approved by the Congress, the inhabitants of this Province having resolved to adopt and carry them into execution.

Lastly. We desire the Deputies from this Province may endeavour to procure an adjournment of the Congress to such a day as they shall judge proper, and the appointment of a Standing Committee.

Agreed, That John Dickinson, Joseph Read, and Charles Thomson, be a Committee to write to the neighbouring Colonies, and communicate to them the Resolves and Instructions.

Agreed, That the Committee for the City and County of Philadelphia, or any fifteen of them, be a Committee of Correspondence for the General Committee of this Province.

Extract from the Minutes,

CHARLES THOMSON, Clerk Com.

ARGUMENTATIVE PART OF THE PRECEDING INSTRUCTIONS.

The authority of Parliament has within these few years been a question much agitated; and great difficulty, we understand, has occurred, in tracing the line between the rights of the mother country and those of the Colonies. The modern doctrine of the former is indeed truly remarkable; for though it points out what are not our rights, yet we can never learn from it, what are our rights. As for example - Great Britain claims a right to take away nine-tenths of our estates have we a right to the remaining tenth? No. To say we have, is a "traitorous" position, denying her Supreme Legislature. So far from having property, according to these late found novels, we are ourselves a property.

We pretend not to any considerable share of learning; but, thanks be to divine goodness, common sense, experience, and some acquaintance with the Constitution, teach us a few salutary truths on this important subject.

Whatever difficulty may occur in tracing the line, yet we contend, that by the laws of God, and by the laws of the Constitution, a line there must be, beyond which her authority cannot extend. For all these laws are* "grounded on reason, full of justice, † and true equity," mild, and calculated to promote the freedom and welfare of men. These objects never can be attained by abolishing every restriction on the part of the Governours, and extinguishing every right on the part of the governed.

Suppose it be allowed, that the line is not expressly drawn, is it thence to be concluded there is no implied line? No English Lawyer, we presume, will venture to make the bold assertion. "The King may reject what bills, may make what treaties, may coin what money, may create what Peers, and may pardon what offences he pleases."‡ But is his prerogative respecting these branches of it, unlimited? By no means. The words following those next above quoted from the "Commentaries on the Laws of England," are - "unless where the Constitution hath expressly, or by evident consequence, laid down some exception or boundary; declaring, that thus far the prerogative shall go, and no farther." There are "some boundaries then," besides the "express exceptions;" and according to the strong expression here used, "the Constitution declares there are." What "evident consequence" forms those "boundaries?"

The happiness of the people is the end, and, if the term is allowable, we would call it the body of the Constitution. Freedom is the spirit or soul. As the soul, speaking of nature, has a right to prevent or relieve, if it can, any mischief to the body of the individual, and to keep it in the best health; so the soul, speaking of the Constitution, has a right to prevent or relieve, any mischief to the body of the society, and to keep that in the best health. The "evident consequence" mentioned, must mean a tendency to injure this health, that is, to diminish the happiness of the people - or it must mean nothing. If, therefore, the Constitution "declares by evident consequence," that a tendency to diminish the happiness of the people, is a proof, that power exceeds a "boundary," beyond which it ought not to "go;" the matter is brought to this single point, whether taking our money from us without our consent, depriving us of trial by jury, changing Constitutions of Government, and abolishing the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, by seizing and carrying ¶ us to England, have not a greater tendency to diminish our happiness, than any enormities a King can commit under

* Parl Deb. 7, 409. "What of that? Shall not we give judgment, because it is not adjudged in the books before? We will give judgment according to reason, and if there be no reason in the books, I will not regard them." - Speech of ANDERSON, Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, in the reign of ELIZABETH - GOULDSE. Rep. 96 edit., 1653.

† "It seems to me, that the natural justice, which is a duty of man, ought to be styled the parent and nourisher of every other virtue: and assuredly without this habit, a man can neither moderate his desires, nor be brave, nor wise. For, it is a harmony and peace of the whole soul; with a full concert of words and actions: and the dominion of such a habit may be rendered more conspicuous, if we examine the other habits of virtue. For the good of these is private, respecting the individual; but the good of natural justice respects whole systems, and throughout the universe."

"In the celestial system of the world, as it marshals out the universal rule of things, which are thus decreed by God; it is providence, and harmony, and right. In a civil state, it is justly called peace and good order. In a domestic state, it is the like mindedness of husband and wife towards each other; the good will of subordinate members. In the body, it is health and symmetry of parts, which are principal things, and much beloved by every living creature. In the soul, it is wisdom; that wisdom which ariseth amongst men, from the knowledge of causes, and from natural justice."

"Since therefore, this habit doth thus instruct, and preserve, the whole and every part; rendering all the same. in heart, and in tongue, why may it not be saluted by the universal voice, the parent and nourisher of every virtue?" - POL. PYTH. LUC. apud. STOBÆUM, p. 105, edit. Tiguri, 1559.

‡ 1 Blackst. Com. 250.

¶ "Of great importance to the publick is the preservation of this personal liberty: for if once it were left in the power of any, the highest Magistrate, to imprison arbitrarily whomever he or his officers thought proper, (as in France it is daily practised by the Crown) there would soon be an end of all other rights and immunities." - "A natural and regular consequence of this personal liberty is, that every Englishman may claim a right to abide in his own country so long as he pleases, and not to be driven from it unless by the sentence of law. Exile or transportation is a punishment unknown to the common law." "The King cannot constitute a man Lord Lieutenant of Ireland against his will, nor make him a foreign ambassador. For this might in reality be no more than an honourable exile." - 1 Blackstone, 135 to 138.

"These precedents collected by the reverend and learned Judge, Chief Justice Anderson, and all written with his own hand, do fully resolve for the maintenance of the ancient and fundamental point of liberty of the person, to be regained by habeas corpus, when any one is imprisoned." - Parl. Hist. 7, 418.

pretence of prerogative, can have to diminish the happiness of the subjects in England. To come to a decision upon this point, no long time need be required. To make this comparison, is stating the claim of Parliament in the most favourable light: for it puts the assumed power Of Parliament, to do, "in all cases whatsoever," what they please, upon the same footing With the acknowledged power of the King, "to make what Peers - pardon what offences, &c., he pleases." But in this light that power is not entitled to be viewed. Such is the wisdom of the English Constitution, that it "declares" the King may transgress a "boundary laid down by evident Consequence," even by using the power with which he is expressly vested by the Constitution, in doing those very acts which he is expressly trusted by the Constitution to do - as by creating too many or improper persons, Peers; or by pardoning too many or too great offences, &c. But has the Constitution of England expressly "declared," that the Parliament of Great Britain may take away the money of English Colonists without their consent, and deprive them of trial by jury, &c? It cannot be pretended. True it is, that it has been solemnly declared by Parliament, that Parliament has such a power. But that declaration leaves the point just as it was before: for if Parliament had not the power before, the declaration could not give it. Indeed if Parliament is really "omnipotent,"* that power is just and constitutional. We further observe that the Constitution has not expressly drawn the line beyond which, if a King shall "go," resistance becomes lawful. The learned author of those Commentaries, that, notwithstanding some human frailties, do him so much honour, has thought proper, when treating of this subject, to point out the "precedent" of the Revolution, as fixing the line. We would not venture any reflection on so great a man. It may not become us. Nor can we be provoked by his expressions concerning Colonists; because they perhaps contain his real, though hasty sentiments. Surely, it was not his intention to condemn those excellent men, who casting every tender consideration behind them, nobly presented themselves against the tyranny of the unfortunate and misguided Charles's reign; those men whom the House of Commons, even after the Restoration, would not suffer to be censured.

We are sensible of the objection that may be made, as to drawing a line between rights on each side, and the case of a plain violation of rights. We think it not material. Circumstances have actually produced, and may again produce this question: What conduct of a Prince renders resistance lawful? James the Second, and his father, violated express rights of their subjects, by doing what their own express rights gave them no title to do, as by raising money, and levying troops without consent of Parliament. It is not even settled, what violation of those will justify resistance. But may not some future Prince, confining himself to the exercise of his own express rights, such as have been mentioned, act in a manner, that will be a transgression of a "boundary" laid down by "evident consequence," the "Constitution declaring he should go no further?" May not this exercise of these his express rights, be so far extended, as to introduce universal confusion and a subversion of the ends of Government? The whole may, be oppressive, and yet any single instance legal. The cases may be improbable; but we have seen and now feel events once as little expected. Is it not possible, that one of these cases may happen; if it does, has the Constitution expressly drawn a line, beyond which resistance becomes lawful? It has not. But it may be said, a King cannot arm against his subjects - he cannot raise money without consent of Parliament. This is the constitutional check upon him. If he should, it would be a violation of their express rights. If their purses are shut his power shrinks. True. Unhappy Colonists! Our money may be taken from us - and standing armies established over us, without our consent - every expressly declared constitutional check dissolved, and the modes of opposition for relief so contracted, as to leave us only the miserable alternative of supplication or violence. And these it seems, are the liberties of Americans. Because the Constitution has not "expressly declared" the line between the rights of the mother country and those of her

* 1 Blackstone, 161.

Colonists, therefore, the latter have no rights. A logick, equally edifying to the heads and hearts of men of sense and humanity.

We assert, a line there must be, and shall now proceed with great deference to the judgment of others, to trace that line, according to the ideas we entertain: and it is with satisfaction we can say, that the records, statutes, law books, and most approved writers of our mother country, those "dead but most faithful Counsellors," as Sir Edward Coke calls them, "who cannot be daunted by fear, nor "muzzled by affection, reward, or hope of preferment, and "therefore may safely be believed," confirm the principles we maintain.

Liberty, life, or property, can with no consistency of warble or ideas, be termed a right of the possessors, while others have a right of taking them away at pleasure. The most distinguished authors that have written on Government, declare it to be instituted for the benefit of the people; and that it never will have this tendency, where it is unlimited. "Even conquest * itself is held not to destroy

* But in order to say something more particular concerning this subject, let us observe that the natural state of Nations in respect to each other, is that of society and peace. This society is likewise a state of equality and independence, which establishes a parity of right between them; and engages them to have the same regard and respect for one another. Hence the general principle of the law of Nations is nothing more than the general law of sociability, which obliges all Nations that have any intercourse with one another, to practise those duties to which individuals are naturally subject.

"These remarks may serve to give us a just idea of that art, so necessary to the directors of states, and distinguished commonly by the name of polity. Polity considered with regard to foreign states, is that ability and address by which a Sovereign provides for the preservation, safety, prosperity, and glory of the Nation he governs, by respecting the laws of justice and humanity; that is, without doing any injury to other states, but rather by procuring their advantage, as much as in reason can be expected. Thus the polity of Sovereigns is the same as prudence among private people; and as we condemn in the latter any art or cunning that makes them pursue their own advantage to the prejudice of others, so the like art would be censurable in Princes, were they bent upon procuring the advantage of their own people by injuring other Nations. The reason of state, so often alleged to justify the proceedings or enterprises of Princes, cannot really be admitted for this end; but in as much as it is reconcileable with the common interest of Nations, or which amounts to the same thing, with the unalterable rules of sincerity, justice, and humanity."

"Grotius indeed acknowledges that the law of nature is common to all Nations; yet he establishes a positive law of Nations contradistinct from the law of nature; and reduces this law of Nations to a sort of human law, which has acquired a power of obliging in consequence of the will and consent of all or of a great many Nations.* He adds, that the maxims of this law of Nations are proved by the perpetual practice of people, and the testimony of historians.

"But it has been justly observed that this pretended law of Nations, contradistinct from the law of nature, and invested nevertheless with a force of obliging, whether people consent to it or not, is a supposition destitute of all foundation. - †

"1. For all Nations are with regard to one another in a natural independence and equality. If there be therefore any common law between them, it must proceed from God, their common Sovereign.

"2. As for what relates to customs established by an express or tacit consent among Nations, these customs are neither of themselves nor universally, nor always obligatory. For from this only, that several Nations have acted towards one another for a long time after a particular manner in particular cases, it does not follow that they have laid themselves under a necessity of acting always in the same manner for the time to come, and much less that other Nations are obliged to conform to these customs.

3. Again, these customs are so much the less capable of being an obligatory rule of themselves, as they may happen to be bad or unjust. The profession of a corsair, or pirate, was, by a kind of consent, esteemed a long while as lawful, between Nations that were not united by alliance or treaty. It seems likewise, that some Nations allowed themselves the use of poisoned arms in time of war. ‡ Shall we say that these are customs authorized by the law of Nations, and really obligatory in respect to different people? Or shall we not rather consider them as barbarous practices; practices from which every just and well governed Nation ought to refrain. We cannot therefore avoid appealing always to the law of nature, the only one that is really universal, whenever we want to judge whether the customs, established between Nations, have any obligatory effect.

4. All that can be said on this subject is, that when customs of an innocent nature are introduced among Nations, each of them is reasonably supposed to submit to those customs, as long as they have not made any declaration to the contrary. This is all the force or effect that can be given to received customs; but a very different effect from that of a law properly so called."- BURLAMAQ. Princ. of Nat. Law, I vol. p. 196 - 199.

"But I will conclude with that which I find reported by Sir John Davis, who was the King's sergeant; and so, by the duty of his place would no doubt maintain, to the uttermost of his power, the King's prerogative royal; and yet it was by him thus said, in those Reports of his upon the case of tanistry customs: 'That the Kings of England always had a monarchy royal, and not a monarchy signoral; 'where, under the first,' saith he, 'the subjects are free men, and have all the rights of the conquered: Such is the merciful reverence judged by the best and wisest men to be due to human nature, and frequently observed even by conquerors themselves.

'property in their goods, and freehold and inheritance in their lands; 'but, under the latter, they are as villains and slaves, and have property in nothing. And therefore, saith he, when a royal Monarch 'makes a new conquest, yet, if he receives any of the Nation's ancient 'inhabitants into his protection, they, and their heirs after them, 'shall enjoy their lands and liberties according to the laws.' And there he voucheth this precedent and judgment following, given before William the Conqueror himself, viz:

"That one Sherborn, at the time of the conquest, being owner of a 'Castle and lands in Norfolk, the Conqueror gave the same to one 'Warren, a Norman; and Sherborn dying, the heir claiming the same 'by descent according to the law, it was, before the Conqueror 'himself, adjudged for the heir, and that the gift thereof by the Conqueror was void."* - Parl. Debates, 7 vol p. 384.

It is held by the best writers, that a conqueror, in a just war, acquires not a right to the property of those of the subdued country, who opposed him not, nor of the posterity of those who did: nor can the pretence of obtaining satisfaction for the charges and damages of the war justify such a claim.

"In a free state, every man who is supposed a free agent, ought to be, in some measure, his own Governour, and therefore, a branch, at least, of the Legislative power ought to reside in the whole body of the people. And this power, when the territories of the state are small and its citizens easily known, should be expressed by the people in their aggregate or collective capacity, as was wisely ordained in the petty Republics of Greece, and the first rudiments of the Roman State. But this will be highly inconvenient when the publick territory is extended to any considerable degree, and the number of citizens is increased. In so large a state as ours, it is therefore very wisely contrived that the people should do that by their Representatives, which it is impracticable to perform in person."- I Blackstone, 158, 159.

The above quoted words are sufficient of themselves to refute the notion of "virtual representative" of Americans in Parliament.

As to the argument drawn from similitude between the case of those in England, not qualified to vote by their property, though possessed of a considerable share, as proprietors of the funds - the East India Company - merchants - manufacturers, &c., and the case of Colonists, the true answer is, that there is no resemblance whatever between the cases. A few propositions will prove it; but it may be proper to premise - First, If representation was intended by the Constitution of England, a complete representation was intended; for the reason of having any, requires having a complete one, as being the best. Second, If a complete representation was intended by the Constitution, every defect in the representation is against the intention of the Constitution. Third, If a respectable part of the people in England is not represented, it is a defect. Fourth, If therefore, the intention of the Constitution is to be regarded as the Constitution, it involves a plain absurdity, to infer a greater defect being constitutional, from a smaller defect which is unconstitutional: Fifth, The intention of the Constitution must be regarded - and practices inconsistent with its design must be amended by it, if the happiness which it means to promote and secure, is to be regarded. Sixth, If there is not such a representation in England, as the Constitution requires there ought to be. As to the resemblance above supposed. First, If many inhabitants of England have not a right to vote in the choice of members of the House of Commons, there are many who have. Second, Not one inhabitant of the Colonies has that right. Third, Some representation is better than none, though a complete one cannot be obtained. The first is a defect of mode, the latter an extinction of the substance. There is, to a nice observer of nature, a perceptible difference between a deformed man and a dead man. Fourth, Proprietors of the funds, &c., though they have no right to such vote, as proprietors, &c., may yet have it under another character as freeholders, &c. Fifth, When acting as freeholders, &c., they may take care of their interests as proprietors, &c. for - Sixth, Their being proprietors, &c., does not disqualify them from acquiring and enjoying a right to such vote by becoming freeholders, &c., but Seventh, By acquiring and enjoying a right to such vote, the Colonists must cease to be inhabitants of the Colonies. Eighth, Their being inhabitants of the Colonies, therefore, disqualifies them from acquiring and enjoying the right to such vote. Ninth, If those not entitled to such vote in England were not bound by statutes made there, they would not be bound by statutes, nor taxed at all, though possessed of great property but Tenth, The Colonists are bound and taxed by the Acts of their Assemblies. Eleventh, Even those not entitled to such vote in England, and incapable of obtaining it, have this protection, that Representatives and their electors are bound by the laws made, as well as the rest of the people - and the connections between the Representatives, their electors, and the rest of the people, all living together in the same Kingdom, are so many and so intimate, that even the actually unrepresented cannot be affected unless the Representatives and their electors are affected also. Twelfth, Totally different is the condition of Colonists, if bound by statutes generally. - By the Acts of Parliament for raising a Revenue in America, the Commons use the words, 'give and grant.' Can men give and grant what they have not? Did any of those acts take a single penny out of the pocket of a single giver and grantor? No. So far from it, that if there is any truth in the proverb, And money saved is money got, these "dona ferentes" gentlemen put money into their pockets by their † "loyal and dutiful" generosity. Every individual of them acquired by bestowing. Pretensions thus to give, are such contradictions to fact and sense, that in making them, a sanction of injustice is sought from a principle of the Constitution, and in describing them, a solecism in speech becomes a proper expression. It is proved to be, by reason and the experience of all ages and countries, cannot be a rightful or legal power. For, as an excellent Bishop of the Church of England argues,* "the ends of Government cannot be answered by a total "dissolution of all happiness at present, and of all hopes "for the future."

The just inference therefore from these premises would be an exclusion of any power of Parliament over these Colonies, rather than the admission of an unbounded power.

We well know that the Colonists are charged by many persons in Great Britain with attempting to obtain such an exclusion and a total independence on her. As well we know the accusation to be utterly false. We are become criminal in the sight of such persons, by refusing to be guilty of the highest crime against ourselves and our posterity. No-lumus leges Angliæ mutari. This is the rebellion with which we are stigmatised. We have committed the like offence, that was objected by the polite and humane Fimbria against a rude Senator of his time. "We have dis-respectfully refused to receive the whole weapon into our "body." We could not do it and live. But that must be acknowledged to be a poor excuse, equally inconsistent with good breeding and the Supreme Legislature of Great Britain.

For these ten years past we have been incessantly † attacked. Hard is our fate, when to escape the character must be acknowledged however, that the Commons are more than sound divines, for they improve upon the text,* and "count their loss for gain."

Statutes might grind us, while not an elector in England would know or regard our sufferings - if acquainted with them, he might think the statutes inflicting them, just and political. An open avowal has been made in Parliament that it is † "the indispensable duty of "Parliament to tax the Colonies in order to ease the gentry and people "of Great Britain." Let not Americas ever forget the lordly words! To understand them fully, we should consider -

Our dispute includes not only the present taxes laid upon us. The universal property of England was interested in Mr. Hampden's suit, about a few shillings. If the Crown had a right to those shillings, it had a right to every shilling of every man in the Kingdom. Great Britain is about one hundred and forty millions of pounds sterling in debt. If she can pay any part of that debt by taxing us, she may pay the whole by taxing us, if we can raise the money. If we cannot, yet as we are upbraided continually in pamphlets and papers with the richness of our houses, our furniture, our equipage, or tables, and our dress, she may be made to think we abound too much in these conveniences. If we are reduced to the condition of French peasants, it is no matter. We belong to the people of Great Britain: and all British subjects, but Americans, may do what they please with their own. "It is her indispensable duty, say their Lordships, to ease herself by taxing us;" and surely there is virtue enough left in the British Parliament, notwithstanding all the dreadful intelligence British writers send us over to perform that "duty," exactly. But this is not all. There are certain wicked Frenchmen and Spaniards, that in every period of twenty or thirty years oblige Great Britain to add thirty or forty millions to her debt. Upon an average, since the Revolution, she runs annually in debt about a million and an half. Can it be expected her Ministers will be kinder to us than they have been to her? where will the demand upon us, where will our wretchedness stop, if we have not resolution enough to defend ourselves?

A statute intended to have force on the people of Great Britain, is the case of a state acting upon itself. A statute intended to have force on the people of America, is the case of one state acting upon another. The people of Great Britain, who in the first case are subject to the statute - in the second, are the absolute sovereigns who impose it on others:

"Virtual representation" then, as applied to Colonists, is, to borrow expressions of the excellent Archbishop Tillotson, on another occasion, altering only two words - "An absurdity of that monstrous and "massy weight, that no human authority or wit are able to support it. "It will 'make the very pillars of St.' Stephens "crack, and require "more volumes to make it good than would fill" Westminster Hall.

Yet this most despicable notion has been the pretence for our fellow-subjects ‡ clapping muskets to our breasts, and taking our money out of our pockets.

Many of the statutes here mentioned, particularly those relating to the Admiralty Courts and the Commissioners of the Customs, are connected with a multitude of other statutes, by being compared with which the artifices will appear, that gradually departing from the laws of England, have at length invested these Courts and Commissioners with such new, unreasonable, unconstitutional, and dangerous powers.

of rebels, we must be degraded into that of slaves; as if there was no medium between the two extremes of anarchy and despotism, where innocence and freedom could find repose and safety.

Why should we be exhibited to mankind as a people, adjudged by Parliament unworthy of freedom? The thought alone is insupportable. Even those unhappy persons, who have had the misfortune of being born under the yoke of bondage imposed by the cruel laws, if they may be called laws, of the land where they received their birth, no sooner breathe the air of England, though they touch her shores only by accident,* than they instantly become freemen. Strange contradiction! † The same King-dora at the same time, the asylum and the bane of Liberty.

To return to the charge against us, we can safely appeal to that Being, from whom no thought can be concealed, that our warmest wish and utmost ambition is, that we and our posterity may ever remain subordinate to, and dependent upon, our parent state. This submission our reason approves, our affection dictates, our duty commands, and our interest enforces.

If this submission indeed implies a dissolution of our Constitution, and a renunciation of our liberty, we should be unworthy of our relation to her, if we should not frankly declare, that we regard it with ‡ horror; and every true Englishman will applaud this just distinction and candid declaration. Our defence necessarily touches chords in unison with the fibres of his honest heart. They must vibrate in sympathetick tones. If we, his kindred, should be base enough to promise the humiliating subjection he could not believe us. We should suffer all the infamy of the engagement without finding the benefit expected from being thought as contemptible as we should undertake to be.

But this submission implies not such insupportable evils; and our amazement is inexpressible when we consider the gradual increase of these Colonies, from their slender beginnings in the last century to their late flourishing condition, and how prodigiously, since their settlement our parent state has advanced in wealth, force, and influence, till she is become the first power on the sea, and the envy of the world - that these our better days should not strike conviction into every mind, that the freedom and happiness of the Colonists are not inconsistent with her authority and prosperity.

* Somerset's case.

† To this contradiction, the following may be added - Her policy at once to keep peace with her natural enemies, and to provoke her natural friends, whose assistance one day - and that day seems to be approaching - in the vicissitudes of human affairs, great as she is, she may want; her interest, as site thinks, to protect and to oppress Protestant countries - to abhor a large standing army and yet voluntarily to put herself under the absolute necessity of perpetuating an immensely large one, to govern the many millions of slaves she expects soon to have on this vast Continent. Two of the shrewdest, though not best Emperors, that ever lived, Augustus and Tiberius, prohibited every man of distinction from setting his foot in Egypt,* because of the importance of that Province to Rome. But Great Britain, as if these numerous Provinces, much more remote from her than Egypt from Rome, were of little consequence, willingly obliges herself to trust a mighty armed power into the hands of a subject, in these Colonies, the tempting interest of which subject, and of the people, may engage them to unite in establishing an independent Empire, on her own model. Great Britain ought not to forget that Rome was ruined by keeping standing armies in her provinces.

‡ The Priernates had revolted from the Romans, but were reduced. The question was what judgment should be given against them? This is Livy's account of the affair, in the twenty-first chapter of his eighth book:

"Quum ipsa per se res anceps esset, prout cujusque ingenium erat, atrocius mitiusve suadentibus; turn incertiora omnia unus ex Privernatibus legatia fecit, magis conditionis, in qua natus esset, quam presentis necessitas, memor: qui, interrogatus à quodam tristioris sententiæ auctore, quam pœnam meritos Privernates censeret? eam, inquit, quam merentur, qui se libertate dignos censent: cujus quum feroci responso infestiores factos videret consul eos, qui antè Privernatium causam impugnabant; ut ipse benignâ interrogatione mitius responsum eliceret, Quid, si pœnam, inquit, remittimus vobis, qualem nos pacem vobiscum habituros speremus? Si bonam dederitis, inquit, et fidam et perpetuam: si malam, haud diuturnam. Tum verò minari, nec id ambigüe, Privernatem quidam, et illis vocibus ad reballandum incitari pacatos populos, pars melior senatûs ad meliora responsum trahere, et dicere, Viri, et liberi, vocem auditam, an credi posse, ullum populum, aut hominem denique, in ea conditione, cujus eum pœniteat, diutius, quàm necesse sit, mansurum? Ibi pacem esse fidam, ubi voluntarii pacati sint: neque eo loco, ubi servitutem esse velint, fidem sperandam esse. In hanc sententiam maximè consul ipse inclinavit animos, identidem ad principes sententiarum consulares, uti ex-audiri posset à pluribus, dicendo, Eos demum, qui nihil, præterquam de libertate, cogitent, dignos esse, qui Romani fiant. Itaque et in senatu causam obtinere, et ex auctoritate Patrum latum ad populum est, ut Privernatibus civitas dabitur."

* Tac.

The experience of more than one hundred years will surely be deemed, by wise men, to have some weight in the scale of evidence to support our opinion. We might justly ask of her, why we are not permitted to go on as we have been used to do since our existence, conferring mutual benefits, thereby strengthening each other, more and more, discovering the reciprocal advantages of our connection, and daily cultivating affections encouraged by those advantages?

What unknown offences have we committed against her within these ten years, to provoke such an unexampled change in her conduct towards us? In the last war she acknowledged us repeatedly to be faithful, dutiful, zealous, and useful in her cause. Is it criminal in us that our numbers, by the favour of Divine Providence, have greatly increased? That the poor choose to fly from their native countries in Europe to this Continent? Or, that we have so much improved these woods, that if we can be forced into an unsuccessful resistance, avarice itself might be satiated with our forfeitures?

It cannot with truth be urged, that projects of innovation have commenced with us. Facts and their dates prove the contrary. * Not a disturbance has happened on any part of this Continent, but in consequence of some immediate preceding provocation.

To what purpose? The charge of our affecting one great or many small Republicks, must appear as contemptible a madness to her, as it does to us. Divided as we are into many Provinces, † and incapable of union, except

"The winds lift up the waves," - said a wise man - yet we read of a weak man who scoured waves, but he had not rased them. To excite commotions, and then to scourge for being excited, is an addition to the wildness of a Xerxes, reserved more particularly to distinguish the present age, already sufficiently illustrious by the injuries offered to the rights of human nature.

† The genius of a Beccaria suggested to him the condition of a large Empire verging into servitude - the only plan for saving it - and the difficulty of executing that plan. "An overgrown Republick" says he, and such a limited Monarchy as that of Great Britain with such an extent of Dominions, may well be called "an overgrown Republick." "can only be saved from despotism by subdividing it into "a number of confederate Republicks. But how is this practicable? "By a despotick dictator, who with the courage of Sylla, has as much "genius for building up as that Roman had for pulling down. If he "be an ambitious man, his reward will be immortal glory; if a phy- "losopher, the blessing's of his fellow-citizens will sufficiently console "him for the loss of authority, though he should not be insensible to "their ingratitude."

What was argument in Italy, is reality to Great Britain, with this additional circumstance in her favour, that she must always continue, if she wisely conducts her affairs, though less than all, yet greater than any. The immense advantages of such a situation are worthy the closest attention of every Briton. To a man, who has considered them with that attention, perhaps it will not appear too bold to aver, that, if an archangel had planned the connection between Great Britain and her Colonies, he could not have fixed it on a more lasting and beneficial foundation, unless he could have changed human nature. A mighty naval power at the head of the whole - that power, a parent state, With all the endearing sentiments attending the relationship, that never could disoblige, but with design - the dependent states much more apt to have feuds among themselves - she the umpire and controller - those states producing every article necessary to her greatness - their interest, that she should continue free and flourishing - their ability to throw a considerable weight into the scale, should her Government get unduly poised - she and those states Protestant - are some of the circumstances, that, delineated by the masterly hand of a Beccaria, would exhibit a plan vindicating the ways of Heaven, and demonstrating that humanity and policy are nearly related. An Alexander, a Cæsar, a Charles, a Lewis, and others, have fought through fields of blood for universal empire. Great Britain has a certainty, by population and commerce alone, of attaining to the most astonishing and well founded power the world ever saw. The circumstances of her situation are new and striking. Heaven has offered to her glory and prosperity without measure. Her wise Ministers disdain to accept them, and prefer "a pepper-corn." *

So directly opposite to the interest of Great Britain has the conduct of Administration been for some time past, that it may safely be affirmed, that, if their view was to establish arbitrary power over Great Britain, schemes more dangerous could not have been laid. To profess this propose would ensure a defeat. Any man, who had such a design, would first take the opportunity of peace to set one part of the subject against the other, This might be done in the following manner:

Let every session of Parliament produces a fresh injury. Give no rest, or hope of rest. Let insult added to insult fill up the vacancies between the sessions. Tease and persecute into opposition. Then let Ministers themselves rejoice in the freedom of the press. Let every action of the oppressed be exaggerated. Let innumerable false invectives be vented in pamphlets and newspapers. Let all the provocations and excuses be concealed from publick sight as much as possible. Load the devoted with the terms of traitors and rebels. Nearly in this way Scotland was treated by the arbitrary Ministry of Charles the First. But the Parliament and people of England had common sense and virtue. The base deception could not pass upon them, They saw the snare laid for them, and resented it so deeply, that an

against a common danger, she knew, that we could not think of embarking our treasures of tranquillity and liberty, on an ocean of blood, in a wandering expedition to some Utopian port. The history of mankind, from the remotest antiquity, furnishes not a single instance of a people consisting of husbandmen and merchants, voluntarily engaging army of Englishmen fled before an army of Scotchmen at Newburn. For once it was glorious to fly. But it required English heads and English hearts to understand and to act the part.

Thus the Colonies have been treated. At last a civil war may be worked up. It should be considered, as Lord Mansfield expresses it, whether "the play is worth the candle."In such a war, every victory will be a defeat. If the Colonies are subdued, vast sums must be raised, and a prodigious army must be supported, to keep them in subjection. Great Britain must feel the weight of that influence, added to the power of the Crown. The Colonies are increasing. Who can compute the extent and effect of such an influence? * Undone by her victories, she must resign her liberty, or some future monarch with her Colonies, unless she first loses them in another way. If she is unfortunate, publick calamities may make great changes. Such changes seem to be intended by some men. Great Britain has been led into the Rubicon. she has not yet passed it. We consider the hostilities already practised, as the manoeuvres of a Ministerial war. We know the machinations formed against us, and the favourite publications industriously spread abroad, to excite a jealousy of us among our British brethren. We know how acceptable to many an earthquake would be to "sink some of the Colonies in the ocean,"and how pleasing to employ the rest "in raising staple commodities; that we are thought "too numerous,"and how much it would be judged by some for the interest of Great Britain if a pestilence should sweep off a million and a half of us. These wonderful lucubrations have not escaped us. But here we are, by Divine Providence, three millions of souls. What can be done with us? If we were to be considered only as † Protestant allies, we ought to be esteemed by a wise people. Such a people certainly would not be careful to disunite us from their interest - to make us foes when they might have us friends. Some states have thought it true policy to grant greater indulgencies to remote dominions, than were enjoyed by themselves; and this policy has been much applauded. The enjoyment of valuable privileges by inferiour states, under the protection of a superiour, is the strongest bond of dependence. Why should we prefer a dependence on Great Britain to a dependence on France. if we enjoy less freedom under the former, than we may under the latter? "Firmisimum imperium, quo obedientes gaudent,"or, as Lord Chief Justice Coke expresses it, in his comment on the 25th of Edward the Third, "The state of a King standeth more assured by the "love and favour of the subject, than by the dread and fear of laws" &c. ‡ Ought Great Britain to despise the advantages she actually

* But, on the other hand, it is to be considered, that every Prince, in the first Parliament after his accession, has, by long usage, a truly royal addition to his hereditary revenue settled upon him for his life; and has never any occasion to apply to Parliament for supplies, but upon some publick necessity of the whole Realm. This restores to him that constitutional independence which at his first accession seems it must be owned, to be wanting. And then, with regard to power, we may find, perhaps, that the hands of Government are at least sufficiently strengthened; and that an English Monarch is now in no danger of being overborne by either the nobility or the people. The instruments of power are not perhaps so open and avowed as they formerly were, and therefore are the less liable to jealous and invidious reflections; but they are not the weaker upon that account. In short, our national debt and taxes (besides the inconveniences before mentioned) have also, in their natural consequences, thrown such a weight of power, into the Executive scale of Government, as we cannot think was intended by our patriot ancestors who gloriously straggled for the abolition of the then formidable parts of the prerogative and by an unaccountable want of foresight established this system in their stead. The entire collection and management of so vast a revenue being placed in the hands of the Crown, have given rise to such a multitude of new officers, created by, and removable at the Royal pleasure, that they have extended the influence of Government to every earner of the Nation. Witness the Commissioners, and the multitude of dependents on the Cutoms, in every port of the Kingdom; the Commissioners of Excise, and their numerous subalterns, in every inland district; the Postmasters, and their servants, planted in every town and upon every publick road; the Commissioners of the Stamps,, and their distributors, which are full as scattered and full as numerous; the officers of the Salt Duty, which, though a species of exise, and conducted in the same manner, are yet made a distinct corps from the ordinary managers of that revenue; the Surveyors of Houses and Windows; the Receivers of the Land Tax; the Managers of lotteries, and the Commissioners of Hackney Coaches; all which are either mediately or immediately appointed by the Crown, and removable at pleasure without any reason assigned. These, it requires but little penetration to see, must give that power, on which they depend for subsistence, an influence most amazingly extensive. To this may be added the frequent opportunities of conferring particular obligations, by preference in loans, subscriptions, tickets, remittances, and other money transactions, which will greatly increase this influence; and that over those persons whose attachment, on account of their wealth, is frequently the most desirable. All this is the natural, though perhaps the unforeseen, consequence of erecting our funds of credit, and to support them establishing our present perpetual taxes; the whole of which is entirely new since the Restoration in 1650; and by far the greatest part since the Revolution in 1688. And the same may be said with regard to the officers in our numerous army, and the places which the army has created. All which put together gives the Executive power so persuasive an energy with respect to the persons themselves, and so prevailing an interest with their friends and families, as will amply make amends for the loss of external prerogative.

"But, though this profusion of offices should have no effect on individuals, there is still another newly-acquired branch of power; and that is, not the influence only, but the force of a disciplined army; paid, indeed, ultimately by the people, but immediately by the Crown; raised by the Crown, officered by the Crown, commanded by the Crown. They are kept on foot, it is true, only from year to year, and that by the power of Parliament; but during that year they must, by the nature of our Constitution, if raised at any, be at the absolute disposal of the Crown. And there need but few words to demonstrate how great a trust is thereby reposed in the Prince by his people. A trust that is more than equivalent to a thousand little troublesome prerogatives.

"Add to all this, that, besides the civil list, the immense revenue of almost seven millions sterling, which is annually paid to the creditors of the publick, or carried to the sinking fund, is first deposited in the Royal Exchequer, and thence issued out to the respective offices of payment. This revenue the people can never refuse to raise, because it is made perpetual by Act of Parliament; which also, when considered, will appear to be a trust of great delicacy and high importance."- 1 Blackstone's, Com. b. 1, ch. 8, p. 334 - 336.

† Great Britain put herself to a very considerable expense last war in defence of Portugal, because that Kingdom was her ally, and she derived great advantages from an intercourse with her. But what are those advantages? or the affections rising from them, when compared to the advantages and affections that connect these Colonies with Great Britain? Words cannot express the surprise, that men free from passion must feel on considering her impolicy in labouring to disjoin from herself the only true friends she has in the world. If her Ministers were pensioners of France and Spain, they could not pursue measures more pleasing and advantageous to those Kingdoms.

‡ "During all our happy days of concord, partly from our national moderation, and partly from the wisdom, and sometimes perhaps from the carelessness of our Ministers, "they have been trusted, in a good measure, with the entire management of their "affairs; and the success they have met with ought to be to us an ever-memorable proof, "that the true art of Government consists in not governing too much. And why should "friendship, and gratitude, and long attachments, which inspire all the relish and sweet - "ness of private life, be supposed to be of no weight in the intercourse between great "communities? These are principles of human nature, which act with much greater "certainty on numbers than on individuals. If properly cultivated they may to us be "productive of the noblest benefits; and, at all events, will neither lessen the extent of "our power, nor shorten the duration of it." - Bishop of St. Asaph's Sermon. p. 13.

in such a phrenzy of ambition. No! Our highest pride and glory has been, with humble unsuspecting duty * to labour in contributing to elevate her to that exalted station she holds among the Nations of the earth, and which, we still ardently desire and pray she may hold, with fresh accessions of fame and prosperity, till time shall be no more.

These being our sentiments, and, we are fully convinced, the sentiments of our brethren throughout the Colonies, with unspeakable affliction, we find ourselves obliged to oppose that system of dominion over us, arising from counsels pernicious both to our parent and her children - to strive, if it be possible, to close the breaches made in our former concord, and stop the sources of future animosities. And may God Almighly, who delights in the titles of just and merciful, incline the hearts of all parties to that equitable and benevolent temper, which is necessary solidly to establish peace and harmony in the place of confusion and dissension.

The legislative authority claimed by Parliament over these Colonies, consists of two heads: first, a general power of internal legislation; and, secondly, a power of regulating our trade; both, she contends, are unlimited. Under the first may be included, among other powers, those of forbidding us to † worship our Creator in the manner we think most acceptable to him - imposing taxes on us - collecting them by their own officers - enforcing the collection by Admiralty Courts, or Courts Martial - abolishing trials by jury - establishing a standing army ‡ receives with safety from us, because, by the adoption of Spanish maxims, she might with danger extort more?

It is the duty of every Colonist to oppose such maxims. They threaten ruin to our mother country and to us. We should be guilty of treason against our Sovereign and the majesty of the people of England, if we did not oppose them. England must be saved in America. Hereafter, She will rejoice that we have resisted, and thank us for having offended her. Her wisdom will in a short time discover the artifices that have been used by her worst enemies to inflame her against her dutiful children; that she has supported not her own cause, but the cause of an Administration; and will clearly distinguish which will most conduce to her benefit, safety, and glory, well treated and affectionate Colonies, or millions of slaves, an unnatural increase of her standing forces, and an addition to the influence of the Crown, defying all calculation.

* It has been suggested, "that subjects sometimes err, by not believing that Princes mean as well as they do." But the instances are numerous where princes and their courtiers err, by not believing that subjects mean as well as they do.

The army under the command of General Gage, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay alone, amounts to several thousand men, kept there without consent of their Assembly, and to be augmented as the General shall think proper.

"I must own, sir, I can see but one reason for raising at this present juncture, this additional number of troops, and that is to "strengthen the hands of the Minister against the next election, by "giving him the power of disposing of commissions to the sons, "brothers, nephews, cousins, and friends of such as have interest in "boroughs, into some of which, perhaps, troops may be sent to procure the free election of their members, in imitation of the late "Czarina sending her troops into Poland to secure the free election "of a King.

"But still there is one thing more fatal than all I have yet named, "that must be the consequence of so great a body of troops being "kept on foot in England, and will be the finishing-stroke to all our "liberties. For, as the towns in England will not be able much "longer to contain quarters for them, most of those who keep publick "houses being near ruined by soldiers billeted on them; so, on pretence of the necessity of it, barracks will be built for quartering "them, which will be as so many fortresses with strong garrisons in "them, erected in all parts of England, which can tend to nothing, "but by degrees to subdue and enslave the Kingdom.

"But if ever this scheme should be attempted, it will be incumbent "on every Englishman to endeavour to prevent it by all methods, and "as it would be the last stand that could be ever made for our liberties, "rather than suffer it to be put in execution, it would be our duty to "draw our swords, and never put them up till our liberties were "secured, and the authors of our intended slavery brought to condign "punishment. I hope I shall be forgiven, if, during the debates, I "shall take the liberty of speaking again; for I am determined to "fight, inch by inch, every proposition that tends, as I think this "does, to the enslaving my country." - Lord Viscount GAGE'S Speech in 1739. Parl. Deb. Book 11th. p. 388. See MONTESQ. on Standing Armies,

A Minister declared in the House of Commons, that he "should always consider it as a part of the Constitution, that the military should "act under the civil authority." But, by order, the Commander-in-chief of the forces has precedence of a Governour, in the Province under his government. By his Majesty's order, transmitted in a letter dated the 9th of February, 1765, from the Secretary of State to the Commander-in-chief, it is declared, "that the orders of the Commander-in-chief, and under him; of the Brigadiers General, commanding in the "Northern and Southern Departments, in all military affairs, shall be "supreme, and must be obeyed by the troops as such, in all the Civil "Governments in America: That in cases where no specifick orders "have been given by the Commander-in-chief, or by the Brigadier Gen-

In May, 1769, the House of Representatives for Massachusetts Bay, requested Governour Bernard "to give the necessary and effectual orders for the removal of the forces, by sea and land, out of the port of "Boston, and from the gate of the city, during the session of the said "Assembly." To which he answered: "Gentlemen: I have no authority over his Majesty's ships in this port, or his troops within this "town; nor can I give any orders for their removal.

FRA. BERNARD."

Thus, our Governours, the Captains General, and Commanders-in-chief, representing the Sovereign, and known to the Constitution of these Colonies, are deprived of their legal authority, in time of peace, by an order; and a perpetual dictatorial power established over us. To accomplish this great purpose, it was thought proper, during the last war, to change the mode of granting military commissions, and to pass that to the General in America, under the great seal. It is not known whether this uncommon formality has been observed with regard to the Major Generals of the respective "Districts."

* The Germans have been justly celebrated in different ages, for sagacity in promoting the arts, and for martial spirit; yet, how unhappy have they been made in a short period of time, by that single engine of arbitrary power, a standing army. Their distress was wrought up to such a degree, that thousands and tens of thousands relinquished their native country, and fled to the wildernesses of America. It was a way of thinking and acting that became them. For Germans may truly be called the fathers of Englishmen. From "Germany came their ancestors, and the first principles of the Constitution." Germans, therefore, seem to be more justly entitled than other foreigners to the blessings of that Constitution. To enjoy them in this free country as it then was, they came here; but now unfortunately find arbitrary Government and a standing army pursuing them even into these woods. Numbers of them now in these Provinces have served in the armies of the several Princes in Germany, and know well, that one reason with their rulers for putting swords into their hands, was to cut the throats of their own fathers, brothers, and relations, who should attempt to relieve themselves from any part of their miseries. Their former Sovereigns are now completing, it is said, the cruel tragedy of tyranny. They will not suffer those they have made wretched, to seek for a more tolerable existence in some other part of the globe. It is their duty, say these unfeeling Princes, "to be unhappy, and to renounce all hopes of relief." They are prohibited from leaving their country. Those who have already escaped into these Colonies, remember what they and their parents suffered in Germany. The old tell the stories of their oppressions to the younger; and however improbable it may appear on the other side of the Atlantic, it is asserted by persons well acquainted with this people, that they have very little inclination to suffer the same cruelties again in America.

‡‡ If Great Britain has a constitutional power to prohibit us from slitting iron as she has done, she has a constitutional power, that is, a right, to prohibit us from raising grain for our food; for the principle that supports one law, will the other. What a vast demand must be made on her for this article, and how firmly would her dominion be established, if we depended wholly on her for our daily bread? Her modern writers consider Colonists as staves of Great Britain, shut up in a large work-house, constantly kept at labour in procuring such materials as she prescribes, and wearing such clothes as she sends. Should she ever adopt the measure above mentioned, and, on our complaints of grievances, withhold food from us; what then? Why, then, on her principle, it would be right to be starved. To say in such case we should have any other right, would be a "traitorous and rebellious denial of the Supreme Legislature of Great Britain:" for she "has power of right to bind us by statutes in all cases whatsoever."

Let not any person object that the supposition of such a case is the suggestion of fancy. The Carthaginians, those masters in the sublime politics of commerce - politicks that have produced so many dreadful scenes upon earth, forbade the Sardinians to raise corn, in order to keep them in due subjection. The East Indies, St. Vincents, the proceedings at Rhode-Island, and the Boston Act, &c., give rise to many alarming apprehensions in America. There are few men on this Continent would be as much surprised at that measure; as at some late measures. The beginning justifies any apprehensions. Power debauches the affections. The improbability of cases happening, is no in our Provincial Legislatures, the best judges in all cases what suits us - founded on the immutable and unalienable rights of human nature, the first principles of the Constitution, and charters and grants made by the Crown, at periods when the power of making them was universally acknowledged by the parent state, a power since frequently recognised by her, subject to the controul of the answer in such important considerations. The laudable spirit of commerce may be inflamed into rapacity and cruelty in a Nation, as well as in an individual. We must regard the power claimed by Great Britain, not solely her will or contingencies depending on that will. If she affixes no limits to her power, why should we affix any to its effects? "I know," says Mr. Hoadly, "it is next to impossible that any such case should happen; but if such things be said, and such cases, in effect, be put, it is necessary to speak upon the supposition of such cases, And, methinks it is but a narrow-spirited proceeding in us to go just no farther in our notions, than a compliance with our own present condition forceth us; to exclude from our regard the condition of all other Nations, and all cases, but just that which hath happened last of all in our own."

That the plan of governing us by withholding necessities of life has been considered, and in what light Colonies are viewed at home, the following extracts will partly show:

"It appears that the original and grand evil attending them, was the settlement of so considerable a part in a climate incapable of yielding the commodities wanting in Britain."

"These Northern Colonies, long after their disadvantageous nature was known, were continually increased by fresh migrations from Europe; which, as I before observed, ought totally to have been prevented, and such migrations have been encouraged only to the beneficial Colonies."

"Since the late war, Britain laid the trade of the Colonies under some very strict regulations, which certainly cut off many inlets by which they formerly received much Spanish and Portuguese coin. The principle upon which such regulations were formed, of securing to the mother country alone all matters of commerce, I have already attempted to prove just and necessary."

"When once their supernumeraries are become manufacturers, it will require more than British policy to convert them into planters."

"I must think this point of such great importance, as to extend probably to the annihilation of manufactures in our Colonies. To conclude, it is in the proposed settlement on the Ohio we must first look for hemp and flax; as such great numbers of the old American farmers have removed and settled there, which may, in those fertile tracts, be cultivated in such abundance as to enable us to undersell all the world, as well as supply our own consumption. It is on those high, dry, and healthy lands, that vineyards will be cultivated to the best advantage, as many of those hills contain quarries of stone, and not in the unhealthy sea-coasts of our present Colonies. To these we should bring the settlers from Europe, or, at least, suffer none to go north of New-York; by which means our numbers would increase in those parts where it is our interest they should increase; and the report of the settlers from the new Colony on the Ohio, would be a constant drain of people from our unprofitable Northern ones; by which means, they would, in future times, as well as the present, be prevented from extending their manufactures."

"What I shall therefore venture to propose, is, that the Government, through the means of a few merchants acquainted with the American trade, that can be tolerably depended upon, should establish factors at Boston, Philadelphia, New-York, and a few other ports, for the sale of such cargoes of British manufactures as should be consigned to them; and to consist of such particularly as were most manufactured in the Province, with directions immediately and continually to undersell all such Colony manufactures. By this means, the operation of the succeeding measures, from the number of hands rendered idle, would be so much easier to be executed."

"The ships which carried out such cargoes should be large bulky ones, of eight, nine hundred, and one thousand tons burden, for the sake of bringing large quantities of deals, &c., back, at a less proportionate expense; and, previous to their arrival in America, cargoes of these should be ready for them. The Colonists should be engaged to work their iron mines, and get the product ready in bars, &c., and vast quantities of deals and squared timber ready for loading the ships. All which, on the certain and immediate prospect of a sale, would easily be effected; as it is well known they have, more than once, proved to the Legislature that they could supply all Europe with these articles, had they but the demand."

"But I laid it down as a rule to proceed upon, that trade, fishing, and manufacturing, were put an entire stop to among the Colonies."

"If the Sugar Islands contained ten millions of people, as destitute of necessities as they are at present, Britain would be as sure of their allegiance as she is at present, provided no Power more formidable than herself at sea arose for their protection."

"The first dependence of our Colonies, as well as all their People, is, to change the terms a little upon corn worked into bread, and iron wrought into implements; or, in other words, it is upon necessary agriculture and necessary manufactures; for a people who do not possess these, to think of throwing off the yoke of another who supplies them with them, is an absurd idea. This is precisely the case with our Sugar Islands. Let us suppose the Continental Colonies to be as happy in the necessary agriculture, as they really are, but to be absolutely Without manufactures could they throw off their allegiance to Britain, be their numbers what they would? No, certainly; for that is nothing more than supposing they should throw off their allegiance to hoes and spades, and coats and shoes, which is absurd to imagine. Can any one imagine that a rebellion can be carried on among a people, when the greatest success must be attended with the loss of half the necessities of life!"

"The following, among other effects, relative to this point, would be the consequence of the plan sketched out in the preceding section:

"The people would depend on Britain for those necessities of life which result from manufactures."

"The cultivation of staples would be more profitable to them than any other employment whatever."

Crown, as by law established, is vested the exclusive right of internal legislation."

Such a right vested in Parliament, would place us exactly in the same situation, the people of Great Britain would have been reduced to, had James the First and his family succeeded in their scheme of arbitrary power. Changing the word Stuarts for Parliament, and Britons

"The sale of those staples would depend on Britain."

"The people would all be spread over an immense country as planters; none of them collected in towns."

"To which circumstances I shall add, in respect to Britain's further policy,

"That she should abide by the boundaries fixed already to the old Colonies, that of the rivers' heads; and all further settling to be in new Colonies, wherever they were traced."

"That she should keep the inland navigation of the Continent; that is, of all the great lakes and navigable rivers, to herself, and not suffer any sets of men to navigate them, and thereby communicate from one part of the Continent to another."

"That she should never suffer any Provincial troops or militia to be raised, but reserve entirely to herself the defence of the frontiers."

"That she should throw what obstacles she could, upon all plans of communication from Colony to Colony, or conveniences of speedy removals from place to place."

"That in proportion as any Colony declined in staples, and threatened not to be able to produce a sufficiency of them, the inhabitants should receive such encouragement to leave it, as more than to drain its natural increase unless new staples were discovered for it."

"This is now the case with those I have distinguished by the title of the Northern Colonies; insomuch that Nova-Scotia, Canada, New England, New-York, New-Jersey, and Pennsylvania, would be nearly of as much benefit to this country buried in the ocean as they are at present."

Political Essays.
The conduct of Administration corresponds exactly with the sentiments of this modern writer, and with the measures pursued by Philip the Second of Spain against the Low Countries. The reasons given by one in Administration for attacking the Colonies, seem to be copied (with some small alterations on account of religion) from the famous advice of the unfeeling Duke of Alva, that "specie retinendæ dignitatis, cost his master his glory, his happiness, and his Provinces - and sunk his country into distresses, from which she is not yet recovered. "At vero dux Albanus arma et ultionem, contendebat, unicum læsæ auctoritatis principis remedium. Quippe ceteris artibus ac diuturna facilitate nihil aliud effectum, quam ut regi obedientia, rebellibus timor adimeretur. Postulasse principio Belgas, ut Hispanus è provincia miles excederet: id scilicet unum deesse constantes ad quietem populum. Num propterea, impetrata externorum missione quies visso? An potius et confidentius efflagitasse, ut - clavo deturbaretur Granvellanus. At unius forte naufragio complacatos fuisse ventos. - "Quin immo ut licentia crescit facilius - homines à nostra facilitate securi - libellis deridiculis, flagitiosis conspirationibus - improbis palam carminibus - minis - precibus armatis - extorserent quod avergent - obstinatis inverecunde legationibus Hispaniam fatigaret - Hic quoque visum clementiæ principis aliqua indigna poscentibus indulgere. Enim vero quid ex illa indulgentia relatum, nisi ut votorum ubique compotes, non parendo: subditos sese obliviscerentur, obsequium dedicerent, atque exuta principis reverentia, communicata provinciarum defectione, tanquam culpæ societate tutiores, humana omnia contrectatæ semel libertati post haberent. Nunc vero non unius civitatis, sed provinciarum consensu peccatum esse in regem. "Nec quia rebelles in presentia conquiescant, minus ferociæ animis inesse, resumpturos utique vires, ubi rectum ultionis abjecerint. Sic ille pronus ad asperiora, disserebat - Strada de belle Belgico, lib. 6.
It is evident, that the British Ministers have diligently studied Strada, and the other authors who have transmitted to posterity the pleasing and instructive annals of Philippick policy, as every measure they have taken, is founded on a precedent set by that celebrated school of humanity."

Alva is the favourite master - on his conduct they keep their eyes steadily and reverently fixed, and it may truly be said - they follow him with no unequal steps. Great, good, and wise men! whom some future Puffendorf or Temple will duly celebrate."

"In 1564, Granville was removed from the Council, to appease the people. Their joy was short-lived; for as the same measures were pursued, it began to be said publicly, that though his body was removed from, his spirit still influenced, the Council. Upon application for a relaxation of the edicts, it was said, that moderation had only made matters worse, and the observation of them was again enjoined upon more severe penalties than before."

"At length an Association was entered into, for mutually defending each other. This being signed by above four hundred persons of quality, who all protested, that they meant nothing but the honour of God, the glory of the King, and the good of their country, they met and petitioned, that the Proclamation might be revoked: but the King would consent to no mitigation. Good advice was given to him. But the Duke D'Alva's violent Council, who proposed the entire abolishment of the liberties of the Provinces,‡ was most pleasing, and followed. The cruel Duke was sent into the Low Countries with a powerful army. The Counts D'Egmont and Horn were immediately seized, on a pretence that they had, underhand, spirited up the people's disaffection. They were afterwards executed. All who had signed the Association or Petition were declared guilty of ¶ high treason, and answerable for what had happened. A Council, called, from its cruel proceedings, II the Council of Blood, was erected for trying the accused, from which there was no appeal. (Note well) Alva himself tried the

But to ensure so great a point, no new towns should be suffered, nor even villages; than which nothing could be easier to manage; nor would they be any where necessary but by the magazines of naval stores for loading ships. All possible decrease of numbers in the cities already in being, should be effected. So systematically absurd is it to found towns and cities, as Britain has hitherto constantly done, in all the Colonies she has formed."

for Americans, the arguments of the illustrious patriots of those times, to whose virtues their descendants owe every blessing they now enjoy, apply with inexpressible force and appositeness, in maintenance of our cause, and in refutation of the pretensions set up by their too forgetful posterity, over their unhappy Colonists. Confiding in the undeniable truth of this single position, that, "to live by accused in their own country, where their friends and witnesses might attend them; where the pains of death itself might be mitigated, by seeing with their dying eyes, that they expired beloved and lamented. Here, the disciples exceed their tutor. This is too great a consolation to be indulged to a Colonist. He must be carried three thousand miles across the ocean - that he may not only die, but be insulted in his last moments, with the mockery of a trial, where the clearest innocence stands no chance of acquittal, and with the formality of a sentence founded on a statute past before the Colonies existed. On the approach of the army, the Prince of Orange and other Lords fled; and being summoned to appear before the Council, in default thereof, were condemned, and their estates confiscated. Alva treated all, the innocent and guilty, with such rigour, that it gave rise to the following saying of a Spanish officer - "Hæretici fraxerunt templa; boni nihil faxerunt contra; ergo omnes debent patibulari."- PUFFENDORF'S Introduction - Art. "SPAIN" and "the UNITED PROVINCES."

Sir William Temple's account of the disturbances in the Low Countries agrees exactly with the foregoing extracted out of Puffendorf; by which it will appear with what a surprising exactness of resemblance the affairs of the Colonies have been carried on by Administration.

"The war with France being concluded, it was resolved to keep up the troops in these Provinces, and that the states should support them, which by a long course of war, was grown customary. When Philip would have put Spanish garrisons into some of their towns, and for the sake of their admitting them quietly, gave the command to the Prince of Orange and Court Egmont, they told him plainly, that all the brave stands they had made against the power of France, availed them but little, if they must at last be enslaved by another foreign Power."- Puffendorf.

"The hatred of the people, the insolence of the troops, with the charge of their support, made them looked upon by the inhabitants in general, as the instruments of their oppression and slavery, and not of their defence, when a general peace had left them no enemies: And therefore the states began here their complaints, with a general consent and passion of all the nobles, as well as towns and country. And upon the delays that were contrived, or fell in, the states first refused to raise any more moneys, either for the Spaniards' pay, or their own standing troops; and the people ran into so great despair, that in Zealand they absolutely gave over the working at their dikes, suffering the sea to gain every tide upon the country, and resolving, as they said, rather to be devoured by that element than by the Spanish soldiers; so that at last the King consented to their removal. Another grievance was the appointment of new judges * end those absolutely depending on the King, &c"

Granville strained up to the highest his master's authority and the execution of his commands, while the Provinces were resolute to protect the liberties of their country, against the admission of this new and arbitrary judicature, unknown to all ancient laws and customs of their country. The King at last consented to Granville's recess. Then all noise of discontent and tumult was appeased. But quickly after the same Councils were resumed. The disturbances then grew greater than before. But by the prudence and moderation of the Duchess of Parma, the Governess, the whole estate of the Provinces was restored to its former peace. This Duchess, and the Duke of Feria, one of the chief Ministers in Spain, thought and advised, that the then present peace of the Provinces ought not to be invaded by new occasions, nor the royal authority lessened, by the King being made a party in a war upon his subjects. But the King was immovable; he despatched Alva into the Low Country at the head of ten thousand veteran Spanish and Italian troops, under the command of the best officers, which the wars of Charles the Fifth, or Philip the Second, had bred up in Europe; which, with two thousand more in the Provinces, under the command of so old and renowned a General as the Duke of Alva, made up a force, which nothing in the Low Countries could look in the face with other eyes than of astonishment, submission, or despair. This power was for the assistance of the Governess, the execution of the laws, the suppressing and punishing all who had been authors or fomenters of the late disturbances, † On his arrival the Governess having obtained leave of the King, retired out of the Province. The Duke of Alva was invested in the Government with powers never before given to any Governour. A Council, called the Council of Blood, ‡ was erected for the trial of all crimes committed against the King's authority. The towns stomached the breach of their Charters, the people of their liberties, the knights of the golden fleece the Charters of their order, by these new and odious courts of judicature; all complain of the disuse of the states, ¶ of the introduction of armies, but all in vain, The King was constant to what he had determined. Alva was in his nature cruel and inexorable. The new army was fierce and brave, and desirous of nothing so much as a rebellion in the country. The people were enraged, but awed and unheaded. All was seizure and process; - confiscation and imprisonment; - blood and horror; - insolence and dejection; punishments executed, and meditated revenge. The smaller branches were lopt off apace; the great ones were longer a hewing down. Counts Egmont and Horn lasted several months; but at length, in spite of all their services to Charles the Fifth and to Philip, as well as of their new merits in quieting of the Provinces, and of so great supplications and intercessions as were made in their favour, both in Spain and Flanders, they were publicly beheaded at Brussels, which seemed to break all patience in the people; and by their end to give those commotions a one man's * will, became the cause of all men's misery," they generously suffered. And the worthy Bishop before mentioned, who, for strenuously asserting the principles of the Revolution, received the unusual honour of being recommended by a House of Commons to the Sovereign for preferment, has justly observed, that "misery is the same whether it comes from the hands of many or of one."

"It could not appear tolerable to him (meaning Mr. Hooker, author of the Ecclesiastical Policy) to lodge in "the Governours of any Society an unlimited authority, to "annul and alter the Constitution of the Government, as "they should see fit, and to leave to the governed the "privilege only of absolute subjection in all such alterations;"† or, to use the Parliamentary phrase, "in all cases whatsoever."

From what source can Great Britain derive a single reason to support her claim to such an enormous power? That it is consistent with the laws of nature, no reasonable man will pretend. That it contradicts the precepts of Christianity, is evident. For she strives to force upon us beginning, which cost Europe so much blood, and Spain a great part of the Low Country Provinces. The war begun, Alva had at first great success. Moved with no rumours, terrified with no threats from a broken and unarmed people, and thinking no measures or forms were any more necessary to be observed in the Provinces, he pretends greater sums are necessary for the pay and reward of his victorious troops than were annually granted upon the King's request by the states of the Provinces: (Note. Here our Ministers have again improved upon Philip's; for they have taxed us, without making requests.) * And therefore demands a general tax of the hundredth part of every man's estate, to be raised at once: and for the future, the twentieth of all immoveable, and the eighteenth of all that was sold. The states with much reluctance consent to the first, as a thing that ended at once. They petition the King, but without redress; draw out the year in contests, sometimes stomachful, sometimes humble with the Governour: till the Duke, impatient of delay, causes the edict without consent of the states, to be published. The people refuse to pay; the soldiers begin to levy by force; the townsmen all shut up their shops; the people in the country forbear the market; so as not so much as bread and meat is to be bought in the town The Duke is enraged; calls the soldiers to arms; and commands several of the inhabitants, who refused the payments, to be hanged that very night upon their sign posts; which moves not the obstinacy of the people. And now the officers and the guards are ready to begin the executions, when news comes to town of the taking of the Briel, by the Gueses,† and of the expectation that had given of a sudden revolt in the Province of Holland.

"This unexpected blow struck the Duke of Alva, and foreseeing the consequences of it, because he knew the stubble was dry, and now he found the fire was fallen in, he thought it an ill time to make an end of the tragedy in Brabant, whilst a new scene was opened in Holland; and so giving over for the present his taxes and executions, applies his thoughts to the suppression of this new enemy that broke in upon him from the sea. And now began that great commotion in the Low Countries, which never ended but in the loss of those Provinces, when the death of the Royal Government gave life to a new Commonwealth."- Observat. upon the United Provinces of the NETHERLANDS, by Sir WILLIAM TEMPLE,

Philip and his junto of Cabinet Ministers thought themselves no doubt very wise, and politick as so many Machiavels. But what says, and will say mankind as long as the memory of those events is preserved? That their counsels were despicable, their motives detestable, and their minds like those described by the Bishop of Lerida, that exactly resembled the horns of the cows in his country - little, "hard and crooked."

* Another advantage the British Ministers have over the Spanish in depth of policy, is very remarkable. Spain was a great Empire. The Low Countries a mere speck, compared with it. Spain was not a maritime state that depended upon them for the supply of her revenue. Had they been sunk in the sea, she would scarcely have felt the loss. Her prospect of success was almost certain. France, her then inveterate enemy, exhausted by a civil war and divided into two powerful parties. Every circumstance is directly the reverse to Great Britain in her present contest with the Colonies. † Beggars. - They were called so in contempt, when they petitioned. The people thereupon assumed that name, perhaps to keep up the memory of an insult occasioned by their loyalty.

The whole country of the seven United Provinces is not as large as one half of Pennsylvania; and when they began their contest with Philip the Second, for their liberty, contained about as many inhabitants as are now in the Province of Massachusetts Bay. Philip's Empire then comprehended in Europe, all Spain and Portugal, the two Sicilies, and such Provinces of the Low Countries as adhered to him - many Islands of importance in the Mediterranean - the Milanese and many other very valuable territories in Italy and elsewhere. - In Africa and Asia, all the Dominions belonging to Spain and Portugal - in America the immense countries subject to those two Kingdoms, with all their treasures and yet unexhausted mines, and the Spanish West Indies. His armies were numerous and veteran, excellently officered, and commanded by the most renowned Generals. So great was their force, that during the war, in the Low Countries; his Commander-in-chief, the Prince of Parma, marched twice into France, and obliged that great General and glorious King, Henry the Fourth, to raise at one time the siege at Paris, and at another, that of Roan. So considerable was the naval power of Philip, that in the midst of the same wars, he fitted out his dreadful Armada to invade England. Yet seven little Provinces, or countries, as we should call them, inspired by one generous resolution, "To die free, rather than to live slaves," not only baffled, but brought down into the dust, that enormous power, that had contended for universal Empire, and for half a century was the terror of the world. Such an amazing change indeed took place, that those Provinces afterwards actually protected Spain against the power of France.

terms, which she would judge to be intolerably severe and cruel, if imposed on herself. "Virtual representation" is too ridiculous to be regarded. The necessity of a supreme sovereign Legislature, internally superintending the whole Empire, is a notion equally unjust and dangerous. "The pretence" says Mr. Justice Blackstone, speaking of James the First's reign, "for which arbitrary measures was no other than the tyrant's plea of the necessity of unlimited powers, works of evident utility to the publick, the supreme reason above all reasons, which is the salvation of the King's lands and people." This was not the doctrine of James only. His son unhappily inherited it from him. On this flimsy foundation was built the claim of ship money, &c. Nor were there wanting men, who could argue, from the Courtly text, that Parliaments were too stupid or too factious, to grant money to the Crown, when it was their interest and their duty to do so. This argument, however, was fully refuted, and slept above a century in proper contempt, till the posterity of those who had overthrown it, thought fit to revive the exploded absurdity. Trifling as the pretence was, yet it might much more properly be urged in favour of a single person, than of a multitude. The counsels of a Monarch may be more secret. His measures more quick. In passing an Act of Parliament for all the Colonies, as many men are consulted, if not more, than need be consulted, in obtaining the assent of every Legislature on the Continent. If it is a good argument for Parliaments, it is a better against them. It therefore proves nothing but its own futility. The supposed advantages of such a power could never be attained but by the destruction of † real benefits, evidenced by facts to exist without it. The Swiss Cantons, and the United Provinces, are combinations of independent states. The voice of each must be given. The instance of these Colonies may be added: for stating the case, that no act of internal legislation over them had ever been passed by Great Britain, her wisest statesmen would be perplexed to show, that she or the Colonies would have been less flourishing than they now are. What benefits such a power may produce hereafter, time will discover. But the Colonies are not dependent on Great Britain, it is said, if she has not a supreme unlimited Legislature over them. "I would ask these loyal subjects of the King," says the author of a celebrated invective against us, "what King it is they profess themselves to be the loyal subjects of? It cannot be his present most gracious Majesty, George the Third, King of Great Britain, for his title is founded on an Act of Parliament, and they will not surely acknowledge that Parliament can give them a King, which is of all others, the highest act of sovereignty, when they deny it to have power to tax or bind them in any other case; and I do not recollect that there is any Act of Assembly, in any of the Colonies,

* With such smooth words may the most dreadful designs be glossed over. "There are some men who call evil, good, and bitter, sweet. - justice is now called popularity and facton." Parl. Hist. 8. 193.

A man shall not unprofitably spend his contemplation, that upon tiffs occasion considers the method of God's justice (a method terribly remarkable in many passages, and upon many persons, which we shall be compelled to remember in this discourse), that the same principles, and the same application of those principles, should be used to the wresting all sovereign power from the Crown, which the Crown had a little before made use of for the extending its authority and power beyond its bounds, to the prejudice of the just rights of the subject. A supposed necessity was then thought ground enough to create a power, and a bare averment of that necessity to beget a practice to impose what tax they thought convenient upon the subject, by writs of ship money never before known; and a supposed necessity now, and a bare averment of that necessity, is as confidently, and more fatally, concluded a good ground to exclude the Crown from the use of any power, by an ordinance never before heard of, and the same maxim of "salus populi suprema lex," which has been used to the infringing the liberty of the one, made use of for destroying the rights of the other." - Lord CLARENDON'S Hist. b. v. p. 54.

† Thus the Patriots of Charles's days argued: "It is not, that ship money hath been levied against us, but it is, that thereby ship money is claimed, which is the gilt and earnest penny of all we have: it is not, that our persons have been imprisoned for the payment of ship money, but that our persons and lives are, upon the same ground of law, delivered up to will and pleasure. It is, that our birthright is destroyed, and that there hath been an endeavour to reduce us to a lower state than villa nage. The Lord might tax his villain de haut et de basse, might imprison him, but his life was his own; the law secured him that." - Lord CLARENDON.

* "The Controversy between Great Britain and her Colonies Reviewed." The learned gentleman who wrote this piece, has thought proper to quit his argument, step out of his way, personally abuse, and severely attack the writer of the "Farmer's Letters." His principal objections are the following, and the answers here given may perhaps be sufficient to show with what force his objections are generally urged. First. He says, "the writer of the Letters tells us that the drawbacks which are allowed on some articles upon their exportation from England amount to more money than all the duties together which are laid upon them on their arrival in the Colonies" will produce. I believe it is the first time that the Colonies of any state have complained of the injustice of the mother country in laying taxes upon them, which were not sufficiently heavy, nor was it ever before discovered that the proper means to redress the grievances of any people, were to increase their taxes." Page 16. Answer: The truth of the assertion in the Letters is not denied. It is assumed by the author of "The Controversy," as the foundation of his argument. If then, Parliament would have raised more money, "by stopping the drawbacks, than by laying the duties to be paid in the Colonies," why were they laid? From respect for Parliament it must be supposed, they were laid for some purpose. It was not for the sake of the money. For what then? To establish a precedent for taxing the Colonies, says the writer of the Letters. The author of "The Controversy" does not deny it; but enters into a dissertation upon the more and the less, which is not the point in question. Second. The writer of the Letters says, that, an Act of Parliament commanding us to do a certain thing, if it has any validity is a tax upon us, for the expense * that accrues in complying with it. In reply to this the author of "The Controversy" enumerates many instances of sovereignty subjecting the Colonies to expense, which he supposes may be legally exercised within the Colonies "by Act of Parliament." Pages 23, 24. Answer: The propriety of this supposition is denied, and remains to be proved. "Absurdities and contradictions" are plentifully attributed to the writer of the Letters, because he will not acknowledge, that the power of Parliament "to regulate trade, and preserve the connection of the whole Empire in due order," involves in it a power to "tax the Colonies," or "to put them to any expense," Parliament shall please. A person of such sagacity, as the author of "The Controversy," might plainly have perceived, if his resentment had not prejudiced his candour, that the writer of the Letters was unwilling to give up any point, which he then thought essential to the freedom and welfare of his country, and at the same time was † unwilling to propose any new subject of dispute. Justly has the author of "The Controversy" observed that "it would be endless to trace this doctrine of taxes through all the consequences." Page 23. Third. The writer of the Letters says, "we are as much dependent on Great Britain as a perfectly free people can be on another." On this the author of "The Controversy" kindly observes, that - "it is a pity the learned editor" (the English editor, it is supposed) has not given the publick a dissertation on that most ingenious and instructive passage." Page 25. Answer: American understandings discover no inconsistency in the idea of "a state being dependent, and yet perfectly free," and their temper is so moderate that they would be content with that degree of freedom, which is compatible with a dependence. If the proposition puzzles British understandings, it is presumed to be, because Britons will not give themselves the trouble to think of any dependence, but of such, as is destructive of all freedom; though they themselves are dependent in some measure on others. Fourth. The writer of the Letters says, "if money be raised upon us by others without our consent, for our defence, those who are the judges in levying it, must also be the judges in applying it," [Of consequence, the money, said to be taken from us for our defence, may be employed, to our injury.

† Id. p. 17.

* This sentence related to the dissolution or the Assembly of New-York, for not complying with the Act of Parliament for not supplying the troops. Last session of Parliament an Act was passed for the more commodious Quartering or the troops in America. It is not yet come over; but deserves the attention of the Colonists, even if it has not the remarkable features, that distinguish the productions of the last session.

† "If any person shall imagine that he discovers in these Letters, the least dislike of the dependence of these Colonies on Great Britain, I beg that such person will not form any judgment on particular expressions, but will consider the tenor of all the letters taken together. In that case, I flatter myself, that every unprejudiced reader will be convinced that the true interests of Great Britain are as dear to me, as they ought to be to every good subject.

"If I am an enthusiast in any thing, it is in my zeal for the perpetual dependence of these Colonies on their mother country - a dependence founded on mutual benefits, the continuance of which can be secured only by mutual affections. Therefore it is, that with extreme apprehension I view the smallest seeds of discontent, which are unwearily scattered abroad. Fifty or sixty years will make astonishing alterations in these Colonies; and this consideration should render it the business of Great Britain more and more to cultivate our good disposition towards her: but the misfortune is, that those great men, who are wrestling for power at home, think themselves very slightly interested in the prosperity of their country fifty or sixty years hence, but are deeply concerned in blowing up a popular clamour for supposed immediate advantages.

"For my part, I regard Great Britain as a bulwark, happily fixed between these Colonies and the powerful Nations of Europe. That Kingdom remaining safe, we, under its protection, enjoying peace, may diffuse the blessings of religion, science, and liberty, through remote wildernesses. It is therefore incontestably our duty, and our interest, to support the strength of Great Britain. When confiding in that strength, she begins to forget from whence it arose, it will be an easy thing to show the source. She may readily be reminded of the loud alarm spread among her merchants and tradesmen, by the universal association of these Colonies, at the time or the Stamp Act, not to import any of her manufactures.

"In the year 1718, the Russians and Swedes, entered into an agreement not to suffer Great Britain to export any naval stores from their Dominions, but in Russian or Swedish ships, and at their own prices. Great Britain was distressed. Pitch and tar rose to three pounds a barrel. At length she thought of getting these articles from the Colonies; and the attempt succeeding, they fell down to fifteen shillings. In the year 1755, Great Britain was threatened with an invasion. An easterly wind blowing for six weeks, she could not man her fleet, and the whole Nation was thrown into the utmost consternation. The wind changed. The American ships arrived. The fleet sailed in ten or fifteen days. There are some other reflections on this subject, worthy of the most deliberate attention of the British Parliament; but they are of such a nature, that I do not choose to mention them publicly. I thought it my duty, in the year 1765, while the Stamp Act was in suspense, to write my sentiments to a gentleman of great influence at home, who afterwards distinguished himself, by espousing our cause, in the debates concerning the repeal of that Act." - Farmer's Letter, xii. Page 100.

If the author of "The Controversy" had seen the letter above referred to, he would have found, that the difference between the prerogative in Great Britain and America, and the exercise of internal legislation by Parliament over the Colonies, with some other points therein mentioned, were represented in the strongest terms the writer of the Letters could use, as unjust, and certainly tending in a few years to produce the deepest discontents. The time is at length come when silence in America on these subjects would be stupid or criminal.

without any such "Act of Assembly" none of the Colonists ever rebelled. What Act of Parliament is here meant? Surely not the eleventh of Henry the Seventh, chapter the first, in favour of a King de facto. Probably the twelfth and thirteenth of William the Third, chapter the second, "for the further limitation of the Crown, &c," is intended. And is it imagined that the words "Dominions and Territories thereunto belonging" in that statute, form his Majesty's title to the sovereignty of these Colonies? The omission of them might have looked odd; but what force is added by their insertion? The settlement of the Crown of England includes the settlement of the Colonies, King William is mentioned - and will the gentleman venture to say, that William was not King of England and Sovereign of these Colonies, before his title was "declared" or "recognised" by "an Act of Parliament?" the gentleman slurs over this case. His zeal for the "illustrious House of Hanover would be little gratified, by inferring, that because the two Houses, with the consent of the Nation, made a King, therefore the two

We may be * chained in by a line of fortifications - obliged to pay for the building and maintaining them - and be told that they are for our defence.] With what face can we dispute the fact after having granted that those who apply the money, had a right to levy it? For surely it is much easier for their wisdom to understand how to apply it in the best manner, than how to levy it in the best manner. Besides the right of levying is of infinitely more consequence than that of applying. The people of England, who would burst out into fury if the Crown should attempt to levy money by its own authority, have always assigned to the Crown the application of money."

From the words relating to "application," the author of "The Controversy" deduces a "proof," that the writer of the Letters is very deficient in "his knowledge of the Constitution," † &c. Answer. Is this treatment generous? In such questions, ought the attack to be turned from the cause to the man? The writer of the Letters pretends not to be distinguished as a "critick on Government," nor for "justness or elegance of composition." ‡ Surely, even the author of "The Controversy" must now be convinced of his aversion to writing, as that performance, with all "the justness and elegance of its composition," knowledge of the subject handled, and constitutional learning "displayed in it," and employed to pull to pieces the reputation of the writer of the Letters, has not roused him during so many years since its publication, to make a single effort in vindication of his character. Was it imagined that every objection was just, because not replied to? Many reasons, besides a fear of encountering objections, may prevent an answer. In truth, he cannot be called a volunteer author. He never did, and never dared to write, but when the honour or interest of his country was assaulted; when duty compelled every one to contribute What assistance he could in her defence, and when he hoped the cause would draw some kind of a veil over his defects. He expected he might escape, as the Spartan youth did, with some slight censure for engaging improperly armed, but that his motive would excuse him from a severe one. How well founded the present reproach is, will now be considered. One would imagine, that a man of common sense, on reading the foregoing extract from the Letters, would understand the writer plainly to mean, by "levying," the power of "taxing;" and by "applying," the power of "employing" the money raised by taxing; or, in other terms, the actual expenditure of it. This meaning is evident, the conclusion being express, that "if others may be judges in applying money, of consequence it may be employed to our injury;" and then follow some instances in which it "may be so employed." All this is very clear. How, then, does the very ingenious gentleman open his way to the writer of the Letters to give him this violent blow? By a dexterity worthy of imitation, if justifiable. He leaves out of his quotation all the words enclosed within the last crotchet, beginning at the words "of consequence," and ending at the words "our defence," that showed, beyond a possibility of doubt, in what sense the word "applying" was used - takes no notice of the omission - imposes another sense on the word - and then insults, may it be said, over the supposed mistake of saying, "that the people of England have always assigned to the Crown the "application of money."

"What sense he or others may assign to the word "application," is not the point; but whether the word, taken in that sense which the writer of the Letters expressly annexed to it, is used with propriety by him, or whether it is used in such a manner as to "prove he is very deficient in his knowledge of the Constitution?" By that word, as he defines it, positively as language can declare any meaning, he intends the actual expenditure and "employment" of money. And is the reader to be tricked out of that definition, and another sense shuffled in, merely to impeach a man's character by slight of pen?

Has not the Constitution "assigned to the Crown the actual expenditure and employment of money?" Is not this power part of the Executive? Does not Mr. Justice Blackstone mention this power to show the vast influence of the Crown? He particularly takes notice of it, with respect to the army, in these expressions: "Paid, indeed, ultimately by the people, but immediately by the Crown; raised by the Crown, officered by the Crown, commanded by the Crown." II

* The probability or this measure taking place, is confirmed by the Canada Bill, a political device so extraordinary, as to excite surprise even in those Colonists who live in the year 1774. By this Bill, it is said, the Legislative power is lodged in the Governor and a few men, not less than seventeen, nor more than twenty-three, appointed and removable by the Crown; and the Government becomes wholly military. Trials by jury are abolished, though multitudes of English subjects settled there on the encouragement given by the King's Proclamation in 1763. The French laws are restored and all the country on the back of these Colonies is added to Canada, and put under the same military Government. This is indeed to be "chained in." Nothing is wanting to complete the plan, but our money, to defray the expense of erecting strong holds among our woods and mountains and to bribe our Indians; and then the expression of "beating our swords into plough-shares" will be reversed in an extraordinary manner; for "our plough-shares" will furnish the very "swords" that are to cut our own throats.

Houses can make laws. Yet that conclusion would be as justifiable as this - that the assent of the Colonies to an election of a King by the two Houses, or to the limitation of the Crown by Act of Parliament, proves a right in Parliament to bind the Colonies by statutes "in all cases whatsoever." In such great points, the conduct of a people is influenced solely by a regard for their freedom and happiness. The Colonies have no other head than the King of England. The person, who by the laws of that Realm is King of that Realm, is our King.

A dependence † on the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain, is a novelty - a dreadful novelty. It may be compared to the engine invented by the Greeks for the destruction of Troy. ‡ It is full of armed enemies, and the walls of the Constitution must be thrown down before it can be introduced among us.

When it is considered that the King as King of England has a power in making laws - the power of executing them - of finally determining on appeals - of calling upon us for supplies in times of war or any emergency - that every branch of the prerogative binds us, as the subjects are bound thereby in England - and that all our intercourse

Is not the word "application," used here, too, not only properly, as defined, but properly in a constitutional sense?

True it is, that the word is sometimes used as synonymous with appropriation, though this latter seems to be the fittest word to mean the designation of money to particular purposes in acts of Parliament. Could it be possible, that the author of "The Controversy" should imagine the writer of the Letters could be ignorant of such designation or appropriation of money by Parliament, when one can scarcely open a book of Statutes without observing them? Parliament may accommodate grants of money to public necessities, and may call officers of the Crown to account for money; but those powers no more prove the actual expenditure and employment of money to belong to Parliament, than the power of calling officers of the Crown to account for injurious leagues, or declarations of war, proves the power of Parliament to make leagues or to declare war. Besides, it being contended against the Colonies, that the "sovereign power is lodged in King, Lords and Commons, the same persons may tax and expend, to what excess, and in what manner they please, while the Colonies will have no kind of control over them; and that such an union of those powers is unconstitutional and dangerous to the Colonies in extreme, was the point the writer of the Letter offensively ventured to insist on.

Exactly in the sense here contended for, are the words "appropriation" and "application" used in stone of the best authorities. Bishop Ellys, in his Tracts on Liberty, page 31, says: "The Parliament, at present, in granting money, does, for the most part, appropriate it to particular services, whereby the application of it is more effectually secured." "When any aids are given, the Commons only do judge of the necessities of the Crown, which cannot be otherwise made manifest to them than by inquiring how the money which hath been granted, and revenue of the Crown, is expended and applied." * "Out of the aids given by Parliament, (which, by the law of England, are appropriated, and ought to have been employed in the common profit of the whole Realm,) many large sums of money, during the times of such heavy taxes upon the people, have been diverted under the head of secret services, and for salaries, bounties, and pensions," &c. †

Some other unfairnesses there are in this famous piece, that need only be viewed, to be refuted; but of which, it may be said, if a "precedent" established by the respectable gentleman himself, can procure pardon for the expression, that "they are not entitled to notice." How could he venture to assert, as he does, that "the purpose of the Letters was to excite resentment in the Colonies against their parent country, and to push them on to a separation from her." The Letters prove the contrary. Few men have expressed a warmer zeal for the connection than the writer of them! Yet his reputation is to be attacked on every account, and a charge even of disloyalty directly levelled against him. The author is welcome to take what other licenses he pleases in his apprehensions of the writer; but he ought not to have denied his integrity. Their intentions must stand the test of a tribunal that decides for eternity. May they then appear equally pure.

True, indeed, are those words of Lord Clarendon: "Let no honest man that is once entered into the lists, think, he can, by any skill or comportment prevent these conflicts and assaults - but let him look upon it as a purgatory he is unavoidably to pass through, and constantly performing the duties of justice, integrity, and uprightness, depend upon Providence, and time, for a vindication."

† This word, "dependence," as applied to the states connected with England, seems to be a new one. It appears to have been introduced into the language of the law, by the Commonwealth Act of 1659. A "dependence on Parliament" is still more modern. A people cannot be too cautious in guarding against such innovations. "The credentials of the Imperial Ambassadors to the states of Holland, were directed 'to our faithful and beloved.' The words seem to be very kind, but the cautious states discovered that this was the style of the Imperial Chancery in writing to the vassals of the Empire. The question was, whether the credentials should be opened? And it was urged, that a solemn embassy ought not to be disappointed, for a few trifling words. But the states resolved to send them back unopened, which they did. Other credentials were then sent, with a proper direction, and the Ambassadors were well received," - Arcana, imp. det. p. 196.

with foreigners is regulated by Parliament. Colonists may "surely" be acknowledged to speak with truth and precision, in answer to the "elegantly" expressed question - "What King it is," &c., by saying that "his most gracious Majesty George the Third" is the King of England, and, therefore, "the King" they - profess themselves to be "loyal subjects of."

We are aware of the objection, that "if the King of England is therefore King of the Colonies, they are subject to the general legislative authority of that Kingdom." The premises by no means warrant this conclusion. It is built on a mere supposition, that the Colonies are thereby acknowledged to be within the Realm, and on an incantation expected to be wrought by some magical force in those woods. To be subordinately connected with England the Colonies have contracted. To be subject to the general legislative authority of that Kingdom, they never contracted. Such a power as may be necessary to preserve this connection she has. The authority of the Sovereign, and the authority of controlling our intercourse with foreign Nations form that power. Such a power leaves the Colonies free. But a general legislative power is not a power to preserve that connection, but to distress and enslave them. If the first power cannot subsist without the last, she has no right even to the first - the Colonies were deceived in their contract - and the power must be unjust and illegal; for God has given to them a better right to preserve their liberty, than to her to destroy it. In other words, supposing King, Lords' and Commons, acting in Parliament, constitute a sovereignty over the Colonies, is that sovereignty constitutionally absolute or limited? That states without freedom should, by principle, grow out of a free state, is as impossible as that sparrows should be produced from the eggs of an eagle. The sovereignty over the Colonies must be * limited. Hesiod long since said, "half is better than the whole," and the saying never was more justly applicable than on the present occasion. Had the unhappy Charles remembered and regarded it, his private virtues might long have adorned a throne, from which his public measures precipitated him in blood. To argue on this subject from other instances of Parliamentary power, is shifting the ground. The connection of the Colonies with England, is a point of unprecedented and delicate nature. It can be compared to no other case; and to receive a just determination, it must be considered with reference to its own peculiar circumstances.† The common law extends

* "Nec regibus infinita aut libera potestas, was the Constitution of our German ancestors on the Continent, and this is not only consonant to the principles of nature, of liberty, of reason, and of society, but has always been esteemed an express part of the common law of England, even when prerogative was at the highest." - 1 Black. 233.

† The learned Judge [in Vol. 1. page 107.] says this country was not "uninhabited when discovered and planted by the English, &c., but ought to be considered as a conquered, ceded, or infidel country. "Our American plantations are principally of this latter sort, being "obtained in the last Century, either by right of conquest and driving out the natives (with what natural justice, I shall not at present inquire) or by treaties: and therefore the common law of England, as "such, has no allowance or authority there, they being no part of the "mother country, but distinct (though dependent) Dominions. They "are subject however to the control of the Parliament."

According to this doctrine, the Colonists are considered in a legal view by the parent state, "as infidels or conquered people," not as her children, with her consent, establishing societies for her benefit. Though not a single man of the "infidels or conquered" people, should now be found to reside in each Colony; yet a political contagion is communicated to Englishmen in secula seculorum, because Indians once fished in the rivers, and hunted in the woods. If this be their "condition," then, according to the law laid down by the Judge, "they are subject" not only to the control of Parliament, but the King "may alter and impose what laws he pleases."

It is not known what the learned Judge means by the word "principally." Perhaps he alludes to the ill directed humanity and justice of the first settlers of some Colonies, who purchased the lands from the natives, for valuable and satisfactory considerations. It was a very useless exercise of their virtues, for their posterity. If they had by accident settled an "uninhabited" country, the invaluable rights of the common law would have attended them; but when they dared to obtain a settlement by humanity and justice, they forfeited all rights of the common law, to the latest succeeding ages. Can this be law? Every case quoted by the Judge, it is humbly apprehended, makes a distinction between States or societies composed of English subjects, and those composed of conquered people, &c., and that this is the only distinction warrantable by those cases. That the conquerors should be considered as the conquered, the expellers of the natives as the expelled natives, and the Christian possessors and owners by fair purchases from those who had a right to sell, as the infidels no longer possessing or owning, seems to involve a confusion of ideas, little agreeing with the strength of reason that informs the common law.

It is very remarkable, how our ablest antagonists are perplexed in to Colonies; yet Mr. Justice Blackstone says, "such parts "of the law as are neither necessary nor convenient for "them, as the jurisdiction of the spiritual courts, &c., "are therefore not in force." If even the common law, in force within the Realm of England when the Colonists quitted it, is thus abridged by the peculiar circumstances of Colonies, at least equally just, and constitutional is it, that the power of making new laws within the Realm of England, should be abridged with respect to Colonies, by those peculiar circumstances.*

framing their arguments against us. Even the learned Judge does not express himself with his usual perspicuity; but the want of it is well atoned, if we, Colonists, can be thereby deprived of the benefits of the common law, and be absolutely subjected to the King; for these courtly tenets are the only consequences deducible from the curious argument that tends to involve these Colonies in the misfortunes of "conquered, ceded, or infidel countries." The "control of Parliament" is asserted to be supreme, in every case. Whether the Colonies were settled in "uninhabited countries," or in "conquered, ceded, or infidel countries," makes no difference as to that point.

Another learned gentleman has discovered, that we "are not entitled to as great a degree of freedom as Ireland." Why? "Because Ireland was a conquered country." This remark does not seem to remove the difficulty. Let us hear the point a little more explained. "Ireland it is true, was conquered, but certain concessions were made "to the people, These were the terms granted them, but England is "obliged to keep no terms with the Colonists." At every step these gentlemen take, those writers, who have contributed so much to the glory of their country, turn upon them, and directly oppose them. They at first shrink before these venerable advocates for liberty and humanity, but recollecting themselves, they distinguish and refine, in order to take away the substance of every argument, and to whittle down a Hooker and a Locke into a Lestrangle and a Filmer. After taking these liberties, they at length grow bold enough to arraign the authority of any man, even Mr. Locke himself, if his writings cannot, by all this art, be turned to their purpose.

We need not be surprised after this, that every Colonist who ventures honestly to assert, as well as he can, the cause of his native land, should be treated with little respect. The Colonies have always been on the defensive. It is hoped they will always continue so. But the author of "The Controversy" charges them with great cunning, a left handed wisdom that must disgrace any people, because they have not resisted, in places where they were not immediately attacked. "It "is the artifice of the managers, on the part of the Colonies, to avoid "general questions, and to keep back and conceal consequences, lest "the unsuspecting people of England should too soon catch the alarm "and resolve to withstand their first attempts at independency.* That is, they have acted just as the "unsuspecting people of England "have done in their controversies with the Crown. They confined themselves from time to time, to a demand of redress for the injuries offered them. This behaviour of the Colonists would, by some persons, be deemed modest and respectful. Now indeed the conduct of Administration demonstrates to us, that we must enlarge our views, and endeavour to take a prospect of all the mischiefs necessarily attending a claim of boundless power with an unbounded inclination to exercise it. The gentleman may perhaps call for fire and faggots to extirpate our political heresy; but we trust, and trust firmly, that the sense and generosity of the good people of England will discover and defeat the present plan against their liberties, as they have already so many other schemes of that tendency - that they will behold their dutiful children with compassionate love, and with just indignation those unrelenting enemies from whom they can expect no other favour, but that England "shall be the last they will devour."

The author of "The Controversy," in page 31 of his work, argues thus concerning the legislative power of Great Britain over the Colonies: "The lands in all the Colonies having therefore been clearly "shown to be part of the Dominions of Great Britain, and the possessors of them to hold them under authorities and titles derived from the "British state, Mr. Locke would require no other proof of the right of "the Legislative power of Great Britain to the obedience of the possessors of those lands; for speaking of the manner by which a man "tacitly makes himself a subject of any country or Government, he "says,"

"It is commonly supposed, that a father could oblige his posterity to "that Government of which he himself was a subject, and that his "compact held them; whereas it being only a necessary condition - annexed to the land, and the inheritance of an estate, which is under "that Government, reaches only those who will take it on that condition, and so is no natural tie or engagement, but a voluntary submission; for every man's children being by nature as free as himself "or any of his ancestors ever were, may, whilst they are in that freedom, choose what society they will join themselves to, what Commonwealth they will put themselves under; but if they will enjoy "the inheritance of their ancestors, they must take it on the same "terms their ancestors had it, and submit to all the conditions annexed "to such a possession. Whoever (says he in another place) by inheritance, purchase, permission, or otherways, enjoys any part of the "lands so annexed to, and under the government of, that Commonwealth, must take it with the condition it is under; that is, of "submitting to the Government of the Commonwealth under whose "jurisdiction it is, as far forth as any subject of it." Page 31. The ingenuity of the gentleman is here again remarkable. Mr. Locke, in his eighth chapter on Civil Government, "of the beginning of political societies," immediately before the words above mentioned "whoever by inheritance," &c., speaks of a man who "unites his person, which "was before free, to a society for the securing and regulating of property and submits to the Community those possessions which he has "or shall acquire, that do not already belong to any other Government." These words the gentleman not thinking quite to his purpose in this place, separates from the words of his quotation, and so gives Mr. Locke's conclusion without his premises. However, three pages after, he is so candid, as to give the premises without, the con-

The laws of England with respect to prerogative, and in other instances, have accommodated themselves, without alteration by statutes, to a change of circumstances, the welfare of the people so requiring. A regard for that grand object PerPetually animates the Constitution and regulates all its movements - unless unnatural obstructions interfere -

"Speritus intus alit, totamque infusa per artus
"Mens agitat molem, et magno se corpore miscet."

Another argument for the extravagant power of internal clusion. How, or why? to support this most curious distinction - that Mr. Locke in that celebrated part of his argument, where speaking of "Government taking the property of subjects,"he says, "What pro"perty have I in that, which another may by right take from me when he pleases,"* "means no more"than that the supreme legislative power has no right to take the property of others wit lout their consent "for the private use or purpose of the legislative."So that according to this construction the Constitution of a well established Government, or the freedom of a people, depends not on the great right which God has given them "of having a share in the government of themselves," whereby their property is secured, but merely on the "purpose"to which the property taken from them, without their consent, is applied by those who thus take it. And yet this gentleman has severely attacked the writer of the Letters for using the word "purpose"in a much more confined sense, in saying a "tax is an imposition "on the subject for the sole purpose of levying money."

Mr. Locke in the preceding chapter, speaking of Monarchy, says, "that absolute power purifies not men's blood. For if it he asked what "security or sense arises in such a state, against the violence and op"pression of the absolute ruler? The very question can scarce be borne. "They are ready to tell you it deserves death, only to ask after safety. "Betwixt subject and subject they will grant there must be measures, "laws, and judges, for their mutual peace and security: but as for the "ruler, he ought to be absolute, and is above all such circumstances; "because he has power to do more hurt and wrong, 'tis right when he "does it. To ask how you can be guarded from harm or injury on that "side where the strongest hand is to do it, is presently the voice of "faction and rebellion."But here our opponent may come in with another distinction. "Mr. Locke speaks here of an absolute ruler, not "of absolute rulers. Lilly proves there is the singular and plural "number. A power that Mr. Locke would have held illegal in a "Pisistratus or a Stuart, he would have held legal in the Four Hundred "of Athens, or the Parliament of Great Britain."Let the distinction be allowed its due weight. Can it be believed that such a friend to mankind, as Mr. Locke was, could ever think absolute dominion † just or legal? Would not such a sentiment directly oppose those principles his benevolence induced him to take so much pains to vindicate and establish? Would the sound of the words - "dependence"- subordination"- "within the Realm - part of the Dominions", &c., have convinced him that it was "the indispensable duty of Parlia"ment to ease the gentry and people of Great Britain, by taxing the "Colonists without their consent?"- and that it was the indispensable duty of the Colonists, on constitutional principles, to submit to such taxation? The learned say that the too rigid attention of the mind to one idea sometimes is the cause of madness. So rigid has been the attention of many heads in Great Britain to the idea of dependence, that it seems to have occasioned a kind of insanity in them; and by rumi-nating, speechifying, and enacting about it and about it, they have lost all ideas of justice, humanity, law, and Constitution, and, in short, of every quality that used to distinguish men from the rest of this creation, and Englishmen from the rest of mankind. But Mr. Locke's understanding, even in the present whirl of the political world, would have preserved him just and tenacious of his principles. The case he puts, and on which the author of "The Controversy"argues, is that of a submission to the terms of Government in a Commonwealth. The question between Great Britain and the Colonies is, what are the terms of their connection under all the circumstances of it?

It is not recollected that Mr. Locke ever insinuates that the Parliament of Great Britain might bind the people of Ireland by statutes, "in all cases whatsoever."Yet there was in his time a famous dispute concerning the authority of Parliament over that Kingdom. So far was he from favouring the claim of Parliament, that it is hoped, it can clearly be proved he favoured the other side of the question.

His friend Mr. Molineaux, in a Letter dated March 15, 1697-8, tells him of his intention to visit him, when he could get loose from business: "But this I cannot hope for till the Parliament in England "rises. I should be glad to know from you when that is expected, for "indeed they bear very hard upon us in Ireland. How justly they can "bind us without our consent and Representatives, I leave the author "of the two treatises on Government to consider"- meaning Mr. Locke's two treatises, one on Government, the other on Civil Government; though they are published also as one treatise, the first book of which is under the first title, and the second book under the second title.

Mr. Locke, in his Answer, dated April 6, 1698, says, "Amongst "other things I would be glad to talk with you about, before I die, is "that which you suggest at the bottom of the first page of your letter. "I am mightily concerned for the place you meant in the question you "say you will ask the author of the treatise you mention, and wish "extremely well to it, and would be very glad to be informed by you "what would behest for it, and debate with you the way to compose it: "but this cannot be done by letters; the subject is of too great extent, "the views too large, and the particulars too many to be so managed. "Come therefore yourself, and come as well prepared as you can. But "if you talk with others on that point there, mention not me to any "body on that subject; only let you and I try what good we can do for "those whom we wish well to; great things have sometimes been "brought about from small beginnings well laid together."

Mr. Molineaux quickly after came over from Ireland to England to see Mr. Locke.

† Absolute dominion, however placed, is so far from being one kind of civil society, that it is as inconsistent with it, as slavery is with property."- Locke on Civil Gov. p. 174.

legislation over us remains. It has been urged with great warmth against us, that "precedents"show this power is rightfully vested in Parliament.

Submission to unjust sentences proves not a right to pass them. Carelessness or regard for the peace and welfare of the community may cause the submission. Submission may sometimes be a less evil than opposition, and, therefore, a duty. In such cases it is a submission to the Divine authority, which forbids us to injure our country; not to the assumed authority on which the unjust sentences were founded. But when submission becomes inconsistent with and destructive of the publick good, the same veneration for, and duty to the Divine authority, commands us to oppose. The all-wise Creator of man impressed certain laws on his nature. A desire of happiness and of society are two of those laws. They were not intended to destroy, but to support each other. Man has therefore a right to promote the best union of both, in order to enjoy both in the highest degree. Thus, while this right is properly exercised, desires that seem selfish, by a happy combination, produce the welfare of others. "This is removing submission "from a foundation unable to support it, and injurious to "the honour of God, and fixing it upon much firmer "ground."*

No sensible or good man ever suspected Mr. Hooker of being a weak or factious person, "yet he plainly enough "teacheth, that a society, upon experience of universal "evil, have a right to try by another form to answer more "effectually the ends of Government."And Mr. Hoadly asks - "Would the ends of Government be destroyed "should the miserable condition of the people of France, "which has proceeded from the King's being absolute, "awaken the thoughts of the wisest heads amongst them, "and move them all to exert themselves, so as that those "ends should be better answered for the time to come?"

What mind can relish the hardy proposition, that because precedents have been introduced by the inattention or timidity of some, and the cunning or violence of others, therefore the latter have a right to make the former miserable - that is, that precedents that ought never to have been set, yet being set, repeal the eternal laws of natural justice, humananity, and equity. †

The argument from precedents begins unluckily for its advocates. The first produced against us by the gentleman before mentioned, was an Act past by the Commonwealth Parliament in 1650 to "punish" Virginia,‡ Barbadoes, Antigua, and Bermudas, for their fidelity to Charles the Second. So ancient is the right of Parliament to "punish" Colonists for doing their duty. But the Parliament had before overturned Church and Throne, so that there in an older "precedent"set against these.

That Parliament sat amidst the ruins that surrounded it, fiercer than Marius among those of Carthage. Brutal power became an irresistible argument of boundless right. What the style of an Aristotle could not prove, the point of a Cromwell's sword sufficiently demonstrated. Innocence and justice sighed and submitted. What mere could

It should be considered whether it ever was or ever can be the true interest of a Kingdom or state to violate the laws of natural justice, equity, and humanity. These laws may be called the laws of God. Can they be broken with impunity? The Scriptures are full of lessons on this subject, and history furnishes instances sufficient to alarm oppressors if they would attend to them. All the glories of Charles the Bold, - Charles the Fifth, - Philip the Second, - Charles the Twelfth, - Lewis the Fourteenth, - and a numerous list of distinguished Princes, were overcast, when unrelenting cruelty came to preside over their resolutions. From Athens to Genoa the observation holds true. Let not the opinion be condemned as presumptuous before it be fully inquired into. It is worth an inquiry.

"Disceite justitiam moniti et non temnere divos."

England has been prosperous in many civil wars, but they were in defence of liberty. She never engaged in one against liberty. Would to Heaven she would set the world the much wanted example of lenity in Government. Mankind might gain by it. The other mode has been sufficiently tried, and proved to be impolitick and ruinous*

‡ This loyal, generous Colony preserved its principles with such spirit, notwithstanding the oppression above mentioned, that in January, 1659, they threw off all obedience to the Parliament, replaced the King's Governour, and proclaimed Charles the Second several months before the Restoration in Europe.

they do? The Restoration took place, and a legal Parliament would not doubt but it had as extensive a right as an illegal one. The Revolution succeeded, and with it methods for blending together the powers of King and people in a manner before unknown. A new political alembick was fixed on the great principle of resistance, and in it severe experiments were to be made on every other principle of the Constitution. How the boldness of Ministers and contempt of the people have increased since that period, not a man the least acquainted with English history can be ignorant. The Colonies were in a state of infancy - still in a state of childhood. Not a single statute concerning them is recollected to have been passed before the Revolution but such as related to the regulation of trade. "Precedents" were afterwards made, that, when they grew up, the authority of a master might succeed that of a parent.

Precedents, it is apprehended, are no otherwise regarded in the English laws than as they establish certainty for the benefit of the people - according to the maxim - "Miserable is the servitude when the laws are uncertain, "Precedents militating against the welfare or happiness of a people, are inconsistent with the grand original principle on which they ought to be founded. Their supposed sanction increases in proportion to the repetitions of injustice. They must be void. In subjects of dispute between man and man, precedents may be of use, though not founded on the best reason. They cause a certainty, and all may govern themselves accordingly. If they take from an individual one day, they may give to him the next. But precedents, to overthrow principles, to justify the perpetual oppression of all, and to impair the power of the Constitution, though a cloud of them appear, have no more force than the volumes of dust that surround a triumphal car. They may obscure it: they cannot stop it. What would the liberties of the people of England have been at this time if precedents could have made laws inconsistent with the Constitution? Precedents, tending to make men unhappy, can with propriety of character be quoted only by those beings to whom the misery of men is a delight.

"If the usage had been immemorial and uniform, and "ten thousand instances could have been produced, it "would not have been sufficient; because the practice "must likewise be agreeable to the principles of the law,* "in order to be good: whereas this is a practice inconsistent with, and in direct opposition to, the first and clearest "principles of the law"† - to those feelings of humanity, "out of which mankind will not be reasoned, when power "advances with gigantick strides threatening dissolution to "a state - to those inherent though latent powers of society, "which no climate, ‡ no time, no constitution, no contract, "can ever destroy or diminish."II

A Parliamentary power of internal legislation over these Colonies, appears therefore to us, equally contradictory to humanity and the Constitution, and illegal.

As to the second head, a power of regulating our trade, our opinion is, that it is legally vested in Parliament, not as a Supreme Legislature over these Colonies, but as the Supreme Legislature and full Representative of the parent state, and the only judge between her and her children in commercial interests, which the nature of the case, in the progress of their growth, admitted. It has been urged with great vehemence against us, and seems to be thought their fort by our adversaries, "that a power of regulation is "a power of legislation; and a power of legislation, if con-

‡ 1 Blackstone, p. 245.

II "Equal distribution of justice, and free enjoyment of property, are the great objects of society; and no time, precedent, statute, or institution, should deter men from keeping these uppermost in their thoughts." - Mr. HUME'S History of England.

"The jurisdiction of the Star Chamber, martial law, imprisonment "by warrants from the Privy Council, and other practices of a like "nature, though established for several centuries, were scarce ever "allowed by the English to be parts of their Constitution: the affection of the Nation for liberty still prevailed over all precedent and "over all political reasoning: The exercise of these powers, after "being long the source of secret murmurs among the people, was, in "fulness of time, solemnly abolished, as illegal, at least as oppressive, "by the whole Legislative authority." - Id.

To these instances may be added, the late practice of general warrants, that had the sanction of precedents, even since the Revolution.

"stitutional, must be universal and supreme in the utmost "sense of the words." It is therefore concluded, that the Colonists by acknowledging the power of regulation, have acknowledged every other power. On this objection we observe, that according to a maxim of law, "It is deceitful and dangerous to deal in general propositions." The freedom and happiness of states depend not on * artful arguments, but on a few plain principles. The plausible appearance of the objection consists in a confused comprehension of several points, entirely distinct in their nature, and leading to consequences directly opposite to each other. There was a time when England had no Colonies. Trade was the object she attended to, in encouraging them. A love of freedom was manifestly the chief motive of the adventurers. The connection of Colonies with their parent state may be called a new object of the English laws. That her right extinguishes all their rights - rights essential to freedom, and which they would have enjoyed, by remaining in their parent state, is offensive to reason, humanity, and the Constitution of that state. Colonies could not have been planted on these terms. What Englishman, but an idiot, would have become a Colonist on these conditions? to mention no more particulars, "That every shilling he gained might rightfully be "taken from him - trial by jury abolished - the building "houses, or making cloths with the materials found or "raised in the Colonies, prohibited - and armed men set "over him to govern him in every action?"

Had these Provinces never been settled - had all the inhabitants of them now living been born in England and resident there, they would now enjoy the rights of Englishmen; that is, they would be free in that Kingdom. We claim in the Colonies these and no other rights. There no other Kingdom or state interferes. But their trade, however important it may be, as the affairs of mankind are circumstanced, turns on other principles. All the power of Parliament cannot regulate that at their pleasure. It must be regulated not by Parliament alone, but by treaties and alliances formed by the King without the consent of the Nation, with other States and Kingdoms. The freedom of a people consists in being governed by laws, in which no alteration can be made, without their consent. Yet the wholesome force of these laws is confined to the limits of their own country. That is, a Supreme Legislature to a people, which acts internally over that people, and inevitably implies personal assent, representation, or slavery. When an universal Empire is established, and not till then, can regulations of trade properly be called acts of Supreme Legislature. It seems from many authorities, as if almost the whole power of regulating the trade of England was originally vested in the Crown. One restriction appears to have been, that no duty could be imposed without the consent of Parliament. Trade was little regarded by our warlike ancestors. As commerce became of more importance, duties and severities were judged necessary additions to its first simple state, Parliament more and more interfered. The Constitution was always free, but not always exactly in the same man-

Our chance of success would be slight indeed if it depended on subtleties of reasoning. Who can resist the skilful and courageous attacks of those Britons, who have not long since distinguished themselves in the polemical fields? Have they not proved to the satisfaction of thousands, the non-existence of matter - the necessity of human actions - consequently the innocence of them - the comfortable mortality of the soul - that virtue is a name - vice a jest - liberty a non-entity - Christianity an imposture - and, with due detestation be it mentioned, that we have no idea of power, nor of any Being endowed with any power, much less of one endowed with infinite power?

With explosions of learning and flashes of wit, these well trained troops would keep up a terrible fire of artillery and small arms against us undisciplined Americans. We must not meet them in the shock of battle. That would be madness in the extreme. We must make the most of our natural advantages. There we are safe; and all the forces that can be brought to the assault, will never be able to prevail against us. To drop the metaphor. "Inquiry ceases to be "rational, and becomes both whimsical and pernicious, when it advances as far as some late authors have carried it, to controvert the "first principles of knowledge, morality, religion, and consequently "the fundamental laws of the British Government, and of all well "regulated society." - Mr. BEATTIE on Truth.

It has been asserted by some men distinguished as historians, that the zeal of the reformers in religion engaging them to think liberally on that subject, led them to think with like freedom in civil affairs, whereby the Government of England received its greatest improvement. If the sentiment is just, may it not be inferred, that contempt for religion must necessarily introduce an indifference for all the just rules of Government and the principles of the Constitution?

ner. "By the Feodal law, all navigable rivers and havens "were computed among the regalia, and were subject to the "Sovereign of the state. And in England it hath always "been held, that the King is Lord of the whole shore, and "particularly is guardian of the ports and havens, which are "the inlets and gates of the Realm: and, therefore, so "early as the reign of King John, we find ships seized by "the King's officers for putting in at a place that was not "a legal port. These legal ports were undoubtedly at "first assigned by the Crown; since to each of them a "Court of Portmote is incident, the jurisdiction of which "must flow from the Royal authority. the erection of "beacons, lighthouses, and sea marks, is also a branch of "the Royal prerogative. the King may enjoin any man "from going abroad, or command any man to return. "the powers of establishing publick marts, regulating of "weights and measures, and the giving authority to, or "making current, money, the medium of commerce, be- "long to the Crown. By making peace or war, leagues "and treaties, the King may open or stop trade as he "pleases. The Admiralty Courts are grounded on the "necessity of supporting a jurisdiction so extensive, though "opposite to the usual doctrines of the common law. The "laws of Oleron were made by Richard the First, and "are still used in those courts."In the "Mare causum" are several regulations made by Kings. * Time forbids a more exact inquiry into this point: but such it is apprehended will, on inquiry, be found to have been the power of the Crown, that our argument may gain but cannot lose.

* The power of regulating trade was carried so far by the Crown as sometimes to impose duties; and Queen Elizabeth obtained several judgments in the Exchequer on such regulations. Lord Chief Justice Coke answers the argument founded on these, in 2 Inst. 62, 63. Princes aimed at too much power - exceeded due bounds - their imprudence produced "grievances" - and the people, who always suffer when their rulers are weak or wicked, would no longer trust such opportunities of oppression in their hand. The power of impressing seamen shows the extensive authority in naval affairs trusted to "the Crown."- 1 BLACKSTONE, 419. FOSTER'S Rep. 154.

So extremely averse were the English to foreign affairs, and to the exercise own of Parliamentary authority concerning them, that though the Nation was justly provoked against the French King for the injury done to Edward the First by withholding Acquitaine and his other inheritances in manner (as Lord Chief Justice Coke observes in his 2d Inst. p. 532.) and by some cruel actions of Frenchmen against Englishmen, and had in full Parliament granted him aids, subsidies, for the maintenance of his wars in foreign parts, yet in the confirmationes chartarum, Edward the First, therein taking notice, "that many men "doubted whether these grants by Parliament might not turn in serv- "age of them and their heirs, as precedents, expressly declares in those "statutes, that such grants shall not be drawn into custom."The comment says - "It was holden that the subjects of the Realm ought "not to contribute to the maintenance of the King's wars out of the "Realm - but this matter never was in quiet until it was more partic- "ularly explained by divers Acts of Parliament."The comment then mentions several Acts declaring that no Englishman should be bound to contribute to the King's wars out of England, in Scotland, Gascony, Ireland, Calais, (though these three last were countries dependent on England) and says, "these Acts of Parliament are but declarations "of the ancient law of England. But here may be observed that "when any ancient law or custom of Parliament [such as before mentioned by making Acts relating to foreign wars] "is broken, and the "Crown possessed of a precedent, how difficult a think it is to restore "the subject again to his former freedom and safety."- 2 In. 527-529.

The author of "The Controversy," who, with a liberality of sentiment, becoming a pleader against freedom and the best interest of mankind, counts "statute books"- "Ministers"- "King's Council"- p. 77, 78 - "scraps of Journals"- p. 81, and ordinances of "the Rump Parliament"- p. 87, among his "Deities"- p. 78; and grieves that we poor "infidel" Colonists will not pay his idols the veneration his zeal judges due to them, has collected a good many fragments of proceedings in the House of Commons from the year 1614 to 1628. The amount is this, that the Ministers of the Crown insisted that Parliament could not make laws for America; that the Commons doubted; but at length, in 1724, came to an opinion that the King's patent for "a monopoly of fishing on the coasts of America was a grievance,"- that a "clause of forfeiture" against those who interfered in the fishery was void - and past a Bill "for a free liberty of fishing." &c. It appears in the debates that the fishery was free before the patent was granted. These extracts do not show what became of the Bill in the House of Lords. One Mr. Brooke said in 1621 - "We may make laws "here for Virginia, for if the King gives consent to this Bill past here

It seems, as if, the notion of the King's regulating power still prevailed, but, that "a clause of forfeiture" in such regulations was void. So much had the power of Parliament grown since King John's reign. Nor does it appear to have been unreasonable, as commerce became of more consequence. The instance here mentioned related to a regulation of trade; and however the King might have accommodated the point, with the other branches of the Legislature, the whole proceeding is immaterial. If it was a right actually enjoyed by Englishmen to fish on the coasts of a plantation - and a grant by the Crown of the fishery to the people of the plantation excluding the people of England, could not divest them of their right - or, "if by the King's giving his consent to a Bill passed by Lords and Commons"- "the patent might be controlled"- it does not follow that the King, Lords, and Commons could divest the people of the plantations of all their rights.

We will proceed on a concession, that the power of regulating trade is vested in Parliament.

Commerce rests on concessions and restrictions mutually stipulated between the different Powers of the world; * and if these Colonies were sovereign states, they would, in all probability, be restricted to their present portion.† The people of England were freemen before they were merchants. Whether they will continue free, they themselves must determine. How they shall trade must be determined by Germans, French, Spaniards, Italians, Turks, *Moore*s, &c. The right of acquiring property depends on the rights of others; the right of acquired property solely on the owner. The possessor is no owner without it. "Almost every leaf and page of all the volumes of the common law prove this right of property."‡ Why should this right be sacred in Great Britain, "the chief corner stone" in the solid foundation of her Constitution, and an empty name in her Colonies? The lamb that presumed to drink in the same stream with a stronger animal, though lower down the current, could not refute the charge of incommoding the latter by disturbing the water. Such power have reasons that appear despicable and detestable at first when they are properly enforced.

From this very principle arose her power; and can that power now be justly exerted in suppression of that principle? It cannot. Therefore a power II of regulating our trade

* Case of the Ostend East India Company.

† "Another light, in which the laws of England consider the King with regard to domestic concerns, is the arbiter of commerce. By commerce, I at present mean domestic commerce only. It would lead me into too large a field, if I were to attempt to enter upon the nature of foreign trade, its privileges, regulations, and restrictions; and would be also quite beside the purpose of these commentaries, which are confined to the laws of England. Whereas no municipal laws can be sufficient to order and determine the very extensive and complicated affairs of traffick and merchandise; neither can they have a proper authority for this purpose. For, as these are transactions carried on between subjects of independent states, the municipal laws of one will not be regarded by the other. For which reason the affairs of commerce are regulated by a law of their own; called the Law Merchant, or Lex Mercatoria, which all Nations agree in and take notice of. And in particular it is held to be part of the law of England, which decides the causes of merchants by the general rules which obtain in all commercial countries; and that often even in matters relating to domestic trade, as for instance with regard to the drawing, the acceptance, and the transfer of inland bills of exchange."

§ Parliamentary History.

II This distinction between a Supreme Legislature and a power of regulating trade, is not a new one. We find it clearly made, by the Judges of England, at a period when the modern profitable mode of blending together in Parliament the authorities of the Crown and people, had not extinguished all reverence for the principles of the Constitution.

By the statute of the second of Henry the Sixth, ch. 4th, Calais was confirmed a staple place for the wool exported from England, Wales, and Ireland. Some wool shipped from this last Kingdom was consigned to Sluice, in Flanders. The ship, by stress of weather, was forced into Calais, where the wool was seized as forfeited. The chief question in the Exchequer Chamber was, whether the statute bound Ireland. In Richard the Third, twelfth, the case is thus reported: "Et ibi quoad ad primam questionem dicebant, quod terra Hibernia "inter se habet Parliamentum et omnimodo curias prout Anglia, et per "idem Parliamentum faciunt leges mutant leges, et non obligantur per "statuta in Anglia, quia non hic habent milites Parliamenti; sed hoc "intelligitur de terris per rebus in terris tantum efficiend; sed personæ "eorum sunt subjecti regis, et tanquam subjecti erunt obligati ad aliquam rem extra terram illam faciendam contra statutum, sieur habitantes in Callesia, Gascognia, Guien, &c., dum fuere subjecti; et obedi-

"entes erunt sub admiralitate Anglia de re facta super altum mare; et "hic in Anglia."

Brooke, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, mentions the ease almost in the same words, title Parliament 98 - but says - "the "Chief Justice was of opinion, that the statutes of England shall bind "Ireland, which was in a manner agreed by the other Justices; and "yet it was denied the former day: Yet note, that Ireland is a Realm "of itself, and has a Parliament in itself."

Here it may be observed, first, that the reason assigned by the Judges, why the statutes of England bind not the people of Ireland, though specially named, contains a constitutional principle, the sine qua of freedom. Secondly, that the people of Ireland, as subjects of the King, were "under the Admiralty of England as to firings done on the high sea;" which is a strong confirmation given by the Judges of England to the supposition before made, of the power of regulating trade being formerly vested in the King. Thirdly, that the opinion of the Chief Justice, and the other Justices, such as it was, "reddendo singula singulis, et secundum subjectam materiam," proves at most, only that Ireland was bound by statutes regulating their trade, for such was the second Henry the Sixth, ch. 4th, on which the case arose. Fourthly, that Brooke, a man of great eminence and dignity in the Law, appears, by his note, to have been dissatisfied with the judgment, though only on a statute of regulation, for this reason of such weight with an Englishman - "because Ireland is a Realm of itself, and has a Parliament within itself." Fifthly, that the authority of the Crown, including the regulation of the trade of Ireland, and sending writs of error there, were sufficient restraints to secure the obedience and subordination of that Kingdom. This reason seems to have held its ground till Lord Chief Justice Coke's time; and though a great rever, involves not in it the idea of Supreme Legislature over us. The first is a power of a preserving "protecting" nature. The last, as applied to America, is such a power as Mr. Justice Blackstone describes in these words: "whose enormous weight spreads horror and destruction on all inferior movements." The first is a power subject to a constitutional check. Great Britain cannot injure us by taking away our commerce without hurting herself immediately. The last is a power without check or limit. She might ruin us by it. The injury thereby to herself might be remote as to be despised by her.

once is entertained for his memory, yet it can never be acknowledged, that an "obiter dictum" of his, or of any other man, is a rule of law. In Calvin's case, the Chief Justice reciting the foregoing case, says: "HIBERNIA habet Parliamentum, et faciunt legis, et nostra statuta non legant eos, quia non mittunt milites ad Parliamentum" (which, "adds he, is to be understood, unless they be especially named.) And does the "especially naming them" give them a representation, or remove the injustice of binding them without it? This observation in plain English would run thus: "Our statutes do not bind the people of Ireland, when we do not intend to bind them, because they are not represented in our Parliament; but our statutes bind them when we intend to bind them." What is this but saying - "that to speak of their not being represented, is a mere jargon; and the sole point is, whether it is our will to bind them" - or in other words - "that our statutes do not bind them, for a reason as strong as man can give, and so acknowledged by us to be, which yet is no reason at all: for, where there is no occasion for its operation it applies not; and where there is occasion it is of no force." His Lordship had just before taken notice that, a writ of error did lie in the King's Bench of England of erroneous judgment in the King's Bench of Ireland;" and perhaps that led him in the course of his argument to imagine, there might be a like pre-eminence of the Parliament of England over that of Ireland. That this was his reason seems certain, because, at a meeting of Commissioners to consider of a projected union between England and Scotland, at which the Chief Justice was present - Moor 796, it is said, "that Parliament has power over Ireland, as is proved by that a writ of error may be brought of a judgment in the King's bench of Ireland." In the 4th Inst., he also says, the people of Guernsey, Jersey, and Man, are not bound by the statutes of England, unless they are specially named. Yet whoever examines the statutes relating to Ireland, Guernsey, Jersey, and Man, will have very little cause to believe, that it has been thought in England, that statutes would generally bind the people of those countries, notwithstanding the subjection of Ireland, and the other Islands, the many distresses of the former, and the weakness of the latter, have afforded opportunities of extending such a power over them. With respect to all these places scarce a statute can be found of any period, but for the regulation of their trade. The same observation may be made as to Gascony, Guienne, and Calais. Justice Wylde, in 2 Vent 5, said: "he had seen a charter whereby these places were recited to be united to England by mutual pact. And writs of error run those." "Wales was a conquered country, and the people submitted to Edward the First, de alto et basso."

Whatever pretence the Chief Justice's opinion was founded on, it has been carefully repeated in many law books since. Whether his Lordship meant that statutes of England could bind the people of Ireland, in taking away trials by jury - taxing them, and "in all cases whatsoever," or only in preserving their subordination, as by regulating their trade, which was the case referred to in his comment, does not appear. The Parliament, in declaring the dependence of Ireland, did not venture to claim a power of binding the people of that Kingdom "in all cases whatsoever." * With respect to all these declarations, however, as they are made to refer to us, we may answer as the lion did to the man in the fable.

Much the same arbitrary construction has been made on the question, whether a man could be tried in England, on a charge of committing treason in Ireland. In Queen Elizabeth's reign, "Gerrade, Chancellor of Ireland, moved that question to the counsel of the Queen, and it was held by Wray, Dier, and Gerrarde, Attorney General, he could not, because he was a subject of Ireland and not of England; and if tried in England, he could not be tried by his peers." - Dier, 360. Afterwards, to gratify the Queen's resentment against some rebels, they were tried in England; and thus passion and complaisance made very good law against reason and justice.

Having mentioned Calvin's case, it may not be improper to observe, that if the author of "The Controversy" had taken the trouble of reading it, he might have found his perplexities removed on the question that has given him so much anxiety, and brought such a load of reproaches on the Colonies. He is provoked at our insolence, for pretending to be any thing more than aliens in England, while we deny the power of Parliament to bind us "in all cases whatsoever." In that case, the gentleman would have discovered, that the Judges of England held, that a man born in Scotland, under the allegiance of James the First, after his accession to the Throne of England, was entitled to all the rights of a subject born in England; though the objection, that statutes of England could not bind Scotland, or a man residing there, who held lands in England, was mentioned in the course of the argument. The great difficulty being got over, if the gentleman will go a step farther, and perceive some little distinction between Colonies proceeding out of the loins of England, and the "conquered" countries of Ireland and Wales - the countries of Gascony, Guienne, and Calais, - united by mutual pact to England," and the Islands of Guernsey, &c., "lying within the four seas, whose Sovereigns annexed them to England;" and will only allow the Colonists a little more regard than is professed in law books for those countries, and about as much as has been actually observed towards them by Parliament, he will have no further occasion to say severe things of those who are willing to esteem him; and then, if he can persuade his worthy countrymen to adopt his sentiments, their anger will no longer give pain to those who almost adore them.

* Nor, to this day, does Parliament tax them, &c., and, therefore, the inference is just, that neither they nor the Chief Justice meant such a power.

The power of regulation was the only band that could have held us together, formed on one of these "original contracts" which only can be a foundation of just authority. Without such a band, our general commerce with foreign Nations, might have been injurious and destructive to her. Reason and duty reject such a license. This our duty resembles that of children to a parent. The parent has a power over them; but they have rights that the parent cannot take away. Heaven grant that our mother country may regard us as her children, that if, by the dispensation of Providence, the time shall come when her power increases the memory of former kindnesses, may supply its decays, and her Colonies, like dutiful children, may serve and guard their aged parent, forever revering the arms that held them in their infancy, and the breasts that supported their lives while they were little ones.

It seems as if the power of regulation might not inaptly be compared to the prerogative of making peace, war, treaties, or alliances, whereby "the whole * Nation are bound against their consent;" and yet the prerogative by no means implies a Supreme Legislature. The language held in "the Commentaries" on this point, is very remarkable. "With regard to foreign concerns, the King is the Delegate or Representative of the people; and in him, as in a centre, all the rays of his people are united; † and the sovereign power, quoad hoc is vested in his person. ‡ Will any Englishman say these expressions are descriptive of the King's authority within the Realm? Is the sovereign power within that vested in his person? He is styled "Sovereign" indeed; "his Realm is declared by many Acts of Parliament an Empire, and his Crown Imperial." But do these splendid appellations, the highest known in Europe, signify that "sovereign power is vested in his person within the Realm?" We have a full answer in the Commentaries. "The meaning of the Legislature, when it uses these terms of Empire and Imperial, and applies them to the Realm and Crown of England, is only to assert that our King is equally sovereign and independent within these his Dominions; and owes no kind of subjection to any Potentate upon earth." Thus we maintain, that with regard to foreign affairs, the parent original state "is the Delegate or Representative" of the entire Dominions, "the sovereign power, quoad hoc, is vested" in her. Her acts under this power "irrevocably bind the whole Nation." But yet this power by no means implies a Supreme Legislature.

The exercise of this power, by statutes, was absolutely necessary; because it was, and could only be lodged, as the laws of the parent state stand in the Supreme Legislature of that state, consisting of King, Lords, and Commons; and statutes are the modes by which these united sentiments and resolutions are expressed. It is universally acknowledged in Great Britain, that it infers no power of taxation in King and Lords, that their limited authority is used in cloathing gifts and grants of the Commons with the forms of law; nor does it infer Supreme Legislature over us, that the limited authority of King, Lords, and Commons, is used in cloathing regulations of trade with the form of law. The Commons joining in the law is not material. The difference is only in the mode of assent. Theirs is express, ours is implied, as the assent of the "whole Nation" is in the preceding instances.

This power of regulation appears to us to have been pure in its principle, simple in its operation, and salutary in its effects. But for some time past, we have observed, with pain, that it hath been turned to other purposes than it was originally designed for, and retaining its title, hath become an engine of intolerable oppressions and grievous taxations. The argument of an eminent Judge states the point in a similar case, strongly for us, in these words: "Though it be granted that the King hath the custody of the havens and ports of this Island, being the very gates of this Kingdom, and is trusted with the keys of these gates; yet, the inference and argument thereupon made, I utterly deny. For in it there is mutatio hypothesis, and a transition from a thing of one nature to another; as the premises are of a power only fiduciary, and in point of trust and government, and the conclusion infers a right of interest and gain. Admit the King has custodiam portuum, yet he hath but the custody, which is a "trust, and not dominium utile. He hath power to open and shut, upon consideration of publick good to the people and state, but not to make gain and benefit by it: "the one is protection; the other is exilation." By common law, the King may restrain a subject from going abroad, or enjoin him by his Chancellor from proceeding at law: But to conclude, that he may therefore take money, not to restrain or not to enjoin, is to sell Government, trust, and common justice. *

SURRY COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a respectable body of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Surry, on due notice, at the Court House of the said county, the 16th day of July, 1774,

ALLEN COCKE, Esquire, Moderator:

The Proceedings and Resolutions of the late Members of the House of Burgesses, since their dissolution, respecting the alarming situation of North America, were seriously deliberated upon, and the following Resolves unanimously agreed to:

1st. Resolved, That we acknowledge all due obedience to his present Majesty, and will defend him with our lives and fortunes.

2d. Resolved, That, as British subjects, who know the invaluable blessings of their birthright, we will not submit to the imposition of any taxes or duties, to be paid by the inhabitants within this Dominion, by any other power than the General Assembly, duly elected; and that in them, and them only, is the constitutional right of taxation vested.

3d. Resolved, That we will cheerfully join with our suffering brethren, of America, in the firmest bonds of union, agamst exporting or importing any commodities to or from Great Britain, till our just and legal rights are restored.

4th. Resolved, That the cause of the town of Boston is the common cause of all British America.

5th. Resolved, That as the population of this Colony, with freemen and useful manufacturers, is greatly obstructed by the importation of slaves and convict servants, we will not purchase any such slaves or servants hereafter to be imported.

6th. Resolved, That subscriptions be opened in this county, for the relief of our suffering brethren in the town of Boston. †

7th. Resolved, That Allen Cocke and Nicholas Faulcon, Junior, Esquires, our late Representatives be, and they are hereby nominated and appointed to attend the general meeting of Deputies of other counties and corporations with this Colony, in the City of Williamsburg, on the first day of August next, there to concert such measures as may be found most expedient for the general good of the Colonies.

8th. Resolved, That the Clerk of this meeting do transmit the proceedings of this day to the Printers of both Gazettes, and request them to publish the same without delay.

JAMES KEE, Clerk of the Meeting.

Baltimore, Maryland, July 16, 1774.

A vessel has sailed from the Eastern Shore of this Province, with a cargo of provisions, as a free gift to our besieged brethren at Boston. ‡

Rights of the people as to impositions.

† WILLIAMSBURG, July 28, 1774. - It is with much pleasure we learn that the County of Surry, from the highest to the lowest, are actuated with the warmest affection towards the suffering town of Boston. We are told, that immediately after the breaking up of the meeting of the freeholders and others, to consult upon the most proper measures to be taken, upwards of one hundred and fifty barrels of Indian corn and wheat were subscribed, and that twelve or thirteen subscription papers are now out for that purpose. Upon a moderate computation, our correspondent informs us, eleven or twelve hundred barrels of different commodities will be produced by this county for the benefit of those firm and intrepid Sons of Liberty, the Bostonians.

It would be needless to recognise the particular generosity of each county in this Colony, as the publick must be very well acquainted, from the many Resolves which have been published, that all Virginia are unanimous in their endeavours to contribute whatever relief or assistance may be in their power.

‡ BOSTON, August 29, 1774. - Yesterday arrived at Marblehead, Captain Perkins, from Baltimore, with three thousand bushels of Indian corn, twenty barrels of rye, and twenty-one barrels of bread, sent by the inhabitants of that place for the benefit of the poor of Boston, together with one thousand bushels of corn from Annapolis, sent in the same vessel, and for the same benevolent purpose.

The inhabitants of all the counties of Virginia and Maryland are subscribing with great liberality for the relief of the distressed town of Boston and Charlestown. The inhabitants of Alexandria, we hear, in a few hours, subscribed three hundred and fifty pounds for that noble purpose.

Subscriptions are opened in this town for the support and animation of the inhabitants of Boston, under their present great conflict for the common freedom of us all, which have already been so successful, that a vessel is now loading with provisions for that place, as a testimony of the affection of this people towards their persecuted brethren, now bravely contending against "fraud, power, and the most odious oppression," which God grant may never rise triumphant over "right, justice, social happiness, and freedom."

SUSSEX COUNTY (NEW-JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a number of Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Sussex, in the Province of New-Jersey, at the Court House in Newtown, in the said county, on Saturday, the 16th of July, A. D., 1774,

HUGH HUGHES, Esquire, Chairman:

1st. Resolved, That it is our duty to render true and faithful allegiance to George the Third, King of Great Britain, and to support and maintain the just dependence of his Colonies upon the Crown of Great Britain, under the enjoyment of our constitutional rights and privileges.

2d. Resolved, That it is undoubtedly our right to be taxed only by our own consent, given by ourselves or our Representatives; and that the late Acts of Parliament for imposing taxes for the purpose of raising a revenue in America, and the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, are oppressive, unconstitutional, and injurious in their principles to American freedom; and that the Bostonians are considered by us as suffering in the general cause of America.

3d. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that firmness and unanimity in the Colonies, and an agreement not to use any articles imported from Great Britain or the East Indies (under such restrictions as may be agreed upon by the general Congress hereafter to be appointed by the Colonies) may be the most effectual means of averting the dangers that are justly apprehended, and securing the invaded rights and privileges of Arnerica.

4th. Resolved, That we will join, with the greatest cheerfulness, the other counties of this Province, in sending a Committee to meet with those from the other counties, at such time and place as they shall appoint, in order to choose proper persons to represent this Province in a general Congress of Deputies sent from each of the Colonies.

5th. Resolved, That we will faithfully and strictly adhere to such regulations and restrictions as shall be agreed upon by the Members of the said Congress, and that shall by them be judged expedient and beneficial to the good of the Colonies.

6th. Resolved, That the Committee hereafter named do correspond and consult with the Committees of the other counties in this Province, and meet with them in order to appoint Deputies to represent this Province in general Congress.

7th. Resolved, We do appoint the following gentlemen our Committee, for the purpose above mentioned: Hugh Hughes, Nathaniel Pettit, Thomas Van Horne, Thomas Anderson, Archibald Stewart, Abia Brown, John B. Scott, Esquires, Messrs. E. Dunlap, Mark Thompson, W. Maxwell.

FROM THE COMMITTEE OF BOSTON TO THE COMMITTEE OF BALTIMORE.

Boston, July 16, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Your important letter of the 27th ultimo, with the enclosures, came safe to hand, and were regarded as "good news from a far country."

The part taken by the Province of Maryland, must henceforth stop the mouths of those blasphemers of humanity who have affected to question the existence of publick virtue. So bright an example as you have set, cannot fail to animate and encourage even the lukewarm and indifferent; more especially such honest men as wish to be assured of support before they engage in so weighty an enterprise.

The account you gave us of the spirit and magnanimity of the people of Virginia, confirms us in the opinion we have ever had of that ancient Colony, of whose disinterested virtue this Province has had ample experience. The noble sacrifice you stand ready to make, of the staple commodity of your Province, so materially affecting the revenue of Great Britain, and your generous interposition in our favour, have our warmest acknowledgments. So much honour, wisdom, publick and private virtue; so much readiness in every Colony, to afford every species of aid and assistance that the suffering state requires, must evince to a venal herd, that notwithstanding they may be utterly unacquainted with the meaning of the word patriotism, it has, however, a substantial existence in North America. With the smiles of an all-governing Providence upon the vigorous efforts of our inestimable brethren at home and abroad, we promise ourselves a final deliverance from the calamities we are now subjected to; and which, for our own, our country, and posterity's political salvation, we resolve, by God's assistance, to sustain with fortitude and patience. We are, gentlemen, your friends and feilow-countrymen.

Signed by order,

WILLIAM COOPER, Town Clerk.

YORK COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

On Monday, the 18th of July, the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of York County, in Virginia, met, according to publick notice, at the Court House, in York, to consider what was to be done in the present distressed and alarming situation of affairs throughout the British Colonies in America.

THOMAS NELSON, Jun., Esq., being chosen Moderator,

Opened the business of the Meeting with the following Address to the people :

Friends and Countrymen: We are met to-day upon one of the most important matters that can engage the attention of men. You are all well acquainted with the attacks which have been lately made by the British Parliament upon what is dearer to Americans than their lives - their liberties. You have heard of the acts of oppression which have passed against a sister Colony, under which it is now actually groaning, and you must be sensible that this is only a prelude to the designs of Parliament upon every other part of this wide extended Continent. In this light did our late truly patriotic and honourable House of Burgesses regard it, and I am not now to inform you what has been the consequence our Assembly has been dissolved - our country left without law for its government, and without means of defending itself against an invading enemy. In this melancholy situation of things, many of our late worthy Representatives convened in Williamsburg, and there agreed, after they should collect the sentiments of the people throughout the Colony, to meet again on the first day of August next, to concert such measures as would be most likely to procure us a speedy redress of our grievances, and security against them for the time to come; you are now called together to deliberate upon these matters, to choose who shall represent you in the approaching important meeting, and to furnish them with your sentiments upon those things which are to come before them. I need not observe how much you are concerned in the event of their proceedings. You all know what it is to be freemen; you know the blessed privilege of doing what you please with your own; and you can guess at the misery of those who are deprived of this right. Which of these will be your case depends upon your present conduct. We have found already that petitions and remonstrances are ineffectual, and it is now time that we try other expedients. We must make those who are endeavouring to oppress us feel the effects of their mistaken, of their arbitrary policy; and not till then can we expect justice from them.

From the publick papers we learn the sentiments of many of the counties of Virginia; and it appears that they think it necessary for the accomplishing of their purposes to drop, till they are redressed, all commercial intercourse with Great Britain. Whether consistently with justice, as a people in debt, we can stop our exports, is a point which seems doubtful; but that imports ought to be prohibited necessity demands, and no virtue forbids. It is not supposed that we can do this without subjecting ourselves to many inconveniences; but inconveniences when opposed to a loss of freedom, are surely to be disregarded. Besides, I am told, by men acquainted with these things, that the goods already in the country, and those expected in the fall, will be sufficient to supply the wants of all Virginia for two years. In the mean time we must, if our grievances be not redressed, turn our attention to the breeding of sheep, the raising of flax, hemp, and cotton, and to manufactures. It is true we must resign the hope of making fortunes; but to what end should we make fortunes, when they may be taken from us at the pleasure of others? I hope you will take these matters into your most serious consideration - weigh them with that attention which matters of such moment merit - determine with wisdom and moderation; and, once determined, let no difficulties or dangers shake your resolutions.

It was then unanimously Resolved, That as the constitutional Assemblies of Virginia have been prevented from exercising their right of providing for the security of the liberties of the people, that right again reverts to the people, as the fountain from whence all power and legislation flow; a right coeval with human nature, and which they claim from the eternal and immutable laws of Nature's God.

Resolved, also, That Dudley Digges and Thomas Nelson, Jun., Esquires, do attend at the City of Williamsburg, on the first day of August next, in a general Convention from the other counties in Virginia, there to exert their utmost abilities to put a stop to that growing system of Ministerial despotism which has so long threatened the destruction of America.

And that you, our Delegates, may be made acquainted with the sentiments of the people of this county, it is their opinion that you proceed to choose proper persons to represent the Colony of Virginia in a general Congress of America, to meet at such time and place as may hereafter be agreed on.

That these Representatives be instructed to form a declaration of American rights, setting forth that British America, and all the inhabitants thereof, shall be and remain in due subjection to the Crown of England, and to the illustrious family on the Throne; submitting by their own voluntary act, and enjoying all the freedom and privileges of the free people of England. That it is the first law of legislation, and of the British Constitution, that no man shall be taxed but by his own consent, expressed either by himself or his Representatives; that the Americans cannot be represented in the British Parliament; and, therefore, that every edict of the British Parliament imposing any tax or custom, duty, or imposition whatsoever, on the people of America, without their consent, is illegal, and subversive of the first principles of the British Constitution, and of the natural rights of men; that it is the undoubted right and true interest of the Sovereign, as supreme ruler of the whole Empire, to provide for the welfare of his subjects within the Realm at the head of the British Parliament, and of those in America, at the head of his American Assemblies, by laws adapted to their local situation, and suited to the exigencies of each; and, by that negative with which he is invested by the Constitution, to restrain the different States of his Executive Dominion from enacting laws to destroy the freedom, and prejudicing the interests, of one another; that the King, in his British Parliament, shall have a supremacy for regulating the trade of America, with this reasonable reserve, that all the British Colonies enjoy a free trade with each other; and that no tax, duty, or imposition whatsoever, be laid by the British Parliament, on any article which the American Colonies are obliged to import from Great Britain only; and that this right of supremacy be deemed or expressed a resignation by our own voluntary act, flowing from a just sense of the protection we have hitherto received from Great Britain.

And farther, the people of this country are of opinion that the Act of the British Parliament laying a duty on tea, for the purpose of raising a revenue, to be collected in America, without her consent, is an illegal tax.

That the Act which blocks up the part of Boston, destroys her trade, and subjects her inhabitants to the worst of inconveniences and hardships, is oppressive and unconstitutional. That the people of Boston incurred the displeasure of Parliament by a just defence of their liberties and properties; and that the cause for which they suffer is the general cause of every British Colony in America.

That the Bill, commonly called the Murdering Bill, if passed into an Act, is not only unconstitutional, but shocking to human nature that its evident design is to privilege the soldiers to commit, with impunity, the most cruel outrages, even against the lives of Americans, whilst it cuts off from an accused American ever hope of being acquitted.

That the most effectual means of obtaining a speedy redress of American grievances, is to put a stop to imports from Great Britain, with as few exceptions as possible, until the said oppressive Acts be repealed, and American rights established and that what relates to exports be left to the determination of the Convention in August.

That industry and frugality be adopted, in their largest extent, throughout this Colony and that horse racing, and every species of expensive amusement, be laid aside, as unsuitable to the situation of the country, and unbecoming men who feel for its distresses.

That the first day of September next, or the time of the general Congress, be set apart as a day of prayer and supplication to the Almighty disposer of human events, to direct the Councils of the Americans, and so to dispose of the heart of our Sovereign, that a general harmony may be restored to the British Empire,

That a subscription be immediately opened for the relief of the inhabitants of Boston, under the direction of the Deputies for this county, who are desired to promote and encourage the same.

That the above Resolves and opinions be published in the Virginia Gazette.

WILLIAM RUSSELL, Clerk.

FAIRFAX COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a General Meeting of "the Freeholders and other inhabitants of the County of Fairfax, at the Court House in the Town of Alexandria, on Monday, the 18th day of July, 1774:

GEORGE WASHINGTON, Esquire, Chairman, and ROBERT HARRISON, Gentleman, Clerk.

Resolved, That this Colony and Dominion of Virginia cannot be considered as a conquered country, and, if it was, that the present inhabitants are the descendants, not of the conquered, but of the conquerors. That the same was not settled at the national expense of England, but at the private expense of the adventurers, our ancestors, by solemn compact with, and under the auspices and protection of, the British Crown, upon which we are, in every respect, as dependent as the people of Great Britain, and in the same manner subject to all his Majesty's just, legal, and constitutional prerogatives; that our ancestors, when they left their native land, and settled in America, brought with them, even if the same had not been confirmed by Charters, the civil constitution and form of Government of the country they came from, and were by the laws of nature and Nations entitled to all its privileges, immunities, and advantages, which have descended to us, their posterity; and ought of right to be as fully enjoyed as if we had still continued within the Realm of England.

Resolved, That the most important and valuable part of the British Constitution, upon which its very existence depends, is the fundamental principle of the people's being governed by no laws to which they have not given their consent by Representatives freely chosen by themselves, who are affected by the laws they enact equally with their constituents, to whom they are accountable, and whose burthens they share, in which consists the safety and happiness of the community for if this part of the Constitutional was taken away, or materially altered, the Government must degenerate either into an absolute and despotick monarchy, or a tyrannical aristocracy, and the freedom of the people be annihilated.

Resolved, Therefore, as the inhabitants of the Ameri- can Colonies are not, and from their situation, cannot be represented in the British Parliament, that the Legislative power here can, of right, be exercised only by our Provincial Assemblies, or Parliaments, subject to the assent or negative of the British Crown, to be declared within some proper limited time; but as it was thought just and reasonable that the people of Great Britain should reap advantages from the Colonies adequate to the protection they afforded them, the British Parliament have claimed and exercised the power of regulating our trade and commerce, so as to restrain our importing from foreign countries such articles as they could furnish us with, of their own growth and manufacture, or exporting to foreign countries such articles and portions of our produce as Great Britain stood in need of, for her own consumption or manufacture. Such a power directed with wisdom and moderation, seems necessary for the general good of that great body politick of which we are a part, although in some degree repugnant to the principles of the Constitution. Under this idea, our ancestors submitted to it, the experience of more than a century, during the government of his Majesty's royal predecessors, have proved its utility, and the reciprocal benefits flowing from it produced mutual uninterrupted harmony and good will between the inhabitants of Great Britain and her Colonies, who during that long period always considered themselves as one and the same people and though such a power is capable of abuse, and in some instances hath been stretched beyond the original design and institution, yet to avoid strife and contention with our fellow-subjects, and strongly impressed with the experience of mutual benefits, we always cheerfully acquiesced in it while the entire regulation of our internal policy, and giving and granting our own money, were preserved to our own Provincial Legislatures.

Resolved, That it is the duty of these Colonies, on all emergencies, to contribute in proportion to their abilities, situation, and circumstances, to the necessary charge of supporting and defending the British Empire of which they are a part; that while we are treated upon an equal footing with our fellow-subjects, the motives of self-interest and preservation will be a sufficient obligation, as was evident through the course of the last War; and that no argument can be fairly applied to the British Parliament's taxing us, upon a presumption that we should refuse a just and reasonable contribution, but will equally operate in justification of the Executive power taxing the people of England, upon a supposition of their Representatives refusing to grant the necessary supplies.

Resolved, That the claim lately assumed and exercised by the British Parliament for making all Sticli laws as they think fit to govern the people of these Colonies, and to extort from us our money without our consent, is not only diametrically contrary to the first principles of the Constitution and the original compacts by which we are dependent upon the British Crown and Government, but is totally incompatible with the privileges of a free people and the natural rights of mankind, will render our own Legislatures merely nominal and nugatory, and is calculated to reduce us from a state of freedom and happiness to slavery and misery.

Resolved, That taxation and representation are in their nature inseparable; that the right of withholding, or of giving and granting their own money, is the only effectual security to a free people against the encroachments of despotism and tyranny; and that whenever they yield the one, they must quickly fall a prey to the other.

Resolved, That the powers over the people of America, now claimed by the British House of Commons, in whose election we have no share; in whose determinations we have no influence; whose information must be always defective, and often false; who in many instances may have a separate, and in some an opposite interest to ours and who are removed from those impressions of tenderness and compassion, arising from personal intercourse and connection, which soften the rigorous of the most despotick Governments, must, if continued, establish the most grievous and intolerable species of tyranny and oppression that ever was inflicted upon mankind.

Resolved, That it is our greatest wish and inclination, as well as interest, to continue our connection with, and dependence upon, the British Government; but though we are its subjects, we will use every means which Heaven hath given us to prevent our becoming its slaves.

Resolved, That there is a premeditated design and system formed and pursued by the British Ministry to introduce an arbitrary Government into his Majesty's American Dominions, to which end they are artfully prejudicing our Sovereign and inflaming the minds of our fellow-subjects in Great Britain, by propagating the most malevolent falsehoods, particularly that there is an intention in the American Colonies to set up for independent states, endeavouring at the same time, by various acts of violence and oppression, by sudden and repeated dissolutions of our Assemblies, whenever they presume to examine the illegality of Ministerial mandates, or deliberate on the violated rights of their constituents, and by breaking in upon the American Charters, to reduce us to a state of desperation, and dissolve the original compact, by which our ancestors bound themselves and their posterity to remain dependent upon the British Crown; which measures, unless effectually counteracted, will end in the ruin, both of Great Britain and her Colonies.

Resolved, That the several Acts of Parliament for raising a revenue upon the people of America, without their consent; the erecting new and dangerous jurisdictions here; the taking away our trials by jury; the ordering persons, upon criminal accusations, to be tried in another country than that in which the fact is charged to have been committed; the Act inflicting Ministerial vengeance upon the town of Boston; and the two Bills lately brought into Parliament for abrogating the Charter of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, and for the protection and encouragement of murderers in the said Province, are part of the abovementioned iniquitous system; that the inhabitants of the town of Boston are now suffering in the common cause of all British America, and are justly entitled to its support and assistance; and, therefore, that a subscription ought immediately to be opened, and proper persons appointed, in every county in this Colony, to purchase provisions and consign them to some gentlemen of character in Boston, to be distributed among the poorer sort of the people there.

Resolved, That we will cordially join with our friends and brethren of this and the other Colonies, in such measures as shall be judged most effectual, for procuring a redress of our grievances; and that, upon obtaining such redress, if the destruction of the tea at Boston be regarded as an invasion of private property, we shall be willing to contribute towards paying the East India Company the value; but, as we consider the said Company as the tools and instruments of oppression in the hands of Government, and the cause of the present distress, it is the opinion of this meeting, that the people of these Colonies should forbear all further dealings with them, by refusing to purchase their merchandise, until that peace, safety, and good order, which they have disturbed, be perfectly restored; and that all tea now in this Colony, or which shall be imported into it, shipped before the first day of September next, should be deposited in some store-house, to be appointed by the respective Committees of each county, until a sufficient sum of money be raised, by subscription, to reimburse the owners the value, and then to be publicly burnt and destroyed; and if the same is not paid for and destroyed as aforesaid, that it remain in the custody of the said Committees, at the risk of the owners, until the Act of Parliament imposing a duty upon tea for raising a revenue in America, be repealed; and immediately afterwards be delivered unto the several proprietors thereof, their agents or attornies.

Resolved, That nothing will so much contribute to defeat the pernicious designs of the common enemies of Great Britain and her Colonies, as a firm union of the latter, who ought to regard every act of violence or oppression inflicted upon any one of them, as aimed at all; and to effect this desirable purpose, that a Congress should be appointed, to consist of Deputies from all the Colonies, to concert a general and uniform plan for the defence and preservation of our common rights, and continuing the connection and dependence of the said Colonies upon Great Britain, under a just, lenient, permanent, and constitutional form of Government.

Resolved, That our most sincere and cordial thanks be given to the patrons and friends of liberty in Great Britain, for their spirited and patriotick conduct in support of our constitutional rights and privileges, and their generous efforts to prevent the present distress and calamity of America.

Resolved, That every little jarring interest and dispute which hath ever happened between these Colonies, should be buried in eternal oblivion; that all manner of luxury and extravagance ought immediately to be laid aside, as totally inconsistent with the threatening and gloomy prospect before us; that it is the indispensable duty of all the gentlemen and men of fortunes to set examples of temperance, fortitude, frugality, and industry, and give every encouragement in their power, particularly by subscriptions and premiums, to the improvement of arts and manufactures in America; that great care and attention should be had to the cultivation of flax, cotton, and other materials for manufactures; and we recommend it to such of the inhabitants as have large stocks of sheep, to sell to their neighbours at a moderate price, as the most certain means of speedily increasing our breed of sheep and quantity of wool.

Resolved, That until American grievances be redressed, by restoration of our just rights and privileges, no goods or merchandise whatsoever ought to be imported into this Colony, which shall be shipped from Great Britain or Ireland, after the first day of September next, except linens not exceeding fifteen pence per yard, coarse woollen cloth, not exceeding two shillings sterling per yard; nails, wire, and wire cards, needles and pins, paper, saltpetre, and medicines, which may be imported until the first day of September, 1776; and if any goods or merchandise, other than those hereby excepted, should be shipped from Great Britain after the time aforesaid, to this Colony, that the same, immediately upon their arrival, should either be sent back again by the owners, their agents or attornies, or stored and deposited in some warehouse, to be appointed by the Committee for each respective county, and there kept at the risk and charge of the owners, to be delivered to them when a free importation of goods hither shall again take place; and that the merchants and venders of goods and merchandise within this Colony ought not to take advantage of our present distress, but continue to sell the goods and merchandise which they now have, or which may be shipped to them before the first day of September next, at the same rates and prices they have been accustomed to do within one year last past; and if any person shall sell such goods on any other terms than above expressed, that no inhabitant of this Colony should, at any time forever thereafter, deal with him, his agent, factor, or storekeeper, for any commodity whatsoever.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the merchants and venders of goods and merchandise within this Colony should take an oath not to sell or dispose of any goods or merchandise whatsoever which may be shipped from Great Britain after the first day of September next, as aforesaid, except the articles before excepted; and that they will, upon the receipt of such prohibited goods, either send the same back again by the first opportunity, or deliver them to the Committees of the respective counties, to be deposited in some warehouse, at the risk and charge of the owners, until they, their agents, or factors, shall be permitted to take them away by the said Committees; and that the names of those who refuse to take such oath, be advertised by the respective Committees, in the counties wherein they reside; and to the end that the inhabitants of this Colony may know what merchants and venders of goods and merchandise have taken such oath, that the respective Committees should grant a certificate thereof to every such person who shall take the same.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that during our present difficulties and distress, no slaves ought to be imported into any of the British Colonies on this Continent; and we take this opportunity of declaring our most earnest wishes to see an entire stop forever put to such a wicked, cruel, and unnatural trade.

Resolved, That no kind of lumber should be exported from this Colony to the West-Indies, until America be restored to her constitutional rights and liberties, if the other Colonies will accede to a like resolution: and that it be recommended to the general Congress to appoint as early a day as possible for stopping such exports.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, if American grievances be not redressed before the first day of November, 1775, that all exports of produce from the several Colonies to Great Britain, should cease; and to carry the said resolution more effectually into execution, that we will not plant or cultivate any tobacco after the crop now growing, provided the same measure shall be adopted by the other Colonies on this Continent, as well as those who have heretofore made tobacco, as those who have not. And it is our opinion, also, if the Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies shall adopt the measure of non-exportation to Great Britain, as the people will be thereby disabled from paying their debts, that no judgments should be rendered by the Courts in the said Colonies, for any debt, after information of the said measures being determined upon.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that a Solemn Covenant and Association should be entered into by the inhabitants of all the Colonies, upon oath, that they will not, after the time which shall be respectively agreed on at the general Congress, export any manner of lumber to the West Indies; nor any of their produce to Great Britain; or sell or dispose of the same to any person who shall not have entered into the said Covenant and Association; and also, that they will not import or receive any goods or merchandise which shall be shipped from Great Britain, after the first day of September next, other than the before enumerated articles; nor buy or purchase any goods, except as before excepted, of any person whatsoever, who shall not have taken the oath herein before recommended to be taken by the merchants and venders of goods; nor buy or purchase any slaves hereafter imported into any part of this Continent, until a free exportation and importation be again resolved on by a majority of the Representatives or Deputies of the Colonies; and that the respective Committees of the counties in each Colony, so soon as the Covenant and Association becomes general, publish by advertisements in their several counties, a list of the names of those, (if any such there be) who will not accede thereto, that such traitors to their country may be publicly known and detested.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that this and the other associating Colonies should break off all trade, intercourse, and dealings, with that Colony, Province, or town, which shall decline or refuse to agree to the plan which shall be adopted by the general Congress.

Resolved, That should the town of Boston be forced to submit to the late cruel and oppressive measures of Government, that we shall not hold the same to be binding upon us, but will, notwithstanding, religiously maintain, and inviolably adhere to, such measures as shall be concerted by the general Congress, for the preservation of our lives, liberties, and fortunes.

Resolved, That it be recommended to the Deputies of the general Congress, to draw up and transmit an humble and dutiful Petition and Remonstrance to his Majesty, asserting in decent firmness our just and constitutional rights and privileges, lamenting the fatal necessity of being compelled to enter into measures disgusting to his Majesty and his Parliament, or injurious to our fellow-subjects in Great Britain; declaring, in the strongest terms, our duty and affection to his Majesty's person, family, and Government, and our desire forever to continue our dependence upon Great Britain; and most humbly conjuring and beseeching his Majesty not to reduce his faithful subjects of America to a state of desperation, and to reflect, that from our Sovereign there can be but one appeal. And it is the opinion of this meeting, that after such Petition and Remonstrance shall have been presented to his Majesty, the same shall be printed in the public papers in all the principal towns in Great Britain.

Resolved, That George Washington, Esquire, and Charles Broadwater, Gentleman, lately elected our Representatives to serve in the General Assembly, attend the Convention at Williamsburg, on the first day of August next, and present these Resolves as the sense of the people of this county upon the measures proper to be taken in the present alarming and dangerous situation of America.

Resolved, That George Washington, Esquire, John West, George Mason, William Rumney, William Ramsay, George Gilpton, Robert Hanson Harrison, John Carlyle, Robert Adam, John Dalton, Philip Alexander, James Kirk, William Brown, Charles Broadwater, William Payne, Martin Cockburne, Lee Massey, William Hartshorne, Thomas Triplett, Charles Alexander, Thomas Pollard, Townsend Dade, Junior, Edward Payne, Henry Gunnell, and Thomas Lewis, be a Committee for this county; that they, or a majority of them, on any emergency, have power to call a general meeting, and to concert and adopt such measures as may be thought most expedient and necessary.

Resolved, That a copy of these Proceedings be transmitted to the Printer at Williamsburg, to be published.

ASSEMBLY OF PENNSYLVANIA.

July 18, 1774, P. M. - The Representatives of the Province having been, by virtue of the Governour's writs to the Sheriffs of the several counties for that purpose, directed, summoned to meet this day in Assembly; a quorum met accordingly.

Ordered, That Mr. Pawling and Mr. Hillegas wait on the Governour, and acquaint him that the House being met, pursuant to his summons, they are ready to receive any business he may be pleased to lay before them, and request a copy of the Writ by which they have been convened.

The Members return and Report, they had waited on the Governour, and delivered their Message according to order, and that his Honour was pleased to say, he would immediately furnish the House with a copy of the Writ requested.

The Governour, by Mr. Secretary, sent down the said Writ accordingly, also a written Message to the House, with sundry Letters and Petitions. from different parts of the frontiers, concerning the present Indian disturbances, which were in part read by order, and the said Message follows in these words, viz:

"GENTLEMEN: The importance of the matter I have to lay before you, will, I am persuaded, make it unnecessary to apologize to you for calling you together at a season of the year of all others the most inconvenient for you to attend to publick business.

"I am to inform you, that in the latter end of April last, about eleven Delaware and Shawanese Indians were barbarously murdered on the river Ohio, about ninety miles below Pittsburgh, by two parties of white men, said to be Virginians. As we were at that time in a state of perfect amity with the Western Indians, and it does not appear that those who were killed by the above parties had given them the least provocation, I am at a loss to conjecture what could be the inducement to act so cruel and inhumane.

"As soon as the unfortunate affair was known on the frontiers of this Province, messengers were despatched to assure the Indians that these outrages had been committed by wicked people, without the knowledge or countenance of any of the English Governments, and requesting they might not be the means of disturbing the friendship which subsisted between us. This step had so far a good effect as to quiet them for the present, and prevent them coming to a resolution to enter into a general war with us. It did not, however, restrain the particular friends and relations of the deceased, who, it seems, contrary to the advice of their Chiefs, in a short time afterwards took their revenge, by murdering a number of Virginians settled to the Westward of the river Monongahela. Alarmed at this proceeding, the out-settlers left their habitations and fled with their families into the interior parts; and the panick soon became so universal that a great part of the Western frontier of this Province was totally deserted; and it is impossible, to say when the mischief would have stopped had not a number of rangers been raised by the Magistrates and others, in the County of Westmoreland, who were stationed in proper places to protect the inhabitants, and act defensively in case of an attack. This measure I esteemed a very salutary one, supplied the men with arms and ammunition, and ordered them to be kept up till the meeting of the Assembly, under a full persuasion that you would cheerfully defray the necessary expenses attending it.

"It would be too tedious to relate the several occurrences which have happened, from time to time, since the first act of hostility committed, but I refer you for more particular information therein to the Letters and Papers I have ordered the Secretary to lay before you. You will thereby perceive that the Delawares and Shawanese have repeatedly made the strongest professions of a pacifick disposition, and their desire that matters should be accommodated; and as an earnest desire of their sincerity, they not only protected the persons and goods of our traders among them from the violence of some of their young warriors, but actually escorted many of them back to their friends near Pittsburgh, at the risk of their own lives. Hence, we had great reason to believe, that by a just and discreet conduct a rupture with them might have been avoided. But I am sorry to inform you that I have received intelligence, that the very Indians, who thus generously escorted our traders home, were, contrary to all faith, pursued on their return, attacked, and one of them wounded by a party of Virginians, sent out for the purpose by one Conolly, a Militia

Captain, appointed by the Government of Virginia, at Pittsburgh, who has lately taken possession of that place under the pretence of its being out of the bounds of the Province of Pennsylvania, and within the Colony of Virginia. By this unhappy step there is great reason to apprehend that it will be difficult to persuade the Indians further to confide in any overtures that can be made, or assurances given them, and that we shall be involved in the calamities of an Indian war. Nothing in my power has been neglected which I thought might have a tendency to avert so great an evil. I have wrote to Sir William Johnson, requesting him he would interest himself on the occasion, and use his influence with the Six Nations, to assist in healing the breach with their Western brethren; and have despatched a letter to Lord Dunmore representing the misconduct of Conolly, and the dangerous consequences of his unjust and violent proceedings. What will be the event time only can discover; but in this dark and uncertain state of things, I think it my duty most earnestly to recommend it to you, to make timely and effectual provision for the security of our frontier settlements, that, in case of a war with the savages, they may have that immediate protection and assistance which they look for, and have a right to expect, from the Government under which they live; and that you will also provide for the discharging such expenses as have hitherto arisen by my orders for their defence, in which I shall readily concur with you.

"Could you devise any other probable method, by which this unhappy difference with the Indians could be accommodated, it would give me infinite satisfaction; and nothing could afford me more pleasure than the being instrumental in accomplishing so desirable an end. JOHN PENN."

July 18, 1774.

Ordered, That the foregoing Message, and the Papers attending it, be referred to further consideration to-morrow morning.

The House adjourned to ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

July 19, 1774. - The House met pursuant to adjournment, and resumed the consideration of the Letters and Petitions sent down with the Governour's Message of last night, which were severally read, and ordered to lie on the table.

The Committee of Correspondence laid before the House sundry Letters and copies of Resolves from the Speakers of the Assemblies of Massachusetts Bay and Rhode-Island; also a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence for the Colony of Virginia, with an Answer to the said Letters from the Committee of this House, which were read by order, and are as they severally follow, viz:

Province of Massachusetts Bay, June 17, 1774.

Sir: Agreeable to the directions of the House of Representatives of this Province, I have the honour to transmit to you a copy of certain Resolves they entered into in their present session,* by which you will perceive that it is their opinion that a meeting of Committees from the several Colonies on this Continent is highly expedient and necessary, and that they propose that such a meeting be at the City of Philadelphia, on the first day of September next; and that for the purposes mentioned in said Resolves they have appointed a Committee of five, on the part of this Province, whom they have directed to repair to Philadelphia, at the time above mentioned. As this appears to be a measure absolutely necessary for the establishment of the rights and liberties of the Colonies upon a just and solid foundation, and for the restoration of union and harmony between both countries, it is not doubted but it will be agreed to in your Colony; if it should, it is desired that as early notice as possible might be transmitted to,

Your most obedient humble servant,

THOMAS CUSHING, Speaker.

To the Honourable Speaker of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania.

New-Port, June 20, 1774.

SIR: Agreeable to the directions of the General Assembly, I have the honour to enclose you a copy of certain Resolutions entered into by them, respecting the very alarming situation of the Colonies. *

I have also to inform you, that upon this occasion, the Assembly have adjourned to the fourth Monday in August next. I am, with very great regard, sir, your most humble servant,

METCALF BOWLER, Speaker.

To the Honourable Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Province of Pennsylvania.

Williamsburg, Virginia, May 28, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The enclosed papers will explain to you our present political state here, with respect to our unhappy dispute with our mother country. The propriety of appointing Deputies from the several Colonies of British America, to meet annually in general Congress, appears to be a measure extremely important and extensively useful, as it tends so effectually to obtain the united wisdom of the whole in every case of general concern. We are desired to obtain your sentiments on this subject, which you will be pleased to furnish us with. Being very desirous of communicating to you the opinions and conduct of the late Representatives on the present posture of American affairs, as quickly as possible, we beg leave to refer you to a future letter, in which we shall more fully express our sentiments on those subjects.

We are, with great respect, gentlemen, your most obedient servants,

PEYTON RANDOLPH,

ROBERT C. NICHOLAS,

DUDLEY DIGGES.

To the Committee of Correspondence for Pennsylvania.

Upon motion,

Resolved, That on Thursday next this House will resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider the subject of the foregoing Letters and Resolves.

Resolved, upon motion, That the Committees from the several counties of this Province, now met on publick affairs in the city, be admitted, if they choose it, to hear the debates of the House on that day.

A Petition from the County of Northumberland was presented to the House and read, setting forth, That the Petitioners being situated on the frontiers of the Province, in a county lately laid out, thinly inhabited, and having within the limits of its jurisdiction a great body of intruders from the Colony of Connecticut, who refuse subjection to this Government, they find themselves unable to enforce the laws, and bring offenders to justice, through want of a proper publick jail; that the unavoidable expenses of the county having hitherto required nearly the whole amount of the county levies, the Trustees have not yet received any money from that source, for erecting the necessary Public Buildings, nor is it likely a sufficiency for this useful purpose can be raised in that way for years to come - that the Petitioners, calling to mind the indulgence of former Assemblies to other counties of this Province in their infancy, are encouraged to pray that so much of the money in the Loan Office, appropriated to the use of the said county, as will be sufficient to build at least a County Jail, may be ordered to be paid into the hands of the Trustees appointed by law to erect such building in the said county to be immediately applied to that necessary work, and that the said money be charged to the county, and reimbursed in the usual, or any other way, which the House may think proper.

Ordered to lie on the table.

A Member presented to the Chair a paper from the Provincial Committee met on publick business at the Carpenter's Hall in this city, which was read by order, and is as follows, viz:

"At a Provincial Committee, composed of Deputies from the City and County of Philadelphia, and the Counties of Bucks, Chester, Lancaster, York, Cumberland, Burks, Northampton, Northumberland, and Bedford, met at the Carpenter's Hall, on Tuesday, July 19th, 1774, THOMAS WILLING, Esquire, Chairman:

"Upon motion, agreed,

"That the ninth Resolve agreed to unanimously by this Provincial Committee, be copied, and sent to the honourable House of Assembly, viz:

"9. Resolved, unanimously, That there is an absolute necessity that a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies be immediately assembled to consult together, and form a general plan of conduct to be observed by all the Colonies, for the purposes of procuring relief for our suffering brethren; obtaining redress of our grievances; preventing future dissensions; firmly establishing our rights; and restoring harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies on a constitutional foundation.

"Agreed, That Isaac Howell, Joseph Hart, Francis Richardson, Emanuel Carpenter, Joseph Donaldson, Robert Magaw, Daniel Broadhead, John Okely, and William Scull, be a Committee to wait upon the House with the above Resolve, and that they be instructed to inform the House that the Committee are employed in finishing their Resolves, and drawing up their sentiments on the present situation of publick affairs, which, when completed, will be laid before the honourable House.

"Signed by order of the Committee,

"THOMAS WILLING, Chairman."

The House resumed the consideration of the Governour's Message, which was again read by order, and after some debate thereon, Ordered, That Mr. Hunter and Mr. Thompson wait on the Governour, and request he will be pleased to furnish the House with an account of the number of men raised by the Magistrates for the protection of the frontier inhabitants, and an estimate of the expense that hath accrued on that measure to the present time.

July 20, 1774. The House met pursuant to their adjournment. Mr. Speaker and Mr. Rhoads laid before the House two Letters from Benjamin Franklin, Esquire, dated London, the 6th and 26th of April last, with some other Papers, on publick affairs, which being severally read were,

Ordered to lie on the table.

The Members appointed to wait on the Governour with the Message of last night, reported that they had delivered the same according to order; and that his Honour was pleased to say, he had already laid before the House all the Papers he was possessed of relating to the ranging companies on the frontiers, but would endeavour to procure as soon as possible, the further information requested by the House, and lay it before such Commissioners as may be appointed to pay the said Companies.

The House then proceeded in the consideration of the Governour's Message, and after some time spent therein, adjourned to three o'clock, P. M.

The House again taking into consideration the Governour's Message and the Papers sent down with it,

Resolved, That Michael Hillegas, George Gray, Thomas Mifflin, and Charles Humphreys, Esquires, or any three of them, by and with the consent and approbation of the Governour of this Province for the time being, may draw orders on the Provincial Treasurer for any sum not exceeding two thousand pounds, to be disposed of in paying and victualling, until the tenth day of August next, a number of rangers lately raised by the Magistrates of Westmoreland County, for removing the panick into which the inhabitants of the said county have been thrown by the late Indian disturbances, and for other incidental expenses; and also in maintaining the peace and friendship subsisting between this Province and the Indians; the said sum to be paid out of the money struck by virtue of the Act, entitled, "An Act for the support of the Government of this Province, making the excise on wine, rum, brandy, and other spirits, more equal, and for preventing frauds in collecting and paying the said excise."

Resolved, That if, after the said tenth day of August, it shall appear to the Governour, and the said Michael Hillegas, George Gray, Thomas Mifflin, and Charles Humphreys, necessary to employ any number of the said rangers, this House will pass a Bill for paying and victualling them, until the 20th of September next, provided their number shall not exceed two hundred.

Resolved, That this House will make provision for paying the reward of one hundred pounds to any person who shall apprehend James Cooper and John Hinkson, who it is said, have barbarously murdered an Indian on the frontiers of this Province, and deliver them into the custody of the keeper of the jail within either of the Counties of Lancaster, York, or Cumberland, or the sum of fifty pounds for either of them.

Resolved, That this House will, at its next sitting, pass a bill, and present the same to the Governour for indemnifying the Provincial Treasurer for the payment of the said moneys.

July 21, 1774. - This day the Provincial Committee, composed of Committees from the several Committees of the Province, waited on the House, and being admitted, their Chairman presented at the table sundry Papers, containing a number of Resolves on the present grievances of the Colonies, and Instructions to their Representatives, recommending such measures as appear to the said Committee most proper for obtaining redress; and then withdrawing, the said Papers were severally read, and ordered to lie on the table for the perusal of the Members.

The Order of Tuesday last being read,

Resolved, That this House will, to-morrow morning, resolve itself into a Committee of the whole House, to consider the several Papers before them, received from the Speakers and Committees of Correspondence for Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Virginia, on the present state of the Colonies.

July 22, 1774. - The House met pursuant to adjournment; and the Order of yesterday being read, resolved itself into a Committee of the whole House, upon the subject of the several Letters and Resolves received from the Colonies of Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island and Virginia, and, after some time spent therein, Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and Mr. Rhoads reported from the Committee, that they had considered the business before them, and having come to a Resolve thereon, he was ordered to report the same when ever the House shall be pleased to receive it.

Ordered, That the Resolve of the Committee be received immediately.

Mr. Rhoads then (according to order) reported the said Resolve, which he first read in his place, and then delivered at the Clerk's table, where the same was again read, by order, and follows in these words, viz:

"The Committee of the whole House taking into their most serious consideration the unfortunate differences which have long subsisted between Great Britain and the American Colonies, and been greatly increased by the operation and effects of divers late Acts of the British Parliament:

"Resolved, n. c. d., That there is an absolute necessity that a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies be held as soon as conveniently may be, to consult together upon the present unhappy state of the Colonies, and to form and adopt a plan for the purposes of obtaining redress of American grievances ascertaining American rights, upon the most solid constitutional principles, and for establishing that union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies, which is indispensably necessary for the welfare and happiness of both."

The House resumed the consideration of the Resolve from the Committee of the whole House; and after some debate thereon, adopting and confirming the same.

Resolved, n. c. d., That the Honourable Joseph Galloway, Speaker, Samuel Rhoads, Thomas Mifflin, Charles Humphreys, John Morton, George Ross, and Edward Riddle, Esquires, be and they are hereby appointed a Committee on the part of this Province, for the purposes aforesaid, and that they, or any four of them, do meet such Committees or Delegates from the other Colonies, as have been or may be appointed, either by their respective Houses of Representatives, or by Convention, or by the Provincial or Colony Committees, at such time and place as shall be generally agreed on by such Committees; and that me Speaker of this House be directed, in a letter to the Speakers of the Houses of Representatives of the other Colonies, to inform them of these Resolves. *

Upon motion,

Ordered, That Mr. Hillegas, Mr. Miles, Mr. Brown, Mr. John Jacobs, Mr. Webb, Mr. Ross, Mr. Pope, and Mr. Allen, be a Committee to prepare and bring in draughts of Instructions for the Deputies to the ensuing Congress; a Circular Letter to the Speakers of the Several Colony Assemblies, and an Answer to the Governour's Message on Indian Affairs.

July 23, 1774. Mr. Speaker laid before the House a Letter from Major Hamilton, Commanding Officer at the Barracks of this city, which was read by order, and is as follows:

Philadelphia, July 21, 1774.

SIR: I take the liberty to inform you, that his Majesty's troops under my command stand much in need of the aid of the Legislature of this Province; their bedding, utensils, and apartments, require inspection and want repairs. I have had the pleasure of knowing this Barrack these seven years, and shall always be happy in declaring, that Philadelphia, July 23, 1774. - The Committees from the several counties of this Province met in this City, the 15th instant, and being very busy ever since in framing Instructions to the Assembly, with which they were permitted to attend the House on the 21st inst., having previously voted three of their body, as proper persons to attend the Congress, and represent this Province viz: Thomas Willing, John Dickinson, and James Wilson. Yesterday morning the Committee were again admitted into the House, when, to their disappointment, the matter was not taken up and debated before them; but a Resolve of the House was read to them which had been agreed to before their admission, setting forth, that the House did vote * * * * * persons to attend the ensuing Congress. After which the House filled up the blank with the names of the following persons, to appear at the Congress, in behalf of this Province, viz: Joseph Galloway, Samuel Rhoads, John Morton, Charles Humphreys, George Ross, Edward Biddle, and Thomas Mifflin; but as yet it is not known how they will be instructed by the House.

The following Piece was handed about among the Members of the Assembly on the evening of the 21st instant:

To the Representatives of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, now met in this City:

"All numerous Assemblies, however composed, are mere mobs, and "swayed in their debates by the least motive; this is confirmed by "daily experience. An absurdity strikes a member, he conveys it to "his neighbours and the whole is infected. Separate this great body, "and though every member be only of middling sense, it is not probable "any thing but reason can prevail. Influence and example being removed, good sense will also get the better of bad. The only way of "making people wise, is to keep them from uniting into large Assemblies - Hume

GENTLEMEN: Permit a cool considerate observer of the present distracted proceedings of this Province, for one moment to claim your attention.

Let not, I beseech you, the noise and confusion of the scene stifle the voice of wisdom, or prevent the full display of your ancient prudence. The call of one not less well affected to the privileges and liberties, derived to us from our excellent Constitution. than the most zealous of her sons, of one not heated by the fallacious spirit of a pretended patriotism, nor, he trusts, too tamely submissive to the hand of oppression, solicits your most serious consideration. Let him not supplicate in vain! yet even on the last precipice on which the vestiges of order and regularity shall be traced, pause, ponder, maturely deliberate, and with every nerve of reason extended, reflect on the past, and penetrate into the future.

You are now met in a Legislative capacity, and are to determine on a matter the most important in itself - the most interesting in its consequences of any that ever came before you.. Nothing less is to be agitated than whether the people of the Province shall assert their rights and privileges on constitutional grounds; or, deviating from the long known and securely trodden paths of prudence and regularity, wander into the maizy labyrinths of perplexity and disorder.

From the respective counties of this Province persons have been delegated, to take into their serious consideration the present alarming state of affairs; to deliberate on means the most effectual for obtaining redress of our grievances; and to give such instructions to you as they may judge expedient. By what legal authority they have proceeded let them demonstrate. Among them are gentlemen of the first abilities; of characters the most respectable; let any of them take up the pen, and convince you that their appointment is constitutional, or that their proceedings have been conducted with justice or equity. A single delegate for one of the frontier counties, has a vote in every debate no troops have been better supplied, nor any applications from commanding officers more politely attended to than here; from which I am encouraged to hope, that the House of Assembly will, during this sitting, order the necessary inspection, and afford such a supply as their generosity and judgment shall dictate. I have the honour to be, with great respect, your most obedient humble servant,

ISAAC HAMILTON,

Major to his Majesty's 18th, or Royal Irish Regiment of Foot.

To the Honourable Joseph Galloway, Esq.

Upon consideration of the foregoing Letter,

Ordered, That Mr. Hillegas and Mr. Miles be a Committee to examine into the present condition of the said Barracks, and report thereon to the House at their next meeting.

The Committee appointed to prepare and bring in Instructions for the Deputies appointed to attend the ensuing Congress; a Circular Letter to the Speakers of the several Assemblies of the Colonies, and an Answer to the Governour's Message, reported they had essayed a Draught for each of those purposes, which they presented to the Chair; and the same being read by order, were agreed to by the House, and are as they severally follow, viz.:

Instructions to the Committee of Assembly appointed to attend the General Congress.

Gentlemen: The trust reposed in you is of such a nature, and the modes of executing it may be so diversified in the course of your deliberation, that it is scarcely possible to give you particular Instructions respecting it. We shall therefore only in general direct, that you are to meet in Congress the Committees of the several British Colonies, at such time and place as shall be generally agreed on, to deemed equivalent to the whole Committee of this opulent and populous city and county. Is this reasonable, or is it consistent with that just proportion observed in limiting the number of Representatives for the counties, which compose your House? To hesitate on a decision of this question, betrays an unpardonable partiality, or a shameful weakness.

This is not all, they have resolved on Instructions to be handed to you. These Resolves have not been entered into without warm opposition, and without great division; if they are to have any weight, they are to supersede you; if you are influenced by them, they incur a dissolution of our Charter. The gentlemen chosen by ballot on the first of October, are the only persons before whom every grievance should come; you are the men; you are chosen to represent us on every occasion; in you we have reposed the most unlimited confidence; no body of men are to supersede you; you are the guardians of our rights; we look to you for protection against every encroachment and now implore you to avert every innovation Let us for one moment examine how for these Resolves must be short of the general sentiments of the people. The Committees are appointed at county meetings, where, it is notorious, not one fourth of the freeholders attend. The resolutions are previously drawn up by some zealous partizan, perhaps by some fiery spirit, ambitiously solicitous of forcing himself into public notice; too often by persons whose only consequence is derived from the calamities in which their country may be involved. The orator mounts the rostrum, and in some pre-conceived speech, heightened no doubt, with all the aggravations which the fertility of his genius can suggest, exerts all the powers of elocution, to heat his audience with that blaze of patriotism, with which he conceives himself inspired, at such a time when the passion of Liberty, implanted in every breast, is awakened; when the threats of tyranny, and a terrour of slavery, are artfully set before them; a measure need only be proposed to be resolved on: and I am well convinced many an American has given his assent to such a measure, from which a little reflection would have made him retract with horror.

From this fountain originates the authority of the Committees; it is a fountain from which no legal authority can be derived; we know not where such precedents may terminate; setting up a power to controul you, is setting up anarchy above order - IT IS THE BEGINNING OF REPUBLICANISM.

Sophistry with her specious pretences may, perhaps, gloss over the matters, but sound reason will never aid the demonstration. They are gigantick strides to set up the resolves of the populace above the law, and above the Constitution. Nip this pernicious weed in the bud, before it has taken too deep root.

Methinks I already see a new Cassius rise, and tell your Speaker he differs from him in sentiment; asserts that they only are the men made privy to the desires and wishes of your constituents; and that they have a right to dictate to you what shall be done.

If these principles become prevalent, suffer the hardihood of truth, ungracious as it may sound in their ears, to tell you that you are only mere machines, a vox et præterea nihil. If these measures be sanctified by you; if a precedent be once established, it remains only in some future day, for some popular leader, who may dissent from you in opinion, to raise a general clamour; collect his number; propound his resolves; quote this established precedent to support him; and, in the tone of authority, demand entrance into the Senate. But it is not my art to point out to ou the innumerable inconveniences and mischiefs with which this measure, if adopted, is pregnant.

Deliver down to posterity "the laws, the rights, the generous plan of power," which your ancestors have delivered to you; and let not the murmur of your children be heard, for want of foresight and precaution.

A FREEMAN.

consult together on the present critical and alarming situation and state of the Colonies; and that you, with them, exert your utmost endeavours to form and adopt a plan which shall afford the best prospect of obtaining a redress of American grievances, ascertaining the American rights, and establishing that union and harmony which is most essential to the welfare and happiness of both countries; and in doing this, you are strictly charged to avoid every thing indecent or disrespectful to the mother state. You are also directed to make report of your proceedings to the next Assembly. Signed by order of the House,

JOSEPH GALLOWAY, Speaker.

Philadelphia, July 23, 1774.

Letter to the Speakers of the several Assemblies of the Colonies.

Philadelphia, July 23, 1774.

SIR: By order of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, I have the honour to enclose a copy of certain Resolves entered into by them, respecting the present alarming state of the Colonies, and appointing a Committee to meet the Committees of the other Colonies in Congress. I am, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

JOSEPH GALLOWAY, Speaker.

To the Honourable Speaker of the Assembly of the Colony of * * * * *

Answer to the Governour's Message.

May it please your Honour: The House have taken into their serious consideration your Message of the 18th instant, respecting the panick into which the frontier inhabitants have been thrown by the late murders committed on some of the Western Indians, and their apprehensions thence arising of an Indian war; and sensibly affected with the unhappy situation of those inhabitants, after mature deliberation on the measures taken by the Magistrates, and approved by your Honour, we have resolved to pay and victual the troops raised for their relief, until the 10th day of next month; and if it shall then appear to the Governour and Commissioners, that the continuance of them is necessary, we have agreed to provide for such a number, not exceeding two hundred, as your Honour and the Commissioners shall think expedient, until the 20th day of September next.

And as you are pleased to intimate, "that could we devise any other probable method than what was recommended in your Message, by which the unhappy differences with the Indians can be accommodated, it would give you infinite satisfaction," we beg leave to recommend to your consideration the propriety of taking the necessary measures to renew the peace and friendship between this Province and the Indians, and to mediate the unhappy differences between them and the Colony of Virginia, as it appears to us scarcely possible that they can subsist, without continuing the frontiers of this Province in their present fears and distress.

The House, with horror, look upon the frequent murders that have been of late committed on some of the Western Indians, in and to the westward of this Province, and think it their duty to aid Government in discouraging the perpetration of such atrocious offences, not only against the authority of Government, but in open violation of treaties subsisting between this Province and those Indians; and, therefore, have voted the sum of one hundred pounds as a reward for apprehending John Hinkson and James Cooper, who have lately, as is said, cruelly put to death Joseph Weepy, a friendly Indian, within the bounds of this Province.

The Resolutions the House have entered into on this occasion, we have herewith communicated.

Signed by order of the House,

JOSEPH GALLOWAY, Speaker.

July 23, 1774.

Ordered, That Mr. Ewing and Mr. Hunter wait on the Governour with the foregoing Answer to his Message, and acquaint him that the House incline to adjourn to Monday the 19th day of September next, if his Honour has no objection thereto; and request to know at what time to-day he will be pleased to meet the House, to enact into laws the Bills that have received his assent.

FOURTH SERIES.

The Members return, and report they had delivered their Message according to order; and that his Honour was pleased to say, he had no objection to the time of adjournment proposed by the House, and would be in the Council Chamber immediately, to enact into laws the two Bills that have been agreed on.

Ordered, That Mr. Hillegas and Mr. Miles do get the great seal affixed to the Bills after they are passed into laws, and deposit the same in the Rolls Office.

A Message by Mr. Secretary:

"SIR: The Governour is in the Council Chamber, and requires the attendance of the House."

Then, Mr. Speaker, with the whole House, waited on his Honour, and being returned from the Council Chamber, the Speaker resumed the Chair, and reported that they had waited on the Governour, and presented two Bills, entitled "An Act to continue an Act entitled 'An Act to amend the Act entitled 'An Act to prevent the exportation of bread and flour not merchantable,'" and "An Act for lending the sum of eight hundred pounds to the several "and respective Counties of Bedford, Northumberland, "and Westmoreland, for building a Court House and Prison "in each of the said counties;" to which Bills his Honour had been pleased to give his assent, by enacting the same into laws.

The House then adjourned to Monday, the 19th day of September next, at four o'clock, P. M.

MONMOUTH COUNTY (NEW-JERSEY) RESOLUTIONS.

On Tuesday, July 19, 1774, a majority of the Committees from the several Townships in the County of Monmouth, of the Colony of New-Jersey, met according to appointment, at the Court House at Freehold, in said county; and appearing to have been regularly chosen and constituted by their respective Townships, they unanimously agreed upon the propriety and expediency of electing a Committee to represent the whole county at the approaching Provincial Convention, to be held at the City of New-Brunswick, for the necessary purpose of constituting a Delegation from this Province, to the general Congress of the Colonies, and for all such other important purposes as shall hereafter be found necessary.

They, at the same time, also recorded the following Resolutions, Determinations, and Opinions, which they wish to be transmitted to posterity, as an ample testimony of their loyalty to his British Majesty, of their firm attachment to the principles of the glorious Revolution, and their fixed and unalterable purpose, by every lawful means in their power, to maintain and defend themselves in the possession and enjoyment of those inestimable civil and religious privileges which their forefathers, at the expense of so much blood and treasure, have established and handed down to them.

1. In the names and behalf of their constituents, the good and loyal inhabitants of the County of Monmouth, in the Colony of New-Jersey, they do cheerfully and publicly proclaim their unshaken allegiance to the person and Government of his most gracious Majesty King George the Third, now on the British Throne, and do acknowledge themselves bound at all times, and to the utmost exertion of their power, to maintain his dignity and lawful sovereignty in and over all his Colonies in America; and that it is their most fervent desire and constant prayer that, in a Protestant succession, the descendants of the illustrious House of Hanover, may continue to sway the British sceptre to the latest posterity.

2. They do highly esteem and prize the happiness of being governed, and having their liberty and property secured to them, by so excellent a system of laws as that of Great Britain, the best doubtless in the universe; and they will, at all times, cheerfully obey and render every degree of assistance in their power to the full and just execution of them. But at the same time will, with the greatest alacrity and resolution, oppose any unwarrantable innovation in them, or any additions to, or alterations in the grand system which may appear unconstitutional, and, consequently, inconsistent with the liberties and privileges of the descendants of free-born American Britons.

3. As there has been for ages past a most happy union and uninterrupted connection between Great Britain and her Colonies in America, they conceive their interests are now become so intimately blended together, and their mutual dependence upon each other to be at this time so delicately great, that they esteem every thing which has a tendency to alienate affection, or disunite them in any degree, highly injurious to their common happiness, and directly calculated to produce a Revolution likely to prove in the end destructive to both; they do, therefore, heartily disclaim every idea of that spirit of independence which has of late, by some of our mistaken brethren on each side of the Atlantic, been so groundlessly and injuriously held up to the attention of the Nation, as having, through ambition, possessed the breasts of the Americans. And, moreover, they devoutly beseech the Supreme Disposer of all events, graciously to incline the heart of our Sovereign, and all his Ministers, to a kind and impartial investigation of the real sentiments and disposition of his truly loyal American subjects.

4. Notwithstanding many great men and able writers have employed their talents and pens in favour of the newly adopted mode of taxation in America, they are yet sensible of no convictive light being thrown upon the subject; and, therefore, although so august a body as that of the British Parliament is now actually endeavouring to enforce, in a military way, the execution of some distressing edicts upon the capital of the Massachusetts Colony, they do freely and solemnly declare, that in conscience they deem them, and all others that are, or even may be, framed upon the same principles, altogether unprecedented and unconstitutional, utterly inconsistent with the true original intention of Magna Charta, subversive of the just rights of free-born Englishmen, agreeable and satisfactory only to the domestick and foreign enemies of our Nation, and consequently pregnant with complicated ruin, and tending directly to the dissolution and destruction of the British Empire.

5. As they, on the one hand, firmly believe that the inhabitants of the Massachusetts Colony in general, and those of the town of Boston in particular, are, to all intents and purposes, as loyal subjects as any in all his Majesty's widely extended Dominions; and on the other, that (although the present coercive and oppressive measures against them may have taken their rise in some part from the grossest and most cruel misrepresentation both of their disposition and conduct,) the blockade of that town is principally designed to lead the way in an attempt to execute a dreadful deep laid plan for enslaving all America. They are, therefore, clearly of opinion, that the Bostonians are now eminently suffering in the common cause of American freedom, and that their fate may probably prove decisive to this very extensive Continent, and even to the whole British Nation; and they do verily expect that unless some generous spirited measures for the publick safety be speedily entered into, and steadily prosecuted, every other Colony will soon, in turn, feel the pernicious effects of the same detestable restrictions. Whence they earnestly entreat every rank, denomination, society, and profession of their brethren, that, laying aside all bigotry, and every party disposition, they do now universally concur in one generous and vigorous effort for the encouragement and support of their suffering friends, and in a resolute assertion of their birth-right, liberties, and privileges. In consequence of which they may reasonably expect a speedy repeal of all the arbitrary edicts respecting the Massachusetts Government, and at the same time an effectual preclusion of any future attempts of the kind from the enemies of our happy Constitution, either upon them or any of their American brethren.

6. In case it shall hereafter appear to be consistent with the result of the deliberations of the general Congress, that an interruption, or entire cessation, of commercial intercourse with Great Britain, and even (painful as it may be) with the West Indies, until said oppressive Acts be repealed, and the liberties of America fully restored, stated, and asserted, will on this deplorable emergency be really necessary and conducive to the publick good; they promise a ready acquiescence in the measure, and will recommend the same as far as their influence shall extend, some time in September next, they declare their entire approbation of the design, and think it the only rational method of evading those aggravated evils which threaten to involve the whole Continent in one general calamitous catastrophe. They are therefore met this day, vested with due authority, from their respective constituents, to elect a Committee to represent this County of Monmouth in any future necessary transactions respecting the cause of liberty, and especially to join the Provincial Conventions soon to be held at New-Brunswick, for the purpose of nominating and constituting a number of Delegates, who, in behalf of this Colony, may steadily attend said general Congress, and faithfully serve the labouring cause of freedom; and they have consequently chosen and deputed the following gentlemen to that important trust, viz: Edward Taylor, John Anderson, John Taylor, James Grover, and John Lawrence, Esquires, Doctor Nathaniel Scudder, and Messrs. John Burrowes, John Covenhoven, Joseph Holmes, Josiah Holmes, and Edward Williams; Edward Taylor, Esq., being constituted Chairman, and any five of them a sufficient number to transact business. And they do beseech and entreat, instruct and enjoin them, to give their voice at said Provincial Convention, for no persons hut such as they in good conscience and from the best information shall verily believe to be amply qualified for so interesting a department; particularly that they be men highly approved for integrity, honesty, and uprightness, faithfully attached to his Majesty's person and lawful Government, well skilled in the principles of our excellent Constitution, and steady assertors of all our civil and religious liberties.

8. As, under the present operation of the Boston Port Bill, thousands of our respected brethren in that town must necessarily be reduced to great distress, they feel themselves affected with the sincerest sympathy and most cordial commiseration; and as they expect, under God, that the final deliverance of America will be owing, in a great degree, to a continuance of their virtuous struggle, they esteem themselves bound in duty and interest, to afford them every assistance and alleviation in their power; and they do now, in behalf of their constituents, declare their readiness to contribute to the relief of the suffering poor in that town; therefore, they request the several Committees of the counties, when met, to take into their serious consideration the necessity and expediency of forwarding, under a sanction from them, subscriptions through every part of this Colony, for that truly humane and laudable purpose; and that a proper plan be concerted for laying out the product of such subscriptions to the best advantage, and afterwards transmitting it to Boston in the safest and least expensive way.

9. As we are now, by our Committees in this, in conjunction with those of the other Colonies, about to delegate to a number of our countrymen, a power equal to any wherewith human nature alone was ever invested; and as we firmly resolve to acquiesce in the issue of their deliberations, we do therefore earnestly entreat them, seriously and conscientiously to weigh the inexpressible importance of their arduous department, and fervently to solicit that direction and assistance in the discharge of their trust, which all the powers of humanity cannot afford them; and we do humbly and devoutly beseech that God, in whose hand are the hearts of all flesh, and who ruleth them at His pleasure, graciously to infuse into the whole Congress a spirit of true wisdom, prudence, and just moderation; and to direct them to such unanimous and happy conclusions, as shall terminate in His own honour and glory; the establishment of the Protestant succession of the illustrious House of Hanover; the mutual weal and advantage of Great Britain and all her Dominions, and a just and permanent confirmation of the civil and religious liberties of America. And now, lastly, under the consideration of a bare possibility, that the enemies of our Constitution may yet succeed in a despotick triumph over us in this age, we do earnestly, (should that prove the case) call upon all future generations to renew the glorious struggle for liberty, as oft as Heaven shall afford them any probable means of success.

May this notification, by some faithful record, be handed down to the yet unborn descendants of Americans, that nothing but the most fatal necessity could have wrested the present inestimable enjoyments from their ancestors. Let them universally inculcate upon their beloved offspring an investigation of those truths, respecting both civil and religious liberty, which have been so clearly and fully stated in this generation. May they be carefully taught in all their schools; and may they never rest, until, through a Divine blessing upon their efforts, true freedom and liberty shall reign triumphant over the whole Globe.

Signed by order of the Committees,
EDWARD TAYLOR, County Chairman.

ADDRESS OF THE JUSTICES OF THE COUNTY OF SUFFOLK TO HIS EXCELLENCY GOVERNOUR GAGE, PRESENTED
JULY 19, 1774.

May it please your Excellency:

The present term affords the earliest opportunity to the Justices of his Majesty's Inferiour Court of Common Pleas of the County of Suffolk, to address your Excellency on your safe arrival and accession to the chief seat of Government in this Province.

Your Excellency's appointment at this time of difficulty and distress, is a renewed instance of the King's great attention and regard to the interest of this country and Great Britain, when the exertion of great abilities are so necessary to restore that peace and harmony which every good man must most sincerely desire; and we doubt not that the exercise of the important powers you are vested with, will discover those principles of benevolence which have ever distinguished your Excellency in other Departments.

We assure you, sir, in our station, we shall use our best endeavours to promote justice and a due obedience to the laws, and to our utmost, advance the prosperity and happiness of your administration.

THE GOVERNOUR'S ANSWER,

GENTLEMEN: It is with much thankfulness I receive your Address. Your obliging congratulations on my safe arrival, and the idea you are pleased to entertain of my abilities, coming from gentlemen so distinguished as the Justices of his Majesty's Inferiour Court of Common Pleas, cannot fail of being extremely grateful to me.

The hopes you form, through me, of peace and harmony being restored betwixt Great Britain and this Province, as it is my warmest wish, so it calls forth the exertion of all my abilities to that effect; and the assistance you are pleased to promise me of using your best endeavours to promote justice and a due obedience to the laws, must contribute greatly to this desirable end.

Boston, July 19, 1774.

ADDRESS OF THE FREEHOLDERS AND TRADESMEN OF EASTON, IN THE COUNTY OF BRISTOL, TO GOVERNOUR
GAGE, PRESENTED JULY 19, 1774.

To his Excellency THOMAS GAGE, Esq., Captain-General and Governour-in-chief in and over the Province of the MASSACHUSETTS BAY, in NEW ENGLAND.

May it please your Excellency:

We do wait on your Excellency to pay our hearty congratulations on your arrival to this Province; to acknowledge our gratitude to our Sovereign, for his gracious appointment of you to the head of this Province at this very important juncture, and to give you firm assurance that we will do every thing in our power, in our respective stations, to promote peace and good order in the Province.

We, in full confidence from the amiable character your Excellency has obtained in your other important Departments in America, rely you will ever delight in the procuring the good of this Government.

We find a peculiar difficulty in expressing the distresses of our minds relating to the unhappy circumstances of this Province, and can with sincerity say, that we have no doubt, from your well known character, that you will do all that is in your power to extricate us out of our distresses, in any way consistent with the true interest of Great Britain and her Colonies, which we hold inseparable; and we do bear our testimony against all riots, routs, combinations, and unwarrantable resolves, which we apprehend have been the unhappy occasion of many of our troubles; and as there is now circulating throughout this Province certain inflammatory pieces, signed by order of the Committee of Correspondence of the town of Boston, directed to the several towns in this Province, stimulating the people to break off all connections with Great Britain, which have still a tendency to alienate the affections of the people of this Province from the mother country, and create discord and confusion, we do assure your Excellency, that we will do every thing in our power to discountenance such proceedings, and are ready to aid the civil officers in the execution of the good and wholesome laws, and render your Excellency's administration successful and prosperous.

Signed by forty-six Inhabitants.

THE GOVERNOUR'S ANSWER.

GENTLEMEN: I return you thanks for this obliging Address; and the assurance you give me of doing all in your power, in your respective stations, to promote peace and good order in the Province. It is the duty of my station to use every endeavour to restore harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies; and it is my most ardent wish, as an Englishman, that the union betwixt them was so strongly cemented as never to be dissolved.

But while unwearied pains are taken to inflame the minds of the people against the mother country, paying no attention to truth, law, or justice, visibly with intent to widen the breach, which might be repaired by temper, decency, and moderation, so salutary a work appears unfortunately at too great a distance.

Boston, July 19, 1774.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN BRISTOL, TO HIS FRIEND IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED JULY 20, 1774.

Surrounded as I am by a thousand different businesses, still I cannot resist the strong inclination I feel to tell you that I am alive and well once more in Old England. Formerly I loved the country and people, but now both appear odious to me. Their conduct towards the Americans is horrid, cruel, and detestable. They call ye all thieves, pirates, and rebels; for which, in return, I make no scruple to call them knaves, scoundrels, and spiritless slaves. Every day I am in the most furious quarrels in vindication of America, that ever you saw. I wish to God that you had a few more friends in this city. I shall, through my zealous attachment, lose or endanger my election; but no matter. They already cry - no American; no Bill-of-Rights-man. My acquaintance tell me I am too warm; but do you tell me, my friend, who that is made up of American flesh and blood, can sit calm and composed to hear his native country, with his dearest connections, calumniated, belied, arid reprobated! No! By Heaven and Earth I swear I never will silently put up with such ill usage, while I have breath to speak, or hands to fight.

I am just returned from London. It is with a degree of pleasure, I can assure you, many of the great men are ashamed of what they have done, seriously dreading the associations and resentment of the Virginians in particular. The revenue arising from the duties on tobacco is mortgaged; and a stop to their exportations would make a glorious confusion among their High Mightinesses.

When I left America I recommended moderation, but with concern I find that conduct will not do. Resentment must show itself; for our Ministers wish themselves well out of it. Firmness on the part of the Americans will ensure them the victory. Now is the crisis - the important crisis of your whole lives; you can lose nothing by a patriotic stand; you may gain every thing.

The people of this country are sunk in luxury, and wish only to get their hands into the purses of Americans to support them in it. They are totally indifferent about liberty, and lost to every sense of honour or virtue. Open corruption is connived at and approved; oppression, black as hell, darkens the annals of the present times; and Britons seem happy in their supine folly and base vassalage.

If once the Americans submit, I foresee a train of evils ready to light upon them. Taxes, impositions, and oppressions, without moderation or end. Now is the appointed time to struggle like men for your dear inheritance; and there can be no doubt, but Providence and a new Parliament will do you ample justice. I will weary Heaven with my prayers for your success. My sincere good wishes attend you and all the rest of my worthy countrymen at Philadelphia.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Boston, July 20, 1774.

Affairs continue here much in the same situation as when I wrote to your Lordship on the 6th instant, though I don't find the merchants have repeated their attempt to comply with the Port Bill, with the spirit I hoped for. Materials wanted to carry on trades, I am told, begin to fail; and the carrying molasses and rum twenty-eight miles by land, is found not to answer as well as it was expected it would; but the people are kept up by the assurances of assistance from the other Colonies, where their leaders have contrived to raise a flame, which has not been a little increased by letters, speeches, and paragraphs, sent from England.

South Carolina has sent some rice for the support of the people here. I don't mean the Province, but some disaffected persons in Charlestown; and a few sheep, it is said, has been sent from some other place; but resources of this kind are too precarious to be depended upon and must fail them. The great object here has been to persuade the other Colonies to make the cause of Boston the common cause of America; and when the Deputies for holding the general Congress assemble, the Boston faction, it is probable, will pay the rest the compliment of taking their advice; and I understand it to be the opinion of most of the other Colonies, that Boston should begin by indemnifying the India Company. The virulent party at New-York is routed; and we are told that Philadelphia is moderate.

I have not yet received the new Act for the better government of this Province, though it is printed here; and many tell me I must expect all the opposition to the execution of it that can be made. I hope the new Counselors and the Magistrates will be firm.

The fast day appointed by the faction, was kept in this town on the 14th instant, as generally and punctually as if it had been appointed by authority. I might say the same of most other places, though it was not universal; for in a few places no regard was paid to it; but the League and Covenant tins not succeeded as the faction expected.

They rely here to obtain all their ends, on the same measures as they before adopted, viz: an union of the Colonies; a non-importation, if their demands are not satisfied; the assistance of their friends in England, and a general clamour of the merchants and manufacturers.

HANOVER COUNTY (VIRGINIA) ADDRESS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders of Hanover County, at the Court House, on Wednesday, the 20th of July, 1774, the following Address was agreed to:

To JOHN SYME and PATRICK HENRY, Jun., Esqrs.:

GENTLEMEN: You have our thanks for your patriotick, faithful, and spirited conduct in the part you acted in the late Assembly as our Burgesses; and as we are greatly alarmed at the proceedings of the British Parliament, respecting the town of Boston and the Province of Massachusetts Bay; and as we understand a meeting of Delegates from all the counties in this Colony, is appointed to be held in Williamsburg, on the first day of next month, to deliberate on our publick affairs, we do hereby appoint you, gentlemen, our Delegates; and we do request you then and there to meet, consult, and advise, touching such matters as are most likely to effect our deliverance from the evils which our country is threatened.

The importance of those things which will offer themselves for your deliberation is exceeding great; and when it is considered that the effect of the measures you may adopt will reach our latest posterity, you will excuse us for giving you our sentiments, and pointing out some particulars peeper for that plan of conduct we wish you to observe.

We are freemen; we have a right to be so, and to enjoy all the privileges and immunities of our fellow-subjects in England; find While we retain a just sense of that freedom, and those rights and privileges necessary for its safety and security, we shall never give up the right of taxation. Let it suffice to say, once for all, we will never be taxed but by our own Representatives. This is the great badge of freedom, and British America hath been hitherto distinguished by it; and when we see the British Parliament trampling upon that right, and acting with determined resolution to destroy it, we would wish to see the united wisdom and fortitude of America collected for its defence.

The sphere of life in which we move has not afforded us light sufficient to determine with certainty concerning those things from which the troubles at Boston originated. Whether the people there were warranted by justice, when they destroyed the tea, we know not; but this we know, that the Parliament, by their proceedings, have made us and all North America, parties in the present dispute, and deeply interested in the event of it; insomuch, that if our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay is enslaved, we cannot long remain free.

Our minds are filled with anxiety, when we view the friendly regards of our parent state turned into enmity; and those powers of Government formerly exerted for our aid and protection, formed into dangerous efforts for our destruction. We read our intended doom in the Boston Port Bill; in that for altering the mode of trial in criminal cases; and finally, in the Bill for altering the form of Government in the Massachusetts Bay. These several Acts are replete with injustice and oppression, and strongly expressive of the future policy of Great Britain towards all her Colonies. If a full uncontrolled operation is given to this detestable system, in its earliest stages, it will probably be fixed upon us forever.

Let it, therefore, be your great object to obtain a speedy repeal of those Acts; and for this purpose we recommend the adoption of such measures as may produce the hearty union of all our countrymen and sister Colonies. United we stand; divided we fall. To attain this wished for union, we declare our readiness to sacrifice any lesser interest arising from soil, climate, situation, or productions, peculiar to us.

We judge it conducive to the interests of America, that a general Congress of Deputies from all the Colonies be held, in order to form a plan for guarding the claims of the Colonists, and their constitutional rights, from future encroachment, and for the speedy relief of our suffering brethren at Boston. For the present, we think it proper to form a general Association against the purchase of all articles of goods imported from Great Britain, except negroes, clothes, salt, saltpetre, powder, lead, utensils and implements for handicraft-men and manufacturers, which cannot be had in America; books, papers, and the like necessities; and not to purchase any goods or merchandise that shall be imported from Great Britain, after a certain day that may be agreed on for that purpose by the said general meeting of Deputies at Williamsburg, except the articles aforesaid, or as shall be allowed to be imported by the said meeting; and that we will encourage the manufactures of America by every means in our power. A regard to justice hinders us at this time from withholding our exports. Nothing but the direct necessity shall induce us to adopt that proceeding, which we shall strive to avoid as long as possible.

The African trade for slaves, we consider as most dangerous to virtue and the welfare of this country; we therefore most earnestly wish to see it totally discouraged.

A steady loyalty to the Kings of England has ever distinguished our country; the present state of things here, as well as the many instances of it to be found in our history, leave no room to doubt it, God grant we may never see the time when that loyalty shall be found incompatible with the rights of freemen. Our most ardent desire is, that we, and our latest posterity, may continue to live under the genuine, unaltered Constitution of England, and be subjects, in the true spirit of that Constitution, to his Majesty, and his illustrious House; and may the wretches who affirm that we desire the contrary feel the punishment due to falsehood and villainy.

While prudence and moderation shall guide your Councils, we trust, gentlemen, that firmness, resolution, and zeal, will animate you in the glorious struggle; the arm of power, which is now stretched forth against us, is indeed formidable; but we do not despair. Our cause is good; and if it is served with constancy and fidelity, it cannot fail of success. We promise you our best support, and we will heartily join in such measures as a majority of our countrymen shall adopt for securing the publick liberty.

Resolved, That the above Address be transmitted to the Printers, to be published in the Gazettes.

WILLIAM POLLARD, Clerk.

STAFFORD COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS,

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Stafford, the following Address was agreed to be presented:

To JOHN ALEXANDER and CHARLES CARTER, Esqrs.:

GENTLEMEN: You are chosen to convey the sentiments of the freeholders and inhabitants of this County to a meeting of the agents from every county in the Colony, to be held in Williamsburg on the first day of August. Permit us on the occasion to recommend to you a conduct decent, though spirited; animated, yet prudent.

You will declare us unanimously determined to preserve inviolate every privilege and immunity transmitted by our ancestors; that we reject, with a disdain becoming the descendants of Englishmen, every mode of taxation, but by our Representatives; that we are united in our prayers and wishes for a speedy restoration of that harmony which formerly subsisted between Great Britain and her Colonies; but, alas! we can but deem the prospect distant while Parliament continues to enslave us; while the port of Boston, in our sister Colony the Massachusetts Bay, is now actually blocked up with an armed force, for having, with a becoming fortitude and resolution withstood the fixure of a most unconstitutional tax. Can we behold this attempt upon Boston but as a prelude to what every other Colony, as well as ourselves, are to expect? Do not the inhabitants of that city, the first sufferers in the cause of American liberty, demand every assistance from our united counsels and resolutions? We approve, we willingly accede to the Association of our late Assembly after their dissolution. It must affect the East India Company, whose concurrence with Administration in their attempts on our liberties, ought for ever to render them odious and detestable to every American But while we testify our approbation of those measures, we declare, at the same time, that we conceive them in our opinion to be inadequate to our purpose, and totally insufficient to procure a removal of our complaints. They are not; calculated to alarm the merchant trading to America, nor will they serve to arouse the manufacturers, from whose interest, joined to that of those worthy personages who are friends to our liberties, from principle, we are solely to expect redress. Let us make it their interest, on the present occasion, to serve us. This, we conceive, may be easily effected by a general stoppage of all exports and imports to and from Great Britain and the West India Islands, an occlusion of the Courts of Justice, but in criminal cases, breaches of the peace, and matters of record. These matters we request you to recommend to the meeting, as well by your votes, as every other method in your power.

JOHN WASHINGTON,	SAMUEL SELDEN,
TOWNSHEND DADE,	YELVERTON PEYTON,
RICHARD FOWKE,	WILLIAM GARRARD,
W. G. STEWART,	WILLIAM BRENT,
WILLIAM MOUNTJOY,	ROBERT STITH,
TRAVERSE DANIEL,	THOMAS MOUNTJOY.
JOHN JAMES,

Resolved, That an exemption from Parliamentary taxation is the clear and undoubted right of the American Colonies; that this right hath been uniformly claimed and allowed by the King and Parliament of Great Britain, from the first settlement; of America, and that an attempt to deprive them of this right is both contrary to the laws and Constitution of England, and would reduce the Americans to a slavery the most deplorable and ignominious.

Resolved, That to surrender the inestimable and unquestioned right which the people of America have to be taxed by their Representatives only, would be a total departure from the dignity of human nature, and would argue such a baseness of soul, as must render them unworthy of the name of British subjects.

Resolved, That though the members of this meeting do most ardently wish to see restored the good old system of tenderness and protection on the part of the mother country, and love and respect on the part of the Colonies, they are, nevertheless, firmly and seriously resolved to do whatever shall be necessary for the support of the just and equitable claim of a distinct legislation in the Colonies.

Resolved, That every encroachment made by British Parliament on the rights of any one of his Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in America, ought to be looked upon as an infringement upon the just rights and inherent privileges of the whole.

Resolved, That the only sure and effectual measure to preserve America, and disarm the hand of oppression, will be to put an entire and immediate stop to all intercourse of trade with Great Britain and the West Indies, and also to the exportation of wheat, flour, provisions, and lumber, to any part of Europe.

Resolved, That the people of this Colony ought not to have any communication in the way of trade, or otherwise, with any Colony or island in North America, who refuse to unite with them in stopping all trade with Great Britain and the West Indies, as mentioned above.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the Courts of Justice in this Colony ought to decline trying any civil causes until the grievances of America are redressed.

Resolved, That it is the unanimous opinion of this meeting, and is now earnestly recommended to the late Representatives, that they will, when the sense of the counties can be collected, appoint a meeting at the Falls of James River, or some other convenient place, to fix upon a plan for carrying into execution the measures proposed by the people; and it is hoped that Deputies from the merchants will attend.

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed of the following persons:

John Alexander,	Thos. Bunbury, Jun.,	Allin Waller,
Charles Carter,	Housin Hooe,	John Waller,
John Washington,	Chandler Fowke,	Yelverton Peyton,
Townshend Dade,	Richard Fowke,	John Browne,
William Hooe,	Thomas Massey,	Rev. Clement Brooke,
Robert Washington,	Robert Yates,	Elijah Thrailkill,
Henry Fitzhugh,	Charles Massey,	George Brant,
Francis Thornton,	Peter Hansborough,	William Brent,
Gerrard Hooe,	Seymour Hooe,	Robert Brent,
Nath. Washington,	Nehemiah Mason,	John Moncure,
Robert Stith,	Sigismund Massey,	John Bronaugh,
Henry Fitzhugh, Jun.,	Samuel Selden,	Baily Washington,
Lawrence Washington	Gowry Waugh,	John James,
L. Washington, Jun.,	John Fitzhugh,	William Adie,
William Fitzhugh,	Thomas Fitzhugh,	Richard Hewette,
John Stuart,	Henry Fitzhugh, Jun.,	Elias Hoar,
Alvin Moxly,	William Garrard,	John Rills,
Andrew Grant,	William Mountjoy,	Thomas Ludwell Lee,
Rev. William Stuart,	Peter Daniel,	Robert Knox,
Wm. Gibbon Stuart,	Traverse Daniel,	John Grigg,
John Wadrop,	Thomas Mountjoy,	John Withers,
Baldwin Dade,	Wm. Mountjoy, Jun.,	James Withers,
Thomas Bunbury,	John Mountjoy,	John Murray.

Resolved, That ten of the Committee, with the Moderator, be sufficient for transacting business.

Resolved, That it is the duty of this Colony to contribute as far as their power extends to the relief of the inhabitants of Boston, who are now, by the hard hand of oppression, marked out as the victims of Ministerial wrath, for their spirited exertions in the great cause of American freedom, and that subscriptions be immediately set on foot for their relief, under the conduct of the Committee.

Resolved, That John Alexander and Charles Carter, gentlemen, be chosen to attend the General Meeting in Williamsburg, on the first day of August, to transact business for the inhabitants of Stafford County.

WILLIAM GARRARD, Clerk.

WILMINGTON (NORTH CAROLINA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a General Meeting of the Inhabitants of the District of Wilmington, in the Province of North Carolina, held at the town of Wilmington, July 21, 1774:

WILLIAM HOOPER, Esq., Chairman.

Resolved, That Colonel James Moore, John Ancrum, Frederick Jones, Samuel Ashe, Robert Howe, Robert Hogg, Francis Clayton, and Archibald MacLaine, Esqrs., be a Committee to prepare a Circular Letter to the several counties of this Province, expressive of the sense of the inhabitants of this District, with respect to the several Acts of Parliament lately made for the oppression of our sister Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, for having exerted itself in defence of the constitutional rights of America.

Resolved, That it will be highly expedient that the several counties of this Province should send Deputies to attend a general meeting at Johnston Court House, on the 20th day of August next, then and there to debate upon the present alarming state of British America, and in concert with the other Colonies, to adopt and prosecute such measures as will most effectually tend to avert the miseries that threaten us.

Resolved, That we are of opinion, in order to effect an uniform plan for the conduct of all North America, that it will be necessary that a general Congress be held, and that Deputies should there be present from the several Colonies, fully informed of the sentiments of those in whose behalf they appear, that such regulations may then be made as will tend most effectually to produce an alteration in the British policy, and to bring about a change honourable and beneficial to all America.

Resolved, That we have the most grateful sense of the spirited conduct of Maryland, Virginia, and all the other Northern Provinces, and also the Province of South Carolina, upon this interesting occasion, and will, with our purses and persons, concur with them in all legal measures that may be conceived by the Colonies in general as most expedient in order to bring about the end which we earnestly wish for.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that Philadelphia will be the most proper place for holding the American Congress, and the 20th day of September the most suitable time; but in this we submit our own to the general convenience of the other Colonies.

Resolved, That we consider the cause of the town of Boston as the common cause of British America, and the inhabitants thereof as suffering in the defence of the rights of the Colonies in general; and that therefore we have, in proportion to our abilities, sent a supply of provisions for the indigent inhabitants of that place, thereby to express our sympathy in their sufferings, and as an earnest of our sincere intentions to contribute, by every means in our power, to alienate their distress, and to induce them to maintain, with prudence and firmness, the glorious cause in which they are at present embarked. *

CIRCULAR LETTER FROM THE WILMINGTON COMMITTEE TO THE FREEHOLDERS OF THE SEVERAL COUNTIES OF THE PROVINCE OF NORTH CAROLINA.

GENTLEMEN: At this conjuncture of British politicks, when the liberty and property of North-American subjects are at stake, when the schemes of a designing Minister are so far matured to action, that the port of Boston is shut up, that the charter of Massachusetts Bay is cruelly infringed, and its Government converted into one nearly military, to be silent would be insidious.

To avoid such an imputation to this part of the Province, we, the subscribers, appointed a Committee of Correspondence for the town and District of Wilmington, at a most respectable meeting of the freeholders of this district, by their express command, take this earliest opportunity of acquainting you with their resolutions, a copy of which we now enclose you, and request that you would send the Members, already by you elected, to represent you in General Assembly, or such other persons whom you shall approve of, to appear as your Deputies at the Court House of Johnston County, on the 20th day of August next, possessed of the sentiments of those in whose behalf they attend, and with full power to express it as obligatory on the future conduct of the inhabitants of this Province; and then and there to consult and determine what may be necessary to the general welfare of America, and of this Province. We at the same time take the liberty to inform you that there has been set on foot a subscription for the relief of the poor artizans and labourers of the town of Boston, precluded by one of forementioned measures of the British Minister from following their respective occupations, and we have reason to congratulate ourselves upon the generous contribution of the inhabitants, which has put it in our power to load a vessel with provisions, which will sail tiffs week for the port of Salem.

We rely upon your sending an immediate answer to these our proposals, and wishing you success in all your efforts for the support of the constitutional liberties of America, permit us to subscribe ourselves, &c.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN, NO. VIII.

Williamsburg, Va., July 21, 1774.

Friends, Fellow-citizens, and Countrymen:

You are now to consider the Second Plan proposed: That you shall immediately stop all exports and imports to and from Great Britain and the West India Islands, till the Tea and Boston Acts are repealed. This plan is recommended to you by men who profess themselves resolutely determined to oppose the arbitrary proceedings of the British Parliament, but at the same time wish you to adopt moderate measures; and I am convinced they mean well, and are so heartily in earnest in their professions and their wishes, that if they can be convinced that the plan they propose will be the least effectual to avoid the jurisdiction chimed by the British Parliament, and the most violent and dangerous measure which can be adopted, I have no doubt but they will readily give it up. It will not only be justifiable but highly commendable in you to lessen your imports from Great Britain, by confining yourselves to such articles as are absolutely necessary, and which you cannot manufacture yourselves; because unless you use the utmost frugality, the great balance which you already owe to the British merchants will be constantly increasing till you become bankrupts; but to deny yourselves the common necessities or even the conveniences, of life, whilst you are able to pay for them, in order to break off all connections with, and to distress, Great Britain, is surely no moderate measure. That you have been cruelly treated is certain; but in resenting that treatment you ought to distinguish between your friends and your enemies, and not, drawcansir like, destroy all you meet. The manufacturers of Britain never injured you, and probably dislike the measures of Administration as much as you do. It will be cruel in you to endeavour to starve them and their families for an insult to which they were in no way accessary. But it is said that if this plan is adopted, the want of bread will lay them under the necessity of taking up arms, and of forcing a repeal of the Acts you complain of. Not to mention that a measure whose most distant prospect of success arises from forcing these innocent people into actual rebellion, and introducing all the horrors of a civil war in Britain, can never be deemed a moderate one, it would be highly dishonourable in you, instead of drawing your own swords, and lacing your oppressors, like a brave people struggling for liberty, meanly (to take the advantage of their necessities) to force a number of starving wretches to expose themselves for your sakes to dangers you are afraid to encounter yourselves; and your conduct would certainly be very inconsistent in daring to refuse submission to British nobles, whilst, conscious of your own degeneracy and cowardice, you meanly trusted the preservation of your liberty to the bravery of British Mechanics, whose secret wishes to restrain your manufactures, whose honest contempt of your shameful conduct, and whose pressing necessities for bread, would more probably induce them to enlist as soldiers to enslave than protect you. But consider a little further how far this scheme is practicable; imagine yourselves in the situation you shortly will be after you have adopted it. The want of salt will be a small inconvenience, but hickory ashes, though a poor substitute, may supply the place of it as well to you as it formerly did to the native Indians, and the live stock with which you will abound, when you no longer export provisions, will in a great measure render it unnecessary, by enabling you to kill fresh meat every day. Nails, without slitting mills, will be made with great difficulty, but logged cabins may be built without them; clothes for yourselves and negroes are not worth thinking of, because you may confine yourselves and them to your houses in cold weather, and as you are to export nothing, the summer season will afford you time amply sufficient to raise provisions for your own use, and to lay in fuel for the winter. It is true your stocks may suffer a little in the winter, but this inconvenience may be remedied, in a great measure, by providing such large quantities of provender for them in the summer as to suffer it to be exposed to them to go to, whenever they please, in weather too cold for naked men to distribute it to them. Elegancies, and even luxuries, which many of you, by having been long accustomed to, now consider as the conveniences, if not the necessities of life, may be resigned as baubles, beneath the consideration of men who either desire or deserve to be free. The ladies, indeed, will be subjected to many disagreeable hardships, but their generous souls will submit to every inconvenience rather than see their posterity enslaved; and the great leisure you will have from contracting the cultivation of your lands will enable you to extend your manufactures till you can supply yourselves with every convenience, with every elegance, that rational men can desire. But till you can greatly improve your present manufactures, you will allow, my countrymen, that your situations will be rather uncomfortable. Are you certain that all America will cheerfully submit to this situation? Did those who signed the Association in the days of the Stamp Act, religiously adhere to it? That there are some few refined souls in every Colony, perhaps in every county of each Colony, that will sacrifice their own private interest, subject themselves to every inconvenience, and deny themselves almost the common necessities of life, to promote the publick good and to preserve the liberties of their country, I have no doubt; because history furnishes instances that such disinterested, such heroic characters, have existed, and I believe the inhabitants of America are possessed of as much virtue as those of other Nations; but to imagine that all, or even a majority, of the inhabitants of a country, are possessed of such exalted ideas of patriotism, is a romantick supposition, which never has, nor I fear, never will be warranted by the history of any Nation whatever. Nor can we flatter ourselves that this angelick exertion of virtue will be general in America when we consider that many of her present inhabitants are, like birds of passage, settled only for a time, for the purposes of raising fortunes by trade, whose ultimate view is to return, with the fortunes they acquire, to the connections they have left behind them in Britain, and that there are others whose daily bread depends upon the continuance of the laws we complain of. These two sets of men, so far from observing such an Association, will use every artifice to evade it themselves, and try every stratagem to tempt the vain, to deceive the unwary, and to prevail upon the lukewarm, to desert the common cause; and a general defection from the plan, when once adopted, can answer no other end than that of rendering you contemptible.

"WILMINGTON, July 27 - In a former paper we observed a subscription had been opened here in behalf of such people in Boston as are deprived, by the stoppage wantonly put to the trade of that place, of the usual means of subsisting themselves and families; we now observe, with particular pleasure, that several widow ladies of this town have contributed very liberally to that benevolent design.

But even supposing that all America should unite, as one man, in attempting this measure, the British aristocracy will never suffer you to carry it into execution; for, let it be remembered, that one of the rights they claim is that of restraining your manufactures; and when you openly avow a design of purchasing no more of their manufactures they will immediately enforce that right of restraining you from making any of your own. But, surely, say the proposers of this plan, they cannot force us to purchase from them whether we will or not. Very true; but if you refuse to do so they will endeavour to prevent you from purchasing those articles in any other market, and from making them yourselves. But, say the proposed of this plan, they have no right to do this. Very true; nor have they any right to make any kind of laws to govern you. But they will endeavour to show you that they have the power of doing it; and though right and power are two distinct things, you may as well acknowledge the right, as to submit to the power, of legislation; and if you submit to the laws already made, you will soon have others, equally arbitrary, imposed upon you for restraining your manufactures. For my own part, I shall not be at all surprised if the very next session should furnish us with Acts of Parliament enacting, "that your 'smiths' shops shall be destroyed as nuisances; tanning

"your own hides be declared a misdemeanor; combing your own wool be punished with fine and imprisonment; spinning your own flax subject you to the pillory; making your own shoes be made felony, without benefit of clergy; fabricating your own hats incur a premunire; weaving any kind of cloth be deemed an overt act of high treason; fashioning a canoe be chastised as an insult upon the British flag; building a boat be constituted an unpardonable act of rebellion; launching a ship be considered as an actual declaration of war; trials by juries be exploded, as dangerous appeals to the people, who are not to be trusted; new Courts of Admiralty be erected in their room, whose judges shall hold their commissions during pleasure, and be stimulated to enforce those Acts, by sharing in the forfeitures and confiscations occasioned by their own judgments; and to extinguish every spark of publick spirit, and to prevent a possibility of redress, your Assemblies will be dissolved, and the people no longer permitted to elect Representatives, to urge their grievances, or to utter their complaints." Do not, my countrymen, be so blind to your own welfare, as to imagine I am jesting upon this serious occasion, or that I am supposing Acts of Parliament which can never exist. Reflect upon the different Acts for preventing slitting mills; for erecting Courts of Admiralty for recovering the inland forfeitures imposed by the Stamp Act; for suspending the Legislature of New-York; for shutting up the port of Boston; for altering the Charter of New England, which was more solemnly granted by Majesty than their own Magna Charta; for screening the murderers of the Americans; and the joint address, from both Houses of Parliament to his Majesty, to transport the Americans themselves, to be imprisoned and ruined, if not butchered in England; and you will be convinced that the cases I have supposed are by no means chimerical, and that there is no act of intemperance, injustice, or despotism, which the British aristocracy will not attempt, to restrain America from manufacturing, the moment you declare your intention of doing so. To enter, therefore, into Associations against importing British manufactures, any farther than a rational attention to your circumstances, is surely no moderate measure, but must, at last, end in a humiliating submission, or oblige you to have recourse to that force which the proposers of this plan wish to avoid.

Let us now consider whether an Association against exporting your commodities would not be attended with still worse consequences. This plan, if it mean any thing, is to distress Great Britain. But surely you cannot more effectually do this, than by lessening your imports, and increasing your exports, as much as possible; for by selling your commodities to the British merchants, and by taking none of theirs in exchange, you will increase your own wealth by exhausting that of Britain. But it is objected, we are at present largely indebted to the British Merchants. The more incumbent it is upon you to export all the commodities you can, to pay them as soon as possible; for you ought to have more gratitude than to attempt to ruin the families of those who have been kind enough to furnish you not only with the elegancies; but the necessities of life. Common honesty requires that you should pay your debts, and if you should refuse to do so, not only the persons injured, but all mankind, will judge unfavourably of you, and declare, that instead of bravely contending for your liberties, you are knavishly endeavouring to cheat your creditors. Such a national breach of faith will unite all Europe against you, as a flagitious race of mortals, who do not deserve to be free; who ought to be considered as the pests of human society, and as such, forced into submission, if not extirpated.

For God's sake, my countrymen, let your conduct be such that you shall be thought worthy of that freedom you contend for, and do not render yourselves the objects of contempt and abhorrence; for if you should even establish your liberty, in opposition to the united efforts of all Europe to reduce you, it may never be in your power to manifest your honest intentions of making retribution. Many of you and your creditors may be dead before the dispute is decided, and the very withholding the sums you owe, for a short period, from men in trade, may irretrievably reduce the survivors and their families to ruin, and American become as proverbially infamous as punick faith.

But it is said, that by withholding your tobacco you will immediately make the Minister sensible of his folly, in the instant effect it will have upon the revenue. But when you consider that the tax upon tobacco is finally paid by the British inhabitants who consume it, and consequently is actually raised in England, and if the tax ceases upon this luxury, the same sum may be raised by laying it on some other; and that by doing so, the subjects of Britain will pay no more than they do at present; or, in other words, the same sum of money may be still raised by altering only the mode of raising it; the inconvenience will not be so great as is at first sight imagined; and even supposing it otherwise, by giving this temporary shock to Administration, may you not fix a lasting inconvenience upon yourselves? Accustomed to the use of that commodity, when they are no longer supplied by you, may not the inhabitant of Britain look out for a supply of it from some other quarter? And may you not lose that valuable branch of trade altogether? If there is no danger of this, or if the loss of it should be thought not worth regretting, at least confine your plan of non-importation to tobacco only, or, what will be still wiser, determine to make no more of it till the points you contend for are established. But to injure yourselves by devoting your wheat and corn to be destroyed by the weavils and other vermin, in your own useless barns, will be indiscreet; to starve your fellow-subjects and fellow-sufferers of the West Indies will be inhuman; and to increase the wealth of Great Britain by raising to an exorbitant height the price of her wheat and provisions in those foreign markets which you at present supply, will be downright madness to think of. Upon the whole, policy, humanity, a just regard for your national character, gratitude, and common honesty, all forbid you to adopt the second plan proposed, as it would most certainly end in a scandalous and unpitied submission, or introduce a civil war, aggravated with all the inconveniences attending a good cause turned into a bad one by rash, indiscreet, and unjustifiable measures. If we are obliged to struggle for our liberty with arms in our hands, let us not unnerve the sinews of war. If we are at last forced, though unwillingly, to draw the sword, let us do it in a just cause; let us be careful that we are not the aggressors, let us point our resentment against our oppressors; but let us not wound the bosoms of our friends; let us conduct ourselves in such a manner as to raise the prayers of the righteous for our success, and if we do fall, let us fall revered and lamented, but not execrated and despised by all mankind. But I am far from thinking that you are yet in this desperate situation, and am not without hopes that you may still establish your liberty without having recourse to the decision of the sword. But to avoid this, it will be absolutely necessary to convince your oppressors that you dare to do it rather than be enslaved. The measures to be taken, in order to convince them, naturally lead me to the consideration of the third plan proposed, which, I confess, appears to me the most constitutional, the most rational, the most moderate, and the most effectual measure you can pursue; and to prove that it is so shall be the subject of my next.

I shall conclude this with one remark, which I submit to the serious attention of my countrymen. You may remember that the second plan proposed came first recommended to you from your friends on the other side the Atlantic. Now, though many of the inhabitants of Great Britain think that the British Parliament have no right to tax you, and sincerely disapprove the hostile and violent measures pursued by them against you, yet there is not one man of them who does not insist that you ought to submit to the supreme legislation of the British Parliament, and therefore would wish you to avoid every measure of contesting with success the supremacy they claim of restraining your manufactures, and of securing to themselves the whole profit of your labours. Hence they will never advise you to adopt any other than temporizing measures, to avoid the evil of a present oppression, without considering that to admit the dependence, must one time or other necessarily end in despotism to them, and slavery to you. Again, the British people are of two factions, the first consists of a majority of the two Houses of Parliament, and composes the aristocracy; these are called the ins. The second consists of the minority of those Houses, and are called the outs. Most of whom would be willing to be taken into the aristocracy, and become ins if they could; and whenever they are, would be as violent against you as their brethren. With this view the outs now pretend to be your friends, and advise you to adopt measures that would do, what? Settle the dispute at once? By no means; for that would lessen their own consequence. But such as may subject the ins to temporary inconveniences, and oblige them to admit some of the outs to share with them in the emoluments of Administration; listen therefore to them with a suspicious ear; "Hear each man's censure, but reserve your judgment," and constantly revolve in your minds these truths: that American liberty can only be preserved by American virtue, and that if you determine dare to be free, you will be so.

NEW-JERSEY RESOLUTIONS,

At a General Meeting of the Committees of the several Counties in the Province of New-Jersey, at New-Brunswick, on Thursday, the 21st July; and continued to the Saturday following: - Present seventy-two Members.

STEPHEN CRANE, Esquire, in the Chair.

The Committees taking into their serious consideration the dangerous and destructive nature of sundry Acts of the British Parliament, with respect to the fundamental liberties of the American Colonies, conceive it their indispensable duty to bear their open testimony against them, and to concur with the other Colonies in prosecuting all legal and necessary measures, for obtaining their speedy repeal. Therefore, we unanimously agree in the following sentiments and Resolutions:

1st. We think it necessary to declare, that the inhabitants of this Province, (and we are confident the people of America in general) are, and ever have been, firm and unshaken in their loyalty to his Majesty King George the Third; fast friends to the Revolution settlement; and that they detest all thoughts of an independence on the Crown of Great Britain: Accordingly we do, in the most sincere and solemn manner, recognize and acknowledge his Majesty King George the Third to be our lawful and rightful Sovereign, to whom under his royal protection in our fundamental rights and privileges, we owe, and will render all due faith and allegiance.

2d. We think ourselves warranted from the principles of our excellent Constitution, to affirm that the claim of the British Parliament, (in which we neither are, nor can be represented) to make laws, which shall be binding on the King's American subjects, "in all cases whatsoever," and particularly for imposing taxes for the purpose of raising a revenue in America, is unconstitutional and oppressive; and which we think ourselves bound in duty to ourselves and our posterity, by all constitutional means in our power, to oppose.

3d. We think the several late Acts of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston; invading the Charter rights of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay; and subjecting supposed offenders, to be sent for trial to other Colonies, or to Great Britain; the sending over an armed force to carry the same into effect, and thereby reducing many thousands of innocent and loyal inhabitants to poverty and distress; are not only subversive of the undoubted rights of his Majesty's American subjects, but also repugnant to the common principles of humanity and justice. These precedings, so violent in themselves, and so truly alarming to the other Colonies, (many of which are equally exposed to Ministerial vengeance,) render it the indispensable duty of all, heartily to unite in the most proper measures, to procure redress for their oppressed countrymen, now suffering in the common cause; and for the re-establishment of the constitutional rights of America on a solid and permanent foundation.

4th. To effect this important purpose, we conceive the most eligible method is, to appoint a General Congress of Commissioners of the respective Colonies; who shall be empowered mutually to pledge, each to the rest, the public honour and faith of their constituent Colonies, firmly and inviolably to adhere to the determinations of the said Congress.

5th. Resolved, That we do earnestly recommend a general non-importation and a non-consumption agreement to be entered into at such time, and regulated in such manner, as to the Congress shall appear most advisable.

6th. Resolved, That it appears to us, to be a duty incumbent on the good people of this Province, to afford some immediate relief to the many suffering inhabitants of the town of Boston. Therefore, the several County Committees do now engage to set on foot, and promote collections, without delay, either by subscriptions or otherwise, throughout their respective counties: and that they will remit the moneys arising from the said subscriptions, or any other benefactions, that may be voluntarily made by the inhabitants, either to Boston, or into the hands of James Neilson, John Dennis, William Ouke, Abraham Hunt, Samuel Tucker, Dr. Isaac Smith, Grant Gibbon, Thomas Sinnicks, and John Carey, whom we do hereby appoint a Committee for forwarding the same to Boston, in such way and manner as they shall be advised will best answer the benevolent purpose designed.

7th. Resolved, That the grateful acknowledgments of this body are due to the noble and worthy patrons of constitutional liberty, in the British Senate, for their laudable efforts to avert the storm they beheld impending over a much injured Colony, and in support of the just rights of the King's subjects in America.

8th. Resolved, That James Kinsey, William Livingston, John Dehart, Stephen Crane, and Richard Smith, Esquires, or such of them as shall attend, be the Delegates to represent this Province in the General Continental Congress, to be held at the City of Philadelphia, on or about the first of September next, to meet, consult, and advise with the Deputies from the other Colonies; and to determine upon all such prudent and lawful measures as may be judged most expedient for the Colonies immediately and unitedly to adopt, in order to obtain relief for an oppressed people, and the redress of our general grievances.

Signed by order,

JONATHAN D. SERGEANT, Clerk.

MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

By the GOVERNOUR. - A Proclamation

For the encouragement of Piety and Virtue, and for preventing and punishing of Vice, Profanity, and Immorality.

In humble imitation of the laudable example of our most gracious Sovereign, George the Third, who, in the first year of his reign, was pleased to issue his Royal Proclamation for the encouragement of Piety and Virtue, and for preventing of Vice and Immorality, in which he declares his Royal purpose to punish all persons guilty thereof, and upon all occasions to bestow marks of his Royal favour on persons distinguished for their Piety and Virtue, I therefore, by and with the advice of his Majesty's Council, publish this Proclamation, exhorting all his Majesty's subjects to avoid all Hypocrisy, Sedition, Licentiousness, and all other immoralities, and to have a grateful sense of all God's mercies, making the divine laws the rule of their conduct.

I therefore command all Judges, Justices, Sheriffs, and other officers, to use their utmost endeavour's to enforce the laws for promoting Religion and Virtue, and restraining all Vice and Sedition; and I earnestly recommend to all Ministers of the Gospel, that they be vigilant and active in inculcating a due submission to the laws of God and man; and I exhort all the people of this Province, by every means in their power, to contribute what they can towards a general reformation of manners, restitution of peace and good order, and a proper subjection to the laws, as they expect the blessing of Heaven.

And I do therefore declare that in the disposal of the offices of honour and trust, within this Province, the supporters of true Religion and good Government, shall be considered as the fittest objects of such appointments.

And I hereby require the Justices of Assize and Justices of the Peace in this Province, to give strict charge to the Grand Jurors for the prosecution of offenders against the laws; and that, in their several Courts, they cause this Proclamation to be publickly read, immediately before the charge is given.

Given at the Council Chamber in Salem, the 21st day of July, 1774, in the fourteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c.

THOMAS GAGE.

By his Excellency's command,

THOMAS FLUCKER, Secretary.

GOD save the King.

TO THE WORTHY INHABITANTS OF THE TOWN OF BOSTON.

Rhode Island, July 21, 1774.

MY DEAR BRETHREN: The manly firmness with which you sustain every kind of Ministerial abuse, injury, and oppression, and support the glorious cause of liberty, reflects the highest honour upon the town. The few, very few amongst you, who have adopted the principles of slavery, serve, like the shade in a picture, to exhibit your virtues in a more striking point of light. Unhappy men, I sincerely pity them, that they should have so little sense of the dignity of human nature; so little sense of their duty to God, as to wish to reduce rational beings, formed after his divine image, to a state of brutish or worse than brutish servitude; that they should be so dead to all the feelings of humanity, publick spirit, and universal benevolence, as to prefer the sordid pleasure of being upper slaves to foreign tyrants, and under them tyrannizing over their country, to the God-like satisfaction of saving that country. How wretchedly these men mistake happiness! All the riches and honour in the world cannot give any pleasure in the least degree equal to the sincere heart-felt joy which the patriot feels in the consciousness of having supported the dignity, the freedom, and happiness of his country.

The attempt made by these men to annihilate your Committee of Correspondence was very natural. The robber does not wish to see our property entirely secured. An enemy, about to invade a foreign country, does not wish to see the coast well guarded and the country universally alarmed. Upon the same principles these men wish the dissolution of the Committee. They know that a design was formed to rob the Americans of their property; they hoped to share largely in the general plunder; but they now see that by the vigilance, wisdom, and fidelity, of the several Committees of Correspondence, the people are universally apprized of their danger, and will soon enter into such measures for the common security as will infallibly blast all their unjust expectations; and this is the true source of all the abuse thrown upon your Committee. But Oh, ye worthy few! continue to treat all their attempts with the neglect which they deserve. Thus the generous mastiff looks down with pity and contempt upon the little noisy, impertinent curs, which bark at him as he walks the streets. Your faithful services have endeared you to the wise and good in every Colony. Continue your indefatigable labours in the common cause, and you will soon see the happy success of them in the salvation of your country.

The tools of power, and their connections, I imagine, are daily persuading you, my brethren, to submit to the Ministry. They pretend to pity your distresses, and assure you that the only way for you to get relief, is the making compensation for the tea, and submitting to the Revenue Acts. But did ever a man preserve his money by delivering up his purse to the highwayman who dared to demand it? Is it the way to preserve life, to throw away our arms and present our naked bosoms to the murderer's sword?

The town of Boston has been resembled to Carthage, and threatened with the same fate by a Member of Parliament. The execution of the sentence is already begun. It may not be amiss, then, to turn to the history of that people. There had been two long and very bloody wars between Rome and that city. The Romans were victorious. But the Carthaginians having, in a few years, almost recovered their former state of wealth and power, the Romans looked upon them with a jealous eye, and took every opportunity, (unless by an open war,) to depress them. The Carthaginians, dreading a war, and hoping, by a proper submission, to conciliate the Roman affection, sent Ambassadors to Rome, with orders to declare that they entirely abandoned themselves, and all they possessed, to the discretion of the Romans. The Senate of Rome, in return, granted them their liberty; the exercise of their own laws, all their territories and possessions, as private persons, or as a Republick, on condition that, in thirty days, they should send three hundred hostages to Lilybæum, and do what the Consuls should order them. This cruel order was submitted to. The hostages were immediately sent. They were the flower and hopes of the most noble families of Carthage. Upon their departure nothing was heard but the most dismal cries and groans; the whole city was in tears; and the mothers of these devoted youth tore their hair and beat their breasts in all the agonies of grief and despair. They fastened their arms around their lovely offspring, and could not be separated from them but by force. This cruel sacrifice, I should think, would have melted the Romans into compassion; but it had no such effect. Ambition and tyranny are incapable of any humane or tender feeling. The Deputies, therefore, attended the Roman camp, and told the Consuls they were come in the name of the Senate of Carthage, to receive their orders, which they were ready to obey in all things. The Consul praised their good disposition and ready obedience, and ordered them to deliver up all their arms. This fatal order was complied with, and an infinite number of weapons of all kinds, and a fine fleet of ships, accordingly delivered up. Would any thing less than the entire destruction of Carthage have satisfied the Romans, they would now have been perfectly content. They had wholly disarmed the Carthaginians, and got all the noble youth hostages, as a security for their quiet submission; but all this did not satisfy them. The Consul sternly told them that the Senate of Rome had determined to destroy Carthage; that they must quit their city and remove to some other part of their territory, four leagues from the sea. This they refused to do. The Romans therefore attacked their city, which, notwithstanding its defenceless state, bravely sustained a most terrible siege three whole years. Had the Carthaginians preserved their youth, the navy, and their arms; had they united their neighbouring nations against the common oppressor, and immediately prepared for their defence, they might, perhaps, have defeated the Romans, and preserved their city entirely, or at least for many years longer. But they, by imprudent submissions, put themselves wholly in the power of the enemy; and the consequences were, the miserable death of several hundred thousand people, and the utter destruction of their city! Take warning, my dear countrymen, by this terrible example.

What would the Minister have, if not the good of the Nation? You have invariably promoted it from the first foundation of the Colony. In war you have bravely defended yourselves and the neighbouring Colonies. You have taken a glorious part in several foreign expeditions. You have even, by your conquests, given peace to Europe. Besides these important advantages, the Nation has received millions of the profits of your commerce; every thing more than a bare subsistence, which you could gather from all quarters of the globe, being by you remitted to Great Britain for her manufactures. What would he have more? He tells you plainly that your liberty, your lives, and property, must be laid at his feet. But, my brethren, suffer every thing, even the horrors of civil war, sooner than make the vile submission. Should you agree to pay for the tea, something more would be demanded. Should that be complied with, something further would still be demanded. In short, nothing will satisfy him but destroying the town, or reducing it to a poor fishing village. A plan hath been formed and steadily pursued, for changing the free Constitution of Britain into an absolute Monarchy. Luxury, bribery, and corruption, have given the Minister the absolute command of England and Ireland. The only remaining obstacle to his unlimited power, is the brave resistance made by the Americans. You are among the first of those Sons of Freedom, who have bravely stemmed the torrent of tyranny. You have penetrated and exposed the mischievous designs of the Ministry. You have pointed out proper measures to defeat those execrable designs, and entered into those measures with spirit. This, and not the destruction of the tea, hath brought down the vengeance of the Ministry upon you. They have left you no alternative, but to give up your liberties, and hold your lives and property as slaves, by their mere arbitrary will and pleasure; or nobly determine to maintain those just rights and privileges, which, by the laws of God and your country, you are entitled to.

You will never hesitate one moment. I am sure, my generous countrymen, you were born and nurtured in the arms of Freedom. You were never yet conquered by any power on earth. You have vast and sure resources. The Colonies, now heartily united, consider your cause as their own. They will soon enter into spirited and effectual measures for your relief. A great part of the people of England and Ireland will support you; and the distress in which the Nation will soon be involved, by the ill conduct of the Minister, will soon compel him to change his measures, or sink under the resentment of an injured people. Spurn, therefore, from your presence and councils forever, those who dare to propose the giving up our liberties; continue bravely to bear up under your present distress; persevere in the glorious cause in which we are engaged: it is the cause of our King, our country, and of God himself. He conducted your fathers to America; planted and preserved them in the wilderness, that they might worship him in a manner acceptable to him. You have always maintained the publick (and I hope private) worship of God. You and almost all America have lately addressed him in a most solemn manner. He hath often delivered us when all human help failed. Witness the destruction of the French fleet at Chebucta. He is the same gracious and all-powerful Being. Let us, my brethren, put our trust in him; for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength. Let the priests and ministers of the Lord weep between the porch and the altar; and let them and all of us, most devoutly, say, "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach;" and we may rely upon it that he will, in due time, deliver us from all our enemies, and continue us a great, a free, and a happy people.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON TO A GENTLEMAN
IN PHILADELPHIA, DATED JULY 23, 1774.

I have been with Doctor Franklin. I find the storm against him has much abated; though I believe he has not in the least remitted his attention to the interests of his much injured country. However quiet in appearance, I am very anxious to hear what reception the latter wanton strokes of Government here have met with in America, particularly that detestable Quebec Bill, which is so evidently intended as a bridle on the Northern Colonies. That Act is looked upon in the most unfavourable light here of any of them; as, for want of making proper distinctions, the violent proceedings of the Boston mob are too generally deemed a sufficient justification of the others, and have afforded the Ministry a pretence, which, I am persuaded, they much wished for, of introducing an armed force into America, and such other measures as are undoubtedly aimed at establishing the right of taxation in the legislation here; and if not firmly opposed, will certainly do it through America. Of what importance, then, is the present conduct of America? If the people here are not made to feel the importance, all is over in that way. The late measures will be looked on as justified by their success; and the venal crew, at present termed the Representatives of Britain, will probably be again generally returned at the general election next spring, to finish the remains of American liberty. Here, indeed, there is but little more than the form of it; where, by exorbitant taxes, the very means are afforded their rulers of riveting their chains, by giving the constitutional sanction. I never felt a stronger attachment to our own cause, than since my arrival here, and ardently wish that such counsels may prevail, as, without introducing anarchy, may preserve our just rights.

I find here many who warmly interest themselves in our favour; and entertain a hope, that when luxury and corruption shall gain an entire conquest over virtue and liberty, in this once happy Kingdom, they or their descendants may find an asylum in America, where the genius of Liberty shall reign triumphant.

A few days ago I spent an hour or two very agreeably with Granville Sharp, Esquire, to whom I had been introduced. He appears to me to be a very uncommon character, and exceedingly assiduous in the application of uncommon talents for the benefit of his fellow creatures. He tells me he has now in the press, an Examination into the Rights of the Colonies, which are so flagrantly infringed by the late Acts of Parliament. He is warmly on our side; and as his pieces trace the arguments ab origine, by which he has answered all the arguments commonly adduced against us, I am in hopes it will have a good effect. He holds a place in the Ordnance, which this publication may probably cost him; but he appears to prefer the discharge of duty to every other consideration. One such advocate, acting from principle, is preferable to the loudest brawler of the venal tribe. Sir Henry Banks is dead, and succeeded in the Aldermanship by -- Haley, a New England merchant, brother-in-law to Wilkes. It is proposed to make him Representative of London in Parliament, in the room of Trecothick, whose state of health will not admit of his continuance in that station.

Doctor Franklin was obliging enough to call on me this afternoon. From what he communicated I find that the intention of taxing all America is openly avowed by the Ministry. They have already begun, by high duties on spirits in Canada, and have ordered a regiment to be raised there; determining, as the Doctor well expressed it, not only to rivet their chains, but make them pay for the iron to do it with.

GOVERNOUR GAGE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Salem, July 23, 1774.

SIR: I enclose you two affidavits, of Mr. Green and Mr. Scott, taken before two Justices of the Peace and Quorum of the town of Boston, touching a very extraordinary treatment that Mr. Green met with at Windham and Norwich, in the Colony of Connecticut; and as that gentleman is an inhabitant of this Province, I think it my duty to interest myself in his behalf, and to transmit you the said affidavits, in the assurance that you will exert yourself to obtain him satisfaction.

You are sensible that people capable of such conduct as those mentioned in the affidavits are accused of, must be a disgrace to every society; and I make no doubt, from a principle of justice, as well as the honour and reputation of the Colony under your command, that you will order the accused persons to be apprehended and brought to trial.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

THOMAS GAGE

Honourable Jonathan Trumbull, Esq., Governour of the Colony of Connecticut.

I, Caleb Scott, of lawful age, testify and declare, that being lately on a journey through Connecticut, attending upon Mr. Storer, of Boston, who was in company with Mr. Francis Green, we put up at Mr. Carey's Tavern, at Windham, on Monday evening, the fourth day of July current; that soon after a man inquired of me whether Mr. Green, who was at that time there, was not one of those that signed for the Governour of Boston. I referred him to Mr. Green himself for an answer. That between nine and ten o'clock that evening, a great number of persons assembled in a tumultuous manner round Mr. Carey's Tavern, often demanding Mr. Green; that a number kept a little distance on a plat of grass before the Tavern, and after about an hour or two many of them pressed suddenly into the house in a boisterous manner, and went into the room to Mr. Green, demanding if his name was Francis Green; he answered in the affirmative, and demanded one of their names, who told him, but I cannot recollect it. Some one of them told him thereupon, that they would now give him leave to tarry there till six o'clock next morning, but if he was not then gone to beware of the consequences, or words to that purpose; they then dispersed, it being about eleven o'clock. The next morning at six o'clock, the Meeting House bell was rung, and a cannon, placed before the Tavern door, was fired, and the people again surrounded the house, and I heard several of them say, "It is full time he was gone." Many of them went into the Tavern, and up stairs into Mr. Green's bed-chamber, and demanded his immediate departure from that town, in opposition to Mr. Carey's orders, who forbade them behaving in such a mobbish manner in his house, I, the deponent, remaining below, heard many loud words pass between Mr. Green and some of those who went up, but could not distinguish what was said; at length they came down and remained in and about the house until Mr.

Green's departure. Further, as I returned to Windham after Mr. Green had left the town, I was there informed that an express was sent from thence to Norwich to excite the people there to mob Mr. Green; and the same afternoon Mr. Storer and myself having overtaken Mr. Green at Lebanon, we proceeded; and arriving the next morning at Lothrop's Tavern, at Norwich, stopped there. Mr. Storer and Mr. Green went from thence to Mr. Huntington's house. While I was taking care of the horses I perceived a man run into the Meeting House, and heard the bell ring, and soon after saw several men appear on the plain; one of whom fired a gun, upon which a number of people assembled and proceeded in a body to Mr. Gales's shop, where they all held up their hands in a swearing posture; and, I understood, took some oath. From thence they all went to Lothrop's Tavern and inquired for Mr. Green; being informed he was at Mr. Huntington's house, they went there, and remained some time about the house, but after some short time part of them returned, and as they passed me some of them said, "Let us go and fetch the cart;" and soon after the rest came also.

In a few minutes Mr. Storer and Mr. Green came from Mr. Huntington's house and went into the Tavern, where breakfast was ordered; immediately a number came with a single horse cart, and asked where Mr. Green was? others answered, he's in the Tavern. They then called out, "The time is up, out with him, fetch him out," or in other words to the same effect. The next thing I perceived was that the people burst into the Tavern with great violence, and entered the room where Mr. Green was, where they remained a minute or two, then came out in a body bringing Mr. Green with them, and keeping close about him, went between the cart and his carriage, at the same time I heard the people say, "Into the cart with him, into the cart with him;" then I perceived the people to close in and surround Mr. Green, and some appearance of a bustle, but being at a little distance, and the crowd very thick, I could not well see what was going on, but heard one among them say, "If he will go in his own carriage let him," or to that purpose; they then cleared the way a little and obliged Mr. Green to get into his curricule; some of them struck the carriage, the horses set off, they beat the drum, the crowd shouted and huzzad, and, following Mr. Green, they pelted him for a considerable distance through the town with much rage and violence. Caleb Scott, before named, personally appearing, maketh solemn oath to the truth of the foregoing Deposition by him subscribed; taken at the special request of Mr. Francis Green, in perpetuum rei memoriam,
Boston, July 20, 1774.

Before us, EDMUND QUINCY,
BELCHER NOYES,

Justices of the Peace and of the Quorum.

I, Francis Green, of Boston, do testify and declare, that I arrived at Windham, in the Colony of Connecticut, on Monday afternoon, the 4th instant; that on the same evening four men who called themselves Hezekiah Bissell, Benjamin Lothrop, Timothy Larrabee, and Ebenezer Backus, did, in a formal manner, apply to me to know my name, and whether I had signed an Address to Governour Hutchinson; and, upon being answered, did then insist on my departing thence, and forthwith quitting that town; intimating that it would be dangerous for me not to comply with their demands. Upon my positive refusal they went off, and soon afterwards a tumultuous assembly of men appeared about the house, and I was informed demanded me. They remained about the door and windows about an hour; then a party of them entered the house, and one, calling himself Nathaniel Warren, demanding me, acquainted me that leave was given for me to remain there until six o'clock the next morning, but no longer, intimating (in words which I do not exactly recollect) that it would be attended with disagreeable consequences if I should. That about six o'clock the next morning the Meeting House bell was rung as if for fire, a cannon was fired near the Tavern door, and a number of men then again appeared round the house, some of them repeatedly entered the same, came into my bed-chamber, and, in an insolent manner, again demanded my immediate departure, threatening to seize me with my papers, bundles, &c., and to carry me off by force, although I often told them I was there with intent to collect debts, &c., and that they interrupted me in my necessary business. One of them said it was fool-hardy to sport with life; others swore I should immediately depart, and threw out many threatening insinuations of what I might expect if I did not leave that town without delay. They continued in and about the house until I set out. Upon the road through Lebanon to Norwich, I was informed that an express was sent from Windham to Norwich to excite the people there also to oppose my remaining there. I arrived at Norwich on Wednesday morning; the 6th instant, at about seven o'clock, and being (in company with Mr. Ebenezer Storer, of Boston.) at the house of Samuel Huntington, Esquire, heard the Meeting House bell ring, a gun fire, a drum beat, and saw numbers of men assemble on the adjacent plain, part of whom came into the house and room I was in; one of them, calling himself by the name of Joshua Huntington, demanded my name, which being informed, he told me he was deputed, or authorized by the people to let me know that they insisted on my quitting that town in fifteen minutes, which I refused to do. I then called upon Samuel Huntington, Esquire, and demanded of him, as a Magistrate, protection from the violence of the people, but received none; soon after this I proceeded to the Tavern, near where the mob was waiting; I went in, and in a few minutes a number of them rushed in and filled the room where I was, calling out, "Out with him, out with him," and laid hold of me; I demanded their names; one replied (who seized me) my name is Simeon Huntington; they then crowded me out of the house, and when on the outside I perceived a cart standing nigh my chaise. Some of the people who now became very clamorous, seized me again, and called out, "Into the cart, into the cart with him," but soon desisted, and then forced me to get into my own carriage, which one of them then struck and set the horses going; upon which they set up a loud shout and huzza, beat their drum, and following near half a mile, pelted me with great rage and violence, and thus obstructed me in my business, to my great injury, and endangered my life.

Boston, July 20, 1774.

Before us, EDMUND QUINCY,
BELCHER NOYES,
Justices of the Peace and of the Quorum.

N. B. A Memorandum of several who were witnesses of the transactions of the people at Windham and Norwich, viz:

Mr. Carey, the Tavernkeeper at Windham, Stephen Babcock, Esquire, of Stonington, who was at Windham, Mr. Aplin, a Lawyer, and Mr. William Russell, Merchant, both of Providence, who were at Windham. Mr. Lothrop, Tavernkeeper at Norwich. Mr. Ebenezer Storer, of Boston, who was in company with Mr. Green almost the whole time.

HEZEKIAH BISSELL, AND OTHERS, TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Windham, August 5, 1774.

To His HONOUR THE GOVERNOUR: SIR, We are informed that Governour Gage, by a late letter, has informed your Honour that on, or about, the 4th of July last, one Francis Green, of Boston, was much abused in the towns of Windburn and Norwich; that said Green was greatly insulted, his life endangered, and he drove out of those towns by force, and prevented transacting his lawful business; and that so far as any of the inhabitants of Windham were concerned, that we, the subscribers, were the principal trespassers; and requesting your Honour to direct that we be prosecuted, that Green may recover his damages; and that Governour Gage, has enclosed sundry affidavits to prove the charge, That your Honour has received a letter of the above import we have no doubt, and how far your Honour will consider yourself obliged, as Governour of this Colony, to interpose your special authority in such kind of personal private trespasses as are hinted at, it is not for us to say. We doubt not but your Honour will treat the matter with the greatest prudence and propriety, and that as this case does not concern Government any more than any other private quarrel does, we doubt not but that it will be treated as other cases have been.

We are willing and desirous, and always have been, to pay all possible respect to the laws, and to the Governour of this Colony; but we must beg your Honour's pardon if we go too far, when we say, that it appears to us, that the message is an insult on the Colony, its laws, and courts, if not upon the Governour thereof. It seems to us that the Governours of Boston consider themselves of late as proper complaining officers; and that their informations carry such authority with them, as will justify those they complain to, in trying, condemning, and executing unheard, all that they shall complain of.

Why did not his Excellency direct Mr. Green to institute a suit here against those who he supposed had injured him? It could not be he supposed that justice could not be had in our Courts in this Colony; if so, how did he expect that your Honour would procure justice to be done in the case? Would he expect it by some decree of your Honour in favour of Green, and against us? If so, we know your Honour has too sacred a regard for the laws and the rights of the subjects, to make such a decree. If he did not expect that, why did he trouble your Honour about it, especially that part which relates to Mr. Green's personal damages? Surely Governour Gage must know that if Mr. Green has any demands for damages that he must recover them by a personal action; in which either his personal presence, or power of attorney would be necessary. We well know that the law is the subject's birth-right, and if Mr. Green is desirous of satisfaction that way we are willing to meet him on that ground, and are willing to indemnify him against all insults while necessarily in this town for that purpose. We know that the law is open and justice impartially administered, and should be extremely sorry that its due course should be obstructed, or esteemed to be so, by any either in or out of the Colony.

But we must again beg your Honour's pardon for making the above remarks; and nothing but an inviolable attachment to our just rights and privileges could have induced us to have given your Honour this trouble; and the necessity of the case also obliges us to ask leave to give your Honour a short state of the facts in the case, as they truly were: It so happened that said Green came into this town at the time mentioned, a little before sunset; the people were soon apprized of his coming, and that he was one of those who signed the Address to Governour Hutchinson; and it is well known that Governour Hutchinson is considered by all the Colonies as the principal agent who procured the Act for blocking up the port of Boston, and the other distressing Acts, and that it is the general sense of the whole Continent that those Acts are unconstitutional and oppressive, and those who signed the Address are considered as returning their thanks to Governour Hutchinson, for his involving this country in such a distressed situation (or condition) to which it is now reduced; it was therefore soon agreed that Mr. Green's personal presence was disagreeable; however, to touch his person or property none in the town of Windham shewed the least inclination, as we know of; but, in order to quiet the people on one side, and secure Mr. Green on the other, we were requested to wait on him and let him know that his continuance in the town was disagreeable, and that the people desired him to depart soon. Accordingly we waited on him as he was walking abroad, and informed him that we desired a short interview with him; upon which, he went to his lodgings, and went with us into his room, where we informed him in as genteel a manner as we were capable, of the temper of the people towards him, and requested him to depart the town as soon as he conveniently could. On which Mr. Green rose up both in haste and anger, and said what he had done was right and justifiable; that he had no reason to repent of his subscribing, &c.; that he had been used to such attacks before, and was not easily intimidated; we told him that it was not our business to intimidate him, but only to let him know the sentiments of the people, and to request him in their name to depart soon; he said he should not, nor would not till his business was done, which would not be till next day towards night, or the morning after; we then told him, we had delivered our message, and would inform the people of what he had determined, and accordingly did; which was in no measure satisfactory to them; but as he was a stranger to the roads from town, and it being then towards dark, all agreed it would not be well to request him to depart that evening; and thereupon the people appointed Mr. Warren and two others to wait on Mr. Green, and let him know that they requested him to depart the town by six o'clock next morning. Mr. Warren, &c., went to Mr. Green's lodgings, and by his liberty were admitted into his apartment, where they acquainted him with the desire of the people, and then left him to take his rest.

About seven o'clock the next morning Mr. Green not being gone, the bell was rung by somebody, unknown to us; and a small piece was fired by two boys (or youths) without our privacy or consent; after that several waited on Mr. Green and desired him to depart, and we cannot say but some person might tell him that he should go; but no violence was offered to his person or property, or even threatened as we know of; nor can he prove his accusation. And we really believe, and doubt not but we can abundantly prove, that the transactions of those particular persons accused tended to preserve the peace, and had that effect, and, sure we are, were done with that design.

As to the intelligence going to Norwich we are not accountable for that. It went by a Norwich man who was occasionally then at Windham.

And upon the whole, sir, we are only desirous of that defence which the law gives us, and are willing Mr. Green should have the same privilege, and in the most frank and open manner,

We beg leave to subscribe your Honour's most obedient subjects, and very humble servants,

HEZEKIAH BISSELL, TIMOTHY LARRABEE,
BENJAMIN LOTHROP, EBENEZER BACKUS.

GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL TO GOVERNOUR GAGE.

Lebanon, August 19, 1774.

SIR: I have the honour to receive your letter of the 20th of May last, and the pleasure to congratulate you that his Majesty hath judged fit to order you to return to your command of his forces in North America, and also to appoint you to be Governour-in-chief of his Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

I do assure your Excellency of my readiness to co-operate with you in all matters that concern the good of his Majesty's service, and the welfare, freedom, and happiness of his subjects.

I have also received your other letter of the 23d of July last, enclosing two affidavits, of Mr. Green, and Mr. Scott, touching the treatment the former met with in Windham and Norwich, in this Colony. At your request I have inquired concerning the same; and find that others, well knowing in the affair, do put a very different face and colour on those transactions.

A King's Attorney, and other informing officers are appointed in each county to inquire after, and Courts of Justice instituted to hear and try all informations made of, the breaches of law which happen therein, and all other causes for damages which are duly brought before them: full and ample provision is made by law for the punishment of such as are found guilty of the breach of it; and for the redress of injuries done to the person or property of any one who brings his suit, and prosecutes the same to effect. Mr. Green hath good right to take benefit thereof, and undoubtedly will obtain the satisfaction his cause may appear to merit. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

JONATHAN TRUMBULL.

His Excellency Thomas Gage, Esq.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM SIR JAMES WRIGHT TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED SAVANNAH, IN GEORGIA, JULY 25, 1774.

Our neighbours in Carolina are in great wrath about the Acts of Parliament which have been passed relative to the Massachusetts Bay Government, and have come to some very indecent resolutions, to call them no worse, and, according to custom, have been very busy in sending handbills, letters, and publick invitations, &c., &c., to stir up the people here to concur with them, and follow their example, and a meeting is to be on Wednesday next. There are, my Lord, here, as well as every where else, malecontents and Liberty people, and I will not answer for their conduct, whether it may not be ungrateful and improper; but as soon as they have come to any resolutions or determinations, I shall not fail to acquaint your Lordship therewith.

ELIZABETH CITY COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Elizabeth City, and Town of Hampton, assembled at the Court House the 25th day of July, 1774, to consider of Instructions to our late Members, or to those persons who shall be chosen our Representatives at the ensuing election,

HENRY KING Esq., being chosen Moderator, and Mr. ROBERT BRIGHT, Clerk,

The following Resolves were agreed to:

Resolved, That the people of this county and town are strongly attached, from principle and education, to his present Majesty King George the Third and his family, and they will, with their lives and fortunes, stand by and defend his sacred person, Crown, and dignity.

Resolved, That the Representatives of this Colony have, and ever ought to have, the sole right of taxing the inhabitants of this Colony; and that the assuming of such a power by the present or any other Parliament of Great Britain, should ever be considered as a strong proof of that despotick tyranny which so strongly marks the present Administration, and which dictated those late cruel and oppressive Acts, depriving the good people of the Massachusetts Bay of their dearest and most invaluable rights.

Resolved, That our late patriotick Members, or such persons as may be chosen our Representatives at the ensuing election, be requested to attend the general meeting at Williamsburg, the first of August next, and that they be directed to concur with the Deputies from the other counties in the most spirited measures that may be adopted upon this occasion, so truly alarming and interesting to the Colonies.

Resolved, That if a non-importation and exportation agreement should be thought necessary, that our Members be directed to agree thereto.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that a non-importation and exportation agreement is necessary.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that any merchant or dealer who advances the price of his goods upon a non-importation agreement, ought to be deemed an enemy to his country; and we do most solemnly promise to consider him as such, and to withhold all commercial intercourse with him.

Resolved, That this meeting highly approve of the glowing zeal of the sister Colonies upon this trying occasion, and heartily sympathize with their persecuted brethren and fellow-subjects, the people of Boston.

Resolved, That a subscription for the relief of the unhappy poor of Boston ought to be encouraged by all charitable and humane people, and that the Moderator be directed to solicit contributions for that purpose.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that our said Members concur with the Members of the other counties, on the first day of August next, in the choice of proper persons to represent the Colony of Virginia at a general Congress.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this meeting do transmit a copy of these proceedings to the Printers to be published in their Gazettes.

ROBERT BRIGHT, Clerk.

New-Jersey, July 25, 1774.

It seems now to be a matter past doubt that there will be a general Congress of Delegates from the several British Colonies in America: a very important Assembly it will be, The weal of America, yea, and of Britain too, will very much depend upon their proceedings. Never in this country has more depended upon an assembly of men, than depends upon this. Liberty or oppression, if not abject slavery, depends upon the turn that things shall now take. The contest between Britain and the Colonies runs high. Matters are now come to a crisis. Something must be done by America; and nothing considerable can be done till there is a general Congress. The eyes of all America will be upon this Assembly. The Provinces are ripe for doing something; they want to know what. How much depends upon the wisdom and integrity of these Delegates! How fatal to us all, if, by any means, they give a wrong turn to our affairs! If they should not agree, so that the Colonies might unite in some proper measure, America is undone; or at least thrown into the utmost confusion.

It should not be deemed arrogance or presumption, for any person, in a modest and rational manner, to suggest what is thought proper to be done at the general Congress. On the contrary it is very desirable that numbers from various parts of our land would impartially offer their sentiments on this head. The Delegates must certainly desire to know the mind of the country in general. No rational man will think himself so well acquainted with our affairs as that he cannot have a more full and better view of them. No human mind is capable of taking in all things. We by degrees obtain the knowledge which we have. No Delegate, before he meet the rest, should think he knows the state and interest of all the Provinces so fully and clearly as that he cannot know them better. No Delegate should go with a full persuasion that he has so formed the proper plan of proceeding, as that he will by no means alter. Every wise man will alter for the better as he sees opportunity. Yet, 'tis very desirable that every Member of that important Assembly should have as general and complete a view of our affairs, and what is proper to be done, as he possibly can before he meets in general Congress; and, for this reason, the more there is suggested in our publick papers the better, if it is done in a becoming manner.

The Delegates should go to the Congress with hearts deeply affected with the weight and vast importance of their business; with a proper concern, if not anxiety of mind, considering how much is depending, and how difficult it may be to determine matters in the best manner. Every wise man will have a modest diffidence as to his own abilities in managing such arduous affairs. In this view let it not be thought amiss, if I say they should go to the great Congress with a proper dependence on the Father of Lights and Mercies, who gives wisdom liberally to those who ask him. And no doubt many will pray for them.

When the Delegates are met several things will lie before them, as matters of consideration, inquiry, or debate. Some of these will be matters of great importance, others of less. One important inquiry, no doubt, will be, in what manner shall we make our application to Great Britain? Shall we petition as humble supplicants? Or shall we insist on things as our right? Shall we apply for all that we deem our rights and privileges? Or only for relief in those matters that now press us? Shall our application be made by this general Congress? Or shall this Assembly only point out and advise what the several Provincial Assemblies or Houses of Burgesses shall apply for?

Another considerable head of inquiry respects our trade. Shall we stop importation only, or shall we cease exportation also? Shall this extend only to Great Britain, and Ireland, or shall it comprehend the West India Islands? At what time shall this cessation begin? Shall we stop trade till we obtain what we think reasonable, and which will secure us for time to come; or shall it be only till we obtain relief in those particulars which now immediately oppress us? Shall we first apply for relief and wait for an answer before we stop trade, or shall we stop trade while we are making application?

'Tis the general Voice of the Colonies that we cannot submit to be taxed by the British Parliament; but we by no means refuse to bear our proper, a reasonable part of our publick expenses. [We ourselves being sole judges of the propriety and reasonableness of all requisitions that may be made, and of the mode of levying and applying all we shall think proper to raise,] If we can have all our natural privileges of trade, we are willing to bear our proper part of the burden of expenses. We are willing to let Britain know this; we ought now to express our readiness to it. Therefore another important inquiry may be, in what manner shall we pay our part of the publick national expense? This matter once settled, and our proper privileges and natural rights of trade secured, then peace, most agreeable peace, is established between Britain and the Colonies. Jealousies will be then removed, and cordial friendship continue. The mother country and her offspring Colonies will then go on to prosper, and numerous blessings attend them both. 'Tis true this matter cannot be settled by the Congress, because it will be a work of time, and must be by mutual agreement between Britain and the Colonies. Yet it may be highly expedient for the Congress to consider this matter, and propose what may be proper for the several Provincial Assemblies to offer or comply with. The several Provinces ought to be agreed in this matter; and they cannot so well agree as by a general Congress.

Another inquiry among the Delegates no doubt will be, whether we shall offer to pay for the tea that has been destroyed? This should be freely and calmly debated. What will be proper in point of equity? What may be proper in point of prudence or expediency? What consequences will they in Britain draw from our offering to pay for it? In point of equity, the following queries may take place. Was the Act of Parliament that brought the tea here an unconstitutional Act, tending to produce the pernicious consequences that have flowed from it? Was the East India Company previously warned by several Members of Parliament, and told they would suffer loss by sending their tea here? Has not that unconstitutional Act of Parliament, and the East India Company's conduct, been the proper and unavoidable cause of ten times more damage to America than the East India Company have sustained? If the Company must be made whole, is it not as reasonable that the expense should lie upon Britain as America, since a British Act was the faulty cause of it; and the destruction of the tea was not the act of America, nor of particular cities, as such, but of mobs?

Some queries of less importance may respect the mode of the Delegates proceeding among themselves. Shall the Congress be open to all that can see or hear, or shall the Delegates be by themselves? Shall they allow their debates to be taken down in short-hand? Shall they keep minutes of their proceedings and votes, to be afterwards printed, as is done in Provincial Assemblies, that the Colonies may know how each Member stood affected and voted?

The Delegates from the Provinces ought to be the most hearty friends of America, men that will give up their own private interest for the publick good, when these two come in competition. He that will not do this is no real friend to the publick. This important Assembly will be in danger from false or pretended friends. There are a few in almost every Province, who, from one reason or other, would be glad to bring America to submit to the Ministerial, unconstitutional, measures which we are now threatened with. If any of these persons, under disguise, should be sent to the Congress (as possibly some may) they will, under show of friendship, try to embarrass and confound the measures proposed. They will act as Hushai did with Absalom. It may be difficult sometimes, in the Congress, to know whether a man opposes a proposition from a true regard to the good of his country, according to his view of things, or whether he does it to undermine the whole design. The members of this important Assembly should not be too jealous of each other: that will destroy free debate. They must receive and treat one another as open hearted friends; but not be so off their guard as if they were certain there was no enemy among them.

Considering the vast importance of this Congress, the long train of most interesting consequences that may follow from their advice or determinations; considering the need they have of wisdom, as well as integrity, it might be proper for the several Provinces to observe a day of fasting and prayer about the time that the Delegates meet; and if the Provinces as such do not, yet it may be proper for as many persons, or societies as can, to do it.

There are two reasons why this may be proper: First,

Because human wisdom comes down from the Father of Lights and Mercies, and human determinations are over-ruled by the great God, who is a prayer-hearing God. A greater statesman and politician than will meet in this Convention has left us this observation: "There are many "devices in the heart of man, but the counsel of the Lord "that shall stand." Secondly, In a political view such a day of fasting would win people's attention to the importance of the intended Congress, and fit them to receive and be ready to act upon the determination of that important Assembly.

If what I have offered should induce any friends of America to offer their sentiments upon the forementioned queries, or others of the like nature, and be a means, though in the least degree, to assist any of the Delegates at the intended Convention, it will be a sufficient compensation for what I have here done.

BOSTON TOWN MEETING.

At a Town Meeting in Boston, on Tuesday, July 26th, the methods proposed for employing such as are out of business by the operation of the Port Bill, were approved. A Circular Letter to the other towns, relative to the Bills for vacating our Charter, was reported and accepted by the town. The meeting stands adjourned to Tuesday, the 9th day of August. The following is the form of the Notification for the above meeting:

Notification. - Agreeable to the order of the town at their last meeting, the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Boston, legally qualified, rateable at twenty pounds estate, to a single rate, (besides the poll) are hereby notified to meet at Faneuil Hall, on Tuesday, the 26th day of July, instant, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, then and there to determine on the expediency of appointing a Committee of seven, by ballot, for the purpose of considering of proper measures to be adopted for the common safety, during those exigencies of our publick affairs, which may reasonably be expected, when the Acts of the British Parliament, altering the course of justice, and annihilating our free Constitution, shall be enforced in the Province. the Committee to make report; to consider of what measures are right and proper for the town to adopt at this time, relative to the building one or more houses; building one of more vessels; repairing or paving the publick streets; erecting or enlarging wharves on the town's land; or any other publick work, (to be carried on by moneys arising from voluntary donations.) for the employment of the poor of the town of Boston, at this time of general calamity; to consider whether the town will sell any, and what part, of the real estate belonging to the town, lying within the limits thereof; to consider what further measures are proper to be taken upon the present exigency of our publick affairs, more especially relative to the late edict of a British Parliament, for blocking up the harbour of Boston, and annihilating the trade of this town; and to act upon such other matters as may properly come before them.

By order of the Selectmen,

WILLIAM COOPER, Town Clerk.

Boston. July 23, 1774.

N. B. Such tradesmen and others, inhabitants of this town, as are under necessity for want of employment in their several occupations, by the Act of Parliament, called the Boston Port Bill, are desired to bring in their names to the Committee appointed to consider of ways and means for their employment or relief, who will attend for that purpose at Faneuil Hall, on every day, (Lord's day excepted,) between the 1st and 10th day of August next, from three to seven o'clock in the afternoon.

ALBEMARLE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders of the County of Albemarle, assembled in their collective body, at the Court House of the said County, on the 26th of July, 1774:

Resolved, That the inhabitants of the several States of British America are subject to the laws which they adopted at their first settlement, and to such others as have been since made by their respective Legislatures, duly constituted and appointed with their own consent. That no other Legislature whatever can rightfully exercise authority over them; and that these privileges they hold as the common rights of mankind, confirmed by the political Constitutions they have respectively assumed, and also by several Charters of compact from the Crown.

Resolved, That these their natural and legal rights have in frequent instances been invaded by the Parliament of Great Britain, and particularly that they were so by an Act lately passed to take away the trade of the inhabitants of the town of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay; that all such assumptions of unlawful power are dangerous to the rights of the British Empire in general, and should be considered as its common cause, and that we will ever be ready to join with our fellow-subjects in every part of the same, in executing all those rightful powers which God has given us, for the re-establishing and guarantying such their constitutional rights, when, where, and by whomsoever invaded.

It is the opinion of this meeting, that the most eligible means of effecting these purposes, will be to put an immediate stop to all imports from Great Britain, (cotton, osnabrigs, striped duffil, medicines, gunpowder, lead, books and printed papers, the necessary tools and implements for the handicraft arts and manufactures excepted, for a limited term,) and to all exports thereto, after the first day of October, which shall be in the year of our Lord, 1775; and immediately to discontinue all commercial intercourse with every part of the British Empire which shall not in like manner break off their commerce with Great Britain.

It is the opinion of this meeting, that we immediately cease to import all commodities from every part of the world, which are subjected by the British Parliament to the payment of duties in America.

It is the opinion of this meeting, that these measures should be pursued until a repeal be obtained of the Act for blocking up the harbour of Boston; of the Acts prohibiting or restraining internal manufactures in America; of the Acts imposing on any commodities duties to be paid in America; and of the Act laying restrictions on the American trade; and that on such repeal it will be reasonable to grant to our brethren of Great Britain such privileges in commerce as may amply compensate their fraternal assistance, past and future.

Resolved, However, that this meeting do submit these their opinions to the Convention of Deputies from the several counties of this Colony, and appointed to be held at Williamsburg on the first day of August next, and also to the general Congress of Deputies from the several American States, when and wheresoever held; and that they will concur in these or any other measures which such Convention or such Congress shall adopt as most expedient for the American good; and we do appoint Thomas Jefferson and John Walker our Deputies to act for this county at the said Convention, and instruct them to conform themselves to these our Resolutions and Opinions.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM the HONOURABLE GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED SALEM, JULY 27, 1774.

I left Boston the 21st instant, to meet the Council at Salem, for the issuing of money to pay debts incurred; and yesterday morning received a printed notification of a town meeting to be held that day at Boston, of which I send your Lordship a copy.

In my letter, No. 6, I express an expectation of opposition to the Act expected for the better government of the Province; and the notification for a town meeting seems to be a prelude to it. Whatever the opposition is, I will do my best to defeat it, and take every step I can to enforce the law.

Charlestown, South Carolina., August 1, 1774.

A General Meeting of the inhabitants of the Colony of Georgia, was held at the Exchange in Savannah, on Wednesday last, July 27th. Upwards of an hundred from one Parish, came resolved on an agreement, not to import or use British manufactures, till America shall be restored to her constitutional rights, There is to be another meeting in Savannah, on the 10th instant, of a Convention of Committees chosen by the different Parishes, when it is believed proper resolutions will be entered into, and perhaps Deputies may also be appointed to represent that Colony at the intended Congress.*

Letters from the West India Islands show that they are much alarmed with apprehensions that the British Colonies on this Continent will discontinue to supply them with provisions; and that they will rather withhold their exports to Great Britain, than perish with hunger or eat each other. †

ACCOMACK COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of a very respectable body of the Freeholders and other inhabitants of the County of Accomack, at the Court House, July 27, 1774,

JAMES HENRY, Esq., in the Chair:

The meeting taking into their serious consideration the present critical and alarming situation of this country, respecting her present disputes with Great Britain, do unanimously Resolve as follows:

1st. That we do owe, and will pay, due allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third.

2dly. That all his Majesty's subjects in America, are, by birth-right, entitled to all the rights and immunities of British born subjects; one of which, and of the greatest importance is, that no tax, aid, tallage, or other imposition, shall be laid upon them but by their own consent, by their Representatives.

3dly. That the town of Boston, in our sister Colony, is now suffering in the common cause of American liberty.

4thly. That the powers claimed by the British Parliament, and now carrying into execution against the town of Boston, are fundamentally wrong, and cannot be admitted without the utter destruction of American liberty, and are intended to operate equally against the rights and liberties of the other Colonies.

5thly. That the inhabitants of this county, confiding in the prudence and abilities of their Representatives, who are to meet their brethren at Williamsburg, on the 1st day of August next, will cheerfully submit to any measures

A number of respectable Freeholders and Inhabitants met at the Watch-house, in Savannah, on the 27th of July. JOHN GLENN, Esq., was chosen Chairman.

Sundry Letters and Resolutions received from the Committees of Correspondence at Boston, Philadelphia, Annapolis, Williamsport, North Carolina, and Charlestown, were presented and read. A motion was made, that a Committee be appointed to draw up Resolutions to be entered into by the inhabitants of this Province, nearly similar to those of the Northern Provinces. A debate arose thereon, and the motion was carried by a large majority. It was resolved that the following gentlemen should constitute that Committee, viz: John Glenn, John Smith, Joseph Clay, John Houstoun, Noble Wimberly Jones, Lyman Hall, William Young, Edward Telfair, Samuel Farley, George Walton, Joseph Habersham, Jonathan Bryan, Jonathan Cockran, George McIntosh, Sutton Bankes, William Gibbons, Benjamin Andrew, John Winn, John Stirk, Archibald Bullock, James Screven, David Zubly, Henry Davis Bourquin, Elisha Butler, William Baker, Parmenus Way, John Baker, John Mann, John Benefield, John Stacey, and John Morel. Several gentlemen objected to Resolutions being immediately entered into, as the inhabitants of the distant Parishes might not have had sufficient notice of their objects. It was therefore resolved, that the meeting be adjourned until the 10th of August; and that the Chairman should, in the mean time, write to the different Parishes and Districts upon the subject that it was expected they would send Deputies to join the Committees at that time; and that the number of Deputies be proportioned to the Representatives usually sent to the General Assembly. It was also resolved, that the Resolutions agreed upon and entered into at the next meeting, by a majority of the said Committee then met, should be deemed the sense of the inhabitants of this Province. - M'Call.

† The following is written by Colonel SAMUEL MARTIN, the father of his Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esq., Governour of NORTH CAROLINA, a most sensible, venerable, and universally beloved gentleman, a native of ANTIGUA, sincerely attached to the liberty of his country, and an ornament to human nature:

"I was surprised to see in your Papers, the account of the late Convention at Boston, which began with a devout prayer to God, but was followed by impious Resolutions, of starving the British Sugar Colonies, so inconsistent with the natural benevolence due to our fellow-creatures, which is a leading principle of Christianity; for, to love, and do good to each other, is the great characteristic of the Disciples of Jesus Christ, or the mark of distinction between Christians and Heathens. Are not such Resolutions, after solemn addresses to the Throne of Mercy, a mockery of God? Beware my brother Colonists, least such a flagrant impiety may not draw down the judgments instead of the blessings of Heaven.

"But how do the inhabitants of the Sugar Colonies deserve the resentment of Boston and the other American Colonies? Is it because they which may be concluded upon at the said general meeting, as best to be adopted for restoring harmony between the mother country and her Colonies.

6thly. Ordered, That these Resolves be forthwith printed. JOHN POWELL, Clerk.

PRINCESS ANNE COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Princess Anne, on due notice given by one of the late Representatives, held at the Court House of the said county, on Wednesday, the 27th day of July, 1774, they, after choosing

ANTHONY LAWSON, Esquire, Moderator,

Came to the following Resolutions, viz:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that it is an absolute right inherent in every British American subject, to have and enjoy such freedoms and privileges as belong to the free people of England; and that he cannot be taxed but by his own consent, or Representative.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that every attempt to impose taxes by any other authority, is a tyrannical exertion of power, and a violation of the constitutional and just rights and liberties of the subject; and that the Acts for blocking up the harbour of Boston; for altering the chartered Constitution of the Massachusetts Bay; and for the suppression of riots and tumults, are cruel and oppressive invasions of the natural rights of the people of the said Province, as men, and of their constitutional rights as English subjects.

Resolved, That the town of Boston and Province of Massachusetts Bay, are now suffering in the common cause of America, as the said Acts would lay a foundation for the utter destruction of the rights and liberties of the subjects of British America.

Resolved, That our Burgesses be hereby instructed to use their utmost endeavours at the ensuing Congress at Williamsburg, to procure a general Association for stopping all importation from, and exportation to, Great Britain, except such articles as shall be there agreed upon, as the most effectual means to obtain redress; the non-importation and non-exportation to take place on such future day have not entered into the same resentment against the mother country? Alas! what avails the resentment of such small communities if inclined to it. Every British subject must see the absurdity of a former wicked Minister, who first adopted the plan of taxing the Colonies by a Legislature, in which they have no Representatives: it is contrary to the fundamental principles of the British Constitution. Yet that very Legislature repealed all the Tax Acts of America, except a very small tax upon tea, which was retained, not with views of increasing the Revenue, but as a mark of the dependency of the Colonies upon the mother country; and I dare say that power of the British Legislature to impose rational taxes upon the Colonies, will never be exerted against them; yet this single instance is to be lamented, because it is contrary to the ancient rights of all the Colonies, where Legislatures were established by lawful authority, from their first settlement; and in those Legislatures of each Island and Province, the people had their Representatives according to the fundamental Constitution of the British Government; for that very reason it is a point to be lamented, and indeed opposed, with the moderation of good subjects: not with rage and popular fury, kindled by a few firebrands.

"But what hath the Sugar Colonies to do with all this combustion? Must they be starved for what they cannot remedy? An hard measure indeed, to be inflicted by our brethren and fellow Christians of North America. Yet to be dreaded from those, who for many years have treated their sister Colonies, the Sugar Islands, as aliens; for they sell their produce among them for gold and silver, which they lay out for the like produce of the French, Dutch, and Danish Islands, by a clandestine trade, contrary to the laws of commerce, to the great injury of all fair traders, and of the British Sugar Colonies.

"But is this principle of smuggling consistent with reason or Christianity? Surely not, for next to our duty to God, it is our duty to promote the great good and happiness of that society whereof we are members: and whatever smugglers may think of such an unjust practice, they must give a severe account of it at the great tribunal of Heaven. I hope private gain cannot justify public injury.

"But it is said if the British Sugar Colonies are to be starved, what will the North Americans do with their own produce? To this they have a pat and ready answer, that they can dispose of their produce (o all the foreign Nations of Europe and America. Are they sure of this? Are they sure that the Navy of Britain will not have orders to make captures of all their vessels found laden with foreign manufactures and production? even at the entrance of their own ports. Surely this is a vain expectation, absolutely inconsistent with common sense, and therefore I beg leave to advise our-brethren of North America to treat all their sister Colonies with a benignity well becoming. such near relations, who give freights to many of the largest ships of Boston, to the great emolument of that city, and its Province; for which and many other benefits, by way of requital, the Sugar Colonies are to be starved--Heu pietas, heu prisca fides!" as may be agreed on by the general Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies.

Resolved, That our Burgesses be instructed to vote against every motion or proposal for clogging the usual imports from, and exports to, the West Indies.

Resolved, That our Burgesses be instructed to oppose the importation of slaves and convicts, as injurious to this Colony, by preventing the population of it by freemen and useful manufacturers.

Resolved, That it be recommended to our Burgesses to vote for the encouragement of raising sheep, hemp, flax, and cotton.

Resolved, That our Burgesses be hereby instructed to endeavour to procure a general Association against trading and dealing with every Colony, Province, County, or Town, that shall refuse to come into the general plan which may be adopted by the several Colonies and Provinces on the Continent.

Resolved, That our Burgesses be hereby instructed to use their utmost endeavours that subscriptions be opened in the several counties of this Colony, for the relief of the cruelly oppressed and distressed inhabitants of the town of Boston.

Resolved, That our Burgesses do meet the first day of August, in Williamsburg, to consult upon the most proper means for carrying these or any other Resolves which may be judged more expedient, into execution.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the general plan adopted at the ensuing Congress, ought to be strictly adhered to by the whole Colony; and that this meeting will faithfully adopt such measures as may be then agreed upon.

Resolved, That the above Resolutions be printed, for the perusal of the freeholders and inhabitants of this County.

THOMAS ABBOTT, Clerk.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN PHILADELPHIA,
DATED LONDON, JULY 27, 1774.

With respect to politicks, it is not necessary, in this advanced part of the season, to write much. The Resolutions of Philadelphia, and those of Maryland and Virginia, I must, however, tell you, are esteemed both by the Court and the merchants of the city, as very inoffensive, and as the mere ebullitions of a set of angry men, whose force was spent the day they were made; and the proposed Congress is spoken of, and really considered, both by Administration and all the merchants of the city, as a scheme that will produce no sort of security to the liberty of the Colonies, nor trouble to Administration; and it is under this general apprehension that the stocks continue so uncommonly high as they are at present, and have been for some time past. Mr. Hutchinson is in good health, and apparent high spirits. He is much quoted by Administration; and they are assured by him that their proper and spirited measures will unquestionably excite a perfect submission in all parts of America. Depend on it, that it is only such parricides as Mr. Hutchinson, &c., that support the despotick and destructive schemes and wishes of the enemies of America; and it is from their infamous suggestions that Administration is taught to laugh at your proposed Congress, as they are assured by them, and from both New-York and Philadelphia, that it will produce nothing more than a remonstrance or petition of right, (which by-the-by it is already determined not to receive,) and that you are so attached to your private interests, you will never stop either imports or exports. The honest hearted Americans, at present in this city, are daily both at Court and in London ridiculed, on account of the high sounding declarations of patriotism, made, as it is said, by the cowardly Americans; and are hourly mortified with the detestable opinions of Hutchinson, and other natives of America, being pleasingly repeated and relied on. But, for my part, however I am perpetually insulted with the prostituted sentiments of these men, I persuade myself your countrymen are not so contaminated with the vices and effeminacy of this Nation, not to see that this is the important crisis when they ought to make a solemn, sullen, united, and invincible stand against the cruel, tyrannick, and ruinous system of policy adopted and exercising by this Legislature against the rights and freedom of America; and, let me add, that, if the Deputies of the several Provinces, when convened in Congress, do not, one and all, firmly resolve to establish through every county and township in their respective Provinces, a solemn League and Covenant, and under the Obligation of an oath or affirmation, not to purchase or use the manufactures of this country, (save what are collected already within the Provinces,) and, if possible, not to export any provisions to the West India Islands; and, at the same time, they do not religiously resolve to meet again in Congress every six months, for the purpose of forming a suitable plan for the permanent security of American rights and freedom; I say, if these things are not done; and if they do not determine faithfully to stand by each other until every Act passed this session is reversed; and until all their just rights and privileges are fully recognised and established by this Legislature, our children will be irremediably deprived of that inheritance of liberty which our fathers carefully and piously transmitted to us.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-JERSEY.

New-Jersey, July 27, 1774.

Friends and Countrymen:

We are involved in a dispute with the mother country that is of the most serious nature. It is now brought to a crisis, and upon our conduct, at this time, every thing will depend.

If we calmly view the controversy, we shall find that both sides are wrong; the Parliament, in carrying their authority of right of taxation farther than is consistent with the rights of the Colonists; the Colonists too far, in denying all authority of Parliament. To draw the line is difficult; but yet, I apprehend, a calm, prudent, and steady perseverance in what is right, not making extravagant and improper demands, will bring about a reconciliation. We have lost the distinction between internal and external taxation, and absurdly call every impost upon trade a taxation; but if we would restore words to their proper meaning, we should find that taxes are certain portions of our estates taken from us by the legislative authority, for the publick service, and are to be paid whether we will or not; that, on the other hand, duties are certain rates set on certain articles of merchandise, for the discouragement of foreign manufactures that interfere with our own, or on articles of luxury; and are either intended as prohibitions of those articles, and therefore laid high, or are set so low as to raise a revenue to the state, and are levied only on the consumer; so that, under this species of taxation, every person contributes as he pleases, but none are compelled; hence, a wide difference in the taxes, if we may, with propriety, call the last by that name.

The duty on tea has raised this mighty contest, fomented, I fear, by men whose interest it is to discourage the trade with Britain for this article of luxury, because it will deprive them of their enormous gains in their trade with the Dutch, to whom they make no scruple to pay duties, though their consciences will not permit them to pay any to the state that protects them, even while they are carrying on their destructive commerce.

Let us, my countrymen, be steady in our duty to Great Britain, and, at the same time that we carefully guard our liberties, let us not deny the authority of Parliament, where it alone can have jurisdiction, and thereby break that bond of union which has made the Empire we belong to so great and glorious. In short, while we contend for our rights, let us not attempt to deprive them of theirs, by denying that we are bound by the Acts of the British Legislature, in laying duties upon any foreign articles imported to us; we, in fact, declare an independency inconsistent with our interest, and with every idea of a Colony, which in itself carries the idea of dependence. Instead, therefore, my countrymen, of persisting in the absurd denial of the authority of Great Britain, in imposing any duties upon tea, or other articles of luxury and foreign produce, let us endeavour to draw a line which will put an end to the present, and prevent future, contests between-us and the mother country.

We are a part of a very great and powerful Empire; and though, from our great distance from the mother country, we cannot be represented in Parliament, and have therefore a representation of our own; yet, this doth not destroy or take away all authority of the mother country, but only abridges its power in such instances wherein, from the nature of the thing, it cannot be a complete judge. Hence, it follows naturally, that it would be improper for Parliament to tax our estates, because they cannot know what sums we are able to pay, nor in what mode it would be proper to raise it; and therefore this should be left to our own Representatives. So, on the other hand, our jurisdictions are limited, and we cannot regulate trade or extend our authority to any matter out of our Colonies. Indeed, if we could, we should, from our situations, the different geniuses of the people of these Colonies, and many other things, never be able to pass laws that would be uniform, (which they ought to be,) but our different interests would lead us to different regulations, inconsistent with the central good; our laws would clash, and be often repugnant to those of the mother country. Hence, it follows, that the restraining and regulating trade by prohibitions, by duties, &c., must rest with the mother country, where only a universal and superintendent power can be lodged.

This then being a true state of our situation, instead of denying all authority in Parliament, let us contend warmly that our estates should be taxed only by our Representatives in General Assembly; let us acknowledge that, as parts of one great Empire, we are ready to support and maintain it, by contributing our portion to the national expense; but that our own Representatives are the only judges of the mode of laying and raising the taxes for this purpose. That, on the other hand, Parliament, from the nature and necessity of the thing, must and ought to have the right of regulating and restraining trade, and laying such duties, (let it be for revenue or what it will) on articles of luxury and foreign growth and manufactures. With these sentiments, let us guard against the madness of some men, who are inflaming our minds and hurrying us into an open rupture with our mother country. Let us, instead of denying the authority in the mother country, instruct our Representatives in General Assembly, and those who shall meet in the intended general Congress, to use every means in their power to conciliate this dangerous controversy; to procure an exemption of our effects from Parliamentary taxation, and leave Parliament to a full exercise of their power as to laying duties and restraints on trade.

Should we thus distinguish between internal and external taxation, and speedily make the proposal, so just and reasonable a request we have the greatest reason to believe will not be denied. On the contrary, we may safely presume, that his Majesty and his Ministers, as well as Parliament, will hearken to the justice of our request, and readily accept of our proposals.

On the other hand think, my countrymen, of the danger attending an obstinate perseverance, in so generally denying the authority of Parliament; that, with the confusion it has and will introduce, we may, in the heat and hurry of our spirits, inflamed by men who, perhaps, are without consequence, but in times of tumult and disorder, be involved in the horrors of a civil war, and to the ruin of our liberty, be compelled to submit by force.

BUCKINGHAM COUNTY (VIRGINIA) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Buckingham, at the Court House, the 28th of July, 1774, they took under their consideration the truly alarming state of the several British Colonies from sundry Acts of Parliament, which if carried into execution must reduce the whole to an abject state of slavery, at which time they came to the following Resolutions:

Resolved, That we will, at the risk of our lives and fortunes, defend his Majesty's right and title to the Crown of Great Britain and his American Dominions, against all and_e_very person whatsoever, and that we do acknowledge and_profess all due obedience to him.

Resolved, That we will not pay any tax that is or may be laid on any commodity whatsoever, which shall be laid by the Parliament of Great Britain for the purpose of raising a revenue in America; our own Legislature, with the consent of his Majesty, being only legally vested with a power of laying taxes on the inhabitants of this Colony.

Resolved, That the Act of Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston; also one other Act for carrying persons to Great Britain or elsewhere to be tried for offences; as also the Act for depriving our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay of their Charter, are unjust, arbitrary, and unconstitutional; and that we consider an attack on the liberties of one of our sister Colonies as an attack on the whole of British America.

Resolved, That manufactories ought to be encouraged in this and every other Colony, and that after a short time all-importations from Great Britain ought to be prohibited unless the several Acts of Parliament depriving our sister Colony of Massachusetts Bay of their liberties be repealed; as also all such other Acts of the British Parliament as are or may be intended for laying any tax on articles imported into this or any of the Colonies for the purpose of raising a revenue in America, be likewise repealed.

Resolved, That the Representatives for this county be directed to meet the Representatives of the other counties in this Colony, in Williamsburg, the first day of August next, to consult and advise on the best and most effectual means for preserving American liberty, and that they use their best endeavours that proper persons be appointed on the part of this Colony to meet such persons as may be appointed by the other Colonies, to consult and advise on proper measures for the good of the whole, with all and every of which our desire is, a strict union may be established, as the only sure and effectual means of defeating the evil intentions of a corrupt majority in the House of Commons.

Resolved, That these Resolutions be sent to the publick Printer, and that she be requested to publish the same.

JOHN NICHOLAS, Moderator.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Thursday, 28th of July, 1774, Present: The Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governour, Benjamin Chew, James Tilghman, Andrew Allen, Esquires.

The Secretary having, by the direction of the Governour, prepared a draft of a Proclamation, offering a reward, pursuant to the request of the Assembly, for apprehending the persons said to have murdered Joseph Weepey, a Delaware Indian, laid the same before the Board, which was approved and ordered to be published, and printed copies thereof sent to Westmoreland. The Proclamation follows in these words, viz:

By the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, and Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE. -

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas I have received information that, some time in May last, a certain friendly Indian man, called Joseph Weepey, was barbarously murdered in the County of Westmoreland: And whereas there is great reason to believe that John Hinkson and James Cooper, of the same county, were concerned in the perpetration of the said murder. And whereas, it is at all times, but more especially in the present situation of our affairs with the Western Indian Nations, of the utmost consequence to the peace of the Province, that the perpetrators of such atrocious offence% not only against the authority of Government, but in direct violation of the treaties with those Indians, should be brought to condign and exemplary punishment, I have, therefore, thought fit, with the advice of the Council, to issue this Proclamation: And do hereby strictly charge and command all judges, justices, sheriffs, constables, and other officers, as well as all other his Majesty's liege subjects within this Province, to make diligent search and inquiry after the said John Hinkson and James Cooper, and to use all lawful means for apprehending and securing them, that they may be proceeded against according to law. And I do hereby promise and engage, that the publick reward of one hundred pounds shall be paid to any person or persons who shall apprehend the said John Hinkson and James Cooper, and deliver them into the custody of the keeper of the jail of either of the Counties of Lancaster, York, or Cumberland, or the sum of fifty pounds for either of them.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said Province, at Philadelphia, the twenty-eighth day of July, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four.

JOHN PENN.

By his Honour's command,

JOSEPH SHIPPEN, Jun., Secretary.
GOD save the King.

The Governour laid before the Board a Letter he received from Colonel Guy Johnson, dated 22d July, 1774, which follows in these words, viz:

Guy Park, July 22, 1774.

SIR: Your despatch of the 28th ultimo, to Sir William Johnson, arrived when that worthy man was, through the fatigues occasioned by the late general Congress, (which is just ended) very much indisposed; he nevertheless continued all that day to do business with them, but in the evening was seized with a relapse, which carried him off in a fit that night.* As it was a very critical period, and that he had strongly recommended me for his successor to his Majesty's Ministers, I continued to conduct the business of the Congress at the earnest entreaty of the Indians, and brought it, I think, to a happy termination, and have now received his Excellency General Gage's appointment to the Superintendency till his Majesty's final pleasure is

* On Monday evening, 11th of July, 1774, departed this life, at Johnson Hall, in his sixtieth year, to the inexpressible concern of his family, and the infinite loss of the publick, particularly at this critical juncture, the Honourable Sir William Johnson, Bart., his Majesty's Superintendent of Indian Affairs, and one of the oldest Council of this Province. He had long laboured under a complication of disorders, the consequences of his former fatigues and severe services in defence of the country in general, and this Province in particular. Still persisting in the exertion of all his faculties, and at the expense of health, ease, and domestic concerns, discharging the laborious duties of a most troublesome and difficult department, he, though much indisposed, attended and transacted business with the Six Nations, who came lately to Johnson Hall on account of the murders committed by some of the frontier inhabitants of Virginia. The fatigue and hurry of spirits occasioned by the difficulties he found in accommodating these affairs, at last obliged him to retire to his room, where he was immediately seized with a violent attack, which carried him off in an hour's time.

The impartial publick well know and enjoy the fruits of his distinguished services, whilst crowds have experienced his benevolence and private bounty; and his united talents as a defender and improver of this country, will ever preserve his name amongst the most distinguished personages of the age he lived in. In 1737 he came from Ireland under the auspices of his uncle, Sir Peter Warren. and lived many years in the Indians country, where he learned their language and gained their affection by his great generosity and humanity. In 1755, he stood forth in the defence of this Province, then in the most imminent danger from the rapid progress of the French arms, and with a force, consisting entirely of Provincials, totally routed the army of Baron Dieskau; that victory proved highly acceptable to his Sovereign, who created him a Baronet; and he was rewarded by the Parliament of Great Britain with a present of five thousand pounds sterling. In 1758, he, by an intimate acquaintance with the genius and temper of the Indian tribes, who had been debauched by France from the interest of Great Britain, effected a reconciliation with fifteen different Nations of that people, which paved the way for the future success of our arms in Canada. In 1759, he defeated the French Army, destined for the relief of Niagara, under M.D'Aubry, presently after which the garrison surrendered that important post to the besiegers. These glories were obtained by dint of innate courage and natural sagacity, without the help of a military education; and what remarkably enhances those endowments, is the circumstance of his having taken in both actions, the commanders of the enemy. In 1760, he assisted at the taking of Montreal, and the conquest of the French Empire in that part of the Continent. Since which, he has acted at the head of the Indian Department, over whom he early acquired, and constantly maintained, surprising ascendancy; by the influence and authority of his justice, benevolence, and integrity. In short, our gracious Sovereign never sustained a heavier loss, in the demise of any subject, than of Sir William Johnson, whose character was a combination of good qualities, and whose memory will be highly revered to the end of time.

His remains were decently interred in the church of his own building, at Johnstown, on Wednesday, the 13th, attended by upwards of two thousand people, in the following order:

The Clergy. J. Duncan, Esquire; Captain Chapman; P. Livingston, Esquire; Judge Jones; G. Banyar, Esquire; R. Morris, Esquire; Major Edmonston; Governour Franklin; supporters of the pall. Chief Mourners, Sir John Johnson, Baronet, Colonels D. Claus and G. Johnson, John Dease, Esquire. The Physicians; Family; Mohawks; Conajoharies; High Sheriff, followed by above two thousand persons from the neighbouring country, The Chiefs and Warriors of the Six Nations, who then attended the Congress.

Where it was interred, and a suitable discourse delivered by the Reverend Mr. Stewart, Missionary to the Mohawks at Fort Hnnter.

The Indians exhibited on the occasion of Sir William Johnson's death, the most extraordinary signs of distress and sincere affliction, that ever were before observed among that people.

known. I enlarged during the Conference on the unhappy situation of your frontiers, and represented it as the duty of the Six Nations to bring those they call their dependants to reason. They have accordingly agreed to send Deputies from each Nation to the Southward, who will set out tomorrow, but they complain very much of the ill treatment they receive from the frontier people of Virginia, &c., and of their encroachments, and demand redress.

The hurry in which the late sudden accident has engaged me, and the number of despatches I must now necessarily make up for the post, who is waiting, will not permit me to be more particular at present, but you may be assured, sir, that whilst I have any thing to do in these affairs, I shall use my utmost endeavours for the peace and happiness of your Province, and, from true personal regard, shall always be glad to serve or oblige you, as I am, with real esteem, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,

G. JOHNSON.

P. S. I have taken the liberty to enclose a letter to Mr. McKee, on occasion of the present troubles as I understand there is no post to Fort Pitt, and that it might meet with great delay. I shall be glad to have any further information respecting your frontiers.

The Council then advised the Governour to write an Answer to the above Letter by the next post, and also to write Lord Dartmouth by the first packet, informing him of the publick occurrences here since he wrote him last, and transmit him copies of the Governour's Message to the Assembly; their Answer; Resolves; and the Resolves of the Committee of all the counties lately met in this city; and also the Instructions drawn up by them to the Assembly, respecting the conduct of the Delegates to be named by the House to attend the general Congress of Delegates from all the Colonies, proposed to be held at this city in September next.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK.

Boston, July 28, 1774.

All our Governours' operations are still at a stand, as the Cerberus, ship of war, has not yet made her appearance with the further intentions of Parliament in regard to this truly distressed country; for she is charged with the two Acts passed on the 20th of May, respecting the proposed future government and administration of justice in this Province; that vessel was to leave England on the 25th of May. The Addressers of Mr. Hutchinson, and the protesters against our publick measures lead a devil of a life; in the country the people will not grind their corn; and in town they refuse to purchase from, and sell to, them. The Governour expects hourly the arrival of the fifty-ninth regiment, with a company of artillery from Halifax; his Excellency has expressed much surprise on finding the transports, which sailed long since from hence, to take on board the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, had not effected an arrival at New-York; surely the old Wentworth Indianman has not played the Navy Commissioners a trick, and, by a sacrifice to Neptune, proved a hard bargain to Government.

Our inhabitants endure their distressed situation with great temper.* The letters of sympathy which their have received from the other Colonies, with assurances of joining in a general delegation to the Grand Congress at Philadelphia, fortify their distracted spirits, and encourage them

Boston, July 21, 1774. The firmness and unanimity of the people to defend their invaluable rights, notwithstanding the restlessness of a little selfish faction, does this Province honour. At a meeting of sixty gentlemen, Deputies of the several towns in the County of Berkshire, a number of judicious, spirited Resolves were passed, and a non-consumption agreement agreed upon to encourage our own manufactures, and a subscription for the Boston sufferers, by the Port Act. The accounts from Connecticut are most encouraging, and the firmness, activity, and generosity of the other Colonies, is astonishing to the enemies of American freedom. Courage, Americans, and with the help of God, the slavery intended for us may be warded off, and our tranquillity re-established.

July 28. Every part of this extensive Continent, so far as we have yet heard, appear to be deeply intetested in the fate of this unhappy town. Many and great are the donations we have already received, and many more we have good reason to expect. The cry of hunger is not so great as was at first expected. Even our poorest people have not suffered for the want of bread. May that Being who hath the hearts of all men in his hands, and who turneth them as he pleaseth, still dispose our sympathizing brethren to continue their benefactions, till we are happily relieved from our present difficulties.

to look up for effectual relief from the event of measures to be concerted by the united wisdom of many sage, discreet, and intelligent counsellors. The gentlemen appointed our Delegates will prepare to set out in three weeks time; and as they carry with them ample abilities to describe our situation, and to rouse the attention of all America to our sufferings, we doubt not their complaints will be heard, and their proposals to that Assembly supported with all the sensibility and fervour which will doubtless prevail at that solemn Assembly.

TO THE GENTLEMEN OF THE GENERAL CONVENTION OF VIRGINIA

Williamsburg, July 28, 1774.

You are now to meet on one of the most important matters that ever engaged the Councils of America; you are all well acquainted with the natural and constitutional rights of your country. The resolves from your different counties would reflect honour on the ancient Grecian or Roman states. But in what manner to oppose the growing system of oppression which hangs over you, and to secure your rights for the future, is the important question to come before you. Permit a fellow-subject to offer you his sentiments.

It is proposed that you shall immediately put a stop to all exports and imports to and from Great Britain. We will consider those two points separately.

By stopping your exports you will distress yourselves without one good consequence attending it. You will lessen the revenue it is true; but as that revenue arises from the duty which is paid by the consumer in Britain, the Ministry will only alter the mode of taxation and laugh at your folly. It is alleged too, that you are considerably in debt to the British Nation. If that is the case, let us not meanly take advantage of the times, and give room for our enemies to declare that we are a set of men void of publick faith, who do not deserve the freedom we are contending for. Policy, justice, and proper regard for our national character, all forbid you to adopt this plan. If we are obliged at last to struggle for our liberties, with arms in our hands, let us not stain the purity of our cause with the least tincture of injustice. Let us excite the prayers of the righteous for our success; and if we do fall let us fall revered and lamented.

The other position is, that you should immediately stop all imports from Great Britain; let us examine into the consequence of this step.

We will suppose that all America will unite in this measure. You must then depend on your own manufactures for the mere necessities of life. But this you will be prevented from carrying into execution, for, as soon as you have openly avowed your design of purchasing no more of the British manufactures, the Ministry will immediately enforce that right which they claim from regulating the trade, of restraining you from making any of your own. It will be made treason and rebellion for any man to manufacture the produce of his own estate; it will be made treason and rebellion not to import from Great Britain; nay, it has already been done by Governour Gage's tyrannical Proclamation, which you have all seen. This measure will only protract the evil a little while, and increase the weight of your calamities; such are the fruits of allowing a supremacy for regulating the trade.

Let us then, my countrymen, throw aside all temporizing methods; let us assert our liberties with a spirit becoming men who are deserving of them; let us authorize the general Congress of America to lay our claims before the Nation, and demand a ratification of them from the King in his British Parliament - claims so just and so similar to their own, that a brave and generous Nation cannot withhold their consent. But if this, through the corrupt influence of the Ministry, should be denied us, we shall be prepared for the alternative. Let us then protest against the authority of Parliament in every case whatever; let us forbid our magistrates to be governed by their Acts, on pain of incurring the just indignation of an injured people; and, above all, let us remember, in times of necessity that with the sword our forefathers obtained their constitutional rights, and by the sword it is our duty to defend them.

THE BRITISH AMERICAN, NO. IX.

Williamsburg, Va., July 28, 1774.

Friends, Fellow-citizens, and Countrymen:

I have observed in quarrels between two men, where each has been satisfied of the others' bravery, they have generally compromised their difference upon honourable terms; but where the person injured, under pretence of trying moderate measures, hath by this method of asking satisfaction, given his adversary reason to suspect his courage, a scandalous submission, or the duel, he wished to avoid, has been the consequence. The same passions which produce tiffs effect between two men will operate equally upon two states, who are but a collection of individuals. It is my firm opinion, that if the British aristocracy were once convinced that you were determined to risk your lives and fortunes rather than submit to the legislation of a British Parliament, they would relinquish so despotick a measure rather than force you to draw the sword; if you convince them that you are determined to go even those lengths rather than submit, and nothing but a persuasion that you dare not do so hath induced them to proceed so far as they have done. But supposing it was otherwise, it is high time that the dispute between Britain and America should be brought to some fixed point, which being once determined, either one way or the other, may remove all future contests; for if you look no farther than the present moment, and only endeavour to obtain a repeal of any particular Act of Parliament you complain of, you will no sooner baffle oppression in one shape, than, Proteus like, it will attack you in another equally formidable. Jealousies, complaints, murmurs, and dissensions will eternally subsist; reciprocal provocations will totally destroy all harmony betwixt the inhabitants of the two countries; and implacable resentment end in mutual attempts to ruin, if not to extirpate, each other. What then, my countrymen, is it you demand? The answer is obvious. A right of exemption from the legislation of the British Parliament. If you are determined to enforce this right lay the axe at the root of the evil, boldly avow those intentions to the world, and pursue the proper measures to transmit that right to your posterity.

Of the three plans proposed the first appears too weak and timid; the second too violent, rash, and dishonourable to be adopted; then consider coolly the third plan proposed: that you shall absolutely determine at once that you will not in future suffer any Act of the British Parliament, made since the fourth of James the First, to be executed in the Colonies; that if any judge of any court whatever shall presume to pronounce any judgment to enforce such Act of Parliament, he shall incur the resentment of an injured people, and be treated as an enemy to America; that the judgment so pronounced by him shall be absolutely void; and that you will, at the risk of your lives and fortunes, support every person injured by such judgments in repelling the execution of them by force. It is objected that this measure strikes at the Navigation Acts, which we have long submitted to. The very objection evinces the folly of trusting the decision of this dispute to posterity, who, familiarized to oppression, will never resist it, and who, by long use, will be accustomed to look upon every badge of slavery with as little horror as we do upon the Navigation Acts, which ought certainly to be considered as impositions of the strong upon the weak, and as such ought to be resisted as much as any of the other Acts we complain of; nor will this dispute ever be ended till, by refusing submission to them, we remove so dangerous a precedent. But it is said to be reasonable that your trade should be secured to Great Britain: I own I cannot see the force of this argument; for why should not Britons on this have as good a right to extend their trade to every corner of the globe as those on the other side of the Atlantic? Is it material to the Empire of Great Britain in what part of her Dominions the wealth of her subjects lie, since it will finally centre in her happy Island? Bristol, Liverpool, and Whitehaven would esteem it an intollerable hardship to be obliged to lade or unlade all their ships at the port of London, and though they are not obliged to do this, their wealth finally centres in that city as the metropolis of the Kingdom; so if America was indulged in an unlimited trade it would be highly advantageous to Britain, as all the profits of such a trade must finally centre in that Island. It hath been justly observed, "that "natural inclination leads every man to the cultivation of "the soil, and the extensive Continent of America will "enable her inhabitants to indulge that inclination for centuries to come; nothing but oppression can ever induce "them to turn their thoughts towards manufactures whilst "the produce of their fields can supply them with those "manufactures "Long custom, added to their natural connections with their mother country, will lead them to prefer those of Britain to any others; and the certain market they would meet with there, together with the danger they will run in trading with a foreign Power, who in case of a war may cancel all the debts due to them, will induce them to supply Britain with all the rough material she can manufacture, and to trade with other Nations for such only as would be superfluous to her. But it is objected that America would supply foreign Powers with tobacco. and Britain would lose that valuable branch of trade. To this I answer, that her own interest would induce America first to supply Britain with as much of that commodity as she wanted for home consumption; because so much would bring a better price from thence than from any other market. The revenue of Britain would not therefore be affected; and, with regard to the superfluity, Great Britain could never be said to lose those profits which any of her subjects gained, because the wealth would finally centre in the capital of the Empire. The happy temperature of her climate would invite the indolent, the residence of her Monarch would draw the ambitious, the grandeur of her metropolis would attract the vain and curious, and the refinements of her pleasures would induce the luxurious of her extensive Empire to spend all their superfluous wealth in a city where they could indulge every wish of their hearts; not to mention the vast superiority Great Britain would have over the Colonies by all the Officers of Government in them being appointed, the Government directed, and even the Legislature controlled, (in the exercise of the King's negative) by the British Councils. But it is objected, that if America were indulged with this extension of trade, still she would not contribute to the support of Government, unless compelled to it by a British Parliament. Either this objection is true or false. Suppose it true. If all the wealth arising from the trade and labours of the Americans finally centres in Britain, it is as immaterial to the state whether America actually pays the taxes herself or enables others to do it, as it is whether the publican or tallow-chandler pay their taxes to the exciseman, who pays them into the Exchequer, or whether they pay them into the Exchequer themselves. But I deny the objection to be true. The Assemblies of the Colonies of America, when proper requisitions have been made of them as a free people, who had a right to exercise their judgment upon the expediency of the requisitions, have never refused to contribute to the utmost of their power towards supporting the dignity of the British Empire; nor can the British aristocracy produce a single instance of any one Colony's having refused to grant supplies when their Sovereign hath requested them, but such where their Governours, instead of requesting those supplies with a respect due to free people, have insolently demanded them, with threats in case of refusal; or when, in the Proprietary Colonies, their proprietors have refused to pass any Supply Bills, by which his large estate in the Province would be obliged to contribute any thing towards warding off the common danger, and then, by the address of his Governour, Administration hath been abused with a belief that disloyalty in the people to their Sovereign occasioned the want of those supplies, which were really withheld by the avarice of the proprietor. In the last war, when the usual requisitions were made, the Assemblies, fond of demonstrating their loyalty to their Sovereign, and their regard for the dignity of the British Empire, exerted themselves so much beyond their ability,, that the Parliament of Great Britain thought it but just to repay them what they had actually contributed more than their proportion. Have they ever since been asked to contribute and refused? Why then distrust them now? Or why run the risk of destroying in the goose to get at that wealth which will be at the service of their Sovereign whenever he asks for it in the usual way? But it is objected, that the last war was undertaken solely on account of America, and therefore she was more materially interested in its success than any of the inhabitants of Britain. The event has proved the very reverse. Each Colony possessed of more lands than their inhabitants could cultivate, were really prejudiced by Great Britain's extending her Dominion in America. Their lands fell immediately fifty per cent. in their value by the emigration of their inhabitants to the new conquered Colonies; the manufactures from Britain came much higher than formerly, by the great demand for them to supply their new acquired subjects; their exports to Britain were reduced in their price on account of the additional ones from the new Dominions; and, to crown all, the British aristocracy having no longer a foreign rival to fear in America to check their aspiring views, employed their victorious arms to destroy the rights of those subjects who had assisted them in obtaining the victories which now enable them to attempt to enslave you, with even a shadow of success. But if custom hath so far habituated you to these unjust laws that you are willing, for the sake of peace, to meet your mother country more than half way, upon her agreeing to repeal those Acts, together with every precedent of legislation, do you, on your parts, agree to secure the trade of the Colonies to Great Britain be re-enacting the laws of navigation in your own respective Assemblies, which, when they have obtained the Royal assent, will be eternally binding on you? But never consent to submit to those laws as the Acts of a British Parliament.

It is objected, that the third plan proposed is too violent and illegal to be adopted. Let us consider whether it is so; and here permit me to make a few distinctions which are supported by those laws of England, which our ancestors, when they, with leave of their Sovereign, settled America, imported with them.

When a Judge pronounces an erroneous judgment, in a cause properly within his jurisdiction, he is not answerable as a criminal for such an error in judgment, because no man is infallible, and corruption is not presumed. The judgment so pronounced by him, though erroneous, is not absolutely void, but avoidable, and till it is regularly reversed, by a superiour Court of Judicature, it is to be considered as a judgment; may as such be enforced, but cannot be legally resisted.

If a Judge pronounces judgment in a cause in which he has no jurisdiction, or if a man constitutes himself a Judge, or is by others, who have no right to do so, illegally constituted a Judge, and as such presumes to enforce such usurped jurisdiction, even though the judgment is a just one, he is answerable for the consequences. The judgment thus pronounced by him, though a just one, is absolutely void, and as such may be legally resisted. The Judge and every person concerned in endeavouring to enforce such a judgment, are trespassers; and if any person should be killed in resisting such judgment, the Judge who pronounced the sentence, if present at the execution, and all his assistants, are answerable for the murder.

The Courts of Admiralty, at the time our ancestors settled America, had no jurisdiction of any offence committed in any river or bay where the land could be seen across from one side to the other; and if they presumed to usurp such jurisdiction, by seizing any vessel in such places, they, and all acting under them, were trespassers; their judgments were absolutely void, and by the statute of second Henry the Fourth, chapter eleven, they were liable for double damages.

The King cannot create any new offence, which was not so at the common law, or alter the mode of trial of those already created in Britain, without the consent of his British Parliament, or, in other words, without the consent of the Representatives of the people, who are to be judged for such offences, and affected by such trials; and if he should, such trials would be illegal; the judgments absolutely void; the persons injured by them may not only maintain an action against, and indict as trespassers, the persons who attempt to enforce such illegal and void judgments, but may resist them by force, and if in such resistance they kill the trespassers, it will not be murder, because, say the books, the persons slain were trespassers, covering their violence with a show of justice; he who kills them is indulged by the law, and those who engage in such unlawful actions must abide by the event, at their peril.

For authorities in support of the doctrines I have thus laid down, I refer my reader to 10 Co. Rep. 76 and 77; 1 Salk. 201. 2 Mod. 30, 196; Rolls. Abr. Tit. Escape, 809. pl. 45; Cro. James 314, Cro. Car. 395; 2 Sid. 125; 1 Lev. 95; Hob. 267; Holt, Rep. 186; 1 Hawk. pl. cr. chap. 28, sec. 5 and 6, chap. 29, sex. 8. chap. 31, sec. 46. chap. 32, sec. 54, 57, 58, 59, and 60; 2 Hawk. pl. cr. chap. 50, sec. 3, 4; Inst. 87, 97, 98, 121, 134, to 142, 213, and 248; and a great multitude of precedents in those books referred to. From these doctrines and authorities I draw the following inferences:

First, That the jurisdiction exercised by the Courts of Admiralty in the bays and rivers in America being given, the very offences of which they take cognizance being created, and the modes of trial being altered from the common law, since the settlement of the Colonies by the British Parliament, in which the inhabitants of the Colonies are not represented, the judgments given by those Courts are absolutely void; that the persons injured by them have a right to recover double damages of, and to indict the persons who enforce them, and to resist them with force, and if in such resistance the trespassers are killed, it will not be murder; but on the other hand, if the persons resisting are killed, all actually present in countenancing and enforcing such judgments will be guilty of murder.

Secondly, That as Acts of the British Parliament made since the settlement of America, (in which the inhabitants of America neither are or can be represented) cannot be binding upon the Americans, who have no share in framing them, the subject matter of such Acts of Parliament can never come within the jurisdiction of any Court of Judicature in America, and consequently any judgment given by an American Court of Judicature, to enforce such Acts of Parliament, are absolutely void, and may be legally resisted.

Thus, my countrymen, the dispute finally terminates in this single question: whether the British Parliament, in which you are not represented, have a right to make laws to bind you or not? If they have, all opposition is illegal; but if they have not, you may, without infringing the laws of your country, declare that you will not submit to any Act of Parliament made since your ancestors, with the leave of their Sovereign, settled in America, and determine to punish any Judge who shall dare to enforce such; for the man who as a Judge usurps a jurisdiction he has no right to, and under colour of a law, no way obligatory on you, attempts to wrest your property from you, is to be considered as a plunderer and robber, and you have as good a right to repel by force the execution of his judgments, as you have to resist the highwayman who attacks you in the main road; the thief who breaks into your house; the bailiff who, by virtue of an execution against your estate, attempts to imprison your person, or the Gascon who would enforce an edict of the French Parliament. A just apprehension of personal, danger, and the dread of immediate punishment, acts so powerfully upon the human mind, that I can readily imagine a regard for their personal safety would induce, and a dread of danger would intimidate, all the Judges in the Colonies from enforcing Acts of Parliament of which they can have no legal jurisdiction. Thus your very Resolutions would, in many of the Colonies, end the dispute; for Acts of Parliament, which no Judge would dare to enforce obedience to could never injure you. But if, contrary to expectation, the Judges should still presume to proceed, I would not advise you to confine yourselves to resolutions only, or even to a bare resistance of the execution of their judgments, but by pursuing active measures, convince them you are in earnest, and make examples of the offending Judges.

Be not alarmed, my countrymen, it is not my intention to advise you to proceed to extremities, and hang up these Judges at once; for if the laws of your country can be duly enforced, the authorities I have cited prove that private actions brought by the parties injured, the presentment of Grand, and the verdicts of Petit Juries, will be amply sufficient to enable you to punish legally any Judge, who by arrogating to himself an illegal jurisdiction, shall presume to invade himself, or instigate others to invade, the property, restrain the liberty, or destroy the lives of his fellow-subjects. It is objected, that Administration will exert its influence over all your Courts of justice to stifle such suits and prosecutions, or, at least, to prevent them from being carried into execution; to this I answer, that when violent and unconstitutional measures are taken to overturn the laws of, or to impede the course of justice in, any country, the first law of nature gives the people a right of preserving the one, and of enforcing the other; therefore, if your natural and political liberty should be thus trampled on, and your property should be thus illegally invaded, you will be strictly justifiable in recurring to force, and in proceeding to the last extreme; and to sacrifice to your just resentment three or four, or even three or four dozen unconstitutional and corrupt Judges in each Colony, will be a more moderate measure than that of entering into associations to starve twenty thousand of your innocent manufacturing fellow-subjects in Britain, or that of breaking off all connections with the mother country, and by that means reducing yourselves to the necessity of slaughtering some thousands of the British soldiers, or of exposing the lives of all America in a bad cause; for such it would be esteemed if you act dishonourably in withholding their debts from your creditors. Upon the whole, my advice to you, my countrymen, is, that you send Deputies from every Colony in America to form a general Congress.* Let them be instructed to enter into the firmest resolutions of not submitting to any Acts of the British Parliament, made since the fourth of James the First (when your ancestors, with the leave of their Sovereign, made the first effectual settlement in America, and by doing so, could be no longer subject to the legislation of a British Parliament, in which they could not be represented,) and of punishing any person who shall presume for the future to enforce such Acts of Parliament in America. Let them draw up, and transmit to England, an address to your gracious Sovereign, expressive of the most affectionate loyalty to his person, of their readiness to grant him supplies for the benefit of the whole Empire, to the utmost of their abilities, whenever he shall request it of his respective American Assemblies; but assuring him of their determined resolution to sacrifice their lives, and every thing that is valuable to them, rather than submit to the legislation of a British Parliament; and that as no evil can be so dreadful to them as a humiliating subjection to their fellow-subjects, the Lords and Commons of England, that if his Majesty, deaf to these their reiterated complaints, should persist in permitting such Acts of Parliament to be enforced in America, his subjects of that great Continent, though struck with horror at the idea of disloyalty to his sacred person, are, though reluctantly, firmly determined to break off all connections with Great Britain, and trust to that God who hath told them that the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, to support their endeavours in preserving that liberty they received from their British ancestors. It is objected, that though this plan may be of service to the other Colonies, it will administer no relief to the town of Boston, who is now suffering in the common cause: to this I answer, that a particular emergency requires a special remedy. So far as relates to the removal of the seat of Government, I think resistance would be illegal, it being the undoubted prerogative of the Crown to fix, or to remove the seat of Government of any particular Colony, to whatever place the King pleases within that Colony; and though this prerogative may be exercised oppressively, still the subject must submit. He may petition, but Majesty only can redress the grievance.

But the stopping up the port of Boston, and prohibiting the owners from using their own wharves, under colour of Acts of Parliament, which the inhabitants, or their Representatives, had no share in framing, is such an illegal stretch of power, such a despotick invasion of property, that may be legally resisted, and ought not to be submitted to; indeed, I look upon it as little less than a declaration of war, which would justify all America in running immediately to arms, to repel so hostile an attack upon their liberties. But still, my countrymen, I would wish to see you adopt constitutional measures of redress. Let subscriptions be opened in every town and county on the Continent of America, to supply the inhabitants of the town of Boston liberally with every necessary. Let every supply of fresh provisions and other necessities be withheld from the Navy and Army employed in the detestable service of endeavouring to enslave their brethren and fellow-subjects. Let every Colony in particular, and all America in general Congress, protest against the illegality of the measures, and resolve to support every person who shall infringe or oppose it. Let vessels attempt to go in and out of the port of Boston as usual, as if no such Act of Parliament existed. If the ships of war should seize them, or the soldiers obstruct any man in the use of his wharf, prosecute in the Courts of law every officer, either of the army or navy; for acting so illegally, and every Judge who shall presume to condemn the vessels seized. Let the expense of such prosecutions be defrayed, and the losses of private men made good, by the general contributions of all America. If any violent measures are taken by the tools of the British aristocracy to impede the course of justice, recur to the first law of nature, and repel the aggressors; and though the inhabitants of New England are sufficiently numerous to repel any illegal force which can be raised upon such an occasion, yet, in order to make it one general act of all America, let each Colony send a quota of men to perform this service, and let the respective quotas be settled in the general Congress.

* I would advise that Fredericktown in Maryland, or Winchester in Virginia, should be fixed upon as proper for the meeting of this Congress, as no ships of war could bombard either of those towns, and the number of expert riflemen in those parts would be able to prevent any unwelcome visitors from interrupting the Congress; and though it is to be hoped that no such thing will be attempted, a discreet caution will do no harm.

These measures will, in my opinion, be the most moderate, the most constitutional, and the most effectual, you can pursue, and will, I doubt not, add such weight to your Address to the Throne, that the British aristocracy, convinced that you are in earnest, will listen to reasonable terms of accommodation; and you, by preserving your own liberty, be such a constant check to their ambitious designs as will restrain them within the bounds of moderation, even in Britain; and by restoring your Sovereign to his necessary weight in the National Councils, prevent Great Britain from becoming a prey to those aristocratical vultures which are endeavouring to destroy her very vitals. But, if debased by corruption, prostituted by venality, and lost to all sense of shame, Britain, like a contented fond wanton, loves and caresses the ravishers who have debauched and undone her, should attempt to sacrifice her American offspring to their ambition, and, regardless of your complaints, determine to enforce the legislation of a British Parliament in America; or, in other words, if all your efforts are ineffectual to save your mother country, and she must sink, you must then take care not to sink with her; but, by preserving your own liberty, prepare an asylum in America for such of the inhabitants of Britain who still desire or deserve to be free. You must then and not till then, break off all connections with Great Britain; you must stop your imports and exports to and from thence; you must banish every custom-house officer from amongst you; you must invite all other Nations of the world to supply you with necessities, by giving them liberty to trade with you, duty free; you must proclaim universal freedom throughout America; you must draw your swords in a just cause, and rely upon that God who assists the righteous, to support your endeavours to preserve that liberty he gave; and the love of which he hath implanted in your hearts, as essential to your nature. But these are measures which the British aristocracy, when they reflect upon those consequences of a war with the Colonies; which I enlarged upon in a former letter, * will never force you into. They are measures which nothing but necessity can justify; measures too delicate to be enlarged upon, and measures which I touch with a trembling hand, because though they will, they must effectually preserve the liberty of America, they will probably occasion the destruction of Britain; and though she has treated us unnaturally, and, I will add, ungratefully, she is our mother country still, and as such I would wish to preserve her.

And now, my friends, fellow-citizens, and countrymen, to convince you that I am in earnest in the advice I have given you, notwithstanding the personal danger I expose myself to in so doing; notwithstanding the threats thrown out by the British aristocracy, of punishing in England those who shall dare to oppose them in America; yet, because I do not wish to survive the liberty of my country one single moment; because I am determined to risk my all in supporting that liberty, and because I think it in some measure dishonourable to skulk under a borrowed name upon such an occasion as this, I am neither afraid or ashamed to avow, that the Letters signed by A British American, were written by the hand, and flowed from the heart of

THOMSON MASON.

TO THE PEOPLE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

It must afford singular pleasure to every lover of liberty and his country, to observe the unanimity of sentiment with respect to the present system of American Government. That the Parliament of Great Britain has no right to tax the unrepresented Americans, is now become a fixed and settled principle, in which the zealous and the moderate equally agree. But the modes of resistance to this claim are various, according to the different informations, conceptions; ideas, and I fear, the different interests of those who may be affected by that which shall be finally adopted. There are some who go yet farther, and think the payment of the tea destroyed at Boston should precede nil farther opposing measures on the part of America. I incline to think the number of these to be but few. - But as it has been the subject of publick discussion, in the town of Boston, and may have more advocates than I am aware of, I shall submit the following reasons against it, to the judgment of my fellow-citizens.

As a sacrifice to peace, I am persuaded no one would object; but as an act of justice, necessarily or properly pre-their liberty, without imbruing their hands in blood? Is it reasonable to suppose that three millions of British subjects would tamely submit to slavery, without striking a single blow? Would not their knowledge of the country enable them to attack with advantage? Would not the consideration, that they were fighting pro aris et focis, add enthusiasm to their courage? Inured to the climate, and well supplied with provisions, would not they be better able to undergo the fatigues of such a war, than their invaders? If the British troops with all the assistance and supplies of necessary refreshments which they received from their American friends last war, thought an American campaign the severest they had ever experienced, what must such a campaign be without such assistance and supplies? Could Great Britain spare even 50,000 men, to reduce a people actuated with sentiments of liberty, and possessed of British freedom, of twenty times their number, would those troops engage with alacrity in such a cause? Would not some murmurings of humanity whisper to their consciences that they were butchering their fellow-subjects for showing themselves worthy of the race from whence they sprung, and for acting the same laudable part which they themselves would do under a like oppression? When the sluices of their trade were stopped, and all communication with her Colonies broke off, could she long support the expense of such an armament? Is she well assured that the other Powers of Europe would stand idle, and calmly see her trampling upon the rights of mankind? Would not the generous design of preventing so execrable a purpose furnish them with a just pretext for interposing in support of the injured rights of the Colonies? And might not Britain, whilst she was endeavouring to enforce slavery with fire and sword, in America, fall an easy prey to the first invader, and thus involve herself in the ruin she designed for others? But suppose Britain was able to crush America with the smallest exertion of her force, and to extirpate its present inhabitants, without losing the life of a single man sent against it, would such a conquest redound either to her honour or advantage? Would not the life of every American spent upon such an occasion, be really a loss to Britain, by lessening the export of her manufactures, and the import of rough materials, which furnish her with the means of extending her trade to every corner of the Globe? What mighty advantage would she reap from an uncultivated desert? Would it be easy for her to persuade her other subjects to supply the place of the slaughtered, with such an example of the perfidy, cruelty, and in gratitude of their mother country before their eyes? Does she think that the extirpation of liberty would be a spur to industry, or that slavery has such charms as to contribute to the increase of the Colonies? Should the Northern endeavour to deprive the Western counties of England of their rights, and a civil war ensue, would the conflict be advantageous even to the conquerors? These are considerations which must and will have weight with the British Parliament, and restrain them from entering into a war with the Colonies."

* As the letter here alluded to was published many years ago, like this, in a newspaper, and, in all human probability, hath been long consigned to oblivion, it may not be amiss to give the following extract from it:

"If Great Britain should ever determine to enslave America, it is more than probable that she would have more difficulties to encounter than she at present apprehends. Suppose the Americans, alarmed at the approaching danger, should discreetly determine to retreat to a considerable distance from navigation, and carry off their provisions and live stock, of every kind with them, would troops who had been confined to a close ship, upon salt provisions for near three months; without fresh provisions; without horses to draw their artillery, be in a very proper condition to pursue them? If they did, would not the scurvy, the unwholesomeness of the climate, and the many disorders incident to America, which attack the Europeans with double force upon their first arrival, render the success of such an expedition impracticable, and enable the Americans to preserve ceding a virtuous struggle for constitutional liberty, I can by no means agree to it. In order to form a just idea of this subject, let us reflect what was our situation, and the end proposed by this complicated manœuvre of politicks and private interest. America had been struggling for three years against an Act imposing duties upon paper, glass, tea, painters' colours, &c., for the purpose of raising a revenue. At the expiration of that time Parliament thought proper to repeal it in part, but kept the duty on tea expressly as a precedent for future taxation. The same reason operated on both sides, though in a different manner. If Parliament was so tenacious of the precedent to keep up the claim on the Colonies, it was equally incumbent on them to refuse their submission; for on this the virtue of the precedent depended. Hence proceeded the resolution of not importing this article while subject to this duty, that we might not only address our arguments to the understanding, but the feeling of our fellow-subjects in Britain. Thus far there was a general concurrence of sentiment and action: for the code of laws had not then appeared by which these Associations are found to be treasonable; this discovery has been reserved for the profound researches and ingenuity of the present Governour of Massachusetts Bay. This union, that resolution, and these principles, can only be justified by the injustice of the law, and its repugnancy to our natural and acquired rights. But when the operation of this agreement began to be felt by the accumulation of tea at the India House, and the distresses of the Company united, have forced a repeal; a sort of truce was clapped up between the Minister and the Company, at the expense of America. Having laid that powerful body at his feet, by overturning their whole system, they became his willing instruments to overturn the fair fabrick of liberty in this country. If it is said they sent it under the sanction of an Act of Parliament, I would ask, does this country acknowledge the right of Parliament to sanctify a measure fundamentally unjust? If it does, how came we to oppose the first Act? Allow this power to Parliament, and it will apply equally to the Stamp Act, the Tea Act, or any other as well as the one under our consideration. But it is said to be private property, sent by English subjects to English subjects, and therefore under the implicit confidence and faith subsisting between them, which should have been its protection. If it was private property, it was certainly sent hither for publick purposes; and whether political or commercial motives predominated the consequences to this country were the same; by receiving it, we established the precedent for which the Minister contended; by rejecting it, we destroyed its authority.

Nor will the advocates for the East India Company draw any advantage from the presumptive security of their wares, since this presumption must arise from the purity of their intentions, and their ignorance of the circumstances and danger. One depends upon the other. Now we have the most unquestionable evidence, that the Company was fully apprized of the sense of America on this subject. In the first place it is not to be supposed they could be ignorant of all the publications respecting it, and the resolution existing in this country not to import their tea under the duty, while they were sinking under the distresses it had occasioned. But we have positive proof from the refusals of our captains and owners of vessels to receive it on freight, and assigning the reason. If this was not sufficient, Governour Johnston declared in Parliament, that both by letter and verbally, he pointed out to the India Company, the impropriety of the measure, the circumstance, and the danger. What tye of faith or confidence could ensure the property of an English subject, knowingly employed as an instrument, to subjugate, another, equally free with himself. A fair and candid attention to facts, I think, must produce the fullest conviction that they sent the tea in direct opposition to the known sense of this country, well informed as to the risk, which was considered in this expected profit, and therefore cannot, under an idea of justice, have any right to compensation.

If we are right in opposing the Act, surely we must be right in opposing the means, by which that Act is to be executed: admit the principle, the practice is fairly justifiable from it. Let us not be misled by names; if payment is an Act of justice, it must be founded in this case on a supposition of injury done, of which the party has a right to complain. But here the injury was done to the Americans; the greatest injury the citizen of a free country can feel; while he is struggling for liberty, a third person interposes, makes himself a party in the dispute, his weapon is broke, or destroyed in the conflict will not the justice of his receiving compensation for it, depend upon the propriety of his interposition, his knowledge of the circumstances, and consequences to the person he opposed. I will propose a case by which this question may be decided, by the appeal to every man's own judgment and conscience. Suppose two persons fighting, a third person either puts a sword into the hand of one or applies it himself for his assistance - the sword is broke by him who it was designed to injure; as a juryman or referee, would you think the officious interposer entitled to a satisfaction? The justice of such a demand, in the case of the tea, must certainly depend on the original question of right in laying the duty; for no one can, with reason, claim protection while he is trespassing on the right of others, or assisting those who do; his security must depend upon the rectitude and probity of his conduct; and he may be rather said to have forfeited his right of property, who makes it an instrument of oppression to others, than to have any warrant for its protection. Those who have hastily taken up this notion, I apprehend, do not see that it would, by fair argument, lead to a renunciation of the American cause.

But I think there are other reasons equally cogent, which shew that such a payment at present is neither founded on the principles of policy, expediency or reason - it is not political. The cause of Boston is a common cause, or the other Colonies have no reason to espouse it. A payment of the tea would be setting a precedent for New-York, Charlestown, and Philadelphia, who are equally exposed to the like claims, though in different degrees, and probably subject the latter to the payment of the damages of the malt-ship sent from hence in 1767. This, I apprehend under the present circumstances of the people of Boston, would be going too far without the concurrence and advice of those Colonies at least. But the cause is of such vast importance to all America, that no step of such moment should be taken by a single Province, much less a town, but by the united wisdom of America in Congress alone. However, it may be smoothed over under the specious names of compensation and justice, it may be allowed to be a partial compliance with the most cruel Act which ever disgraced the annals of history; and can have but little merit, when we consider the time and force which extorts it. Besides, can we suppose the unfeeling and implacable author will pat any other construction upon it, than as a step of submission, which may be improved into total subjection; the very idea of which will strengthen his heart, hands, and party, to go on and complete his pernicious work. It is not expedient, or to be reasonably expected at present, because if done in the fullest extent, they are as far from relief as ever. The advocates for this opinion seem to overlook those clauses in the Act of Parliament, which prolong the sufferings of Boston not only till satisfaction is made for the tea, but until his Majesty shall adjudge that due obedience to the laws has taken place, and the revenues may be duly collected; that is, in other words, till they have surrendered these inestimable rights, which stamp value and dignity on our existence. Some are so weak as to argue, that if this compensation is made there is no doubt but relief would be granted. Let such consider the hostile views with which their present Governour came among them, his correspondent conduct, and thence judge how little favour they may expect from him. But I will suppose him the reverse of what he appears - and that he might be disposed to forward the certificate. Unless he could go farther than certifying the payment of the tea, of what effect would it be? This is not the ministerial object, if it was, the offers made in England would not have been rejected. Those therefore who support this opinion must either mean, that they should go farther in their submission, and make the grand sacrifice of all, give the fatal stab to the liberties of America, or strip themselves of a large sum of money, at a time when the hand of necessity is pressing them down to the lowest ebb of want and distress, and tiffs without, the least prospect of being restored, to their former condition. Is it expected from the wretched debtor, when unable to prevail upon his relentless creditor, that he should put his purse into his hand, and then resign himself to the miseries of a jail. Yet this is what rigorous justice might demand, though reason and the law of self-preservation would authorize a repeal. This has some resemblance to the present state of Boston.

I hope my countrymen will not be deceived by pretences of regard to justice, which too often serve as a cover for other views. That the tea will eventually be paid for, I believe there is little doubt, but let this compensation be made, as all others have been heretofore, when the grievance that created the loss ceased. There is not an argument offered for the payment of the tea, but what will operate equally for the payment of the stamped paper, which was never paid for to this hour; and let it also be remembered, that all the compensation made for damage done to individuals on that occasion, were after the Act was repealed. No person then thought that previous satisfaction was an act of justice, policy, or expedience. We have former experience for our guide, and I think it is not difficult to foresee, that hasty concessions of this nature, while our grievances continue, will defect the best concerted plan we may form for relief. It will afford such encouragement to every enterprising adventurer, who may choose to join in the attack upon American liberty, by securing his property from risk, as ought to deter us from hasty conclusions on a matter which may have such serious consequences. Instead of being the first act on the part of America, I cannot but think the interest of America, and particularly of the unhappy sufferers at Boston, require that it should be the last. But there is a debt of justice and honour of which I will beg leave to recommend my worthy fellow-citizens, not doubting but at a proper time it will meet with due attention. Those gentlemen who sacrificed their interest to the publick call, who permitted their goods to return in the tea-ship, and thereby may have saved this city from the calamities of Boston, though at a loss to themselves, surely deserve something more solid than thanks for so self-denying an instance of publick virtue and regard to their fellow-citizens.

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE OF NEW-JERSEY, TO THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE OF BOSTON.

Elizabethtown, New-Jersey, July 28, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The arbitrary and cruel oppression under which your Metropolis now labours, from the suspension of commerce, must inevitably reduce multitudes to inexpressible difficulty and distress. Suffering in a glorious and common cause, sympathy and resentment, with peculiar energy, fill the breasts of your anxious countrymen. As the King of Kings and the Ruler of Princes seems, in a remarkable manner, to be inspiring these Colonies with a spirit of union, to confound the counsels of your unrighteous oppressors; and with a spirit of humanity and benevolence towards an innocent and oppressed people; so, we trust, he will also inspire your town with patience, resignation, and fortitude, until this great calamity shall be overpast.

We have the pleasure to acquaint you, that, on the 21st instant, at the city of New-Brunswlck, the Province of New-Jersey, with singular unanimity, seventy-two Delegates from the several counties, and a majority of the House of Representatives present and approving, entered into similar resolutions with the other Colonies; elected five Deputies for the proposed Congress, and the County Committees then agreed to promote collections in their respective counties, for the relief of such of the unhappy inhabitants of the town of Boston as may now be reduced to extremity and want. To accomplish this purpose with the more acceptance to yourselves, we, the Committee of Correspondence for the Eastern Division, request that, by the return of the post, you would be pleased to advise us in what way we can best answer your present necessities; whether cash remitted, or what articles of provision, or other necessities, we can furnish from hence, would be most agreeable; and which we hope we shall be able to forward to Boston very soon after your advice shall be received. We doubt not gentlemen are devising every possible method for the employment of those who, by their deplorable situation, are cut off from all former means of subsistence.

We are, gentlemen, your very humble servants,
By order, WILLIAM P. SMITH, Chairman.

A brief Examination of AMERICAN Grievances; being the heads of a Speech at the General Meeting at LEWISTOWN, on DELAWARE, July 28, 1774.

A gentleman introduced the business of the Assembly, by an encomium on the happiness of the English Constitution, and went on to show that the American Colonies brought all British liberties with them, as appears by their Charters, the nature of their emigration, and many publick declarations at that time made, and since. That the Colonies were pleased and happy in their union, commerce, and mutual assistance given to and received from the mother country, even while almost the whole fruits of their labour and industry ever returned to Britain, to her strength and aggrandizement. That they have been, and still are, the most loyal and dutiful of all his Majesty's subjects, and the most closely attached to his present Royal family. That they have always granted their aids of money and men, when their Sovereign constitutionally demanded them of their Assemblies, and even seasonably and beyond their proportion; so that, in the last war, a considerable sum was refunded to this little Colony on Delaware, as well as others. That the present undeserved frowns of the parent state most probably arise from the base calumnies, wicked insinuations, and most false misrepresentations of the Bernards, Hutchinsons, Olivers, and such other malicious enemies of the real interest of Britain and America, who have absurdly, as well as wickedly, represented the Colonies as rebellious, independent, &c. That hence, for about ten years past, the conduct of the British Ministry, and a majority of Parliament, seems to be one continual plan to rob us of our dearest liberties. That, if America be enslaved, the freedom of Britain will not long survive that wretched crisis. That the impositions and oppressions of the most loyal Americans are already become very numerous and very grievous.

He then went on to enumerate and explain as many as he could recollect, after laying down these principles, viz:

That "all lawful civil Governments must be wholly employed to preserve the lives, liberties, and properties of the subject."

"No Englishman is bound to any laws to which he has not consented by himself, or his own chosen Representatives."

"A man has no property in that of which he may be rightfully dispossessed at the pleasure of another."

"Britons only can give their own money."

"No man can tax us but ourselves, while we enjoy the British Constitution."

He went on to show, that from these principles, well known to every freeman, the following will appear, to say the least, lawless usurpations, viz:

1st. Restraining the Colonists from manufacturing their own iron, by erecting slitting mills, &c:

2d. Restraining the transportation, and thus the manufacturing, hats of our own peltry, &c.

3d. The grievous oppression of preventing farmers to carry their own wool even across a ferry, though the rivers, waters, havens, &c., are given us by our Charters.

4th. The changing the boundaries of Colonies, and obliging men to live under Constitutions to Which they never consented, as part of Massachusetts Bay joined to New-Hampshire.

5th. The suspending the Legislative powers of New-York, by an Act of Parliament, until they should quarter troops sent to raise an illegal tribute by military execution.

6th. The memorable and detestable Stamp Act.

7th. The Parliamentary claim to make laws "binding us in all cases whatsoever," consequently, to regulate our internal police, give, take away, change, and infringe, our Constitutions and Charters, for which we have the most solemn faith of the Crown and Nation for their inviolable security.

8th. Their assuming to lay sundry taxes upon us, though self-taxation is the basis of English freedom. At the distance of three thousand miles, the Parliament arbitrarily demands the strings of every American's purse, though ignorant of us and our ability, &c., though they are not included in the same tax nor ever were chosen for our Representatives.

9th. Their denying us the right to give our own money to our own King, on his legal demand; a right which Britons, from earliest histories, have enjoyed, and to secure which they have often spent much blood and treasure.

10th. Their laying a tax on paper, glass, painters' colours, and tea.

11th. And though this, with the Stamp Act, were repealed by non-importation, the American virtue, and the influence of our friends, yet, a tax on tea was and is continued, as the badge of our slavery.

12th. The mean stratagem, unworthy the Representatives of a free and great Nation, of attempting to enslave us, by pretending a favour to the East India Company, which Americans bravely rejected and disconcerted.

13th. Finding stratagem would not prevail, they have thrown off the mask, and are now dragooning us into a surrender of our rights by the last Bills, and wreaking their unjust vengeance on those who cannot submit to their impositions, 14th. Maintaining a standing army in times of peace, above the control of the civil powers, at Boston, &c., which no Briton can submit to.

15th, Extending the obsolete Act of Henry the Eighth, to drag Americans to Britain to be tried, contrary to our birth-right privilege of juries of our own neighbourhood. How shocking to humanity to see a fleet and army on the Act for preserving dockyards, &c., solemnly stationed to take any poor man, on suspicion of his being one of the justly exasperated mob who injured the Gaspée schooner, to be sent in irons in a man-of-war - worse than a Popish inquisition, three thousand miles, to be tried by partial judges, and ruined, if innocent, at last.

16th. The wresting Castle William out of the hands of the owners, though the principal fortress where their property and stores were deposited, and putting it into the hands of those who yet unjustly detain it, over whom the civil powers have no control, at a time when the military threatened the slaughter of the inhabitants.

17th. The rewarding and advancing Captain Preston, for the very reason of his murdering some young men at Boston.

18th. Fleets and armies sent, to enable the Commissioners of the Customs, authorized by Parliament, in violation of all English liberty, to plunder freemen's houses, cellars, trunks, bed-chambers, &c.; and if they murder men, by a late Bill, they may not be tried in America, and the poor relations cannot prosecute on the other side of the Atlantic; thus, the blood of our poor innocents may cry, indeed, to God from the earth; but, from civil Government, there can be no justice.

19th. The grievous partiality of those who have made their own judges independent even of the demesne of the Crown, yet have sent Judges, a Governour, and Attorney General, during pleasure only, under no ties to the country, but biased to the Ministry, by whom they are supported by a tax unconstitutionally squeezed from Americans. Their circumstances tend to make them, like Judge Jeffries, the cruel instruments of tyranny and injustice.

20th. Ungratefully disheartening us, and adding insult to injury; quartering insolent troops upon us, to provoke the injured to mobs; and sending over men of the worst characters for Governours, Judges, and officers, to some Colonies; refusing to hear any complaints of mal-administration; forgetting all our merit, though the most firmly of all his Majesty's subjects attached to the principles of the Revolution; supporting one-third of the Nation, and increasing her naval power and grandeur, and profusely spending our blood and treasures in all the wars of Britain, &c.

21st. Another distressing grievance, is, that the British Ministry receive no information of the state of the Provinces, unless from their very enemies, the Governours, Judges, and officers, while cries and petitions of the injured and oppressed Colonies, even from general Congresses and Assemblies, will not be favoured with a hearing, and by them kept back from the ear of our Sovereign; while the betrayers of the union and happiness both of Britain and America are heard, supported, and rewarded by the Administration, for all their false and malevolent dissimulations.

22d. Though in all Nations the persons of Ambassadors are sacred or inviolable, the virulent torrent of abuse premeditated and prepared, and poured out in a most scurrilous manner, even in the House of Lords, by the approbation of a majority of them, against Doctor Benjamin Franklin, the known Agent of our Colonies; though his age, office, abilities, and character, (as a philosopher and politician, well known in all Europe,) might have exempted him from abuse, even among the rudest companies. His offence, strange to relate, was discovering to his country their false accusers.

23d. The conferring honours, preferments, and lucrative posts, generally, on those unhappy wretches, who appear the sole cause of all the dissensions in Britain, and her unjust measures against her loyal sons, as Bernard, baronet, &c., &c., many of whom, if justice could be brought to her ancient channels, would justly forfeit their devoted heads.

24th. And now, to complete our slavery by violence, which could not be done by fraud, the Boston Port Bill is executed on Boston; that ancient, loyal, and flourishing city blockaded by a fleet and army, without ever hearing them, or even their agent, one word in their defence.

25th. By our last accounts another Bill has passed the lower House, which is designed to indemnify the officers of the customs, navy, and army, and all their wretched assistants, in destroying our rights, from all the barbarities, rapines, and murders they may commit against that brave, loyal, and patient people of Boston.

26th. And, finally, to show us that the stipulated faith of the Crown, during the reign of his present Majesty, is good for nothing at all; and to convince us that we have nothing that we may call our own, even Charters and Constitutions themselves, another Bill has also passed that House, to change, infringe, and destroy all that was worthy their care in the solemn Charter of the Massachusetts Bay. The same Parliament, on the same principles, with equal right, may vacate the right to any man's house, plantation, deed of his lands, &c., whenever he may happen to displease any Minister of State, or any of his tools, from a Bernard and Hutchinson, to the most infamous informer and tide-waiter.

27th. Hence, on the whole, we have gradually lost our free Constitution, English liberties, and Charters, and are really under military government, a state to be deprecated by all good men; so that, if we say a word against a Tea Tax, a Boston Port Bill, or any arbitrary and tyrannical imposition, we may expect, like Boston, to have our estates, trade, deeds, &c., taken away, and dragoons sent to insult us; and if they murder us, they are not amenable under our laws. Our circumstances bear some resemblance to the time when they were forcing Bishops on Scotland, when every common soldier, in the reign of Charles the Second, was witness, judge, and jury himself; and, on asking two or three questions, might shoot down any person he met.

Here is a dreadful catalogue indeed! And I doubt not, said he, there are many more which have escaped my memory. O that our gracious Sovereign would condescend to read the catalogue, and spend one hour apart from Lord North and the other authors of our calamities, to meditate upon them! Sure his humane heart would bleed for the distresses of his reign, and he would vow redress to his loving and oppressed subjects. Any one of these twenty-seven grievous impositions would have driven a people careless of loyalty, patriotism, prudence, and fortitude, into actual rebellion, to take arms in defence of such invaluable privileges. But, in defiance of all the whispers of our enemies, though we love liberty, we love Britain too, and earnestly desire to continue the most inviolable union, connection, and harmony, with the land of our fathers. Though we are now above five millions, (and at our present rate of population will soon double that number,) if we were now united we need not dread, under the conduct of that gracious and Almighty Being who hears the cries of oppressed innocence, any single Prince or Empire on earth; but were we ten thousand times so many more, we would still revere, love, and support our mother, Britain, &c., while she will treat us as children and friends.

He concluded his address, by showing the necessity and expediency of a general Congress, to cultivate or restore our friendship with Britain, &c., as well as to agree on a necessary non-importation Covenant; which Congress, he showed, ought to be continued in all future times. He hoped, amidst their important affairs, they would fall on some honourable and safe expedient to put an end to our African slavery, so dishonourable to us, and so provoking to the most benevolent Parent of the Universe; that this, with our luxury and irreligion, are probably the remote causes of our present alarming situation.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM DEPUTY GOVERNOUR PENN, TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Philadelphia, July 30, 1774.

MY LORD: I beg leave now to acquaint your Lordship that a meeting of Deputies from the several counties of this Province was held in this city on the 15th of this month, to consider of the most proper measures to be taken in the present differences between Great Britain and the Colonies. The principal business done at this Convention was forming a set of resolves, and preparing a draught of instructions to their Representatives, which they laid before the Assembly, and immediately afterwards published them. I herewith send your Lordship the newspaper containing those resolves and instructions, as also the resolutions of the Assembly thereupon, by which your Lordship will perceive that the steps taken by the Assembly are rather a check than an encouragement to the proceedings of the Committee, and this I was well assured would be the case.

I am with great respect, &c., JOHN PENN.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK,
DATED LONDON, JULY 30, 1774.

It is the prevailing opinion here that the Colonies mean nothing, as the arts of Administration must eventually divide you.

The large orders for goods, and the long delay of measures of resistance, give your best friends some apprehension, that you will lose the only moment which you can ever have to save America from ignominious slavery. The idea of your being stronger, and this country weaker, may be very true in fact, but not true in point of political strength. Your enemies have been imprudent enough to alarm you now - they may grow wiser hereafter - spin the snare with some art, and forever enslave you, by imperceptible steps. You will find it the language of Administration, their emissaries and subservient merchants, with whom you correspond, that if America will be quiet for the present, all will be right again. If you trust such promises you are utterly undone, and deserve the chains of tyrants. I should think myself entitled to drive you like negroes or beasts of burden, if you act so weak, so contemptible a part - 'tis the characteristic of the present Ministry to lie and betray - 'tis the very system of the Cabinet - 'tis the rule by which my Lord Bute has undone the first men in this country, and with them, this unfortunate Kingdom.

I have a thousand reasons to wish that your opposition may be an early one, as well as vigorous - the day of grace is now - it will be soon over.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK,
DATED LONDON, JULY 30, 1774.

We are all in high expectations of the event of the late measures [adopted respecting Boston, which carry with them rather the harsh and rigid aspect of power, than that of paternal affection, which wishes to reclaim while it chastises. The Crown has for a long time past been gaining power at the expense of the liberties of the people, by a gradual system of corruption, which the people themselves have not virtue enough to counteract. But now the strides towards despotism are enormous. I wish the Americans may be able to fall upon some prudent and effectual measures in the present important crisis. But I fear the greatest difficulty, will be in the want of an union and confidence among themselves in the different Colonies, without which any expedients they may think proper to adopt will, I fear, avail little.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK,
DATED LONDON, JULY 30, 1774.

I enclose you a Bill, which will soon be a law, and which speaks the intentions of Administration stronger than I can. It is a model for all America, and certainly there is a full purpose here of executing it, if we do not, by a firm union and opposition, withstand it. A general suspension of commerce, till our grievances are redressed, is the only measure which is at once safe and sure. The question is now become of such pregnancy and magnitude, that your proceedings ought to be conducted with the greatest deliberation and gravity. It is no common issue that we are trying, as it involves the fate of uncomputed millions.

The Ministry flatter themselves, that the terrour of their measures will make all America silent and submissive. Even Lord Mansfield ventured to declare in the House of Lords that all the Colonies would return to obedience (his phrase for slavery) sine cæde. If I mistake not, he will find it difficult to keep this country quiet, under the distress a non-importation agreement will occasion. That is our strong hold, which I trust in God we shall never abandon.

Mr. Rigby, who is at the head of the Bedford-people, and Sir Gilbert Elliot, who presides in the Royal junto, both declared in the House of Commons, that as soon as America was reduced to order, it was intended to tax them. You may depend upon this as a fact.

It is the opinion of your best friends here, that you should put a total stop to all commerce with this country, both exports and imports. Some would carry it so far as to stop all provisions and lumber from being sent to the West Indies. The few absolute necessities a hardy people can want, who are contending for the dearest of all earthly blessings, their liberty, may be easily had from St. Eustatia, the French West Indies, or some part of Europe. Keep all the money you have, and pay no debts here. At the same time, by a judicious manifesto, address the British merchants, manufacturers, and your brethren in England, stating modestly your grievances, pointing out the mode of redress, and complaining of the grievous necessity you are driven to. All the Colonies, it is expected, will unite; for which end a Congress should be held as soon as possible. You may rely on it as a most certain truth, that Philadelphia, next to Boston, is to feel the severe rods of chastisement, if those now applied to Boston are patiently submitted to.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR
BULL TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED CHARLES-TOWN, JULY 31, 1774.

I had expectations that the measures taken by the Parliament relative to Boston would have had some happy effect towards composing the disturbances in this Province, which seemed to have subsided a little last winter, but it has taken a contrary turn. Their own apprehensions and thoughts, confirmed by the resolutions and correspondence from other Colonies, have raised an universal spirit of jealousy against Great Britain, and of unanimity towards each other; I say universal, my Lord, for few who think otherwise are hardy enough to avow it publicly.

The general claim is exemption from taxation, but by their own Representatives, as co-essential with the British, (their own) Constitution. Some who do not enter so deep into principles, are alarmed at the consequence of a ready acquiescence under taxation by the Parliament, as they apprehend that then all the variety of ways and means of raising money in Great Britain will soon be put in practice here, and applied to purposes not merely American.

Such arguments as the last are easily understood and felt by every man, and catches like wild-fire among the multitude. They are deaf to the argument on the other side of the question, though obvious to a man of consideration, that in every Empire an absolute power must necessarily be lodged somewhere, over all the parts and members thereof, which, in Great Britain, is in the King and his Parliament. But liberty or slavery, in their greatest latitude, is the alternative generally held forth in their popular meetings, for little attention or patience is shown to those who attempt to state things in a different light.

Your Lordship has doubtless been informed of the proposal from Boston, that there should be a Congress of Committees from every Province, to consider of what was proper to be done by them in this crisis. Accordingly on the sixth instant a great concourse of people assembled in Charlestown, in order to choose a Committee of five men for South Carolina. I enclose Timothy's Gazette, which publishes the result thereof.

I beg your Lordship's permission to observe, and I do it with great concern, that this spirit of opposition to taxation and its consequences, is so violent and so universal throughout America, that I am apprehensive it will not be soon or easily appeased. The general voice speaks discontent, and sometimes in a tone of despair, as determined to stop all exports to, and imports from, Great Britain, and even to silence the Courts of law, foreseeing, but regardless of the ruin that must attend themselves in that case; content to change a comfortable for a parsimonious life, to be satisfied with the few wants of nature, if by their sufferings they can bring Great Britain to feel.

This is the language of the most violent; others think it is going too far; and the most violent too often prevail over the moderate. When men shall in general lay aside the hopes of getting riches, and abandon the employment of agriculture, commerce, and mechanick labour, what turn their leisure time, under such circumstances, may take, I submit to your Lordship's knowledge of history, and of the human mind. Such sudden and great changes in the manners of an extended thriving people, amongwhom the Gazettes are filled with such variety of articles for luxury, is scarce credible, though possible, but the continuance of it is very improbable. The first account of the result of the Congress at Philadelphia may reach your Lordship the beginning of November. I think it my duty to make it true and faithful representation of the disposition and temper of the people, how disagreeable it may however appear, and to confide in the Royal wisdom for the remedy.

Captain Maitland, who on the 18th instant, had brought in several chests of tea for merchants in this town, which he had promised the General Committee, as it is called, to destroy or carry back, and taken in his load of rice in the mean-time, gave great offence to the Committee and the people, as the tea was that day landed by the Custom-House Officers and lodged in the King's store house.

Several hundred men went with great threats in quest of him in the evening, but as they entered his ship on one side, he went off from the other, and took shelter on board his Majesty's ship Glasgow, then in Rebellion Road, and next morning his ship was removed from the wharf by Captain Maltby's assistance. Another parcel of tea, since arrived, by consent of the Committee, is lodged in the King's stores in the same predicament. Although Captain Maitland sails first, yet, as his ship is heavy laden, I think my account of these matters will reach your Lordship soonest by the packet, &c.

DELAWARE CONVENTION.

August 1, 1774, P. M. - The Representatives of the Freemen of the Government of the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, upon Delaware, met at New-Castle, in pursuance of Circular Letters from the Speaker of the House, who was requested to write and forward the same to the several Members of Assembly, by the Committees of Correspondence for the several counties aforesaid, chosen and appointed for that among other purposes by the Freeholders and Freemen of the said counties respectively. Present:

For the County of NEW-CASTLE. - Thomas McKean, John Evans, John M'Kinly, James Latimer, George Read, Alexander Porter.

For the County of KENT. - Charles Ridgely, William Killen, Cæsar Rodney, Thomas Collins.

For the County of SUSSEX. - Thomas Robinson, Levin Crapper, Boaz Manlove, John Wiltbank, Stephen Townsend.

Who immediately proceeded to the choice of a Chairman, and CÆSAR RODNEY, Esquire, was chosen Chairman, nemine contradicente, and DAVID THOMPSON, Esquire, Clerk.

The Resolves of the several Committees appointed by the inhabitants of these Counties respectively, were read, and follow in these words, to wit:

"At a General Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of New-Castle, on Delaware, at New-Castle, the 29th of June, 1774, THOMAS M'KEAN, Esq., Chairman:

"Resolved, 1. That the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston is unconstitutional, oppressive to the inhabitants of that town, dangerous to the liberties of the British Colonies, and that, therefore, we consider our brethren at Boston as suffering in the common cause of America.

"2. That a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies in North America is the most probable and proper mode of procuring relief for our suffering brethren, obtaining redress for American grievances, securing our rights and liberties, and re-establishing peace and harmony between Great Britain and those Colonies on a constitutional foundation.

"3. That a respectable Committee be immediately appointed for the County of New-Castle, to correspond with the sister Colonies, and with the other counties in this Government, in order that all may unite in promoting and endeavouring to obtain the great and valuable ends mentioned in the foregoing Resolution.

"4. That the most eligible mode of appointing Deputies would be by the Representatives of the people of this Government met in their legislative capacity; but as the House of Assembly have adjourned themselves to the 30th day of September next; and it is not expected his Honour our Governour will call them by writs of summons on this occasion, having refused to do the like in his other Province of Pennsylvania; therefore, that the Speaker of the Honourable House of Assembly be desired by the Committee now to be appointed to write to the several Members of Assembly, requesting them to convene at New-Castle, on any day not later than the first of August next, to take into their most serious consideration our very alarming situation, and to appoint Deputies to attend at the general Congress for the Colonies, at such time and place as shall be generally agreed on.

"5. That the Committee now to be chosen consist of thirteen persons, to wit: Thomas M'Kean, John Evans, John M'Kinly, James Latimer, George Read, Alexander Porter, Samuel Patterson, Nicholas Van Dyke, Thomas Cooch, Job Harry, George Monro, Samuel Platt, and Richard Cantwell, and that any seven of them may act.

"6. That the said Committee immediately set on foot a subscription for the relief of such poor inhabitants of the town of Boston as may be deprived of the means of subsistence by the Act of Parliament, commonly styled the Boston Port Bill; the money arising from such subscriptions to be laid out as the Committee Shall think will best answer the ends proposed.

"7. That the inhabitants of this county will adopt and carry into execution all and singular such peaceable and constitutional measures as shall be agreed on by a majority of the Colonies by their Deputies at the intended Congress; and will have no trade, commerce, or dealings whatsoever, with any Province, city, or town, in the British Colonies on this Continent, (if any such should be) or with any individual therein, who shall refuse to adopt the same, until the before mentioned Act of Parliament, and two Bills respecting the Province of Massachusetts Bay, depending in Parliament (if passed into Acts) are repealed. Signed by order,

"DAVID THOMPSON, Clerk."

"The Freeholders and other Inhabitants of Kent County, on Delaware, now assembled at the Court House in the Town of Dover, this 20th day of July, Anno Domini 1774, taking into their most serious consideration sundry Acts of the British Parliament, in which their power and right to impose duties and taxes on his Majesty's subjects in the British Colonies and Plantations in America, for the purpose of raising a revenue, are declared, attempted to be exercised, and in various ways enforced and carried into execution; more especially the Act depriving the great and lately flourishing town of Boston of all trade whatsoever, by shutting up their port and harbour with a formidable fleet and army:

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 1. That we do acknowledge, recognize, and most expressly declare, his Majesty King George the Third to be lawful and rightful King of Great Britain, and all other his Dominions and Countries; and that it is the indispensable duty of the people of this country, as being part of his Majesty's Dominions, always to bear faithful and true allegiance to his Majesty, and him to defend to the utmost of their power, against all attempts upon his person, Crown, or dignity.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 2. That the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, is unconstitutional, oppressive to the inhabitants of that town, dangerous to the liberties of the British Colonies, and that, therefore, we consider our brethren at Boston as suffering in the common cause of America.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 3. That a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies in North America is the most probable and proper mode of procuring relief for our suffering brethren, obtaining redress of American grievances, securing our rights and liberties, and re-establishing harmony between Great Britain and these Colonies on a constitutional foundation.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 4. That a respectable Committee be immediately appointed for the County of Kent, to correspond with the Committees of the sister Colonies, and the other counties in the Government, in order that all may unite in promoting and endeavouring to obtain the great and valuable end mentioned in the foregoing Resolution.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 5. That the Speaker of the Honourable House of Assembly be desired by the Committee now to be appointed, together with the Committees of the other counties of this Government, to write to the several Members of Assembly, requesting them to convene at New-Castle as soon as possible, to take into their most serious consideration our very alarming situation, and to appoint Deputies to attend at a general Congress for the Colonies at such time and place as shall be generally agreed on.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 6. That the Committee now to be appointed consist of thirteen persons, to wit: Charles Ridgely, William Killen, Cæsar Rodney, John Haslet, John Clarke, Thomas Collins, Esquires, Jacob Stout, Esquire, James Sykes, Esquire, James Wells, Thomas Rodney, Richard Basset, Esquire, Richard Lockwood, Esquire, and Zadock Crapper, Esquire, and that any seven of them may act.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 7. That the said Committee immediately set on foot a subscription for the relief of such poor inhabitants of the town of Boston as may be deprived of the means of sustenance by the Act of Parliament commonly called the Boston Port Bill; the money arising from such subscription to be laid out as the Committee shall think will best answer the ends proposed.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 8. That the inhabitants of this county do agree with their brethren of New-Castle County, in adopting and carrying into execution all and singular, such peaceable and constitutional measures as shall be agreed on by a majority of the Colonies by their Deputies at the intended Congress, and will have no trade, commerce, or dealings whatsoever, with that Province, city, or town, on this Continent, (if any such should be) or with any individual therein, who shall refuse to adopt the same, until the before mentioned Act of Parliament, and two Bills respecting the Province of Massachusetts Bay, depending in Parliament (if passed into Acts) are repealed.

"Resolved, nemine contradicente, 9. That this Committee embrace this publick opportunity to testify their gratitude and most cordial thanks to the patrons and friends of liberty in Great Britain, for their patriotick efforts to prevent the present calamity of America.

"Signed by order, MARK M'CALL, Clerk."

"At a General Meeting of the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Sussex, on Delaware, at the Court House in Lewestown, on Saturday, the 23d of July, 1774:

"This Assembly taking into their very serious consideration the present critical situation of American affairs; of the exclusive right of the Colonists of imposing taxes upon themselves; of the invasion of that right by the statute of sixth George the Third, chapter twelve, by which statute, and sundry others, the Parliament of Great Britain have assumed the power of making laws to bind the Colonies without their consent, either by themselves or by their Representatives; a recent instance of which is exhibited in a late statute commonly called the Boston Port Bill; Therefore, in order to collect the voice and sentiments of this Assembly, the following Articles were proposed, voted, and agreed to:

"1. That the inhabitants of this county do owe and will pay due allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third.

"2. That it is the inherent right of British subjects to be taxed by their own consent, or by Representatives chosen by themselves only; and that every Act of the British Parliament respecting the internal police of North America is unconstitutional, and an invasion of our just rights and privileges.

"3. That the late Act of Parliament, inflicting pains and penalties on the town of Boston, by blocking up their harbour, is a precedent justly alarming to the British Colonies in America, and entirely inconsistent with, and subversive of, their constitutional rights and liberties.

"4. That a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies in North America is the most probable and proper mode of obtaining a redress of American grievances, securing our rights and liberties, and re-establishing peace and harmony between Great Britain and these Colonies on a constitutional foundation.

"5. That the Inhabitants of this county will adopt and carry into execution all and singular such peaceable and constitutional measures as shall be agreed on by a majority of the Colonies by their Deputies at the intended Congress.

"6. That the Speaker of the honourable House of Assembly of this Government be desired to write to the several Members in this county, requesting them to convene at New-Castle on or before the 1st of August next, to appoint Deputies to attend at a general Congress for the Colonies, at such time and place as shall be generally agreed on.

"7. That it is our opinion that it would conduce to the restoration of the liberties of America should the Colonies enter into a joint agreement not to import any article of British manufactory, or carry on any branch of trade, unless under such restrictions as may be agreed upon by the Congress.

"8. That the Committee, hereinafter appointed, are hereby desired to receive the subscriptions of such charitable persons in this county who shall incline to contribute towards the distressed and suffering inhabitants of the town of Boston; and that the money raised by such subscriptions be disposed of by the said Committee for the use of the said inhabitants, whom we consider as suffering in the common cause of America.

"9. That the Committee now to be chosen consist of thirteen persons, to wit: Thomas Robinson, Levin Crapper, Boaz Manlove, Benjamin Burton, and John Wiltbank, Esquires, and Stephen Townsend, Gentleman, the Representatives of this county; and David Hall, Esquire, the Reverend Matthew Wilson, Jacob Moore, Esquire, Mr. John Clowes, Daniel Nunez, Esquire, John Rodney, Esquire, and Mr. William Peery, who, or any seven of them, being duly notified, are to meet and correspond with the other Provinces and counties of this Government, and to give instructions to our Deputies for the intended Congress when chosen, in order that all may unite in promoting and endeavouring to attain the great and valuable ends mentioned in the foregoing Resolutions."

Then the Convention adjourned till to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

August 2, A. M. - The Convention met according to adjournment,

And several Letters from the respective Committees of Correspondence of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, the Dominion of Virginia, the Colonies of Rhode Island, South Carolina, and Maryland, being read, and the Convention taking the same into consideration, together with the proceedings of the freemen of the counties aforesaid, unanimously entered into the following Resolution, to wit:

We the Representatives aforesaid, by virtue of the power delegated to us as aforesaid, taking into our most serious consideration the several Acts of the British Parliament for restraining manufactures in his Majesty's Plantations and Colonies in North America; for taking away the property of the Colonists without their participation or consent; for the introduction of the arbitrary powers of the excise into the Customs here; for the making all revenue causes triable without Jury, and under the decision of a single dependent Judge; for the trial in England of persons accused of capital crimes committed in the Colonies; for shutting up the port of Boston; for new modelling the Government of Massachusetts Bay; and the operation of the same on the property; liberty, and lives of the Colonists; and also considering that the most eligible mode of determining upon the premises, and of endeavouring to procure relief and redress of our grievances, would have been by us assembled in a legislative capacity; but as the House lind adjourned to the 30th day of September next, and it is not to be expected his Honour the Governour would call us by writs of summons on this occasion, having refused to do the like in his other Province of Pennsylvania, the next and most proper method of answering the expectations and desires of our constituents, and of contributing our aid to the general cause of America, is to appoint Commissioners or Deputies on behalf of the people of this Government, to meet and act with those appointed by the other Provinces in general Congress. And we do therefore unanimously nominate and appoint Cæsar Rodney, Thomas M'Kean, and George Read, Esquires, or any two of them, Deputies on the part and behalf of this Government in a general Continental Congress proposed to be held at the City of Philadelphia on the first Monday in September next, or at any other time and place that may be generally agreed on; then and there to consult and advise with the Deputies from the other Colonies, and to determine upon all such prudent and lawful measures as may be judged most expedient for the Colonies immediately and unitedly to adopt, in order to obtain relief for an oppressed people, and the redress of our general grievances.

Signed by order of the Convention,

CÆSAR RODNEY, Chairman.

At the Meeting of the Convention of the Representatives of the Freemen of the Government of the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, upon Delaware, on the 2d day of August, 1774, A. M., it was unanimously resolved to instruct the Deputies then appointed in behalf of the people of the said Government to attend the general Congress that they do endeavour to prevail with the Deputies of the other Colonies and Provinces at the general Congress, to adopt the following or similar Resolutions:

1. In the first place, that we most solemnly and sincerely promise and declare that we do and will bear faith and true allegiance to his most sacred Majesty King George the Third, our most gracious Sovereign and rightful liege Lord; that we will, upon true revolution principles, and to the utmost of our power, support and defend the Protestant succession as established in the illustrious House of Hanover; and it is our most earnest desire that the connection which subsists between Great Britain and her Colonies, whereby they are made one people, may continue to the latest period of time.

2. That the subjects of his Majesty in the British American Colonies have had and of right ought to have and enjoy all the liberties, privileges, and immunities of free and natural born subjects within any of his Majesty's Dominions, as full and amply as if they and every one of them were born within the Realm of England; that they have a property in their own estates, and are to be taxed by their own consent only, given in person or by their Representatives, and are not to be disseized of their liberties and free customs, sentenced or condemned, but by lawful judgment of their peers.

3. That the only lawful Representatives of the freemen in the several Colonies are persons they elect to serve as Members of the General Assembly thereof; and that it is the just right and privilege of the said freemen to be governed by laws made by their General Assembly in the article of taxation and internal police.

4. That all trials for treason, misprision of treason, or for any felony or crime whatsoever, committed and done in the said Colonies, ought of right to be had and conducted in his Majesty's Courts held within the same, according to the fixed and known course of proceeding; and that the seizing any person or persons suspected of any crime whatsoever, committed in them, and sending such person or persons to places beyond the seas to be tried, is highly derogatory of the rights of British subjects, as thereby the inestimable privilege of being tried by a Jury from the vicinage, as well as the liberty of summoning and producing witnesses on such trials, will be taken away from the party accused.

5. That all Acts and Proceedings of the British Parliament for prohibiting and restraining American manufactures; imposing taxes on the British Colonies; extending the powers of Custom-House Officers and Admiralty Courts here, beyond their ancient limits; and seizing and sending persons suspected of committing treason or misprision of treason in these Colonies to England for trial, are unwarrantable assumptions of power; unconstitutional, and destructive of British liberty.

6. That the successive Acts of Parliament made in the last session, for inflicting pains and penalties on the town of Boston, by shutting up their port and blocking, up their harbour; for altering the administration of justice in certain criminal cases within the Province of Massachusetts Bay; and for new modelling the Constitution of that Province# established by Royal Charter, are in the highest degree arbitrary in their principles, unparalleled in their rigour, oppressive in their operation, and subversive of every idea of justice and freedom.

7. That it is the indispensable duty of all the Colonies, not only to alleviate the unexampled distresses of our brethren of Massachusetts Bay, who are suffering in the common cause of America, but to assist them by all lawful means in removing their grievances, and for re-establishing their constitutional rights, as well as those of all America, on a solid and permanent foundation.

8. That it is our fixed, determined, and unalterable resolution, by all lawful ways and means in our power, to maintain, defend, and preserve our before mentioned rights and liberties, and that we will transmit them entire and inviolate to our posterity; and further, that we will adopt and faithfully carry into execution all and singular such peaceable and constitutional measures as have been agreed on by this Congress.

9. That we are unfeignedly thankful to those truly noble, honourable, and patriotick advocates in Great Britain, who have so generously and powerfully, though unsuccessfully, espoused and defended the cause of America, both in and out of Parliament; that we still feel the warmest affection for our brethren in the parent state; and that it is our opinion, as it is our hope, that the cool and dispassionate among our fellow-subjects in Great Britain will applaud our measures, and co-operate with us in every manly struggle for the preservation of those our rights, with which their own are so intimately connected.

And further, we do earnestly recommend it to our said Deputies to use their utmost endeavours to prevail with the Deputies from the other Colonies to frame decent and becoming petitions to his most gracious Majesty, and to both Houses of Parliament, for the redress of all our grievances, and to agree to a non-importation of goods from, and non-exportation to, Great Britain, until relief shall be obtained.

Notwithstanding any thing herein before mentioned, it is not our meaning that by these Instructions our said Deputies should be restrained from agreeing to any measures that shall be approved by the Congress.

Signed by the unanimous order of the Convention,

CÆSAR RODNEY, Chairman.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED AT NEW-YORK, FROM LONDON, DATED AUGUST 1, 1774.

Since my last I have procured the Act of Parliament mentioned there, which enacts, that "after July 1, 1774, "persons shipping tools or utensils used in the cotton, wool,

"and silk manufactories, in order to export the same, to forfeit all such tools, &c., and £200. Officers are authorized to seize all such tools, &c., on board the vessels, which may be publickly sold; one moiety to his Majesty, the other to the officer. Master of a ship permitting such tools or utensils to be exported, forfeits £200. If the ship belongs to his Majesty, the Captain forfeits £200 and his commission. Officers of the Customs allowing an entry outward of such prohibited utensils, to forfeit £200 and his office." Since the passing of this Act, I find there is no probability of passing an entry for any more wool cards, &c., for America.

Boston, August 1, 1774.

More than sixty days have expired since Boston, by a late edict of the British Parliament, has been besieged by a British fleet and army, and its trade annihilated. The inhabitants now receive that insult and damage, which was never experienced in the hottest wars we have been engaged in with France, Spain, and their allies, the savages of the American woods. The particulars of the siege, and the manoeuvres of our enemies, may in future be told by some able historian. Suffice it at present to inform the world, that though wood and provisions have been allowed by said Port Act, the introduction of these articles has been attended with such loss of time and unnecessary charges, as greatly to raise the price of fuel upon the poor inhabitants. No wood can now be brought from the rivers and bays included in our harbour, upon which we depended for a considerable part of our supply. No goods of any kind are suffered to be water borne within a circle of sixty miles. No timber, boards, shingles, bricks, lime, sand, &c., &c., are to be transported from one wharf to another; and so even the tradesmen, not immediately dependent upon shipping, are thrown out of business. No barrels of liquors, bread, flour, &c., are suffered to be brought a few rods in our row-boats, or across our shortest ferries; and even the vessels on the stocks, which have for some time past been ready for launching, cannot be put into the water without their being exposed to a threatened seizure. Neither is the dried table fish and oil, the charity of our Marblehead friends; nor rice, the generous presents of the Carolínians; nor even house-sand, to be brought us by water, but must be encumbered with the great charge of land carriage of about thirty miles. We are also cut off from the advantage and profit of supplying, as usual, an extent of sea coast on the North and South, of more than one hundred leagues, even with British merchandises. And when any of these hardships and distresses are mentioned to those insolents in office, the Commissioners and their understrappers, we are told it was the design of the Act, and it is not their intent to lessen these difficulties. This is the treatment meted out by a British Minister to a town and Province, by whose exertions in a late war the strong fortress of Louisburg was taken, which purchased the peace of Europe, and delivered Britons from their terrible apprehensions of an invasion by French flat-bottomed boats. What further cruelties we are to suffer, we know not; but whether America, or even this single town, is in this way to be brought to the feet of Lord North, with the full surrender of their inestimable rights and liberties, time only can determine.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR COLDEN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED NEW-YORK, AUGUST 2, 1774.

In my letter, No. 3, I submitted to your Lordship my opinion, that Government here cannot prevent the frequent meetings of the people, which have become common every where; and I am now convinced, that if Government had interfered, the most violent men would have gained great advantage, and would have prevented the acquiescence in the nomination of moderate men. which has now taken place, to meet at the general Congress of Deputies from all the Colonies, proposed to be held at Philadelphia next month.

The meeting of the Delegates, I am of opinion, cannot be prevented; if they pursue only such prudent measures as are calculated to remove the destructive dissensions which subsist between Great Britain and her Colonies, the meeting, though illegal, it may be hoped will produce some good.

Great pains have been taken in the several counties of this Province, to induce the people to enter into resolves, and to send Committees to join the City Committee; but they have only prevailed in Suffolk County, in the east end of Long Island, which was settled from Connecticut, and the inhabitants still retain great similarity of manners and sentiments.

From a view of the numerous resolves of the people in all the Colonies, which appear in every newspaper, your Lordship might be led to think a stupid fatal hardness intoxicated the whole. But there are every where many people who are seriously alarmed at the critical posture of the contention between Great Britain and her Colonies. They look forward with the deepest anxiety, and would rejoice in any prudent plan for restoring harmony and security. Could it be thought consistent with the wisdom of Parliament, to lay aside the right of raising money on the subjects in America, and in lieu thereof, that the several American Assemblies should grant and secure to the Crown a sufficient and permanent supply to pay all the officers and ordinary expenses of Government, they are of opinion this would be a ground-work upon which a happy reconciliation might be effected - the dependence of the Colonies on Great Britain secured - Government maintained, and this destructive contest amicably terminated. For this purpose, they hope an address to his Majesty will be formed at the general Congress.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN WILMINGTON, NORTH CAROLINA, TO HIS FRIEND IN BOSTON, DATED AUGUST 2, 1774.

As to publick matters I shall likewise please you, when I inform you that a patriotick spirit possesses every bosom, which all ranks of persons seem emulous to express, by actions as well as by words. Even those few from whom another conduct was expected, have surprised the world by a zeal for the service of their suffering brethren in Boston, and a liberality in contributing to their relief, which, till this occasion gave them an opportunity of displaying, scarce any body supposed them capable of. A subscription having been set on foot for the support of the Bostonians, (suffering nobly in the common cause of America,) a very few days, from a few individuals, produced as much as loaded the vessel by which this letter comes; and by this time, I have no doubt, enough is collected to load another. Nor is this all; for there is apparent in almost every individual a proper sense of the injury done to the Colonies, in the tendency of those oppressive Acts of Parliament, and a determined spirit of opposition and resentment worthy of a human bosom in the great cause of liberty.

A numerous and respectable meeting of the six counties in the District of Wilmington, has been had, and they have, without one dissenting voice, resolved upon pursuing every legal and rightful measure to aid and assist their sister Colony of the Massachusetts Bay to the utmost of their power; and have sent expresses to every county in the Province, strictly recommending a subscription in each of them for the same purpose. A general meeting of all the Members of the Assembly is to be held in a few days, at Johnson Court House, to elect Delegates to attend the general Congress at Philadelphia, the first Monday in September.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED AT BOSTON, FROM WILMINGTON, NORTH CAROLINA, DATED AUGUST 3, 1774.

No sooner was a subscription put about for the relief of our suffering brethren in Boston, than in a few days, I am told, two thousand pounds, our currency, was raised; and it is expected something very considerable will be contributed at Newbern and Edenton, for the same noble purpose, as subscriptions are set on foot in every county in the Province. You will receive this by Mr. Parker Quince, who generously made an offer of his vessel to carry a load of provisions to Boston, freight free; and what redounds to the honour of the tars, the master and mariners navigate her without receiving one farthing wages. It is supposed Lord North will hang himself in his rope of sand.

SOUTH CAROLINA ASSEMBLY.

The Commons House of Assembly met agreeably to the Lieutenant Governour's prorogation, on Tuesday, the 2d day of August, 1774, at eight o'clock in the morning; and Messrs. Heyward and Cattell were ordered to "wait on the Lieutenant Governour, and acquaint his Honour that the House had met." The said gentlemen being returned, Mr. Heyward reported to the House, that Mr. Cattell and himself had waited on the Lieutenant Governour with the Message they had in charge; and that his Honour was pleased to say he would be in the Council Chamber immediately, when he would send a Message to this House.

Colonel Powell, Chairman of the late general meeting, acquainted the House, "That, during the recess of this House, namely, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of July last, at a general meeting of the inhabitants of this Colony, they having under consideration the Acts of Parliament lately passed with regard to the port of Boston and Colony of Massachusetts Bay, as well as other American grievances, had nominated and appointed the Honourable Henry Middleton, John Rutledge, Thomas Lynch, Christopher Gadsden, and Edward Rutledge, Esquires, Deputies on the part and behalf of this Colony, to meet the Deputies of the other Colonies of North America in general Congress, the first Monday in September next, at Philadelphia, or at any other time or place that may be generally agreed on; there to consider the Acts lately passed, and Bills depending in Parliament, with regard to the port of Boston. and Colony of Massachusetts Bay; which Acts and Bills, in the precedent and consequences, affect the whole Continent of America; also, the grievances under which America labours, by reason of the several Acts of Parliament that impose taxes or duties for raising a revenue, and lay unnecessary restraints and burthens on trade; and of the Statutes, Parliamentary Acts, and Royal Instructions, which make an invidious distinction between his Majesty's subjects in Great Britain and America; with full power and authority to consent, agree to, and effectually prosecute, such legal measures as, in the opinion of the said Deputies, and of the Deputies so to be assembled, shall be most likely to obtain a repeal of the said Acts, and a redress of those grievances."

And thereupon moved, that this House do resolve to recognize, ratify, and confirm the said appointment of the Deputies, for the purposes aforesaid; and, that this House do also resolve to provide a sum, not exceeding one thousand five hundred pounds sterling, to defray the expense which the said Deputies will be at on the said service.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That this House do recognise, ratify, and confirm, the appointment of the said Deputies, for the purposes mentioned in the said motion.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That this House will make provision to pay to any person or persons who will advance to the said Henry Middleton, John Rutledge, Thomas Lynch, Christopher Gadsden, and Edward Rutledge, Esquires, the sum of one thousand five hundred pounds sterling, (for the purposes aforesaid,) together with full interest from the day the said one thousand five hundred pounds sterling shall be advanced, until it be repaid to the person or persons advancing the same.

The House also sent the following Message to the Lieutenant Governour, by Mr. Bee and Captain Scott:

"May it please your Honour:

"This House, considering the precarious situation of this Colony in regard to Indian affairs, and the necessity there may be for the inhabitants of the back parts to arm themselves for their protection and defence against that cruel people, in case of a rupture with them; and being informed that many of the poor settlers are unprovided with arms and ammunition, do desire your Honour will be pleased to order a proper quantity of arms and ammunition to be distributed to such persons as may be thought to stand most in need of such assistance; such arms and ammunition to be purchased by the Commissary General; and that this House will make provision to pay the expense of the same.

"By order of the House,

"RAWLINS LOWNDES, Speaker."

At half past eight o'clock a Message was received from Lieutenant Governour William Bull, by the Master in Chancery, notifying that the Lieutenant Governour was in the Council Chamber, where he required the immediate attendance of the House.

And accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went to attend the Lieutenant Governour in the Council Chamber, where his Honour was pleased to prorogue the General Assembly to Tuesday, the 6th day of September next.

Charlestown, South Carolina, August 3, 1774.

The General Assembly of this Province having been prorogued, to Tuesday last, the 2d instant, the Members of the Honourable the Commons House assembled on account of the excessive heat of the weather at this season so early as eight o'clock in the morning, when they recognised and agreed to the several resolutions unanimously entered into by the inhabitants of this Colony, at the general meeting held at the Exchange, in this town, on the 6th, 7th, and 8th days of July last, and voted the sum of £1500 sterling, for defraying the expenses of the five Delegates chosen at the said general meeting, on the part and behalf of this Colony, to join the Delegates of the other Colonies on this Continent in general Congress. The House had also prepared a message to his Honour the Lieutenant Governour, desiring in case of any alarm on the frontiers, from the Indians, that he would order the inhabitants there to be supplied with arms and ammunition, and that the House would defray the expense thereof; but before the said message could be engrossed, (at half past eight) the Lieutenant Governour was pleased to command their attendance in the Council Chamber, and addressing himself to the Council (which then consisted of only the Honourable Mr. Eroing, who had been sworn in and taken his seat the Thursday preceding) and to the Speaker and Commons House, prorogued the General Assembly to Tuesday, the 6th day of September next.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR BULL TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED CHARLESTOWN, AUGUST 3, 1774.

It having been expected that I should prorogue the General Assembly yesterday, at the usual time, about ten or eleven o'clock; the Assembly privately and punctually met at eight o'clock in the morning, and made an House, which was very uncommon. They had not been assembled five minutes before I was apprized of it. I immediately went to the Council Chamber, in order to prorogue them, and waited a few minutes for one or two of the Council to be present. As soon as I sent for the Assembly they attended, and I prorogued them to the 6th of September. But their business having been ready prepared, in which they were all previously agreed, it required only a few minutes to pass through the forms of the House. They came to two resolutions, one approving and confirming the election of the five persons, chosen on the 6th of last month, to assist at the Congress of the several Provinces, and the other, that they would provide for the expense of their voyage. I returned to my own house again in less than twenty minutes past eight. Your Lordship will see by this instance with what perseverance, secrecy and unanimity, they form and conduct their designs; how obedient the body is to the heads, and how faithful in their secrets.

EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO LIEUTENANT GOV. COLDEN.

Whitehall, August 3, 1774.

SIR: I send you enclosed an Order of his Majesty in Council, on the 6th of last month, disallowing an Act passed in New-York, in February 1773, which you will not fail to make publick in the manner usual upon such occasions; and that you may know the reasons which induce the disallowance of the said Act, I enclose for your private information, a copy of the Representation of the Board of Trade thereupon. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Lieutenant Governour Colden.

REPRESENTATION OF THE BOARD OF TRADE.

To the King's most Excellent Majesty:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY: We have had under our consideration two Acts passed in your Majesty's Province of New-York, in February 1773, entitled, "An Act to continue and amend an Act entitled 'An Act for the more effectual Punishment of persons who shall be guilty of any of the trespasses thereto mentioned,' in the cities of New-York and Albany, and township of Schenectady;" and "An Act for Naturalizing the several persons therein named."

We have likewise referred these Acts to Richard Jackson, Esq., one of your Majesty's Council at law, for his opinion thereupon, who has reported to us in the case of the former of these laws, that he conceives it to be improper, in that it provides for a purgation by oath in a criminal matter, which is at once contrary to the genius of the laws of this country, and cannot but prove too frequently an irresistible temptation to perjury.

This objection, which Mr. Jackson has stated to the Act in question, appears to us to have such weight, and the consequences to which a regulation of this sort would most probably lead, ought with such caution to be avoided, that although the Act is for the continuance of an useful law, yet we think it our duty humbly to recommend to your Majesty to signify your royal disallowance of this Act.

The second Act is for the naturalization of sundry persons therein named.

The practice of naturalizing aliens by Acts of Assembly in your Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in North America and the West Indies having been specially prohibited by an additional instruction from your Majesty, forbidding your Majesty's Governours to give assent to any Bill or Bills for such purpose, this Act falls under the same description with others; which by your Majesty's Order in Council, have been disallowed, and which by the instruction above mentioned, in future are prohibited; but as it was passed previous to your Majesty's said instruction, and has already had its effect, we must submit to your Majesty, whether under these circumstances it will be necessary for your Majesty to signify your royal disallowance of this Act. All which is most humbly submitted.

DARTMOUTH,	BAMBER GASCOYNE,
SOAME JENYNS,	ROBERT SPENCER,

ORDER IN COUNCIL.

At the Court at St. James's the 6th day of July, 1774, Present: The King's Most Excellent Majesty, Duke of Queensberry, Lord Chamberlain, Earl of Suffolk, Earl of Hillsborough, Viscount Falmouth, Lord Hyde, Sir Jeffery Amherst:

Whereas, by commission under the great seal of Great Britain the Governour, Council, and Assembly of his Majesty's Colony of New-York are authorized and empowered to make, constitute, and ordain Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, for the public peace, welfare, and good government of the said Colony; which Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, are to be as near as conveniently may be agreeable to the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom, and are to be transmitted for his Majesty's Royal approbation or disallowance; and whereas, in pursuance of the said powers, an Act was passed in February 1773, and transmitted, entitled as follows, viz:

"An Act to continue and amend an Act, entitled, 'An Act for the more effectual Punishment of persons who shall be guilty of any of the trespasses therein mentioned,' in the cities of New-York and Albany, and township of Schenectady."

Which Act, together with a Representation from the Lords Commissioners for Trade and Plantations thereupon, having been referred to the consideration of a Committee of the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, the said Lords of the Committee did this day report as their opinion that the said Act ought to be disallowed. His Majesty taking the same into consideration, was pleased with the advice of his Privy Council to declare his disallowance of the said Act; and pursuant to his Majesty's royal pleasure thereupon expressed, the said Act is hereby disallowed, declared void, and of none effect, whereof the Governour or Commander-in-chief, of his Majesty's said Colony of New-York for the time being, and all others whom it may concern, are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

W. BLAIR.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Thursday, 4th August, 1774, Present: The Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governour, Benjamin Chew, James Tilghman, Andrew Allen, Esquires.

The Governour laid before the Board two Letters which he received within these three days from Captain St. Clair, at Ligonier, dated the 22d and 26th July, with sundry papers enclosed relative to Indian and other affairs in Westmoreland, And the same being read and considered, the Council advised the Governour to order a town to be immediately laid out in the Proprietary Manor at Kittanning, for the accommodation of the traders and other inhabitants of Pittsburgh, whom, by Captain St. Clair's advices would be under the necessity of removing from that town on account of the oppressive proceedings of the Virginians.

It appearing also by the intelligence contained in the above mentioned letters that though the disposition of the Shawanese and Delaware tribes of Indians towards the people of this Province, were entirely pacifick, the former tribe had separated themselves from the latter, and were removed to the Lower Shawanese Towns, on the Scioto, in order to prepare themselves for war against the people of Virginio, who seemed determined to pursue hostile measures with those Indians. It was the opinion of the Council that it would be proper for this Government immediately to despatch Messages to both those tribes, expressing our great concern at the late disturbances and the friendly disposition of this Government towards them, and earnestly advising the Shawanese to a reconciliation with the Virginians; and that a Letter be also wrote to the Earl of Dunmore, recommending to him to accommodate the unhappy differences between the Colony of Virginia and the Indians.

Mr. Tilghman and Mr. Allen were appointed a Committee to prepare draughts of the above Letter and Messages.

Memorandum, August 6, 1774.

The Governour this day despatched, by the express from Ligonier, a Letter to Captain St. Clair, and enclosed therein two separate Messages, to the Shawanese and Delawares, on the Ohio, which had been prepared by the Committee of Council appointed to draught them, which Letter and Messages follow in these words, viz:

LETTER FROM THE GOVERNOUR TO CAPTAIN ST. CLAIR.

Philadelphia, August 6, 1774.

SIR: I have received your letters of the 22d and 26th ultimo, enclosing several depositions and letters relative to the present situation of affairs in Westmoreland.

As I find by all the intelligence you have from time to time communicated to me, that the Shawanese as well as Delawares have discovered a strong aversion to entering into a war with Virginia or this Province, and on the contrary have given repeated proofs of their sincere disposition to live in peace and harmony with both Colonies, I have, with the advice of my Council, thought it expedient to send messages to those tribes, expressing the great concern of this Government at the late unfortunate disturbances between them and some of his Majesty's subjects belonging to the Colony of Virginia; at the same time declaring our resolution to preserve the treaties of peace and friendship subsisting between us inviolate, and earnestly advising the Shawanese not to strike the people of Virginia, as they, as well as the people of this Province, are all subjects of one and the same great King, who will be as much offended at an injury committed against any one part of his subjects as another, but to exert their best endeavours to settle the differences that have arisen between the Vir- ginians and them, and to continue to live in friendship with all his Majesty's subjects.

As to the proposal of engaging the service of the Delawares to protect our frontiers, I would only just observe that it is a matter in the present situation of Indian affairs too delicate for me to intermeddle with.

Since my last letter to you I have considered of what you mentioned in a former letter, and now repeat respecting the establishment of some place of security for carrying on the Indian trade, as you say that Pittsburgh will certainly be abandoned by all our people; and I am now to acquaint you that I approve of the measure of laying out a town in the Proprietary Manor at Kittaning to accommodate the traders and the other inhabitants who may choose to reside there; and therefore enclose you an order for that purpose. But I cannot, without the concurrence of the Assembly, give any directions for erecting a stockade, or any other work, for the security of the place, which may incur an expense to the Province.

With respect to the continuance of the two hundred rangers in the service, it must altogether depend upon the intelligence we receive of the situation of our affairs with the Indians. At present I think it very improper to discharge them; and it is not improbable that if the commotions between the Virginians and Indians should not soon be at an end, it may be necessary to keep them on foot for the protection of our people till the meeting of the Assembly on the 19th of September.

I herewith send to your care the messages above mentioned, with a belt of wampum accompanying each, and desire you will engage some trusty intelligent person to carry them and interpret the messages to the Indians. A young man of the name of Elliott, who has been trading at the Shawanese Towns and lately came from thence, has offered his services to carry any messages from Government to the Indians, and may probably be a very proper person to employ on this occasion. He was to leave this place yesterday on his return to Westmoreland. I should be glad to have his deposition taken as to what he knows respecting the late disturbances between the Virginians and the Indians, from the beginning of them.

You hint something in your last letter about making presents to the Indians, but, though such a step at some future convenient time might be very useful and proper, I am of opinion it would be very unadvisable under the present circumstances.

I am, with great regard, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

JOHN PENN.

To Arthur St. Clair, Esq., Ligonier.

By the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA and Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE.

A Message to the Chiefs and Warriors of the SHAWANESE INDIANS,

Brethren, when I heard that you had taken care of our traders, and had sent some of your young men to conduct them home in safety, it made my heart glad, because I was satisfied that you kept fast hold of the chain of friendship which was made between our forefathers, and renewed by us, and you may be assured that I shall always remember this instance of your kindness, and that I shall hold fast that end of the chain which is in my hands so long as you hold yours. But, brethren, it gives me great concern, and my heart is grieved, to hear of the difference between you and our brothers, the people of Virginia. If any of the wicked people of Virginia have murdered any of your people, you should complain of it to the Governour, and he will have them punished. You should not in such cases take revenge upon innocent people who have never hurt you. It is a very wicked thing to kill innocent people because some of their countrymen have been wicked and killed some of you.

Brethren, if you continue to act in this manner, the people of Virginia must do the same thing by you, and then there will be nothing but war between you. Consider, brethren, that the people of Virginia are like the leaves upon the trees, very numerous, and you are but few, and although you should kill ten of their people for one that they kill of yours, they will at last wear you out and destroy you. They are able to send a great army in your country and destroy your towns and your corn, and either kill your wives and children or drive them away. Besides, brethren, the Virginians, as well as our people and you, are the children of the great King who lives beyond the great water, and if his children fall out, and go to war among themselves, and some of them are wicked and will not make peace with the others, he will be very angry and punish those who are in fault. Therefore, brethren, let me advise you to forget and forgive what is past, and to send to the Governour of Virginia and offer to make peace. I shall write to the Governour of Virginia and endeavour to persuade him to join with you in mending the chain of friendship between you which has been broken, and to make it so strong that it may never be broke again. And I hope, brethren, if he be willing to do this good thing, that you will be of the same mind, and then we shall all live together like friends and brothers. (A Belt.)

Given under my hand and the lesser seal of the said Province, at Philadelphia, the sixth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four.

JOHN PENN.

By the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA and Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE.

A Message to the Chiefs and Warriors of the DELAWARE INDIANS.

Brethren, I was grieved at my heart when I heard that some of our foolish young men had killed our brother, Joseph Weepy, and that the Virginians had killed some of your people below Fort Pitt. I was fearful that you would suffer your young men to take revenge upon our innocent people. But when I heard that you had a good heart, and viewed these things in their proper light, and that you remembered the chain of friendship made by our forefathers, and would not take revenge upon us for what the Virginians or some of our foolish young men had done, it gave me the greatest satisfaction, and made my mind easy.

Brethren, you may depend that so long as you are inclined to peace and friendship you shall find me in the same mind; for why should we fall out and go to murdering one another for what our foolish young people do, and what neither of us approve of? In such cases let us endeavour to find out such foolish young men and punish them for their wickedness. I have offered a reward of fifty pounds a piece for those two wicked people who, it is said, murdered Joseph Weepy, and if they can be taken I shall do every thing in my power to have them punished.

I am very sorry to hear that your grandchildren, the Shawanese, have a difference with our brothers, the Virginians, and I wish I could make them friends. I shall write to the Governour of Virginia, and recommend it to him to endeavour to make peace with them; and I would advise you to go to the Shawanese to persuade them to forget every thing that is past, and make up all their differences with the people of Virginia, so that we may all live together in peace and quietness, like friends and brothers, for what can they get by being at war with one another. Whoever of them gets the best both will be very much hurt.

Brethren, I live a great way from you, and have a great deal of business to do with my people at home, otherwise I would go to see you, and shake hands with you, and smoke a pipe with you under the tree of peace, as we and our forefathers used to do. By all means, brethren, be strong, and keep fast hold of one end of the Covenant chain, and you may be assured I will keep fast hold of the other, and when any of our people are so wicked as to kill any of yours, or do you any harm, let me know it, and I will do every thing in my power to have justice done. (A Belt.)

Given under my hand and the lesser seal of the said Province, at Philadelphia, the sixth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four.

JOHN PENN.

CORRESPONDENCE LAID BEFORE THE COUNCIL.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN,

Ligouier, July 22, 1774.

SIR: For some days by past, we had a flying report that some people were killed upon Dunkard Creek, on the 15th instant, but that a story of that kind should come so slowly through a country exceedingly on the alarm, induced me to give no credit to it, and to endeavour to prevent its gaining credit in the country. I considered it as raised on purpose to prevent the execution of Conolly's orders to Cresap, not to annoy the Indians, which I knew had been given, but it was put beyond a doubt yesterday by letters from Mr. Mounby, Mr. Mackay, and the enclosed deposition.

Mr. Mackay writes me the friends of Pennsylvania are determined to abandon Pittsburgh, and to erect a small stockade somewhere lower down the road, (I suppose about Turtle Creek, where he has a fine plantation,) to secure their cattle and effects till they see further what is to be done.

I had a letter from Conolly yesterday in a style of familiarity I should not have expected, but in itself a very extraordinary one. If you should think it worth while to look over it I have enclosed it, and a copy of my answer.

I am still sanguine enough to hope this Province will escape the mischief of a war, as all the operations of the Indians are evidently aimed at the Virginians, and seem designed to show them how much they despised the notion of their carrying the war into their own country. They have, however, a number of men at Wheeling, and Conolly was to march this day to reinforce them. One of his parties who had crossed to the Indian side fell in with the last of our trader's peltry, escorted by some Delawares; they took the trader and the Indians prisoners, and carried them to the mouth of Beaver Creek, where their Captain (Hogeland) lay. He was excessively enraged to see them alive, and they were kept all night in that state of suspense, that every moment would be their last; in the morning, however, they discharged them on the trader's giving a bond of five hundred pounds to satisfy Captain Conolly that the Indians were Delawares. I took the trader's deposition of it when last at Pittsburgh, which I also enclose. I was very ill of a bilious fever when I wrote last, but am happily recovering. I cannot well recollect what I wrote as it was not copied, it being Sunday, and my clerk abroad; but unless matters are likely to be soon settled about Pittsburgh, it will be absolutely necessary to erect a town at Kittaning, the trade must else take its course by the Lakes, which will carry it quite away from this Province; and the communication with Philadelphia will in time become very easy that way, and may now be done with very little land carriage. There is an old trading path from thence to Frankstown, on the Juniata, and another to the head of the West Branch of Susquehanna. I have distributed the arms all over the country in as equal proportions as possible.

I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

P. S. Captain Crawford, the President of our Court, seems to be the most active Virginia officer in their service. He is now down the river at the head of a number of men, which is his second expedition. I don't know how gentlemen account for these things to themselves.

DEPOSITION OF WILLIAM WILSON.

Personally appeared before me, Arthur St. Clair, one of his Majesty's Justices for Westmoreland County, William Wilson, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposeth and saith, that on the 5th instant the said Wilson was bringing up a quantity of skins to this place, and having some Delaware Indians in company with him, he was met, about four miles beyond Big Beaver Creek, by about twenty men, commanded by Sergeant Steel, who desired to know whether there were any Shawanese in company or not, or if he had not a Shawanese woman with him; to which the said Wilson replied in the negative. Sergeant Steel here said that his orders were to take both white men and Indians, horses and skins, and take all to the mouth of Little Beaver Creek, where the party lay; which the said Wilson objected to, alleging that it was too hard treatment to have his horses and loads taken that way. But Captain Flenegan then appearing, seemed to agree that horses and loads, and the Indians also, might pass on, so that the said Wilson would himself go along with him where the party lay; to which a man, who had the appearance of a Sergeant, most obstinately objected, and said that it was Captain Hogeland's orders not to let any Indians pass, upon which Captain Flenegan agreed to take three of the Indians prisoners and said Wilson to where the party lay, and to let Killbuck and his little son pass on with the horses; said Wilson going along with the party until they came to the mouth of Little Beaver Creek, where the main body lay; although Flenegan said that it was Captain Hogeland's orders that no Indian of any Nation should be spared, and that if any white men should presume to interpose in their behalf they also should share the same fate. On their arrival there they were accosted by Captain Hogeland, who asked what was the reason his orders were disobeyed, and why they did not do as he had desired them to do. Upon which Flenegan replied and told him that the white man now along with them told him they were Delawares. Upon which Hogeland told him that the white man was a liar, and that he should have done as he had desired him, and that if he had been there himself he should not have spared any. After some time they were confined until next morning, and, upon said Wilson giving them his bond for five hundred pounds in security that he would satisfy Captain Conolly that these three men now along with him were Delawares, to which the said Wilson agreed, they were all dismissed.

Sworn at Pittsburgh, in the county aforesaid, before me,
July 13, 1774, AR. ST. CLAIR.

JOHN CONOLLY TO ARTHUR ST. CLAIR,

Fort Dunmore, July 19, 1774.

DEAR SIR : A report which has too generally prevailed in this quarter, of the pacifick disposition of the Indians has unluckily thrown the inhabitants into supineness and neglect, the effects of which have been dismally experienced on the 13th instant, upon Dunkard Creek, where six unfortunate people were murdered by a party of thirty-five Indians. I have also received a letter from Colonel Lewis, acquainting me that the Shawanese had attacked a body of men near his house, and had killed one and wounded another. Whatever may be said of the cause urging the Indians to these steps it will be little to the advantage of the suffering people. Some immediate steps most undoubtedly ought to be pursued to check their insolent impetuosity, or the country in general will be sacrificed to their revenge. The people of the frontiers want nothing but the countenance of Government to execute every desirable purpose, and your Province appearing backward at this critical juncture, will most undoubtedly be highly displeasing to all the Western settlers. I am determined no longer to be a dupe to their amicable professions, but, on the contrary, shall pursue every measure to offend them. Whether I may have the friendly assistance or not of the neighbouring country will, I expect, depend much on your just representation of matters.

I am, dear sir, your most obedient,

JOHN CONOLLY.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO JOHN CONOLLY.

Ligonier, July 29, 1774.

SIR: I received your favour of the 19th, yesterday, by Doctor McKenzie, and am extremely sorry for the misfortunes that have happened upon Dunkard Creek.

It is very true the assigning this or that cause for the inroads the Indians are frequently making, will be of no manner of advantage to the sufferers; but I think the security into which the people had fallen, arose not so much from an idea of the pacifick disposition of the Indians, as that the great armed force sent down the river would effectually cover them. In that expectation they were certainly wrong - it was an effect which could never follow from such a cause. I agree with you something ought to be done to prevent the depredations they may still make upon the inhabitants; that is, ample reparation ought to be made them for the injuries they have already sustained, and an honest, open intercourse established with them for the future. This I imagine would be found a more cheap, easy, and expeditious manner of re-establishing the peace of this country than any offensive measures whatsoever, for be assured the rest of the Nations will not set tamely by and see a people, who have long been aiming at taking the lead amongst themselves, cut off, or even much distressed by the English.

The Councils of this Province will, I hope, continue to be founded in justice, whether that may be displeasing to the Western settlers or not; but you are certainly wrong to imagine my representations have any influence in the matter. I shall however, represent matters as they occur to those in Government, in the light they appear to me, as I have done hitherto, and have uniformly declared that I saw not the least probability of war, unless the Virginians forced it on. The different manoeuvres up and down and across the river, have now probably brought that event about, and who may see the end, God only knows.

I am, sir, your humble servant,
 Captain Conolly.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, July 26, 1774.

SIR: I have enclosed a letter I received last night from Mr. Mackay of Pittsburgh, together with the speeches and intelligence brought by White Eyes, and a deposition respecting some Indians having been seen in the country. I thought them of consequence to be quickly communicated to you, and have forwarded them by express, as it was quite uncertain when a private opportunity might offer. All prospect of accommodation with the Shawanese and Virginians is certainly over for some time; but yet, it does not appear they have any hostile intentions against this Province. The engaging the service of the Delawares to protect our frontiers, would undoubtedly be good policy if it did not cost too dear. I am afraid however, they will be very craving, but as they have offered it, it should not be altogether overlooked, at the same time their friendship should be secured on as easy terms as possible.

I doubt, with the utmost prudence that can be exerted, but these Indian disturbances will occasion a very heavy expense to this Province. The necessity of establishing some place of security for the trade, (if it is considered as advisable to carry it on at all) is increasing daily. A small parcel of goods which Mr. Spear has sent to one of the Delaware Towns, has enraged the Commandant at Pittsburgh to an exceeding degree, and he threatens "the persons who carried them shall be tried for their lives on their return." I mentioned the Kittaning; it is certainly a proper place, both on account of some natural advantages of situation with regard to the interior part of the country, and that its being in one of your manors, the settlers would have an opportunity of procuring lots on easy terms, at the same time it would not be foreign to your interest. I find, however, they, the traders at Pittsburgh, would wish to fix upon some place nearer that town, for which I can see no reason, unless they imagine the property they leave behind them will be more under their eye, or which, I think more probable, Mr. Croghan directs them to some spot where he has a right, and which may serve his interest; for though I believe he is zealous in the service of the publick at present, he will never lose sight of his own particular interest. If they do remove, I will endeavour to persuade them to the Kittaning at once; but if they are unwilling your ordering a town to be laid out there, and a small stockade to be built, will effectually determine them before they have gone far in another settlement.

Captain White Eyes and John Montaur are preparing a party to join the Virginia militia if they cross the river to attack the Lower Shawanese; and I have been solicited to order some of the rangers to join them. This I have positively refused, and have sent orders to the person intended, on no account whatever to attempt to pass either of the rivers. So far from joining the Virginians, who have taken such pains to involve the country in war, it would, in my idea, be not improper that the Shawanese should know this Government is at peace with them, and will continue so. provided they do not infringe it themselves, and that a boundary be given them; the doing mischief on the east side of which, would be considered as a declaration of war and bring all the weight of this Government upon them.

We begin to be impatient with respect to the rangers; their second month is just expiring; but whilst the country is in such commotion, and the harvest not yet got in, they cannot be dismissed. I have not the least fears about the expense, and the Associators may safely depend on the generosity of the Government, more especially as they have such assurances from your Honour of your approbation of the measure, and your assistance towards relieving them from the expense.

I am, sir, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,
 AR. ST. CLAIR.

P. S. If you should think proper to allow some presents to be made the Indians, I would be very glad the sum were specified. I am very little acquainted with Indian affairs, and I do not trust Mr. Croghan too much; he has been used to make expenses, and would not be very sparing when he thought he had the purse of a Province to make free with, and too great parsimony might spoil all. I have agreed with the express for six shillings a day.

Mr. Croghan says he expects some of the Six Nations to join White Eyes's party.

DEPOSITION OF DAVID GRIFFEY.

Westmoreland County, to wit:

The examination of David Griffey, of Struby's Foot, in the county aforesaid, taken on oath before me, Andrew McFarlane, Esquire, one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said county, this 24th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1774, who deposes and saith, that on Saturday, the 23d day of this present month, between the hours of eleven and two of the same day, at a place called the Dividing Ridge, between Brush Creek and Seweekly, about four miles southwest of Hanna's Town, about the distance of one hundred and fifty yards, I saw five Indians with their guns over their shoulders, quite naked all but their breechclouts, marching towards Hanna's Town, and further saith not.

INDIAN MESSAGES AND INTELLIGENCE ENCLOSED IN ARTHUR ST. CLAIR'S LETTER OF JULY 26, 1774.

Pittsburgh, July 23, 1774.

We are glad to hear from you the good speeches which you have now spoke to us, and it also gave us great pleasure to hear from our brethren of Pennsylvania, when they reminded us of that ancient friendship made by our wise forefathers, which they have at this time handed to us, desiring us to take fast hold of it.

Brethren, Sir William Johnson, with our uncles, the Five Nations, the Wyandots, and all the several tribes of Cherokees, and Southern Indians, have spoke to us of peace and friendship; and you, our brethren of Virginia, have likewise desired us to be strong in holding fast the chain of friendship; and we now tell you that we strictly observe to do it. And now, brethren, I inform you that we will sit still here at our towns Kakelellamapeking, Gnadenhutten, and Tupickcong upon the Muskingum, to hold fast that chain of friendship between you and us.

Brethren, you desired us that the road between us and you might be kept clear and open, that the traders might pass and repass safe, which we also have done, and we wish that it may continue further. We desire therefore, that you will not suffer your foolish young people to lie on the road to watch and frighten our people, by pointing their guns at them when they come to trade with you; for some of our people have been so scared that they came home and alarmed our towns, as if the white people would kill all the Indians, whether they were friends or enemies. (A string of white wampum.)

Brethren of Virginia, we now see you and the Shawanese in grips with each other ready to strike, and we do not know what to say between you further; you will be the best judges yourselves of what is to follow, as we can do no more to reconcile you. But in the straggle between you when you have thrown down the Shawanese, brethren, we desire you to look no further, nor set down there, but return to the Kenhawa or South side of the Ohio, the place that you there rise from; and when you have so concluded this dispute, brethren, we will expect to hear from you, that we may acquaint all other Nations of it, whom we assure you will not put their hands to it, but hope that you will be strong brethren, and renew the ancient friendship with all other Nations, when you have ended your dispute with these people. (A string of black wampum.)

Intelligence received from Captain White Eyes:

On my return to Newcomer's Town with the speeches you charged me with, I found that several parties of Shawanese had set out to war against you, contrary to their promise before to the Chiefs of the Delawares, who desired me to return and inform you of it, as it would be to no purpose to treat further with them upon friendly terms, but that they should be informed of your speeches; they came forwarded by two of your people.

Brethren, we have now to acquaint you that the Shawanese are all gone from Wagetomica to assemble themselves at the Lower Towns; if there was one yet remaining we would tell you. But as this is not the case, and some of our people may be yet on their way up from amongst them, we would have you consider and cross to them from the mouth of the Big Kenhawa, as our women and children may now be frightened when you come near them, and the Shawanese are all gone.

Brethren, one of the Shawanese that has headed a party against you, has sent us word that he was going to strike you, and when he had done it, he would then blaze a road from the place he would do the mischief to Newcomer's Town, by which he would see whether the peace was so strong between the whites and the Delawares as they pretended. Keesmateta has likewise sent us word that he now saw his grandfathers the Delawares had thrown them away, for which reason they were now rising to go away, though, he said, he was sure no other Nation had done it, and that it had been an ancient custom with their Nation, that when they left any place in the manner they were doing, whoever remained behind them, they always turned about and struck them.

Brethren, the day we got into Newcomer's Town a party was discovered, whose intentions were to come to Fort Pitt to put Colonel Croghan and Alexander McKee, with Guyasutha to death, and also waylay us, which we passed; as by killing us, they say, no more news will be carried between the white people and the Indians. I could inform you of a great deal more, but these are the most material occurrences and facts which you may depend upon.

My brother is lately come from the Wabash Indians, who told him they would expect to hear the truths of the accounts from that quarter, on his return; and I have sent a message by him to them, desiring them not to listen to the Shawanese, who would only endeavour to draw them into troubles and leave them by themselves, which had been their constant practice.

Mr. Croghan addressed Captain White Eyes as his particular friend:

Brother, I now speak to you as a friend to both parties, your Nation and the English, and not by any particular authority, and I am convinced from the speeches you have now delivered, that your Nation has the sincerest intentions of preserving entire that friendship subsisting between you and us; and I observe from your intelligence that the Shawanese are withdrawn from one of their towns in your neighbourhood, which is an evident proof that they do not mean to be friends with you or us; therefore, brothers, I would have you consider well whether you would not in the present circumstance think it prudent for some of your people to accompany ours when they go to chastise the Shawanese, in order to enable them to make a proper distinction between our friends and our enemies.

Captain White Eyes's Answer to Colonel Croghan:

I am glad to hear you, and I will consider what you have said, but cannot immediately return you an answer. I will send your Message to our Chiefs at Kaskaskia, and as soon as I have their sentiments and advice will speak to you, which I expect in two days, in the mean time you may be assured that their sentiments will not deviate from that strict friendship subsisting between us.

ÆNEAS MACKAY TO ARTHUR ST. CLAIR.

Pittsburgh, July 25, 1774.

DEAR SIR: The last accounts brought in here from the Indian country by Captain White Eyes I have transmitted to you yesterday by express. I have there informed you that you should be furnished with White Eyes's speech as soon as it could be procured from Captain McKee, from whom we have since obtained a copy, which will be delivered to you by Richard Butler, who is kind enough to go to Ligonier at the request of Messrs. Spear, Smith, and myself, as well with these papers, as consult you about other matters that we are all equally interested in. You know Mr. Butler to be both a man of sense and a faithful Pennsylvanian; therefore his reports are to be depended on. We are of opinion that it is absolutely necessary that immediate application should be made to Government in favour of the Delawares, that some steps may be taken to reward the fidelity of that people, especially such of them as will undertake to reconnoitre and guard the frontiers of this Province, which they say they will do, from the hostile designs of the Shawanese; and as by that means they will be prevented from following their own occupations, it would be no more than right to supply all their necessary wants, while they continue to deserve it so well at our hands.

There is nothing but the dread my family are in of the Indians approaching this place in my absence that would prevent my going in person to see you at this time in your present dangerous indisposition. I hope to hear by the bearer on his return of your getting the better of your disorder, and till then I remain, dear sir, your most obedient servant,

ÆNEAS MACKAY.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, August 8, 1774.

SIR: I am just returned from Pittsburgh, where the Pipe, Guyasutha, and the White Mingo are arrived, and bring favourable accounts from the Indian Nations about the Lakes. They say they are all disposed to continue in friendship with the English; but the Wyandots, the Hurons, and the Tawas have been wavering. The Shawanese had applied to them, and it was so long that they heard nothing from our people, that they were inclined to assist them, but these Chiefs have persuaded them to sit still, and to send to the Wabash Indians to be quiet likewise; so that it is probable they arrived amongst them in a favourable time.

Some Deputies from the Six Nations are also arrived. They have brought a very large belt to Mr. Croghan and Mr. McKee, informing them of the death of Sir William Johnson, and of their intentions, notwithstanding, to adhere firmly to the treaties subsisting betwixt the English and them, and to endeavour to retain the other Nations in peace. They also have sent a belt by these Deputies to the Delawares, and to the Wabash Confederacy, recommending it to them to remain in peace, and to inform them that though their great friend is dead, the Council fire, kindled by the English and them, continues to burn as bright as ever: such is their mode of expression. From these circumstances it is to be hoped that the fracas with the Shawanese will blow over without any very bad consequences, though that depends upon others, which must be brought about in a very little time, as four hundred of the Virginians are marched to destroy Wagetomica, the town the Shawanese lately abandoned. Should these meet with any check, which is not improbable, some of the Western Nations will certainly join them; but if they return without, and are satisfied with destroying that town, matters may probably be made up; but I doubt they will not stop there, as you will see by the enclosed copy of a letter from Lord Dunmore to Mr. Conolly, which accidentally fell into my hands, that his Lordship is very full of chastising them; and the 25th of next month is fixed for attacking the Great Shawanese Town, on Scioto. Your Honour will please to take notice, that the hint I gave you before, of a design to interrupt the trade of this Province, however improbable it might appear, was not without some foundation.

Mr. Hanna returned from Philadelphia yesterday, and gives an account that the Assembly have provided for the men that were raised for the defence of this county to the 10th instant, or longer, if necessary, and that he himself is appointed senior Captain, ab initio, Mr. Cavet the next, and a number of others who have never served an hour. The last part of his intelligence I gave no credit to, as he has no commission, nor any letters from any person about Government; and I do imagine, that as the command of them had been originally committed to me, your Honour would not place him therein to supersede me, without giving me some intimation of it. Nor is it reasonable that these men should take rank of the officers who have, in former wars, faithfully, as I am told, served this Government. Trifling as this affair is, it is likely to create much uneasiness; but I am certain your Honour will not allow those who have done no service, to rob those who have of their just reward; besides, the Association are bound to pay those they employed. I must own I have been remiss, in not fully informing your Honour who they were; but I beg your Honour to reflect upon the severe sickness I have just passed through. Some of them, had there been the least prospect of its being a permanent affair, I should not have recommended to your Honour; but we were under the necessity of employing such people as had influence amongst the mob and could get the men; and you will please to consider that it is by such arts that they must still be managed, as there are no laws by which obedience or discipline can be enforced. I have told Mr. Hanna peremptorily, that I should retain the direction of the troops till I had your Honour's orders to the contrary; and I fondly hope this explanation will not disoblige you.

Notwithstanding what I said to Mr. Smith, on the subject of joining the Virginians, he thought proper to join a small party of Delawares and Mingoes, with eight men, in the character of volunteers, and proceeded to Wheeling. The Virginia detachment had marched two days before they arrived; and Captain Crawford, who commands them, (the President of our Court,) told him it would fatigue them too much to overtake the party, and that they had better return, which accordingly they did; and by what I learn from him, they seemed equally jealous both of him and the Indians.

I can recollect nothing else at present, and your Honour may probably think I might have spared a great part of what is already written, I have the honour to be, sir, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, August 25, 1774.

SIR: Agreeable to your request I now enclose you the depositions of some of the inhabitants of Pittsburgh, respecting the treatment they have met with from the Virginia officers. Not any of the persons who saw the Shawanese after they had been fired upon on their return, are now there, so that I would not inquire into that circumstance.

The message to the Delawares, with the belt of wampum, I delivered to some of their principal Chiefs, at Mr. Croghan's, on Sunday last. Mr. Croghan and Mr. McKee were of opinion it would, perhaps, be taken ill by the Six Nations that they were not included. I therefore took the liberty to add them in the address to the message, and had a fair copy made out and given to them with a belt. - They were received seemingly with great satisfaction by both, and they declared the firmest purposes of remaining in peace themselves, and restoring it between the people of Virginia and the Shawanese. At the same time I acquainted them with your orders for erecting a trading place at the Kittaning, for which they are very thankful, as they are in want of many things already, and cannot come to Pittsburgh and purchase; and a number of them will probably be there on Monday next, which is the time I have appointed for laying out the town. Mr. Spear and Mr. Butler set out this day with their goods and other effects.

Instead of sending the message to the Shawanese by a white man, I procured the Pipe, a faithful and sensible Delaware Chief, to go and acquaint them with the message his Nation had received from your Honour; that you had recommended it to them to speak to the Shawanese not to strike the Virginians, and that he had seen a message and belt for them, which, if they were well disposed, some of their people might come and receive it at Appleby. I thought this the most advisable way, as the people at the fort are extremely jealous of any person going amongst them, and had threatened the young men you mention to go with them; and some proposals of accommodation, I understand, have been made them by Mr. Conolly, to which, if they should not listen, they would be very apt to allege it was owing to their hearing from this Province.

It is impossible to tell what will be the consequence of the Virginia operations. I still hope they will not be able to bring on a war. I think Lord Dunmore must soon see the necessity of peace. The season is now far advanced, and the country is exhausted of provisions. Should another body of men be drawn together, they could not be supported; and I believe their last exploit has not given them much stomach for another. There was, indeed, such confusion amongst the troops, and dissension amongst the officers, that had they met with any number of the enemy, they must certainly have been cut off. Preparations, however, are making, and his Lordship is hourly expected. The 10th of August, which was the time your Honour fixed for keeping up the rangers, was passed before your letter reached me; but as you were pleased to say their standing till the 19th of September, would depend on what intelligence you might receive from Captain Thomson and myself, we thought it best to continue them, being both of opinion that, at this time, it was very necessary, it being, in some measure, the crisis of the dispute with the Shawanese; and that great numbers of people are now gone down to bring back their families, which they removed when they thought themselves in more immediate danger.

I am sorry I troubled your Honour with my foolish grievances. I hope I shall always feel the spirit of the station I may be called to act in; but particular circumstances, I believe, had, in that ease, set it rather too much on edge. I will not often offend in the same manner. I must do Mr. Cavet the justice to say he is a very good man, and would fill that or most other places with reputation.

An express arrived a day or two ago from Detroit. Mr. Conolly had applied to the Commanding Officer at that post to stop the trade with the Shawanese; but this he refuses, both as they have no prospect of war, and that for such a step he must have the orders of the Commander-in-chief at least. He says all the Indians in that country seem to be peaceably disposed. A letter by the same messenger, from a merchant at Detroit to a merchant at Pittsburgh, gives a quite contradictory account of matters; says the Indians in that country will all join the Shawanese; that some of them have come in from the frontiers of Virginia, and have brought scalps; that the general rendezvous is appointed on the Wabash, and that they expect but a very short time to have any intercourse with them, and desires him to write to Simons at Lancaster not to send the goods he had ordered.

This moment I have heard from Pittsburgh that Mr. Spear's and Mr. Butler's goods, that were going to Appleby, are seized by Mr. Conolly's orders; and that Mr. Butler, with three young men, his assistants, are in confinement in the common guard-house; and that a woman who kept house for Mr. Butler, has been drummed all round the town, for the great crime of going to see him in his distress. This is a degree of tyranny and oppression beyond every thing that has yet happened. I shall be able to give you a more circumstantial account to-morrow, when Captain Thomson will be here, who, I understand, was present when it happened. It will oblige me to put off my journey to Appleby, as all my stores, provisions, &c., were with Mr. Butler's goods. I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient and most humble servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

The Honourable John Penn, Esq.

ARTHUR ST. CLAIR TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Ligonier, August 27, 1774.

SIR: The very extraordinary news from Fort Pitt, that I mentioned in my letter of the 25th, proves too true. Captain Thomson was there, and informs me that Mr. Butler was not only made a prisoner, but treated with every instance of insult and abuse. The crime it seems they are charged with, is a suspicion of trading with the enemy Indians; but for this there cannot be the least foundation, as their destination was no secret; and I had given publick notice, in writing, of the design of laying out a town up the river, and the time when. It seems this is the act of Captain Aston, Conolly being gone to meet Lord Dunmore; but in truth it is the act of Mr. Campbell, who is their Counsel General, and whose plan the removing any of the trade from Pittsburgh broke in upon. Captain Thomson offered any security they pleased to demand, but they would accept of none, and for some time would not permit any of their acquaintance to visit them; and jostled Mr. Smith and Mr. McKay out of the fort in the most insulting manner imaginable. The treatment these people have met with for a length of time, has been sufficient to break their spirit; but it has not succeeded; and those at that place who are friends of this Province, will meet are at Appleby to-morrow, and are making up another cargo, that they may have something to keep the Indians easy that will be there.

I am, sir, your very humble and most obedient servant,
AR. ST. CLAIR.

TO THE PEOPLE OF VIRGINIA

Williamsburg, Va., August 4, 1774.

The time has at length arrived when American liberty must either be settled on a firm basis by the virtue and publick spirit of her sons, or sink under the despotism now suspended over her. The Colonies will no doubt look upon the violent and arbitrary proceedings of the British Parliament, with regard to the Bostonians, as levelled at the liberty of America in general, and unite their utmost endeavours by all means in their power to prevent the ruin they are threatened with. We shall deceive ourselves if we think Great Britain, (as the present Ministry call themselves) will easily be brought to recede from her claims of domination over us. The Parliamentary farce will not be ended till the virtue of America, and the cries of the British merchants and manufacturers, drive the present actors off the stage.

In this contention we must expect our courage and fortitude will be put to a severe trial; and, if they are not genuine, will not stand the test. But as our ancestors have liberally shed their blood to secure to us the rights we now contend for, surely every power of manhood will be exerted by us to deliver the depositum, sacred and inviolate, to our posterity. Let no man despair of success in so just a cause. Situated as we are, if we be united, and dare be free, no power on earth can make us slaves.

That our adversaries are powerful we fatally know; but, in a measure so wickedly destructive of the constitutional rights of British subjects, they cannot be united. But should they be so, are they more powerful than the Spaniards, or we less so than the United Provinces were at the time the contest arose between those two Nations on the subject of liberty? Philip the Second, at the head of the most powerful Empire in Europe, with the best disciplined troops, headed by one of the ablest Generals then known in the world, and supported by the riches of America, after a bloody war which lasted half a century, was not able to subvert the liberty of the poor, and till then, considerable, but virtuous Hollanders. The example of our ancestors, in the last century, affords a noble proof of firmness and patriotick virtue. In the reign of the first Charles, they evidently demonstrated, that though Englishmen may bear much, yet when they find a determined resolution in Administration to persevere in measures totally destructive to their dearest rights, they will rouse at last, and when that period arrives, no force can withstand - no chicanery elude, their fury; and the more they have suffered, the greater will be the sacrifice they demand. The posterity of James the Second, fugitives in a strange land, still lament the dire effects of his encroachments on English liberty.

The spirit of liberty, when conducted by publick virtue, is invincible. It may be cramped and kept down by external violence, but so long as the morals of a people remain uncorrupted, it cannot be totally extinguished. Oppression will only increase its elastick force; and when roused to action by some daring Chief - some great good man, it will burst forth, like fired gunpowder, and destroy all before it. Of this truth the English history affords the clearest demonstrations, through many of the brightest periods. We are the sons of those brave men, and let us now prove ourselves worthy of our glorious ancestors. Britain itself will applaud our virtue. The friends of liberty there will rejoice to acknowledge us their brethren and fellow-subjects; for it cannot be possible that a race of heroes and patriots should in so short a time degenerate into a band of robbers.

We need not on the present occasion shed our blood to secure our rights, though if necessary, let us not spare it; the purchase is more than equal to the price. Let us not buy their commodities; let us stop all exports from this country to that till they do us justice. We have the means of subsistence within ourselves. Nature's wants are but few; our imaginary ones have their foundation in luxury. Let us encourage our own manufactures by proper subscriptions in each county; and by wearing them ourselves, convince our enemies. (for so I must call those who endeavour to enslave us,) that we can and will subsist without them. Let gentlemen of the first rank and fortune amongst us set the example; they will be cheerfully and eagerly followed by the inferiour classes. This will give weight to our remonstrances; and when the great disposer of all things, the Ruler of Princes, shall in his mercy open the eyes of our oppressors, and direct their Councils to the pursuit of equity and right reason, then, and not till then, let us meet and embrace them with open arms: we will again be their children when they will deign to be our parents.

VIRGINIA CONVENTION.

At a very full Meeting of Delegates from the different Counties in the Colony and Dominion of Virginia, begun in Williamsburg the first day of August, in the year of our Lord 1774, and continued by several adjournments to Saturday, the 6th of the same month, the following Association was unanimously resolved upon, and agreed to:

We, his Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Delegates of the freeholders of Virginia, deputed to represent them at a general meeting in the City of Williamsburg, avowing our inviolable and unshaken fidelity and attachment to our most gracious Sovereign; our regard and affection for all our friends and fellow-subjects in Great Britain and elsewhere; protesting against every act or thing which may have the most distant tendency to interrupt or in any wise disturb his Majesty's peace, and the good order of Government within this his ancient Colony, which we are resolved to maintain and defend at the risk of our lives and fortunes; but, at the same time, affected with the deepest anxiety and most alarming apprehensions of those grievances and distresses by which his Majesty's American subjects are oppressed; and having taken under our most serious deliberation the state of the whole Continent, find that the present unhappy situation of our affairs is chiefly occasioned by certain ill advised regulations, as well of our trade, as internal polity, introduced by several unconstitutional Acts of the British Parliament, and, at length, attempted to be enforced by the hand of power.

Solely influenced by these important and weighty considerations, we think it an indispensable duty which we owe to our country, ourselves, and latest posterity, to guard against such dangerous and extensive mischiefs, by every just and proper means.

If, by the measures adopted, some unhappy consequences and inconveniences should be derived to our fellow-subjects, whom we wish not to injure in the smallest degree, we hope, and flatter ourselves, that they will impute them to their real cause, the hard necessity to which we are driven.

That the good people of this Colony may on so trying an occasion continue steadfastly directed to their most essential interests, in hopes that they will be influenced and stimulated by our example, to the greatest industry, the strictest economy and frugality, and the exertion of every publick virtue; persuaded that the merchants, manufacturers, and other inhabitants of Great Britain, and above all, that the British Parliament will be convinced how much the true interest of the Kingdom must depend on the restoration and continuance of that mutual friendship and cordiality which so happily subsisted between us, we have, unanimously, and with one voice, entered into the following Resolutions and Association, which we do oblige ourselves by those sacred ties of honour and love to our country, strictly to observe; and farther declare, before God and the world, that we will religiously adhere to and keep the same inviolate in every particular, until redress of all such American grievances as may be defined and settled at the general Congress of Delegates from the different Colonies shall be fully obtained, or until this Association shall be abrogated or altered by a general meeting of the Deputies of this Colony to be convened as is herein after directed. And we do, with the greatest earnestness, recommend this our Association to all gentlemen, merchants, traders, and other inhabitants of this Colony, hoping that they will cheerfully and cordially accede thereto:

1st. We do hereby resolve and declare, that we will not, either directly or indirectly, after the first day of November next, import from Great Britain any goods, wares, or merchandises whatever, medicines excepted; nor will we, after that day, import any British manufactures, either from the West Indies or any other place; nor any article whatever which we shall know, or have reason to believe, was brought into such countries from Great Britain; nor will we purchase any such articles so imported of any person or persons whatsoever, except such as are now in the country, or such as may arrive on or before the first day of November, in consequence of orders already given, and which cannot now be countermanded in time.

2d. We will neither ourselves import, nor purchase any slave or slaves imported by any other person, after the first day of November next, either from Africa, the West Indies, or any other place.

3d. Considering the article of tea as the detestable instrument which laid the foundation of the present sufferings of our distressed friends in the town of Boston, we view it with horror; and therefore resolve, that we will not from this day, either import tea of any kind whatever; nor will we use, or suffer even such of it as is now on hand to be used in any of our families.

4th. If the inhabitants of the town of Boston, or any other Colony, should by violence or dire necessity be compelled to pay the East India Company for destroying any tea which they have lately by their agents unjustly attempted to force into the Colonies, we will not directly or indirectly import or purchase any British East India commodity whatever, till the Company, or some other person on their behalf, shall retired and fully restore to the owners all such sum or sums of money as may be so extorted.

5th. We do resolve, that unless American grievances are redressed before the 10th day of August, 1775, we will not after that day, directly or indirectly, export tobacco, or any other article whatever to Great Britain; nor will we sell any such articles as we think can be exported to Great Britain with a prospect of gain to any person or persons whatever, with a design of putting it into his or their power to export the same to Great Britain, either on our own, his, or their account. And that this resolution may be the more effectually carried into execution, we do hereby recommend it to the inhabitants of this Colony to refrain from the cultivation of tobacco as much as conveniently may be; and in lieu thereof, that they will, as we resolve to do, apply their attention and industry to the cultivation of all such articles as may form a proper basis for manufactures of all sorts, which we will endeavour to encourage throughout this Colony, to the utmost of our abilities.

6th. We will endeavor to improve our breed of sheep, and increase their number to the utmost extent; and to this end we will be as sparing as we conveniently can, in killing of sheep, especially those of the most profitable kind; and if we should at any time be overstocked, or can conveniently spare any, we will dispose of them to our neighbours, especially the poorer sort of people, upon moderate terms.

7th. Resolved, That the merchants and other venders of goods and merchandises within this Colony ought not to take advantage of the scarcity of goods that may be occasioned by this Association, but that they ought to sell the same at the rates they have been accustomed to for twelve months last past; and if they shall sell any such goods on higher terms, or shall in any manner, or by any devise whatever, violate or depart from this resolution, we will not, and are of opinion that no inhabitant of this Colony ought, at any time thereafter, to deal with any such person, their factors or agents, for any commodity whatever; and it is recommended to the Deputies of the several counties, that Committees be chosen in each county by such persons as accede to this Association, to take effectual care that these Resolves be properly observed, and for corresponding occasionally with the general Committee of Correspondence in the City of Williamsburg, provided, that if exchange should rise, such advance may be made in the prices of goods as shall be approved by the Committee of each county.

8th. In order the better to distinguish such worthy merchants and traders who are well-wishers of this Colony, from those who may attempt, through motives of self-interest, to obstruct our views, we do hereby resolve that we will not, after the first day of November next, deal with any merchant or trader who will not sign this Association; nor until he hath obtained a certificate of his having done so from the County Committee, or any three members thereof. And if any merchant, trader, or other person, shall import any goods or merchandise after the first day of November, contrary to this Association, we give it as our opinion that such goods and merchandise should be either forthwith re-shipped, or delivered up to the County Committee, to be stored at the risk of the importer, unless such importer shall give a proper assurance to the said Committee, that such goods or merchandises shall not be sold within this Colony during the continuance of this Association; and if such importer shall refuse to comply with one or the other of these terms, upon application and due caution given to him or her by the said Committee, or any three members thereof, such Committee is required to publish the truth of the case in the Gazettes, and in the county where he or she resides; and we will thereafter consider such person or persons as inimical to this country, and break off every connection and all dealings with them.

9th. Resolved, That if any person or persons shall export tobacco, or any other commodity, to Great Britain, after the 10th day of August, 1775, contrary to this Association, we shall hold ourselves obliged to consider such person or persons as inimical to the community, and as an approver of American grievances; and give it as our opinion that the publick should be advised of his or their conduct, as in the eighth article is desired.

10th. Being fully persuaded that the united wisdom of the general Congress may improve these our endeavours to preserve the rights and liberties of British America, we decline enlarging at present; but do hereby resolve that we will conform to and strictly observe, all such alterations or additions assented to by the Delegates for this Colony, as they may judge it necessary to adopt, after the same shall be published and made known to us.

11th. Resolved, That we think ourselves called upon, by every principle of humanity and brotherly affection, to extend the utmost and speediest relief to our distressed fellow-subjects in the town of Boston; and, therefore, most earnestly recommend it to all the inhabitants of this Colony to make such liberal contributions as they can afford, to be collected and remitted to Boston, in such manner as may best answer so desirable a purpose.

12th. And lastly, Resolved, That the Moderator of this meeting, and, in case of his death, Robert Carter Nicholas, Esquire, be empowered, on any future occasion that may, in his opinion, require it, convene the several Delegates of this Colony, at such time and place as he may judge proper; and in case of the death or absence of any Delegate, it is recommended that another be chosen in his place.

Instructions for the Deputies appointed to meet in General Congress on the part of this Colony.

The unhappy disputes between Great Britain and her American Colonies, which began about the third year of the reign of his present Majesty, and since continually increasing, have proceeded to lengths so dangerous and alarming, as to excite just apprehensions in the minds of his Majesty's faithful subjects of this Colony, that they are in danger of being deprived of their natural, ancient, constitutional, and chartered rights, have compelled them to take the same into their most serious consideration; and being deprived of their usual and accustomed mode of making known their grievances, have appointed us their Representatives to consider what is proper to be done in this dangerous crisis of American affairs.

It being our opinion that the united wisdom of North America should be collected in a general Congress of all the Colonies, we have appointed the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, Richard Henry Lee, George Washington, Patrick Henry, Richard Bland, Benjamin Harrison, and Edmund Pendleton, Esquires, Deputies to represent this Colony in the said Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, on the first Monday in September next. And that they may be the better informed of our sentiments touching the conduct we wish them to observe on this important occasion, we desire that they will express, in the first place, our faith and true allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third, our lawful and rightful Sovereign; and that we are determined, with our lives and fortunes, to support him in the legal exercise of all his just rights and prerogatives; and however misrepresented, we sincerely approve of a constitutional connection with Great Britain, and wish most ardently a return of that intercourse of affection and commercial connection that formerly united both countries, which can only be effected by a removal of those causes of discontent which have of late unhappily divided us.

It cannot admit of a doubt, but that British subjects in America are entitled to the same rights and privileges as their fellow-subjects possess in Britain; and, therefore, that the power assumed by the British Parliament, to bind America by their statutes, in all cases whatsoever, is unconstitutional, and the source of these unhappy differences.

The end of Government would be defeated by the British Parliament exercising a power over the lives, the property, and the liberty of American subjects, who are not, and from their local circumstances cannot, be there represented. Of this nature we consider the several Acts of Parliament for raising a revenue in America; for the extending the jurisdiction of the Courts of Admiralty; for seizing American subjects, and transporting them to Britain to be tried for crimes committed in America; and the several late oppressive Acts respecting the town of Boston and Province of the Massachusetts Bay.

The original Constitution of the American Colonies possessing their Assemblies with the sole right of directing their internal polity, it is absolutely destructive of the end of their institution that their Legislatures should be suspended, or prevented, by hasty dissolutions, from exercising their Legislative powers.

Wanting the protection of Britain, we have long acquiesced in their Acts of Navigation restrictive of our commerce, which we consider as an ample recompense for such protection; but as those Acts derive their efficacy from that foundation alone, we have reason to expect they will be restrained so as to produce the reasonable purposes of Britain, and not be injurious to us.

To obtain redress of these grievances, without which the people of America can neither be safe, free, nor happy, they were willing to undergo the great inconvenience that will be derived to them from stopping all imports whatsoever from Great Britain, after the first day of November next, and also to cease exporting any commodity whatsoever to the same place, after the 10th day of August, 1775. The earnest desire we have to make as quick and full payment as possible of our debts to Great Britain, and to avoid the heavy injury that would arise to this country from an earlier adoption of the non-exportation plan, after the people have already applied so much of their labour to the perfecting of the present crop, by which means they have been prevented from pursuing other methods of clothing and supporting their families, have rendered it necessary to restrain you in this article of non-exportation; but it is our desire that you cordially co-operate with our sister Colonies in general Congress, in such other just and proper methods as they or the majority shall deem necessary for the accomplishment of these valuable ends.

The Proclamation issued by General Gage, in the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, declaring it treason for the inhabitants of that Province to assemble themselves to consider of their grievances, and form Associations for their common conduct on the occasion; and requiring the Civil Magistrates and officers to apprehend all such persons, to be tried for their supposed offences, is the most alarming process that ever appeared in a British Government; that the said General Gage hath thereby assumed and taken upon himself powers denied by the Constitution to our legal Sovereign; that he, not having condescended to disclose by what authority he exercises such extensive and unheard of powers, we are at a loss to determine whether he intends to justify himself as the Representative of the King, or as the Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's forces in America. If he considers himself as acting in the character of his Majesty's Representative, we would remind him that the statute, twenty-fifth, Edward the Third, has expressed and defined all treasonable offences, and that the Legislature of Great Britain hath declared that no offence shall be construed to be treason but such as is pointed out by that statute, and that this was done to take out of the hands of tyrannical Kings and of weak and wicked Ministers that deadly weapon which constructive treason had furnished them with, and which had drawn blood of the best and most honest men in the Kingdom; and that the King of Great Britain hath no right, by his Proclamation, to subject his people to imprisonment, pains, and penalties.

That if the said General Gage conceives he is empowered to act in this manner, as the Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's forces in America, this odious and illegal Proclamation must be considered as a plain and full declaration that this despotick viceroy will be bound by no law, nor regard the constitutional rights of his Majesty's subjects, whenever they interfere with the plan he has formed for oppressing the good people of the Massachusetts Bay; and, therefore, that the executing, or attempting to execute, such Proclamation, will justify resistance and reprisal.

*A summary view of the rights of BRITISH AMERICA set forth in some Resolutions intended for the inspection of the present Delegates of the people of VIRGINIA, now in Convention.

Resolved, That it be an instruction to the said Deputies, when assembled in general Congress with the Deputies of the other States of British America, to propose to the said Congress that an humble and dutiful Address be presented to his Majesty, begging leave to lay before him, as Chief Magistrate of the British Empire, the united complaints of his Majesty's subjects in America - complaints which are excited by many unwarrantable encroachments and usurpations, attempted to be made by the Legislature of one part of the Empire, upon those rights which God and the laws have given equally and independently to all. To present to his Majesty that these his States have often individually made humble application to his Imperial

* Before I left home to attend the Convention, I prepared what I thought might be given, in instruction, to the Delegates who should be appointed to attend the general Congress proposed, They were drawn in haste, with a number of blanks, with some uncertainties and inaccuracies of historical facts, which I neglected at the moment, knowing they could be readily corrected at the meeting. I set out on my journey, but was taken sick on the road and was unable to proceed. I therefore sent on, by express, two copies, one under cover to Patrick Henry, the other to Peyton Randolph, who I know would be in the Convention; of the former no more was ever heard or known. Mr. Henry probably thought it too bold, as a first measure, as a majority of the Members did. On the other copy being laid on the table of the Convention by Peyton Randolph, as the proposition of a Member who was prevented from attendance by sickness on the road, tamer sentiments were preferred, and, I believe, wisely preferred; the leap, I proposed, being, too long as yet, for the mass of our citizens. The distance between these and the Instructions actually adopted is of some curiosity, however, as it shows the inequality of pace with which we moved, and the prudence required to keep front and rear together - Jefferson.

Throne to obtain, through its intervention, some redress of their injured rights, to none of which was ever even an answer condescended; humbly to hope that this their joint Address, penned in the language of truth, and divested of those expressions of servility which would persuade his Majesty that we are asking favours, and not rights, shall obtain from his Majesty a more respectful acceptance. And this his Majesty will think we have reason to expect when he reflects that he is no more than the Chief Officer of the people, appointed by the laws, and circumscribed with definitive power, to assist in working the great machine of Government, erected for their use, and consequently subject to their superintendence. And in order that these our rights, as well as the invasions of them, may be laid more fully before his Majesty, to take a view of them from the origin and first settlement of these countries.

To remind him that our ancestors, before their emigration to America, were the free inhabitants of the British Dominions in Europe, and possessed a right which nature has given to all men, of departing from the country in which chance, not choice, has placed them, of going in quest of new habitations, and of their establishing new societies under such laws and regulations as to them shall seem most likely to promote publick happiness. That their Saxon ancestors had, under this universal law, in like manner left their native wilds and woods in the North of Europe, had possessed themselves of the Isle of Britain, then less charged with inhabitants, and had established there that system of laws which has so long been the glory and protection of that country. Nor was ever any claim of superiority or dependence asserted over them by that mother country from which they had migrated; and were such a claim made, it is believed that his Majesty's subjects in Great Britain have too firm a feeling of the rights derived to them from their ancestors, to bow down the sovereignty of their state before such visionary pretensions. And it is thought that no circumstance has occurred to distinguish materially the British from the Saxon emigration. America was conquered and her settlements made, and firmly established, at the expense of individuals, and not of the British publick. Their own blood was spilt in acquiring lands for their settlement; their own fortunes expended in making that settlement effectual; for themselves they fought, for themselves they conquered, and for themselves alone they have right to hold. Not a shilling was ever issued from the publick treasures of his Majesty, or his ancestors for their assistance, till of very late times, after the Colonies had become established upon a firm and permanent footing. That then, indeed, having become valuable to Great Britain for her commercial purposes, his Parliament was pleased to lend them assistance against an enemy who would fain have drawn to herself the benefits of their commerce, to the great aggrandizement of herself and danger of Great Britain. Such assistance and in such circumstances, they had often before given to Portugal, and other allied states, with whom they carry on a commercial intercourse; yet these States never supposed, that by calling in her aid they thereby submitted themselves to her sovereignty. Had such terms been proposed, they would have rejected them with disdain, and trusted for better to the moderation of their enemies, or to a vigorous exertion of their own force. We do not, however, mean to underrate those aids, which to us were doubtless valuable, on whatever principles granted; but we would show that they cannot give a title to that authority which the British Parliament would arrogate over us, and that they may amply be repaid by our giving to the inhabitants of Great Britain, such exclusive privileges in trade as may be advantageous to them, and at the same time not too restrictive to ourselves. That settlements having been thus effected in the wilds of America, the emigrants thought proper to adopt that system of laws under which they had hitherto lived in the mother country, and to continue their union with her by submitting themselves to the same common Sovereign, who was thereby made the central link connecting the several parts of the Empire thus newly multiplied.

But that not long were they permitted, however far they thought themselves removed from the hand of oppression, to hold undisturbed the rights thus acquired at the hazard of their lives, and loss of their fortunes. A family of Princes was then on the British Throne, whose treasonable crimes against their people brought on them afterwards the exertion of those sacred and sovereign rights of punishment, reserved in the hands of the people for cases of extreme necessity, and judged by the Constitution unsafe to be delegated to any other judicature. While every day brought forth some new and unjustifiable exertion of power over their subjects on that side of the water, it was not to be expected that those here, much less able at that time, to oppose the designs of despotism, should be exempted from injury.

Accordingly that country, which had been acquired by the lives, the labours, and the fortunes of individual adventurers, was by these Princes, at several times, parted out and distributed among the favourites and * followers of their fortunes, and, by an assumed right of the Crown alone, were erected into distinct and independent Governments; a measure which it is believed his Majesty's prudence and understanding would prevent him from imitating at this day, as no exercise of such power, of dividing and dismembering a country, has ever occurred in his Majesty's Realm of England, though now of very ancient standing; nor could it be justified or acquiesced under there, or in any other part of his Majesty's Empire.

That the exercise of a free trade with all parts of the world, possessed by the American Colonists, as of natural right, and which no law of their own had taken away or abridged, was next the object of unjust encroachment. Some of the Colonies having thought proper to continue the Administration of their Government in the name and under the authority of his Majesty King Charles the First, whom notwithstanding his late deposition by the Commonwealth of England, they continued in the sovereignty of their state; the Parliament for the Commonwealth took the same in high offence, and assumed upon themselves the power of prohibiting their trade with all other parts of the world, except the Island of Great Britain. This arbitrary act, however, they soon recalled, and by solemn treaty, entered into on the 12th day of March, 1651, between the said Commonwealth, by their Commissioners, and the Colony of Virginia, by their House of Burgesses, it was expressly stipulated by the eighth article of the said treaty, that they should have "free trade as the people of England do enjoy, to "all places and with all Nations, according to the laws of "that Commonwealth." But that upon the restoration of his Majesty King Charles the Second, their rights of free commerce fell once more a victim to arbitrary power; and by several Acts † of his reign, as well as of some of his successors, the trade of the Colonies were laid under such restrictions as show what hopes they might form from the justice of a British Parliament, were its uncontrolled power admitted over these States. History has informed us that bodies of men, as well as individuals, are susceptible of the spirit of tyranny. A view of these Acts of Parliament for the regulation, as it has been affectingly called, of the American trade, if all other evidence were removed out of the case, would undeniably evince the truth of this observation. Besides the duties they impose on our articles of export and import, they prohibit our going to any markets northward of Cape Finisterre, in the Kingdom of Spain, for the sale of commodities which Great Britain will not take from us, and for the purchase of others with which she cannot supply us. and that for no other than the arbitrary purposes of purchasing for themselves, by a sacrifice of our rights and interests, certain privileges in their commerce with an allied state, who in confidence that their exclusive trade with America will be continued, while the principles and power of the British Parliament be the same, have indulged themselves in every exorbitance, which their avarice could dictate, or our necessities extort; have raised their commodities called for in America to the double and treble of what they sold for before such exclusive privileges were given them, and of what better commodities of the same kind would cost us elsewhere, and at the same time give us much less for what we carry thither, than might be had at more convenient ports. That these Acts prohibit us from carrying, in quest of other purchasers, the surplus of our tobaccos remaining after the consumption of Great Britain is supplied; so that we must leave them with the British merchant for whatever he will please to allow us, to be by him re-shipped to foreign markets, where he will reap the benefits of making sales of them for full value. That to heighten still the idea of Parliamentary justice, and to show with what moderation they are like to exercise power, where themselves are to feel no part of its weight, we take leave to mention to his Majesty certain other Acts of Parliament, by which they would prohibit us from manufacturing for our own use the articles we raise on our own lands, with our own labour.

But the Lords Proprietors had power, with the consent of the inhabitants, to make bye-laws for the better government of the said province; so that no money could be recovered, or law made, without the consent of the inhabitants or their Representatives.

By an Act * passed in the fifth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Second, an American subject is forbidden to make a hat for himself of the fur which he has taken perhaps on his own soil; an instance of despotism to which no parallel can be produced in the most arbitrary ages of British history. By one other Act † passed in the twenty-third year of the same reign, the iron which we make we are forbidden to manufacture, and heavy as that article is, and necessary in every branch of husbandry, besides commission and insurance, we are to pay freight for it to Great Britain, and freight for it back again, for the purpose of supporting not men, but machines, in the Island of Great Britain. In the same spirit of equal and impartial legislation is to be viewed the Act of Parliament, ‡ passed in the fifth year of the same reign, by which American lands are made subject to the demands of British creditors, while their own lands were still continued unanswerable for their debts; from which one of these conclusions must necessarily follow, either that justice is not the same in America as in Britain, or else that the British Parliament pay less regard to it here than there. But that we do not point out to his Majesty the injustice of these Acts, with intent to rest on that principle the cause of that nullity; but to show that experience confirms the propriety of those political principles which exempt us from the jurisdiction of the British Parliament. The true ground on which we declare these Acts void is, that the British Parliament has no right to exercise authority over us.

That these exercises of usurped power have not been confined to instances alone in which themselves were interested, but they have also intermeddled with the regulation of the internal affairs of the Colonies. The Act of the ninth of Anne, for establishing a Post Office in America, seems to have had little connection with British convenience, except that of accommodating his Majesty's Ministers and favourites with the sale of lucrative and easy offices.

That thus we have hastened through the reigns which preceded his Majesty's, during which the violations of our right were less alarming, because repeated at more distant intervals than that rapid and bold succession of injuries which is likely to distinguish the present from all other periods of American story. Scarcely have our minds been able to emerge from the astonishment into which one stroke of Parliamentary thunder has involved us, before another more heavy and more alarming is fallen on us. Single acts of tyranny may be ascribed to the accidental opinion of a day; but a series of oppressions begun at a distinguished period, and pursued unalterably through every change of Ministers, too plainly prove a deliberate and systematical plan of reducing us to slavery.

That the Act II passed in the fourth year of his Majesty's reign, entitled, "An Act for granting certain duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America, &c.," One other Act ‡, passed in the fifth year of his reign, entitled, "An Act for granting and applying certain stamp duties and other duties in the British Colonies and Plantations in America, &c.," One other Act * passed in the sixth year of his reign, entitled, "An Act for the better securing the dependency of his Majesty's Dominions in America upon the Crown and Parliament of Great Britain," and one other Act † passed in the seventh year of his reign, entitled, "An Act for granting duties on paper, tea, &c.," form that connected chain of Parliamentary usurpation, which has already been the subject of frequent applications to his Majesty, and the Houses of Lords and Commons of Great Britain; and no answers having been yet condescended to any of these, we shall not trouble his Majesty with a repetition of the matters they contained.

But that one other Act, ‡ passed in the same seventh year of his reign, having been a peculiar attempt, must ever require peculiar mention; it is entitled, "An Act for suspending the Legislature of New-York." One free and independent Legislature hereby takes upon itself to suspend the powers of another, free and independent as itself; thus exhibiting a phenomenon unknown in nature, the creator and creature of its own power. Not only the principles of common sense, but the common feelings of human nature, must be surrendered up before his Majesty's subjects here can be persuaded to believe that they hold their political existence at the will of a British Parliament. Shall these Governments be dissolved, their property annihilated, and their people reduced to a state of nature, at the imperious breath of a body of men, whom they never saw, in whom they never confided, and over whom they have no powers of punishment or removal, let their crimes against the American publick be ever so great? Can any one reason be assigned why one hundred and sixty thousand electors in the Island of Great Britain shall give law to four millions in the States of America, every individual of whom is equal to every individual of them in virtue, in understanding, and in bodily strength? Were this to be admitted, instead of being a free people, as we have hitherto supposed, and mean to continue ourselves, we should suddenly be found the slaves, not of one, but of one hundred and sixty thousand tyrants, distinguished too, from all others, by this singular circumstance, that they are removed from the reach of fear, the only restraining motive which may hold the hand of a tyrant.

That by "An Act II to discontinue in such manner and for such time as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping of goods, wares, and merchandise, at the town and within the harbour of Boston, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in North America," which was passed at the last session of the British Parliament, a large and populous town, whose trade was their sole subsistence, was deprived of that trade, and involved in utter ruin. Let us for a while Suppose the question of right suspended, in order to examine this Act on principles of justice. An Act of Parliament had been passed, imposing duties on teas, to be paid in America, against which Act the Americans had protested as inauthentic. The East India Company, who till that time had never sent a pound of tea to America on their own account step forth on that occasion, the assertors of Parliamentary right, and send hither many ship loads of that obnoxious commodity. The masters of their several vessels, however, on their arrival in America, wisely attended to admonition and returned with their cargoes. In the Province of New England alone, the remonstrances of the people were disregarded, and a compliance, after being many days waited for, was flatly refused. Whether in this the master of the vessel was governed by iris obstinacy, or his instructions, let those who know, say. There are extraordinary situations which require extraordinary interpositions. An exasperated people who feel that they possess power, are not easily restrained within limits strictly regular. A number of them assembled in the town of Boston, threw the tea into the ocean, and dispersed, without doing any other act of violence. If in this they did wrong, they were known, and amenable to the laws of the land, against which it could not be objected that they ever had, in any instance been obstructed or diverted from their regular course in favour of popular offenders. They should therefore not have been distrusted on this occasion. But that ill-fated Colony had formerly been bold in their enmities against the House of Stuart, and were now devoted to ruin by that unseen hand which governs the momentous affairs of this great Empire. On the partial representations of a few worthless Ministerial dependants, whose constant office it has been to keep that Government embroiled, and who, by their treacheries, hope to obtain the dignity of the British knighthood, without calling for the party accused, without asking a proof, without attempting a distinction between the guilty and the innocent, the whole of that ancient and wealthy town, is in a moment reduced from opulence to beggary. Men who had spent their lives in extending the British commerce, who had invested in that place the wealth their honest endeavours had merited, found themselves and their families thrown at once on the world for subsistence by its charities. Not the hundredth part of the inhabitants of that town had been concerned in the act complained of, many of them were in Great Britain and in other parts beyond sea; yet all were involved in one indiscriminate ruin, by a new Executive power unheard of till then, that of a British Parliament. A property, of a value of many millions of money, was sacrificed to revenge, not repay, the loss of a few thousands. This is administering justice with a heavy hand indeed! And when is this tempest to be arrested in its course? Two wharves are to be opened again when his Majesty shall think proper. The residue, which lined the extensive shores of the bay of Boston, are forever interdicted the exercise of commerce. This little exception seems to have been thrown in for no other purpose than that of setting a precedent for investing his Majesty with legislative powers. If the pulse of his people shall beat calmly under this experiment, another and another will be tried, till the measure of despotism be filled up. It would be an insult on common sense to pretend that this exception was made in order to restore its commerce to that great town. The trade which cannot be received at two wharves alone, must of necessity be transferred to some other place; to which it will soon be followed by that of the two wharves. Considered in this light, it would be an insolent and cruel mockery at the annihilation of the town of Boston.

By the Act * for the suppression of riots and tumults in the town of Boston, passed also in the last session of Parliament, a murder committed there is, if the Governour pleases, to be tried in a Court of King's Bench, in the Island of Great Britain, by a jury of Middlesex. The witnesses too, on receipt of such a sum as the Governour shall think it reasonable for them to expend, are to enter into recognisance to appear at the trial. This is, in other words, taxing them to the amount of their recognisances, and that amount may be whatever a Governour pleases; for who does his Majesty think can be prevailed on to cross the Atlantic for the sole purpose of bearing evidence to a fact? His expenses are to be borne, indeed, as they shall be estimated by a Governour; but who are to feed the wife and children whom he leaves behind, and who have had no other subsistence but his daily labour? Those epidemical disorders too, so terrible in a foreign climate, is the cure of them to be estimated among the articles of expense, and their danger to be warded off by the almighty power of Parliament? And the wretched criminal, if he happened to have offended on the American side, stripped of his privilege of trial by peers of his vicinage, removed from the place where alone full evidence could be obtained, without money, without counsel, without friends, without exculpatory proof, is tried before judges predetermined to condemn. The cowards who would suffer a countryman to be torn from the bowels of their society, in order to be thus offered a sacrifice to Parliamentary tyranny, would merit that everlasting infamy now fixed on the authors of the Act! A clause † for a similar purpose had been introduced into an Act passed in the twelfth year of his Majesty's reign, entitled, "An Act for the better securing and preserving his Majesty's dockyards, magazines, ships, ammunition, and stores,"; against which, as meriting the same censures, the several Colonies have already protested.

That these are Acts of power, assumed by a body of men, foreign to our Constitutions, and unacknowledged by our laws, against which we do, on behalf of the inhabitants of British America, enter this our solemn and determined Protest; and that we do earnestly entreat his Majesty, as yet the only mediatory power between the several states of the British Empire, to recommend to his Parliament of Great Britain the total revocation of those Acts, which however nugatory they may be, may yet prove the cause of further discontents and jealousies among us.

* 14 George III.

† 12 George III. chap. 24.

That we next proceed to consider the conduct of his Majesty as holding the Executive powers of the laws of these States; and mark out his deviations from the line of duty. By the Constitution of Great Britain, as well as the several American States, his Majesty possesses the power of refusing to pass into a law any Bill which has already passed the other two branches of Legislature. His Majesty, however, and his ancestors, conscious of the impropriety of opposing their single opinion to the united wisdom of the two Houses of Parliament, while their proceedings were unbiased by interested principles, for several ages past, have modestly declined the exercise of this power in that part of his Empire called Great Britain. But by change of circumstances other principles than those of justice simply, have obtained an influence on their determinations; the addition of new states to the British Empire has produced an addition of new, and sometimes, opposite interests. It is now, therefore, the great office of his Majesty to resume the exercise of his negative power, and to prevent the passing of laws by any one Legislature of the Empire, which might bear injuriously on the rights and interests of another. Yet this will not excuse the wanton exercise of this power, which we have seen his Majesty practice on the laws of the American Legislatures. For the most trifling reasons, and sometimes for no conceivable reason at all, his Majesty has rejected laws of the most salutary tendency. The abolition of domestick slavery is the greatest object of desire in those Colonies, where it was unhappily introduced in their infant state. But previous to the enfranchisement of the slaves we have, it is necessary to exclude all further importations from Africa. Yet our repeated attempts to effect this by prohibitions, and by imposing duties which might amount to a prohibition, have been hitherto defeated by his Majesty's negative. Thus preferring the immediate advantages of a few African corsairs to the lasting interests of the American States, and to the rights of human nature, deeply wounded by this infamous practice. Nay, the single interposition of an interested individual, against a law, was scarcely ever known to fail of success, though in the opposite scale were placed the interests of a whole country. That this is so shameful an abuse of a power trusted with his Majesty for other purposes, as if not reformed, would call for some legal restrictions.

With equal inattention to the necessities of his people here, has his Majesty permitted our laws to lie neglected in England for years, neither confirming them by his assent nor annulling them by his negative; so that such of them as have no suspending clause, we hold on the most precarious of all tenures, his Majesty's will, and such of them as suspend themselves till his Majesty's assent be obtained, we have feared might be called into existence at some future and distant period, when time and change of circumstances shall have rendered them destructive to his people here. And to render this grievance still more oppressive, his Majesty, by his instructions, have laid his Governours under such restrictions that they can pass no law of any moment, unless it have such suspending clause; so that, however immediate may be the call for Legislative interposition, the law cannot be executed till it has twice crossed the Atlantic, by which time the evil may have spent its whole force.

But in what terms, reconcileable to Majesty, and at the same time to truth, shall we speak of a late instruction to his Majesty's Governour of the Colony of Virginia, by which he is forbidden to assent to any law for the division of a county, unless the new county will consent to have no Representative in Assembly? That Colony has as yet fixed no boundary to the Westward. Their Western counties, therefore, are of indefinite extent, some of them are actually seated many hundred miles from their Eastern limits. Is it possible, then, that his Majesty can have bestowed a single thought on the situation of those people, who, in order to obtain justice for injuries, however great or small, must, by the laws of that Colony, attend their County Court, at such a distance, with all their witnesses, monthly, till their litigation be determined? Or, does his Majesty seriously wish, and publish it to the world, that his subjects should give up the glorious right of representation, with all the benefits derived from that, and submit themselves the absolute slaves of his sovereign will? Or, is it rather meant to confine the Legislative body to their present numbers, that they may be the cheaper bargain whenever they shall become worth a purchase.

One of the articles of impeachment against Tresilian, and the other Judges of Westminster Hall, in the reign of Richard the Second, for which they suffered death as traitors to their country, was, that they advised the King that he might dissolve his Parliament at any time; and succeeding Kings have adopted the opinion of these unjust Judges. Since the establishment, however, of the British Constitution, at the glorious Revolution, on its free and ancient principles, neither his Majesty, nor his ancestors, have exercised such a power of dissolution in the Island of Great Britain; and when his Majesty was petitioned by the united voice of his people there, to dissolve the present Parliament, who had become obnoxious to them, his Ministers were heard to declare in open Parliament, that his Majesty possessed no such power by the Constitution. But how different their language and his practice here! To declare, as their duty required, the known rights of their country, to oppose the usurpations of every foreign judicature, to disregard the imperious mandates of a Minister or Governour, have been the avowed causes of dissolving Houses of Representatives in America. But if such powers be really vested in his Majesty, can he suppose they are there placed to awe the Members from such purposes as these? When the representative body have lost the confidence of their constituents, when they have notoriously made sale of their most valuable rights, when they have assumed to themselves powers which the people never put into their hands, then, indeed, their continuing in office becomes dangerous to the state, and calls for an exercise of the power of dissolution. Such being the causes for which the representative body should, and should not, be dissolved, will it not appear strange to an unbiassed observer that that of Great Britain was not dissolved, while those of the Colonies have repeatedly incurred that sentence?

But your Majesty, or your Governours, have carried this power beyond every limit known, or provided for, by the laws. After dissolving one House of Representatives they have refused to call another, so that for a great length of time, the Legislature, provided by the laws, has been out of existence. From the nature of things, every society must at all times possess within itself the sovereign powers of legislation. The feelings of human nature revolt against the supposition of a state so situated as that it may not in any emergency provide against dangers which perhaps threaten immediate ruin. While those bodies are in existence, to whom the people have delegated the powers of legislation, they alone possess and may exercise those powers; but when they are dissolved, by the lopping off one or more of their branches, the power reverts to the people, who may exercise it to unlimited extent, either in assembling together in person, sending Deputies, or in any other way they may think proper. We forbear to trace consequences any further; the dangers are conspicuous with which this practice is replete.

That we shall at this time also take notice of an error in the nature of our landholdings, which crept in at a very early period of our settlement. The introduction of the feudal tenures into the Kingdom of England, though ancient, is well enough understood to set this matter in a proper light. In the earlier ages of the Saxon settlement, feudal holdings were certainly altogether unknown, and very few, if any, had been introduced at the time of the Norman conquest. Our Saxon ancestors held their lands, as they did their personal property, in absolute dominion, disencumbered with any superiour, answering nearly to the nature of those possessions which the feudalists term allodial, William, the Norman, first introduced that system generally. The lands which had belonged to those who fell in the battle of Hastings, and in the subsequent insurrections of his reign, formed a considerable proportion of the lands of the whole Kingdom. These he granted out, subject to feudal duties, as did he also those of a great number of his new subjects, who, by persuasions or threats, were induced to surrender them for that purpose. But still much was left in the hands of his Saxon subjects, held of no superiour, and not subject to feudal conditions. These, therefore, by express laws, enacted to render uniform the system of military defence were made liable to the same military duties, as if they had been feuds; and the Norman lawyers soon found means to saddle them also with all other feudal burdens. But still they had not been surrendered to the King; they were not derived from his grant, and, therefore, they were not holden of him. A general principle indeed was introduced, that "all lands in England were held either mediately or immediately of "the Crown;" but this was borrowed from those holdings which were truly feudal, and only applied to others for the purposes of illustration. Feudal holdings were, therefore, but exceptions out of the Saxon laws of possession, under which all lands were held in absolute right. These, therefore, still form the basis, or ground-work, of the common law, to prevail wheresoever the exceptions have not taken place. America was not conquered by William, the Norman, nor its lands surrendered to him, or any of his successors. Possessions there are undoubtedly of the allodial nature. Our ancestors, however, who migrated hither, were farmers, not lawyers. The fictitious principle that all lands belong originally to the King, they were early persuaded to believe real; and accordingly took grants of their own lands from the Crown. And while the Crown continued to grant for small sums, and on reasonable rents, there was no inducement to arrest the error, and lay it open to the publick view. But his Majesty has lately taken on him to advance the terms of purchase, and of holding to the double of what they were, by which means the acquisition of lands being rendered difficult, the population of our country is likely to be checked. It is time, therefore, for us to lay this matter before his Majesty, and to declare that he has no right to grant lands of himself. From the nature and purposes of civil institutions, all the lands within the limits which any particular society has circumscribed around itself are assumed by that society, and subject to their allotment only. This may be done by themselves assembled collectively, or by their Legislature, to whom they have delegated sovereign authority; and if they are allotted in neither of these ways, each individual of the society may appropriate to himself such lands as he finds vacant, and occupancy will give him title.

That in order to enforce the arbitrary measures before complained of, his Majesty has, from time to time, sent among us large bodies of armed forces, not made up of the people here, not raised by the authority of our laws. Did his Majesty possess such a right as this, it might swallow up all our other rights whenever he should think proper. But his Majesty has no right to land a single armed man on our shores, and those whom he sends here are liable to our laws made for the suppression and punishment of riots, routs, and unlawful assemblies; or are hostile bodies, invading us in defiance of law. When in the course of the late war it became expedient that a body of Hanoverian troops should be brought over for the defence of Great Britain, his Majesty's grandfather, our late Sovereign, did not pretend to introduce them under any authority he possessed. Such a measure would have given just alarm to his subjects in Great Britain, whose liberties would not be safe if armed men of another country, and of another spirit, might be brought into the Realm at any time without the consent of their Legislature. He, therefore, applied to Parliament, who passed an Act for that purpose, limiting the number to be brought in, and the time they were to continue. In like manner is his Majesty restrained in every part of the Empire. He possesses indeed, the Executive power of the laws in every state, but they are the laws of the particular state, which he is to administer within that state, and not those of any one within the limits of another. Every state must judge for itself the number of armed men which they may safely trust among them, of whom they are to consist, and under what restrictions they shall be laid.

To render these proceedings still more criminal against our laws, instead of subjecting the military to the civil powers, his Majesty has expressly made the civil subordinate to the military. But can his Majesty thus put down all law under his feet? Can he erect a power superiour to that which erected himself? He has done it indeed by force, but let him remember that force cannot give right.

That these are our grievances, which we have thus laid before his Majesty, with that freedom of language and sentiment which becomes a free people claiming their rights as derived from the laws of nature, and not as the gift of their Chief Magistrate. Let those flatter who fear, it is not an American art. To give praise which is not due might be well from the venal, but would ill beseech those who are asserting the rights of human nature. They know, and will therefore say, that Kings are the servants, not the proprietors of the people. Open your breast, sire, to liberal and expanded thought. Let not the name of George the Third be a blot in the page of history. You are surrounded by British counsellors, but remember they are parties. You have no Ministers for American affairs, because you have none taken from among us, nor amenable to the laws on which they are to give you advice. It behooves you, therefore, to think and to act for yourself and your people. The great principles of right and wrong are legible to every reader; to pursue them requires not the aid of many counsellors. The whole art of Government consists in the art of being honest; only aim to do your duty, and mankind will give you credit where you fail. No longer persevere in sacrificing the rights of one part of the Empire to the inordinate desires of another; but deal out to all equal and impartial right. Let no Act be passed by any one Legislature which may infringe on the rights and liberties of another. This is the important post in which fortune has placed you, holding the balance of a great, if a well poised Empire.

This, sire, is the advice of your great American Council, on the observance of which may perhaps depend your felicity and future fame, and the preservation of that harmony which alone can continue, both to Great Britain and America, the reciprocal advantages of their connection. It is neither our wish nor our interest to separate from her. We are willing, on our part, to sacrifice every thing which reason can ask, to the restoration of that tranquillity for which all must wish. On their part let them be ready to establish union and a generous plan. Let them name their terms, but let them be just. Accept of every commercial preference it is in our power to give, for such things as we can raise for their use, or they make for ours. But let them not think to exclude us from going to other markets to dispose of those commodities which they cannot use, or to supply those wants which they cannot supply. Still less let it be proposed that our properties, within our own Territories, shall be taxed or regulated by any power on earth but our own. The God who gave us life gave us liberty at the same time; the hand of force may destroy but cannot disjoin them. This, sire, is our last, our determined resolution; and that you will be pleased to interpose with that efficacy which your earnest endeavours may ensure, to procure redress of these our great grievances; to quiet the minds of your subjects in British America, against any apprehensions of future encroachment; to establish fraternal love and harmony through the whole Empire, and that these may continue to the latest ages of time is the fervent prayer of all British America.

GEORGIA

By his Excellency Sir JAMES WRIGHT, Baronet, Captain-General, Governour and Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's Province of GEORGIA, Chancellor, Vice Admiral, and Ordinary of the same:

A PROCLAMATION,

Whereas, I have received information, that on Wednesday the 27th day of July last past, a number of persons, in consequence of a printed Bill or Summons, issued or dispersed throughout the Province, by certain persons unknown, did unlawfully assemble together at the Watch-house in the town of Savannah, under colour or pretence of consulting together for the redress of publick grievances, or imaginary grievances; and that the persons so assembled for the purposes aforesaid, or some of them, are from and by their own authority, by a certain other hand-bill issued and dispersed throughout the Province, and other methods, endeavouring to prevail on his Majesty's liege subjects to have another meeting on Wednesday the 10th instant, similar to the former, and for the purposes aforesaid; which summonses and meetings must tend to raise fears and jealousies in the minds of his Majesty's good subjects. And whereas an opinion prevails and has been industriously propagated, that summonses and meetings of this nature are constitutional and legal; in order therefore that his Majesty's liege subjects may not be misled and imposed upon by artful and designing men, I do, by and with the advice of his Majesty's honourable Council, issue this my Proclamation, notifying that all such summonses and calls by private persons, and all assembling and meetings of the people, which may tend to raise fears and jealousies in the minds of his Majesty's subjects, under pretence of consulting together for redress of publick grievances, or imaginary grievances, are unconstitutional, illegal, and punishable by law. And I do hereby require all his Majesty's liege subjects within this Province to pay due regard to this my Proclamation, as they will answer the contrary at their peril.

Given under my hand this fifth day of August, &c.,
JAMES WRIGHT.

By his Excellency's command,

THOMAS MOODIE, Deputy Secretary.
GOD save the King.

GEORGIA RESOLUTIONS

Resolutions entered into at Savannah, in Georgia, on Wednesday the 10th day of August, 1774, at a General Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Province, assembled to consider the state of the Colonies in America:

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That his Majesty's subjects in America rove the same allegiance and are entitled to the same rights, privileges, and immunities with their fellow-subjects in Great Britain.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That as protection and allegiance are reciprocal, and under the British Constitution, correlative terms, his Majesty's liege subjects in America have a clear and indisputable right, as well from the general laws of mankind, as from the ancient and established customs of the land, so often recognised, to petition the Throne upon every emergency.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That an Act of Parliament, lately passed, for blockading the port and harbour of Boston, is contrary to our idea of the British Constitution: First, for that it in effect deprives good and lawful men of the use of their property without judgment of their peers; and secondly, for that it is in nature of an ex-post-facto law, and indiscriminately blends as objects of punishment the innocent with the guilty; neither do we conceive the same justified upon a principle of necessity; for that numerous instances evince that the laws and executive power of Boston have made sufficient provision for the punishment of all offenders against persons and property.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the Act for abolishing the Charter of Massachusetts Bay, tends to the subversion of American rights; for, besides those general liberties the original settlers brought over with them as their birthright, particular immunities were granted by such Charter as an inducement and means of settling the Province; and we apprehend the said Charter cannot be dissolved but by a voluntary surrender of the people, representatively declared.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That we apprehend the Parliament of Great Britain hath not, nor ever had, any right to tax his Majesty's American subjects; for it is evident beyond contradiction the Constitution admits of no taxation without representation; that they are coeval and inseparable; and every demand for the support of Government should be by requisition made to the several Houses of Representatives.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That it is contrary to natural justice, and the established law of the land, to transport any person to Great Britain, or elsewhere, to be tried under indictment for a crime committed in any of the colonies, as the party prosecuted would thereby be deprived of the privilege of trial by his peers from the vicinage, the injured perhaps prevented from legal reparation, and both lose the full benefit of their witnesses.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That we will concur with our sister Colonies in every constitutional measure to obtain redress of American grievances, and will by every lawful means in our power maintain those inestimable blessings for which we are indebted to God and the Constitution of our country - a Constitution founded upon reason and justice, and the indelible rights of mankind.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That the Committee appointed by the meeting of the inhabitants of this Province on Wednesday the 27th of July last, together with the Deputies who have appeared here on this day from the different Parishes, be a General Committee to act; and that any eleven or more of them shall have full power to correspond with the Committees of the several Provinces upon the Continent; and that copies of these resolutions, as well as all other proceedings, be transmitted without delay to the Committees of Correspondence in the respective Provinces.

A Committee was appointed to receive subscriptions for the suffering poor of Boston, consisting of William Even, William Young, Joseph Clay, John Houstoun, Noble Wimberly Jones, Edward Telfair, John Smith, Samuel Farley, and Andrew Elton Wells, Esquires.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER DATED LONDON, AUGUST 10, 1774.

This being the time of recess from publick business, little is stirring in the political hemisphere; but to shew that your friends here are not idle, a pamphlet is enclosed, which is now circulating in this Kingdom. The spirit which has appeared in all America has given much uneasiness to our wicked Ministers, and I conjecture they will, by their wicked emissaries, try every expedient to bring about a disunion among you, when the Congress meets; therefore, with much circumspection, you should watch their motions, and take all possible precaution to defeat their attempts. It appears to me the greatest stake that ever was played for; no less than whether the Americans, and their endless generations, shall enjoy the common rights of mankind, or be worse than Eastern slaves. The trial must now come to issue, as open war is declared by the Boston Port Act; the others, for altering your Charter, and licensing the soldiery and Custom House Officers in murder and bloodshed; and above all, by the Quebec Bill.

These are the fruits of the seeds that have been sowing ever since 1764; therefore it will be necessary in your Bill of Rights, which it appears the Congress is to draw up, to specify every oppressive Act of Parliament since that period, and if that is done with decency and manly firmness, I think Lord Chatham and his friends will support it, thought it is by no means prudent to rely over much on any support on this side the water; your chief confidence must be in your own virtue, unanimity and steadiness; temper and resolution must be joined. When your Bill of Rights is agreed on, the great consideration will be how to get it confirmed here. Was the Congress composed of Deputies, regularly authorized by the Assemblies of each Province, it might be proper to have it presented to the King, by a Deputy, as an ambassador from every Colony; but as the Congress will not be so constituted, your Bill will not be received through such a medium; therefore, I suppose it must go through the old channel of the agents.

But this I would have you rely on as a thing of absolute certainty, that your Bill or Petition will not be in the least regarded, unless you can compel the merchants, manufacturers, and people of England, to join you. For this end I know of no possible means but immediately to stop all commerce with this country, both exports and imports, which plan must be steadily and with the strictest faith adhered to, until you have obtained redress. The want of American naval stores, particularly pitch, tar, and turpentine, would be most sensibly felt here immediately; tobacco alone yields above £500,000, to the revenue, which deficiency it would puzzle the Ministers in the extreme to make good.

Your Province will surely be wise and prudent enough not to enter into any violent measures without the strictest concert with the other Colonies, particularly Maryland, Virginia, and the Carolinas, because upon them depend the whole effect of the American non-exportation. The Northern Colonies have all the European markets almost for their exports; but those Colonies have hardly any but the English markets for their chief exports, which are tobacco and naval stores; therefore it will require your greatest address to get them to join in the non-exportation as well as the non-importation, for I am well convinced that the latter without the former will not avail, nor indeed will they both do, unless put in immediate practice; for if you lose the present crisis, the new House of Commons will be modelled in a year's time to the Ministerial mould, and Carleton will have forwarded the plan of the Quebec Bill, so that any resistance you can make then will be fruitless; whereas if all commerce is immediately stopped, the intelligence will be known over the whole Kingdom in the winter, when we are in the height of a general election, and then will be the best time that can be wished for the people at large to convince the candidates to serve in Parliament of the necessity there is to do you justice, by repealing all the late wicked Acts; and I think it more than probable that in such an event it would be made a stipulation with the candidates that they should use their utmost efforts to obtain a total repeal of all the oppressive Acts that you complain of. You must make the merchants feel before they will stir for you, as their conduct respecting the Boston Port Bill sufficiently evinces.

POUGHKEEPSIE (NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of Poughkeepsie Precinct, in Dutchess County, in consequence of an advertisement of the Supervisor of said Precinct, on the 10th of August, 1774:

ZEPHANIAH PLATT, Chairman.

The question was put, "Whether we will choose a Committee agreeable to a request contained in a Letter from Mr. Isaac Low, Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence in New-York?"

Which was carried in the Negative.

The following Resolves were then unanimously entered into:

1st. Resolved, That although the members of this meeting (and they are persuaded the inhabitants of America in general) are firm and unshaken in their allegiance to his Majesty King George, and are entirely averse to breaking their connection with the mother country, yet they think it necessary to declare, that they agree fully in opinion with the many respectable bodies who have already published their sentiments, in declaring that the unlimited right claimed by the British Parliament, in which we neither are, or can be represented, of making laws of every kind to be binding on the Colonies, particularly of imposing taxes, whatever may be the name or form under which they are attempted to be introduced, is contrary to the spirit of the British Constitution, and consequently inconsistent with that liberty which we, as British subjects, have a right to claim, and, therefore,

2d. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting that letters of Instruction be directed to the Members of the General Assembly for the County of Dutchess, desiring that at the next meeting of the General Assembly for the Province of New-York, they will lay before that honourable House the dangerous consequences flowing from several late Acts of the British Parliament imposing duties and taxes on the British Colonies in America, for the sole purpose of raising a revenue, and that they use their influence in the said House, and with the several branches of the Legislature, to lay before his Majesty an humble Petition and Remonstrance, setting forth the state of our several grievances, and praying his Royal interposition for a repeal of the said Acts.

3d. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that they ought, and are willing to bear and pay such part and proportion of the national expenses as their circumstances will admit of, in such manner and form as the General Assembly of this Province shall think proper; and that like sentiments, adopted by the Legislatures of the other Colonies, will have a tendency to conciliate the affections of the mother country and the Colonies, upon which their mutual happiness, we conceive, principally depends.

Ordered, That the Chairman of this meeting forward a copy of these our proceedings to the Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence in New-York, as also a copy to one of the Printers of the public papers in New-York, to be forthwith published.

By order of the Meeting,
JOHN DAVIS, Clerk.

RYE (NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS

On the 10th day of August, 1774, the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the township of Rye, made choice of John Thomas, jun. Esquire, James Horton, jun. Esquire; Robert Bloomer, Zeno Carpenter, and Ebenezer Haviland, for a Committee to consult and determine with the Committees of the other towns and districts in the County of West Chester, upon the expediency of sending one or more Delegates to Congress to be held in Philadelphia on the first day of September next. The Committee after making choice of Ebenezer Haviland, Chairman, expressed their sentiments and resolutions in the following manner, which were unanimously approved of:

This meeting being greatly alarmed at the late proceedings of the British Parliament, in order to raise a revenue in America, and considering their late most cruel, unjust, and unwarrantable Act for blocking up the port of Boston, having a direct tendency to deprive a free people of their most valuable rights and privileges, an introduction to subjugate the inhabitants of the English Colonies, and render them vassals to the British House of Commons:

Resolve, 1st. That they think it their greatest happiness to live under the illustrious House of Hanover, and that they Will steadfastly and uniformly hear true and faithful allegiance to his Majesty King George the Third, under the enjoyment of their constitutional rights and privileges as fellow-subjects, with those in England.

2d. That we conceive it a fundamental part of the British Constitution that no man shall be taxed but by his own consent, or that of his Representatives in Parliament; and as we are by no means represented, we consider all Acts of Parliament imposing taxes on the Colonies, an undue exertion of power, and subversive of one of the most valuable privileges of the English Constitution.

3d. That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the Act of Parliament for shutting up the port of Boston, and divesting some of the inhabitants of private property, is a most unparalleled, rigorous, and unjust piece of cruelty and despotism.

4th. That unanimity and firmness of measures in the Colonies are the most effectual means to secure the invaded rights and privileges of America, and to avoid the impending ruin which now threatens this once happy country.

5th. That the most effectual mode of redressing our grievances will be by general Congress of Delegates from the different Colonies; and that we are willing to abide by such measures as they in their wisdom shall consider necessary to be adopted on that important occasion.

By order of the Committee,
EBENEZER HAVILAND, Chairman.

The Committee for the town of Rye will meet the Committees of the other towns and districts in the County of West Chester, on Monday, the 22d day of this instant, at the Court House in the White Plains, to return an answer to a Letter from Mr. Isaac Low, Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence in New-York.

CHARLES COUNTY (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE.

Annapolis, August 11th, 1774.

The Committee of Charles County having notice of the arrival of the brigantine Mary and Jane, Captain George Chapman, master, in St. Mary's river, St. Mary's County, from London, with tea subject to the payment of American duty, part of which the Committee suspected was designed to be landed in this county, requested Captain Chapman, (then in Charles County) to attend the meeting of the said

Committee; in consequence whereof the Captain attended, and gave information that a quantity of tea was shipped on board his brig at London, on the 20th of May last, whereof two chests were consigned to Mr. Robert Findlay, merchant in Bladensburg; one chest to Mr. Robert Peter, of Georgetown, merchant; and the remainder to sundry merchants in Norfolk, Virginia; that the consigners of the said tea, before the shipping thereof, were acquainted with the passing the Boston Port Bill, and also of the sense of America respecting the consequences of receiving tea subject to duty imposed by the British Parliament, payable in America for the purpose of revenue; that he had received the duty in London for the tea consigned to Mr. Findlay, with direction to pay the same to the collector here on his arrival, but that no money was delivered to him in London to pay the duty on the other tea on board his vessel.

Mr. Robert Findlay, at the desire of the Committee, also attended; and having fully and satisfactorily exculpated himself of any intention to counteract the resolutions of America, by orders for the said tea, the same being sent by him to his correspondents last fall, declared his inclination to do with the tea whatever was thought reasonable by the Committee of this or any other county. The Committee thought proper, as Mr. Findlay was concerned in a store kept in Charles County, to acquaint him and Captain Chapman that the said tea ought not to be landed there, or in any other part of Maryland; and that any attempt to land the same in this county, would be opposed by the people thereof, upon which Mr. Findlay pledged his word to the Committee that the said tea should not by his order or consent be landed in America; but that he would order the same to be sent back to London. Captain Chapman also promised the Committee that he would return Mr. Findlay's tea to London, and that he would not land the tea consigned to Mr. Peter, but would return the same to London, unless Mr. Peter demanded it at his vessel's side, of which (if it happens) he promised immediately to inform the Committee of such county as should be most convenient. The Committee having transmitted intelligence of this transaction to the neighbouring counties, and Norfolk, thanked Captain Chapman and Mr. Findlay for their candid and upright conduct in this affair.

FREDERICK COUNTY (MARYLAND) COMMITTEE,

Certain gentlemen of the Committee of Correspondence for Frederick County, having received intelligence from the Committee of Charles County, that the brigantine Mary and Jane, Captain Chapman, Commander, was arrived in Wicomico from London, and that she brought eleven chests of tea destined for Virginia and Maryland; one chest whereof was addressed to Mr. Robert Peter, of Georgetown, and another to Mr. John Ferguson, of the same place, factor for Messrs. Findlay and Company, notice was immediately despatched to other gentlemen of the Committee, and a meeting was accordingly held on the 11th day of August, to deliberate what measures should be adopted on the alarming occasion.

Messrs. Peter and Ferguson were requested to attend. Mr. Peter acknowledged, that in consequence of orders communicated some time in December last, his chest of tea was shipped, and that he relied on the custom which had constantly prevailed in the Province of Maryland, since the partial repeal of the Revenue Act, to screen him from censure, and to justify his conduct in the procedure. At the same time he submitted to the sentiments of the Committee, and declared an entire willingness to abide by their determination.

It was unanimously resolved that the importation of any commodity from Great Britain, liable to the payment of a duty imposed by an Act of Parliament, however sanctioned by the practice of a part, or even the whole of the trading part of the community, is in a high degree dangerous to our liberties, as it implies a full assent to the claim asserted by the British Parliament, of a right to impose taxes for the purpose of raising a revenue in America. Therefore, in order to discourage the pernicious practice, they judged it expedient, that the tea in question should not be landed in America, but that it should be sent back in the same ship. Mr. Peter readily acquiesced, promising that he would write by the first opportunity, to prevent a delivery of it from the ship; but should it be delivered before the arrival of his orders, he requested instructions how to act, intimating a desire that in such case, it might be stored by any gentleman to be appointed by the Committee; whereupon it was resolved, that in case it should be landed here, and delivered to Messrs. Thomas Johns, William Deakins, and Bernard O'Neal, to wait the future directions of the Committee; Mr. Peter assented, and pawned his honour for the faithful performance of his engagements.

Mr. Ferguson declared, that as the tea addressed to him was the property of other gentlemen, he could only engage that should he receive it, he would immediately deliver it to the above mentioned gentlemen, Messrs. Johns, Deakins, and O'Neal, to be at the disposal of the Committee. This was likewise deemed satisfactory, and then Messrs. Peter and Ferguson were dismissed with thanks for their candid and disinterested behaviour.

The Committee having been informed that Mr. Thomas Richardson, of Georgetown, had just received a quantity of tea immediately from Philadelphia, he was sent for, and acknowledged that he had received about one hundred pounds weight, which he was ready and willing to deliver to any persons the Committee should appoint, to be safely stored until further deliberation; his proposition was accepted; his conduct highly commended; and the tea was, in the presence of the Committee, delivered to the above mentioned gentlemen, Messrs. Johns, Deakins, and O'Neal.

PROVIDENCE (RHODE ISLAND) TOWN. MEETING.

At a Town Meeting held at Providence, Rhode Island, convened by warrant, on the 12th day of August, 1774:

BENJAMIN MAN, Esquire, Moderator.

Instructions to the Deputies of this Town in General Assembly.

GENTLEMEN: The sufferings and distresses of the people of the town of Boston, occasioned by a relentless execution of that cruel edict for blocking up the port, awakens our attention and excites our compassion. Their cause is our cause; and unless aid and succour be afforded them, they may be discouraged into a hurtful submission, and Ministerial vengeance may next be directed against this Colony, and in the end alight upon all. You are therefore requested to use your endeavours at the next session of the General Assembly, to procure a grant to be made from this Colony of such sum of money as they may think fit, towards relieving and mitigating the difficulties and distresses which that town must experience from the operation of that most unrighteous inhibition, the hostile manner of carrying the same into force, and a general arrest of their liberties.

Permit us to observe, that in doing this it will be evidenced, that as a community, we would do unto others as we would that they should do unto us in a like circumstance; and that it will be a greater testimony of unanimity in the general concerns of America in this day of struggle and danger, than private contributions, and far more equal.

NORTH CAROLINA.

At a Privy Council held at Newbern, the 12th August, 1774, Present: His Excellency the Governour, the Honourable James Hasell, Lewis H. De Rossett, John Sampson, William Dry, and Samuel Cornell, Esquires.

His Excellency the Governour addressed the Honourable Members of this Board, as follows:

Gentlemen of his Majesty's Council:

I have heard, with the greatest concern, and I have read in publick newspapers and handbills, of invitations to the people in the several counties and towns of this Province to meet together to express their sentiments on Acts lately passed by the Parliament of Great Britain, and to appoint Deputies to attend, on their behalf, (with powers obligatory of the future conduct of the inhabitants of this Province) at a meeting that I understand is to be held here on the 25th instant. I also find that meetings of the freeholders and inhabitants have been accordingly already held in some places, at which resolves have been entered into derogatory to the dignity of his Majesty and his Parliament, and tending to excite clamour and discontent among the King's subjects in this Province. Under these circumstances, gentlemen, I consider it my indispensable duty to his Majesty and this country to advise with you the measures most proper to be taken to discourage or prevent these assemblies of the people, which are so inconsistent with the peace and good order of this Government; whose professed purposes will appear, at least, highly indecent, and have an evident tendency to draw his Majesty's displeasure on this Province, already labouring under the most grievous and disgraceful circumstances for want of a just and effectual civil policy.

The Council desired to take time maturely to consider the subject of the above Address till to-morrow morning.

The Governour finding that, during the absence of Mr. Howard, the circumstances of things rendered the temporary appointment of a Chief Justice necessary, recommended the Honourable Mr. Hasell for such appointment, who was unanimously approved.

At a Privy Council held at Newbern, 13th of August, 1774, Present: His Excellency the Governour, the Honourable James Hasell, Lewis H. De Rossett, John Sampson, William Dry, and Samuel Cornell, Esquires.

The Members of the Council having maturely considered the matters laid before them yesterday by the Governour, unanimously concurred in advice to his Excellency to issue a Proclamation forthwith, to discourage and prevent the meetings and assemblies of the people of this Province, mentioned in the Governour's Address of yesterday, and that they do not discern that any other measures can be properly taken on the occasion at present.

North Carolina, ss.

By his Excellency JOSIAH MARTIN, Esquire, Captain-General, Governour, and Commander-in-chief in and over the said Province:

A PROCLAMATION,

Whereas it appears to me that Meetings and Assemblies of the Inhabitants of this Province have been, in some of the counties and towns thereof, already held, and are in others appointed to be held, without any legal authority, and that Resolves have been entered into, and plans concerted, (in such meetings as are passed) derogatory to his Majesty and the Parliament of Great Britain, and that there is reason to apprehend the same inflammatory, disloyal, and indecent measures may be adopted in such future assemblies, inconsistent with the peace and good order of this Government, and tending to excite clamour and discontent among his Majesty's subjects in this Province. I have thought fit, with the advice and consent of his Majesty's Council, to issue this Proclamation, to discourage, as much as possible, proceedings so illegal and unwarrantable in their nature, and in their effect so obviously injurious to the welfare of this country. And to this end I do hereby strictly require and enjoin, on their allegiance, all and every his Majesty's subjects to forbear to attend at any such illegal Meetings, and that they do discourage and prevent the same by all and every means in their power, and more particularly that they do forbear to attend, and prevent, as far as in them lies, the meeting of certain Deputies said to be appointed to be held at Newbern on the 25th instant. And I do more especially charge, require, and command all and every his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, and other Officers, to be aiding and assisting herein to the utmost of their power.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said Province, at Newbern, the 13th day of August, 1774, and in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign.

JO. MARTIN.

GOD save the King.

At a Council held at Newbern, the 25th August, 1774, Present: His Excellency the Governour, the Honourable James Hasell, John Rutherford, Lewis H. De Rossett, John Sampson, William Dry, and Samuel Cornell, Esquires.

The Governour signified to the Board that this was the day appointed for the Meeting of certain persons called Deputies, from the several counties and towns of the Province, at this place, and that many of them were accordingly come to town; and he desired the advice of the Council whether he could take any further measures than those he had taken pursuant to their advice on the 13th instant; when, they were unanimously of opinion that no other steps could be properly taken at this conjuncture.

LETTER FROM COLONEL WILLIAM PRESTON, DATED FINCASTLE, AUGUST 13, 1774.

DEAR SIR: I received your favour, by Thomas Edger, with the papers, for which I am much obliged to you. In return, please to accept of the following intelligence from the frontiers, which, if necessary, may be supported by the most indubitable authority,

The murder of Mr. Russell and five of his companions, last Fall, at no great distance from our settlements, you have already heard of. It has since appeared that the assassins were not Cherokees, as was then thought, but a party belonging to some of the Northern tribes. Two persons, called Cochran and Foley, and three men in company with one Hayes, were killed about the same time.

In the course of this summer a number of our people have been killed and captivated by the Northern Indians, particularly Mr. Thomas Hogg, and two men near the mouth of the Great Kenhawa; Walter Kelly, with three or four other persons, below the falls of that river; William Kelly, on Muddy Creek, a branch of Greenbrier, and a young woman at the same time made prisoner. One of the scouts, called Shockley, was lately shot in this county; and on Sunday, the 7th of this instant, a party attacked three families at the house of one Laybrook, about fifteen miles from this place. Old Laybrook was wounded in the arm; three of his children, (one of them a sucking infant) a young woman, the daughter of one Scott, and a child of one widow Snyde, were killed. They scalped the children, all but one, and mangled them in a most cruel manner. Three boys were made prisoners, two of whom made their escape the Wednesday following, and were found in the woods by the scouts. The Indians were immediately pursued by several parties of militia, but they took such precaution in travelling that it was impossible to find their track. Sundry other people have also been murdered along the frontier parts of the neighbouring counties. The inhabitants of Fincastle, except those on Holstein, are chiefly gathered into small forts, also great numbers in Botetourt; as Indians are frequently seen, and their signs discovered, in the interior parts of both counties.

Such is the unhappy situation of the people that they cannot attend their plantations, nor is it in the power of the scouts and parties on duty to investigate the inroads of the enemy, as they come in small parties, and travel among the mountains with so much caution. About the last of July, one Knox, who went to the Ohio with the Surveyors in the Spring, reached this settlement, and gives the following intelligence: That, on the 13th of June, one Jacob Lewis departed from the camp, on Salt River, in the morning to hunt, and has never been heard of since; that on the 8th of July, being at the said camp, about one hundred miles from the Ohio, and nearly opposite to the Falls, he, with nine others, were surprised and fired upon by a party of about twenty Indians; that two men were killed on the spot, viz: James Hamilton, from Fredericksburg, and James Cowan, from Pennsylvania; and as the enemy rushed upon them before it was possible to put themselves in any posture of defence, they were obliged to abandon their camp, and make their escape to a party of thirty-five men who were then in that neighbourhood. Next day the whole, being forty-three men in number, after burying the dead, set out for the settlement on Clinch River, where they arrived the 29th, after making several discoveries of the enemy on the way.

This day Captain Floyd, one of the Surveyors, reached this place with the news that on the 8th of July he and three others parted with fourteen men who were also engaged in the surveying business, and went about twenty miles from them to finish his part of the work, and that they were to meet on the first of August, at a place on Kentucky, known by the name of the Cabin, in order to proceed on their journey homeward. On the 24th of July, Captain Floyd, with his three men, repaired to the place appointed, where he found that part, and perhaps all the rest of the company, had assembled according to agreement, but had gone off in the greatest precipitation, leaving him only this notice, written on a tree, "alarmed by finding some people killed, we are gone down;" upon which Captain Floyd, with his small party, immediately set out, steering for our settlements, and after an extreme, painful, and fatiguing journey of sixteen days, through mountains almost inaccessible, and ways unknown, he at last arrived on Clinch River, near Captain Russell's fort.

Captain Floyd does not well understand the notice left him on the tree, whether part of the Company had assembled at the Cabin, and that they were gone down to the camp, where he parted with them, in order to warn those who were at work in that neighbourhood of the impending danger, or whether the whole company had not met, and were departed down the Mississippi, as several in the company had before proposed returning home that way, with a view both to see the country and avoid the fatigue of returning by land.

For the satisfaction of any gentlemen who may be concerned, the names of the Surveyors and some of the principal persons not yet returned, are inserted, viz: James Douglass, Hancock Taylor, and *Isaac * * * * , Surveyors; John Willis, Willis Lee, Captain John Ashby, Abraham Hempenstall, William Ballard, John Green, Lawrence Darnell, Mordecai Batson, Jacob Soudousky, James Strother, and John Bell.

If any thing happens for the future, worthy of notice, you shall be punctually informed of it, by your tremble servant,
WILLIAM PRESTON.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM SIR JAMES WRIGHT, BART. TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED GEORGIA, 13th AUGUST, 1774.

I am sorry to acquaint your Lordship that there have been two meetings of the Liberty folks here, and some Resolutions were drawn up yesterday, but not yet published; the particulars of which, and mode of conduct, I shall fully transmit to your Lordship as soon as may be.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN LONDON TO HIS CORRESPONDENT IN WILLIAMSBURG, DATED AUGUST 14, 1774.

If you submit to the last arbitrary and tyrannical Acts of Parliament, relative to Massachusetts Bay and Quebec, there will not be a set of more abject slaves under Heaven than the North Americans. You will be obliged to dig tobacco, iron, and whatever your good and virtuous masters here want.

The Marquis of Carmarthen, a puppy just entered into the infernal pack of bloodhounds, said in the House of Commons, we sent them to those Colonies to labour for us! And so sure as England now exists (it cannot long indeed, in its present state of luxury, debauchery, and villainy) but I say, so long and so sure as it does exist in this state, if the Americans now submit, the Charters of all the other Colonies will be attacked, and treated as that of the Massachusetts Bay has already been. This is determined, I assure you. They were afraid to attack more than Boston, at first, lest it might occasion an union of the Colonies; but New-York, Pennsylvania, and South Carolina, will be struck at, because they refused entrance to the tea; Connecticut, Rhode Island, and all the old Provinces in America, impeached, because their Charters are bad; and among the rest, Virginia will be included, especially as you dared to go to prayers and fast. Remember this, and recollect, I pray, dear sir, that I do not speak from opinion, but from undoubted, incontrovertible authority. The King will recommend it in his next speech to Parliament, "finding his Colonies in North America are not properly "governed, owing to the several Charters now subsisting "in the said Colonies," &c., &c. To prepare too for the more effectual execution of this hellish plan, orders are sent to his Majesty's Catholick Province of Quebec, immediately to raise and embody four thousand of his good and faithful Catholick subjects of Canada, to be formed into four regiments, and to be commanded by Frenchmen; you may guess for what purpose. But lest you should not, I will tell you, that these good subjects, and the Indians, are to be set to cut the throats of the King's disaffected subjects of the old Provinces, who sent at their own expense, twenty thousand men last war to make the Canadians subjects of the very virtuous and pious Prince George the Third. This is as true as holy writ.

I dare not tell you how I came by the knowledge of these schemes, as it would, were it discovered, prevent me from knowing and telling you more; but I hope it will rouse the people of North America to exert themselves, to convince the world that they will not wear the chains of five hundred such traitorous and haughty tyrants. Better it is, far, to be subject to any one that ever existed, who has, and can have, only his own vanity or caprice to satisfy, than to so numerous a body of needy, luxurious, mercenary rascals, who would even sell their King, could they find another to promise the addition of one hundred pound to the Chancellorship of Great Britain, or five pound to a Gentleman Usher. I cannot guess how, or by what means, you have been persuaded, in North America, that you have any friends, really so from principle, in this country. It is true some publicly declaim, and pretend to lament the situation of their brethren on the other side of the Atlantic; as they hope, being out of place, to climb up to preferment from espousing their quarrel. But, at the same time, I can venture to say, that there is not a person, male or female, resident in Great Britain, and contributing to its taxes, from the Lord Chancellor to the shoeblack, who does not rejoice at this exertion of power; nor is there a manufacturer in England, who does not say trade will now revive, as our American subjects will be convinced we are no longer to be trifled with, and that they will now be properly punished, if they commit riots, &c., as they will be brought here and tried for their offences, by a jury of Englishmen, who will not be so complacent to them, as the rascals in their own country were (who were all liable to be tried for treason and rebellion) with ten thousand speeches to the same effect. Now, lest you should call me a declaimer, and say I represented dangers, without telling you how to avoid them, I will give you a specifick, which, if it fails to produce an immediate and effectual cure, I will acknowledge myself a quack in politicks, and declare against any further practice in state disorders; it is a remedy easily administered, and cannot, at least to sound constitutions, be unpalatable. Moreover, it is cheap, and easily procured, so that no person need advance sixpence, or go out of his own house, to procure it, as it is only an agreement to stop all exports and imports. Enter heartily and with firmness into such an association; and bind yourselves, even by an oath, not only to observe it individually, but to enforce it generally. If you do this, and these hellish Acts are not sent back to the devil in less then eight months, I will agree to be tarred and feathered, and hanged on Liberty tree afterwards; but, if you do it not, I will venture to pronounce, and declare, that for fifty years to come, the people of North America will be the most miserable of slaves. They will hold life and property at the will and sufferance of their tyrannical and profligate oppressors. It must not, it cannot be so. Americans will be free; at least I hope so, especially as you have the means so much in your own power. They are absolutely now in your hands, and you will justly merit every oppression and insult if you throw them away.

Boston, August 18, 1774.

His Excellency Governour Gage, having signified to the Honourable John Hancock, Esq., that he had no further service for him as Colonel of the Company of Cadets, the gentlemen of that corps met on Monday evening, August 14, 1774, in Boston, and chose a Committee to wait on the Governour, at Salem, and deliver him their Standard, (which he had presented to them) as they had almost unanimously disbanded themselves. The Standard was accordingly carried to his Excellency next day, which he was pleased to accept. In their address to the Governour, they say, they no longer consider themselves as the Governour's Independent Company.

SILAS DEANE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Wethersfield, August 16, 1774.

SIR: I shall make no apology for the trouble I am about to give you, as the publick service requires that the Representatives of this Colony should be perfectly masters, not only of the present, but past state of it, and its publick transactions. I hoped to have obtained from the Custom Houses, the number and size of the shipping, as well as a general state of the imports and exports, and accordingly applied; but they appear at present unwilling to give me any information on the subject, I suppose on account of the present situation of publick affairs, and the part I have taken therein. I conclude that some return has been made in consequence of a late requisition, and that you are possessed of it. This will perhaps answer my purpose on that head. The extracts made by your Honour from Governour Winthrop's manuscript Diary, I think may be of consequence, and therefore ask the loan of them, or such extracts or parts as you judge most deserving of notice, but I prefer the whole of what you lent me last Spring. The extracts made from the records of the United Colonies, put into my hands last February, at Hartford, and which I delivered to the Reverend Mr. Trumbull, may throw light on many of the early and important transactions of New England. These are two of the most material and certain sources of intelligence, relating to the first principles on which these Colonies were settled, and their conduct thereon, and therefore wish to be possessed of them, as well as of every thing else which you can in so short a time prepare and convey to me. The expectation I had of the pleasure of Captain Trumbull's company must excuse my not sending earlier for these papers. I have taken from the Secretary's office a copy of Charles the Second's letter, which is the only ancient authority of any consequence to the present controversy that I know of in his possession. I wish the modern ones were preserved in a different manner than what they are, or rather that they were preserved at all.

it is disagreeable to me to recriminate at any time; it is generally unavailing; and at the present time I know should not be permitted, but on certain prospect of better regulations for the future; but when I review the history and transactions of this Colony, and consider what immense sums must have been expended, not only in settling but defending this part of his Majesty's territories and the neighbouring Colonies, (I am confident, to the amount of many millions,) and can find no authentick record kept of it, I have scarce any patience left; but indignation and chagrin rise equal with my grief at so fatal an omission; especially as our enemies boldly assert that we have expended nothing but what we have been largely repaid for; and we have no record to contradict them. An omission of this nature in the infant state of a Colony, struggling with the hardness of a new uncultivated soil, and under continual alarms from the savages, is in a degree excusable, the more so, as they could not so much as dream of having their title to the country, and their privileges and immunities in it ever disputed by any, save an open declared enemy; but what excuse, let me ask with submission, can be made for neglecting to preserve the exact account of the charge of the last war? I was really surprised, on examining at Hartford, to find that no accounts could be procured either at the Secretary's or Treasurer's; and that I must be left to conjecture on this material point, and of course liable to contradiction beyond a possibility of supporting any assertion on the subject. Some have thought your Honour may have the account; if so, I must pray you to send it by the bearer, with the other papers you shall favour me with. Before I dismiss this subject, on which you must excuse my freedom, give me leave to suggest to your Honour, whether it may not be a seasonable step to lay before the next Assembly the propriety, and even necessity, of preserving accounts, and the history of transactions of this kind, in Some publick office, for our own as well as the information of posterity. The Office Letters to and from the Governour, and the Journal of the House, are of more importance in my view, and will hereafter be more relied on when a reference is needed to the sense of former times, on any subject, than all the other records put together; yet neither of these are preserved in any office, nor indeed any where else, that I can find; at least, they are in private cabinets, but much the greatest part have been long since used for wrappers; and several important letters to and from the late Governour Saltonstall, have been sent me by the family round garden-seeds and the like; letters that would not only do honour to him, but prove of service to the Colony, were they preserved; and surely we as well as our posterity have a right to these letters and journals. We have, as I may say, a property in them, being written by persons in our employ, and on our account. I leave the thought with your Honour to be improved or thrown by, as you shall judge proper. The post waiting, I have no time to write Colonel Williams, must therefore ask the favour of you to procure of him the Resolutions of the House of Representatives attested, enclosed in the packet you send me.

I am with the highest esteem and respect, your Honour's much obliged, and most humble servant,

SILAS DEANE.

The Honourable Jonathan Trumbull, Esquire, Governour, &c., Lebanon.

P.S. Messrs. Cushing, Adams, Paine, and Adams called on me yesterday in their way to Philadelphia. I purpose setting out next Monday, and have ordered the bearer of this to wait your commands.

REV. SAMUEL PETERS, OF HEBRON, CONNECTICUT.

Two gentlemen, one from Cumberland County, and the other from Gloucester County, arrived here, inform, that on their journey hither, on Sunday night the 14th of August, they lodged at the Reverend Samuel Peters's house, in Hebron, in Connecticut; and that about sunrise the next morning they were surprised by about three hundred men, who came to the house on horseback, about ten of whom came into the house, and informed Mr. Peters that they were a Committee chosen by the body of the people that waited without, to inquire whether he (Mr. Peters) had not wrote to England in a manner unfriendly to the rights and privileges of this Colony? Mr. Peters declared to them that he had not wrote in such manner; whereupon they informed him that they expected he would show them the copies of such letters as he had wrote to the Society for propagating the gospel in foreign parts, and copies of such pieces as he had sent and procured to be printed in any of the common newspapers, or had prepared for the press; Mr. Peters perceiving the vengeance that seemed to sit on the brows of the formidable multitude that surrounded the house, thought it prudent to show them all such papers as they requested, and did do it; first reading them to the Committee, then permitting the Committee to peruse them themselves; after which our intelligencers were examined, whether some other letters from Mr. Peters, not shown to the Committee, were not in their hands to carry to New-York? And they answered in the negative; the said Committee declared themselves satisfied that Mr. Peters was innocent of the crimes he was suspected to be guilty of, and went to their brethren, the mob, that surrounded the house, and reported that Mr. Peters was innocent; this was satisfactory to most of them. To the honour of the Committee it may justly be said, that they treated Mr. Peters with as much civility as might any way be expected from men who had forgot that it was as indecent, unjust, and cruel to terrify a British subject to such a degree, as to force him to lay open to publick view his private letters, &c., as it is by force and terrour to extort from a man all the secrets of his family.

Satisfied as this tumultuous people at first seemed to be with the report of their Committee, yet they soon afterwards made a fresh demand, that Mr. Peters should read to them a certain piece he had prepared for the press, which he did; the whole people now seemed satisfied; but soon after informed Mr. Peters that he must sign with his name at large, the same piece, and deliver it to them, for them to print or suppress, as they should think best on further consideration; and further, that he must give them under his hand, that he had not wrote, nor did not intend to write to Great Britain, relating to the controversy between her and the Colonies; all which Mr. Peters complied with. The mob now seemed quite satisfied, and a great majority of them mounted their horses to retire, thanking Mr.

Peters for his civility, &c., But about the number of twenty of the mob, headed by one Hatch and one White, tarried and insisted on Mr. Peters asking forgiveness, acknowledging his fault, &c., but as neither he nor a great majority of the people assembled could see that he had done any thing worthy of tar and feathers, he refused to do it; and after suffering much scurrility and abuse from Hatch, White, and their party, a considerable number of Mr. Peters's friends assembled, the appearance of whom struck such terrour into Hatch, White, and the other creatures that attended them, that they soon followed their more sensible friends; without administering on Mr. Peters tar and feathers, or any other violence, though it had been, for more than an hour, every moment expected that he would feel the rage and fury of these twenty more than brutish people. O how dreadful is it for innocence to be arraigned at the bar of infernal furies!

What is very remarkable, this large body of people called themselves the Sons of Liberty. O poor degenerate children! Such destroyers of liberty itself are a disgrace to their mother, if she is the Goddess of Liberty. For doth not Liberty herself allow every man to enjoy his own sentiments? Doth she not allow him to enjoy his leisure hours in contemplation? Does she forbid him committing by ink to paper his thoughts? Does she deny him the privilege of looking back on his former thoughts committed to writing only for his own use? Does she justify others, when they break the cabinet of her sons, and peep into their secrets? Are these burglarians her dutiful sons; or are they the destroyers of her family, the disgrace of their mother? Surely they are cursed children, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

JOHN GROU, Cumberland County.

JOHN PETERS, Gloucester County.

STATEMENT OF THE BOLTON COMMITTEE

Bolton, August 18, 1774.

Mr. GREEN: SIR, Please to insert what follows in your paper, and next to this Mr. Peters's Resolves, and then his Declaration, both signed Samuel Peters, and herein enclosed.

At a time when the liberties of the Colonies are so much threatened by an arbitrary Parliament, and when the loyal inhabitants of the Colonies are so universally awakened to concert such measures as may happily prove successful to the redressing of their grievances, and re-establishing the enjoyment of all their civil, natural, and religious privileges, as well as a proper harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies, to hear of any one from among ourselves, that from time to time makes it his business to write home, and by so doing, to make false representations of the measures the Colonies are taking to retrieve the difficulties they labour under, is justly alarming, and must excite every one, properly jealous of his rights, to put a speedy stop unto; as such representations retard the measures for redress, which the Colonies are so generally and loyally taking, and doubtless will be improved by a mercenary and arbitrary Parliament to our disadvantage. A report of this kind of misrepresentations, lately taking place on the Reverend Samuel Peters of Hebron, occasioned him a visit from near three hundred people last Monday, morning, about half an hour before sunrise, civilly to inquire into the truth of said report; said report being, that said Peters was about sending a packet home that same morning, by the way of New-York, expressive of the above false representations, which he had many times before done in like manner; but on said inquiry, it was found by all that could be discovered, together with his own declaration, that he never had before done, or was he then about doing such a thing; but, instead thereof, the writing which the reporter mistook for such a thing, was a number of resolves said Peters had been fitting for the Printer, which he gave up to us, signed with his own hand, before us, with his liberty for the press. As said Resolves are inserted immediately below this apology, together with his Declaration and intent for the future, next below them, signed with his own hand, we think it not needful to remark on said resolves, &c., &c., - only, we think of Mr. Peters's prefatory part of his resolves, they savour too much of arrogance, when made by himself and two or three churchmen, without any legal meeting warned for that purpose; and yet to intend them as equitable resolves (in contradistinction to the general run of the resolves of other towns) for the town of Hebron, when said town had no knowledge of them.

ICHABOD WARNER, BENJ. TALCOTT, Jun.
ISAAC FELLOWS, SAMUEL CARVER, Jun.

Bolton Committee of Correspondence.

In our names, and in behalf, and at the desire of the attendants, or said visitors from Tolland, Coventry, and Bolton.

P. S. Mr. Peters confessed that he had wrote sundry pieces of the like nature of his said resolves for the press, which his brother Solomon John Peters, our informer, did in truth think the said Reverend had sent to England.

MR. PETERS'S RESOLVES.

TO THE PRINTER: As every town seems food of shewing their opinions relative to the late Acts of Parliament, founded upon some violent conduct of the loyal people in the town of Boston, I know not why we, who are the inhabitants of Hebron, may not also be heard, though we are few in number, who are convened on this occasion. We have presumed (after reading many resolves and some histories) to resolve that the most of those multiplied resolutions are wrong, and our own just and legal - as follows:

1. All Charters are sacred to serve the end for which they were given, and no further.

2. No Charter from the King &c., can be found, in which the grantees have a right to the seas, as all our Charters bound us upon the sea coast as that runs.

3. The duty laid on teas, is not a tax upon America, because tea grows not within the limits of our Charters.

4. Since they have not placed a tax upon ours, but their own specie, which they certainly have a right to do, it is our duty not to purchase their teas, unless we have a mind to do it; and the East India Company claim no right to force us to buy their teas.

5. The King, &c., have an undoubted right to prohibit (our trade with the Dutch, or any other foreign Nation, in whole or in part, if they judge the interest of the Nation requires it.

6. The East India Company have a Charter from the Crown, and they pay £12,000,000 sterling, annually to support the Nation, only for these privileges mentioned in their Charter: one of which privileges is, that they (the East India Company) shall have the sole right to supply America, &c., with teas at two shillings and six pence sterling, by the pound, and no higher.

7. The East India Company have a purchased and equitable right to put a stop to the Dutch trade, in the article of tea; and if we will live without teas, as our fathers did in the purity of this country, the tax will not hurt us, nor will the tea trade profit the East India Company.

8. The Nation is profited six pence on each pound of tea consumed in America, sent by the East India Company, but not a farthing profit is received by the Nation from all the Dutch teas.

9. America by trading with the East India Company for their tea, have a great advantage, as their teas are the second growth, and the Dutch teas are the third growth, and a pound of second growth tea costs two shillings, when a pound of the third growth costs but eight pence in the East Indies. In Amsterdam the tea sells for one shilling; in London, two shillings and six pence; but in Boston at one and the same price. Hence is visible the reasons why the Dutch traders in Boston destroyed the English teas, viz: one shilling and ten pence by the pound, that Colonel Hancock gains by his Dutch trade, while Colonel Erring gains but six pence, by the pound, in his trade with the East India Company.

10. As one shilling and four pence by the pound, or private interest of these Dutch factors, caused this great waste of the property of the East India Company, they (the Dutch factors) in justice ought to pay for their teas out of their exorbitant gains from poor countrymen, arising from the sale of five thousand boxes of Dutch teas within two years last past.

11. The Bostonians are able to support their own poor, after Windham and other towns have paid them their legal demands.

12. We cannot find out any reasons why the good people of Windham undertook to arraign and condemn Governour Hutchinson, "for treason against his country," and those distinguished ministers, merchants, barristers and attorneys, for ignorance, insult and treason against law and common sense, only for differing in sentiments with some of their neighbours - since there were a few names in Sardis.

13. Farmington burnt the Act of Parliament, in great contempt, by their common hangman, when a thousand of their best inhabitants were convened for that glorious purpose of committing treason against the King; for which vile conduct they have not been styled a pest to Connecticut, and enemies to common sense, either by his Honour, or any King's attorney, or in any town meeting. "We sincerely wish and hope," a day will be set apart by his Honour, very soon, for fasting and prayer throughout this Colony, that the sins of those haughty people may not be laid to our charge as a Government, and we recommend a due observation of said day to all our neighbours, by giving liberally food and raiment to the indigent poor in every town in Connecticut, and also to draw up resolutions that for the future we will pay the poor their wages, and every man his due.

MR. PETERS'S DECLARATION.

I, the subscriber, have not sent any letter to the Bishop of London, or the venerable Society for the propagation of the Gospel, &c., relative to the Boston Port Bill, or the tea affair, or the controversy between Great Britain and the Colonies, and design not to, during my natural life, as those controversies are out of my business as a clergyman; also, I have not wrote to England to any other gentlemen or designed Company nor will I do it.

Witness my hand, this 15th August, 1774, at Hebron, SAMUEL PETERS, Clerk.

THADDEUS BURR TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Boston, October 13, 1774.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR HONOUR: As an inhabitant of the Colony of Connecticut, and a real friend to its invaluable rights and privileges, I look upon myself in duty bound to give your Honour this early notice of some secret machinations forming in this town, which may eventually, if not guarded against, bring our Charter into question, and be a means of curtailing, if not destroying it. Without saying any more to apologize for my troubling your Honour with this, I shall go on to give you an account of the matter in as clear and concise a manner as I am able.

In a few days after I came to town, which was the first of this month, I was informed that Mr. Peters, a Church of England clergymen from Hebron, was come to town with a design to go to England to make a representation of the treatment he had met with in Connecticut. As I knew the general character of the man, I had but little to fear from any representations he could make of himself; but when I found he was countenanced by the Governour, and his Mandamus Counsellors, the Commissioners, the body of the Church Clergy, and, in short, by all those who style themselves friends to Government, I thought he might, in conjunction with them, form some scheme that would be detrimental to the Colony. I therefore made it my business to find out as far as I possibly could what their designs were; and from the best authority, I am warranted to say that the whole body as represented before, are setting the treatment which Mr. Peters met with in its most glaring colours, so exaggerated as to exceed all bounds of truth; and are now preparing to represent to Administration that the Colony of Connecticut, as such, is determined to persecute and drive out all the Church of England Clergymen from among them.

Who is to go home with this false and malicious plan, I cannot yet find out; am rather inclined to think Mr. Peters himself. From the character of the gentlemen who have been so kind as to assist me in detecting this wicked and secret scheme, and from what I myself, as a stranger, have collected from that party, I make no doubt of the truth of it.

Thus, may it please your Honour, you have an exact account of the scheme in agitation, as far as I am able at present to collect. I shall be in town till the first of November, and should be glad of a line from your Honour that i may be informed whether it would be advisable, should I make, any further discoveries, to communicate them. If I can in any way be of service to the Colony it will give me great pleasure. I have the honour to subscribe myself, your Honour's most obedient and humble servant,

THADDEUS BURR.

New-York, November 3, 1774.

The following is an authentick account of the means whereby Mr. Peters's letters, (copies of which you are desired to publish,) came to the knowledge of the publick. I am sorry that the indiscretion of a few weak men, whose conduct evinces their ignorance of the English Constitution, and of the spirit of the religion they profess, should have brought such a scandal upon Episcopacy (or the Church of England) which in reality is inconsistent with all the unconstitutional measures of the British Ministry - which have nearly enslaved the people in Great Britain and Ireland, and occasioned all the contention and disturbance between the Colonies and the parent state.

The principles of the Church of England are so far from supporting or countenancing a persecuting spirit, or any pretensions to tyranny or arbitrary power, either in Church or State, that they lay the strongest restraints upon them, and many of the most firm and strenuous assertors of the natural and constitutional rights and liberty of the subject, in matters both civil and religious have always been, and now are to be found, among the Episcopalians, who cordially unite with their brethren of other denominations in maintaining those rights that are common to all.

After the difference between Mr. Peters and his neighbours (before published) appeared, on the concessions he made, to have subsided; his conduct again exposed him to their resentment, and, on some discoveries, he thought proper to retire to Boston. After he had been there some time, two of his friends having made a journey to Boston, on their return, were by some of the neighbours suspected of having brought letters from him to his family. A party waited the return of these men, met them at a tavern on the road, and questioned them, whether they had any letters from Mr. Peters. The men denied having any, and offered to be searched. They were believed, without further examination, and suffered to depart; but one of them was overheard, by a man who was at work behind a fence, to say, "that they might yet be searched before they got home, might be brought into trouble, and therefore had better hide the letters." The man who overheard this conversation, and probably knew what had passed at the tavern, watched them, saw them alight near a stone fence, where they made some stay. When they were gone, he informed the men who had questioned the two men at the tavern of what he had heard, and directed them to the place where he had seen the men stop. There, in a hole in the fence, the letters were found; the two men were overtaken, and again questioned, concerning letters from Mr. Peters. They denied having any, and offered to declare upon oath that they had not, but the letters being produced, they owned the bringing and hiding them, which proved the means of making their contents known to the publick.

LETTER FROM THE REVEREND SAMUEL PETERS, OF HEBRON, TO HIS MOTHER.

DEAR MOTHER: I am well, and doing business for my intended route. I hear a mob was gathered for me the day I left Hebron; what they have done I cannot yet find out. As Jonathan will be obliged to attend at New-Haven when the Assembly sits, I desire him to tell Mr. Jarvis, Andrews, Hubbard, &c., to collect all facts touching mobs and insults offered the clergy of our churches, or her members; likewise to send me a copy of the Clergy's petition to Governour Trumbull, and what he does in answer. If Jonathan is hurt, or my house is hurt or damaged, let that be transmitted to me within fourteen days, or, after that, send accounts to the care of Mr. Rice Williams, a woollen draper in London. I am in high spirits; I should be happy if my friends and relations at Hebron were provided for at these bad times, when things are growing worse. Six regiments are now coming from England, and sundry men-of-war; so soon as they come hanging work will go on, and destruction will first attend the sea-port towns; the lintel sprinkled on the side posts will preserve the faithful. I wish Hannah to take some papers which she and I laid away and bring them to me; she knows where they be; or burn them if this letter appears to be opened before it is opened by you.

Mr. Beebe and Mr. David Jones, Mr. Warner and Mr. Griffin, of Millington, must draught a narrative of their sufferings, and such words as Colonel Spencer, &c., have spoke, by way of encouragement to mobs, and let Doctor Beebe, send the same to me, to the care of Mr. Thomas Brown, merchant in Boston.

I am, &c.

SAMUEL PETERS.

THE REVEREND SAMUEL PETERS TO THE REVEREND DOCTOR ACHMUTY OF NEW YORK.

Boston, October 1, 1774.

REVEREND SIR: The riots and mobs that have attended me and my house, set on by the Governour of Connecticut, have compelled me to take up my abode here; and the clergy of Connecticut must fall a sacrifice, with the several churches, very soon to the rage of the puritan mobility, if the old serpent, that dragon, is not bound. Yesterday I waited on his Excellency, the Admiral, &c., Doctor Canner, Mr. Troutbeck, Doctor Byles, &c. I am soon to sail for England; I shall stand in great need of your letters, and the letters of the clergy of New-York; direct to Mr. Rice Williams, woollen draper, in London, where I shall put up. Judge Achmuty, &c., &c., will do all things reasonable for the neighbouring charter; necessity calls for such friendship, as the head is sick, and the heart faint, and spiritual iniquity rides in high places with halberts, pistols, and swords. See the Proclamation I send you by my nephew, and their pious Sabbath day, the 4th of last month, when the preachers and magistrates left the pulpits, &c., for the gun and drum, and set off for Boston, cursing the King and Lord North, General Gage, the Bishops and their cursed Curates, and the Church of England. And for my telling the church people not to take up arms, &c., it being high treason, &c., the Sons of Liberty have almost killed one of my church, tarred and feathered two, abused others; and on the sixth day destroyed my windows, and rent my clothes, even my gown, &c., crying out, down with the church, the rags of Popery, &c.; their rebellion is obvious; treason is common; and robbery is their daily diversion; the Lord deliver us from anarchy. The bounds of New-York may directly extend to Connecticut river, Boston meet them, and New-Hampshire take the Province of Maine, and Rhode Island be swallowed up as Dathan. Pray lose no time, nor fear worse times than attend,

Reverend sir, your very humble servant,

SAMUEL PETERS.

N. B. I wrote to the Clergy of Connecticut; the letters may be intercepted; pray acquaint Mr. Dibble, &c.

JOEL WHITE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Bolton, November 30, 1774.

SIR: Agreeable to your Honour's request, I have waited on part of the Committee, others living at a distance in neighbouring towns have omitted, relative to Mr. Samuel Peters's affair, and here is enclosed as your Hononr may see. As to the last transaction, in September last, the Committee, as I understand, were Captain Seth Wright, Captain Asahel Clark, and Mr. Hill, of Lebanon, and Mr. Larrabee, of Windham, &c.

Sir, I am your dutiful and humble servant,

JOEL WHITE.

To the Honourable Jonathan Trumbull, Esquire.

We, the subscribers, being desired by Joel White, Esquire, to give a narrative of our treatment to Mr. Samuel Peters, of Hebron, we, with some others being informed by Captain John Peters, brother to the said Samuel, had reported that the said Samuel had, at sundry times before, wrote, and then had sundry letters prepared to be sent home by the way of New-York, big with reflections upon this Colony, on account of the measures they are taking to get a redress of the grievances they have, with the other Colonies, laboured under for a long time by (as we say) an arbitrary Ministry, did, with the advice of the principal inhabitants of the town of Bolton, with the assistance of a large number of people from the neighbouring towns, near three hundred, upon the 15th day of August last, wait upon the said Samuel Peters, before sunrise, civilly to inquire into the matters contained in said reports, we being, with sundry others, chosen a Committee to wait upon the said Peters. - Do report as followeth, viz: That, on said day, did wait upon the said Peters, at his own door, and informed him our business. He asked us to walk into his house; there he seemed to be frank and free to inform us into the matters contained in the said report, and produced a number of Resolves which we caused to be published in the New-London Gazette, No. 564, and solemnly declared, upon the faith of a Priest, that he never had nor never would write home to any person, during his natural life, touching said controversy; which engagement seemed satisfactory, and so left him without injuring his person or interest, with his thanks for our kind treatment.

Witness our hands this 29th day of November, A. D., 1774.

SAUL ALVORD, SAMUEL CARVER, Jr.,
ISAAC FELLOWS, ICHABOD WARNER.

Honourable Jonathan Trumbull.

Hezekiah Huntington, Vine Elderkin, Ebenezer Gray, and John Ripley, all of Windham, in the County of Windham, and Colony of Connecticut, of lawful age, testify and say, that on the 6th day of September, A. D. 1774, we, with other persons of this and some of the neighbouring towns, went to Hebron to visit and deal with the Reverend Samuel Peters, of that place, for and on account of his making and publishing sentiments and principles incompatible with our civil liberties, subversive of our Constitution, and tending to make discord and dissension amongst the people at that critical time when an union was absolutely necessary. When we arrived at said Peters's house (which we found full of people, who were said to be armed) one Captain Mack came from the house and said that Peters desired the people to choose a Committee to converse with him, which the people then accordingly did, of which we were part. The Committee (consisting of about ten) accordingly went into his house and told him the business we were upon, and also asked him whether the Resolves published in the New-London Gazette, as the Resolves of the town of Hebron, made and formed by him, were his principles? to which, after some conversation and endeavours in vain to justify them, he answered in the affirmative; for which, and many other things, particularly his saying that the people of Farmington were guilty of treason, and that the town of Boston justly deserved to suffer what they were then suffering by reason of the late Acts of Parliament, and that the Port Bill was right, or words to that import, and such like, the people were offended, and were determined to have some publick retraction and satisfaction. Peters then undertook to justify his conduct and principles, which consisted principally in trying to shew that there was no duty laid without our consent, on the article of tea, because, he said, no man was obliged to buy, and when he did buy he consented to pay the duty, and so there could be no duty thereon if no man purchased it. The Committee, after hearing him awhile, told him that their principles were fixed, and that they did not come there to dispute principles with him, and advised him to go out to the people, and perhaps he could convince them that he was right, which, if he did, we would be satisfied, and assured him, on his request, that he should return into his house again safe, and without any abuse of any kind, (antecedent to this said Peters declared that he had no arms in the house, except one or two old guns out of repair.) Upon which said Peters went out to the people, and being placed in the centre of a large number, he began to harangue the people as he did to the Committee in the house; in a few minutes after a gun was discharged in the house, which much alarmed the people. Eight or ten people were immediately sent into the house to know the occasion of the firing, and to see if there were any arms or weapons of death therein, and found several guns and pistols loaded with powder and ball, some swords, and about two dozen large wooden clubs, concealed and hid in the tense, and that the firing was accidental, in which two balls were discharged from the gun fired in the house; whereupon said eight or ten persons cleared the house of all the men that were therein, and set centinels at each door of the house, that no damage might ensue, and thereupon, said Peters having finished what he had to say to the people, which was in no way satisfactory, the Committee returned said Peters safely into the house, and were ordered by the people to draw up something in writing, which said Peters should subscribe and acknowledge, which was accordingly done; and Peters likewise drew another, and thereupon, on the like assurances as before, Peters and the Committee went out to the people again, and Peters, according to his desire, read what he wrote, which the people universally rejected; and then the one drawn by the Committee was read, (which was the same that was afterwards published to the words Holy Religion, the remainder being added afterward) was read to the people and approved so far as was then wrote, which Peters then absolutely refused to sign or acknowledge, although urged and desired to do it by the Committee, as they were afraid of the consequences, as many of the people were warm and high, and determined not to be delayed any longer, and thereupon the Committee safely conveyed him into his house again, and were persuading him to sign the paper drawn up by the Committee, as before said, when the people, impatient, weary, and hungry, would not be put off or delayed longer, rushed into the house, by the door and one window, (which was somewhat broken in the attempt) seized and brought Peters out of the house, and placed him on a horse, and carried him to the Meeting House Green, or Common Parade, about three-quarters of a mile, where, after some talking upon the premises, Peters agreed to, and did sign the paper, as was published, and read it to the people himself; on which, they, with one voice, (to appearance) accepted, and gave three cheers and dispersed. The number of people was about three hundred. The sash of one window of his house was broken, his gown and shirt somewhat torn, and it was said by some that a table was turned over, and a punch bowl and glass broken, which was all the damage that was done that we ever heard of; and through the whole the Committee endeavoured to cain and moderate the minds of the people, who were greatly exasperated by Mr. Peters's conduct, firing the gun, preparing arms, &c., &c., as much as lay in their power; and also frequently told him that it was not for his religious sentiments, or because he was a church-man, or professed the religion established in the English Nation, (before the Quebec Bill was passed) that we visited him, for some of the people were of that denomination, and that we were so far from hurting or injuring any one that did profess it, that we were ready to defend and protect them, when thereto called, with all our strength, but for the things and matters before mentioned we did visit him; and further these deponents say not.

JOHN RIPLEY, EBENEZER GRAY.

Windham, December 6, 1774.

Colony of CONNECTICUT, SS., WINDHAM County:

Windham, December 6, 1774.

Then personally appeared Hezekiah Huntington, John Ripley, Vine Elderkin, and Ebenezer Gray, subscribers to the foregoing testimony, and made solemn oath to the truth of the same. Before me, SAMUEL GRAY, Justice of the Peace.

TO THE PEOPLE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Philadelphia, August 17, 1774.

Though truth and candour fundamentally characterize the real patriot, it is to be lamented that among the many publications on the reigning subject of political declamation, it has been in general disingenuously treated, and the publick amused with partial and unfair representations of things. Will any man, acquainted with our late publications, and the popular transactions in this city, be so hardy as to assert, that the freedom of the press here has not been interrupted by the illegal menaces and arbitrary frowns of a prevailing party, to the exclusion of an honest, unprejudiced, and unawed investigation of the question, so necessary to be clearly understood in its true light - in which every freeman. in America is so nearly concerned, and into which he has an undoubted right, with British boldness, to exercise the freedom of inquiry? Those writers who have appeared to treat the subject with an aspect of fair and disinterested examination, have yet seemed to allow themselves to suppress momentous truths, under the general notion, that the truth is not to be spoken at all times. Those who enjoy the sweet solace of the conscious uprightness of their own hearts; who are actuated by the ennobling principles of goodwill to men; delighting in the peaceful pleasures of social kindness, and the harmony of civil order, are not easily provoked into publick contest, being generally over-backward in opposing the spreading influence of parties, composed of forward and assuming spirits, who are ever ready to bestow on themselves all the honours due to publick merit. It is no slight proof of the excellency of Virtue, that among the number of those unhappy men who undermine her interests and slight her salutary rules, very few are to be found who do not seek her name as a sanctuary of their forfeited honour, and labour to cover themselves with some artificial and specious likeness of her; her name has been pompously sounded amongst us; how many have sung plaudits to true virtue, while they were mocking her with offerings abhorrent to nature? How many who are practically disclaiming her influence, are yet ridiculously blowing the trumpet of their own praise, with hollow sounds of their reverence and zeal for virtue? Would to God we had a more just title to virtue, and that we were more generally honest in seeking a portion of inheritance in this durable substance! A little attention to this subject must make any one, capable of rational reflection, serious; and incline them to join with me in this desire for my country, For I would not offer such an affront to your understandings, my fellow-Americans, as to suppose you are yet to be informed that after every subtle political refinement has had full examination and experiment, honesty, truth, and integrity in individuals, must be recurred to as the sure ground-work of a right publick spirit; and in all matters, both of a private and publick nature, will, most certainly be found the very best of all policy: "Righteousness exalteth a Nation;" but sordid guile and treacherous double-dealing, bring shame upon any people, and have a direct tendency to weaken and render fruitless their most strenuous efforts in support of their invaded rights. Let us not mistake a partial, vindictive virulence of spirit, for the generous warmth and sober firmness of an honest love for our country, grounded on the equitable base of justice and constitutional right; let us not forget that we are, (by profession at least) Christians, and that that most excellent law of universal obligation is binding on us: "Whatever ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so unto them," Come, fellow-citizens! my countrymen, come! - let us step a little aside from the broad way of popular confusion, into the retired and much unfrequented walk of Christian circumspection; let us question ourselves with an earnest sincerity: what have we been about? What are we doing? Has the false fire of Faction yet enough spent itself, and subsided, to admit a supposition, that we may have been grossly imposed on, amused, abused, and misled by dishonest pretensions to patriotism and zeal for the publick good? Conscious of the uprightness of my concern for the honour of my country, I dare suppose that such is really our case. I desire not, for the gratification of any party spleen, or personal disaffection, to accuse a single man of my fellow-Americans; far be it from me to delight in passing, wantonly and unnecessarily, harsh censures on any; but I claim it as the right of every freeman to question the expediency of placing publick confidence in such unsound politicians as have been principally instrumental in exposing us to the hand of oppression, both Ministerial, Parliamentary, and popular, and who, by preferring money and popularity before honesty, have made it their interest to lead us out of the path of order and honour.

The progress of population, agriculture, commerce, opulence, and science in America, has been truly astonishing; a land of liberty and plenty, situate between the extremes of heat and cold, abounding with commodious rivers and harbours, where maritime cities afford a perpetual increasing nursery for seamen; but unhappily this has become too generally a school of corruption. Many of our merchants, not content with the moderate profits of lawful trade, have submitted to be the slaves of an exorbitant thirst of gain, and enriched themselves by defrauding the Crown of its revenue. This traffick has amazingly increased within these twenty years past, numbers becoming more reconciled to it by example, habit, and custom, and have gradually consented to amuse themselves with some very superficial arguments in its favour, such as that every man has a natural right to exchange his property with whom he pleases, and where he can make the most advantage of it; that there is no injustice in the nature of the thing, being no otherwise unlawful than as the partial restrictions of power have made it so; arguments which may be, and are adopted in extenuation of many other disorderly and pernicious practices. But do not these reasoners seem implicitly to adopt Butler's ludicrous hint, and apply it as a serious moral truth:

"The imposer of the oath 'tis breaks it;
"Not he who for convenience takes it."

I will not here insist on the obligation of that gospel precept which enjoins us to submit to every ordinance of man for conscience sake; trade and civil regulation here being too much under the influence of buccaneering policy, to expect the favourers of contraband traffick should pay any regard to Christian maxims; and because it might lead into a controversy respecting the strict and literal observance of that precept in all cases; though I confess, if applied to the matter before us, I cannot see how its force can be fairly eluded; neither will I undertake to travel into those dark mazes of confused reasoning, which, founded on false policy, suppose the acquisition of wealth to a state, however obtained, is its chief good; but rather lament, that this net of wretched sophistry has so miserably entangled the understandings of too many amongst us. It is sufficient to observe (and here I am sure of being upon safe and incontrovertible ground) that that pursuit of gain is a most iniquitous one, which cannot be prosecuted without incurring the guilt of perjury, and a train of corrupt and fraudulent practices - and that a trade, unavoidably attended with such diabolical circumstances, as directly tend to sap the foundation of morality in the minds of the people, and introduce in the community a vicious dissoluteness of manners, is more dreadful in its nature and effects, than the most that can be apprehended from Ministerial machinations. Ye virtuous parents who feel the influence of a rational tenderness for your offspring, attend to the generous emotions of sympathy, and consider, religiously consider, the melancholy prospect of that father and mother, who, having a son in whom appears a strong bias to, and a genius for a seafaring life, are about to fix him in that occupation for a livelihood! It is an opinion but too justly founded, that the unrestrained course of this dishonest dealing hath excited the politicians of Britain to meditate on the most effectual means to shackle American trade, and lay even internal burthens on American backs; is it to be wondered at, that it should have such an effect? In Great Britain, where smuggling is attended with no greater, I believe with a much less degree of guilt, the law of the land ranks those desperate votaries of Mammon with shop-lifters and pickpockets; but what is their rank among us? What is their influence on our publick affairs? A powerful influence generally attends the possession of wealth, and where that wealth is obtained at the expense of conscience it creates a separate interest incompatible with the publick weal, and introduces a very dangerous power, a power in the hands of the wicked, which, if not restrained by the righteous exertions of just law, must make the land to mourn. Have we not just cause to mourn that "Our dealers have dealt treacherously, yea very treacherously," and had a principal share in bringing the present load of difficulty (might I not add disgrace) upon their country? Where is the Government on this side the Atlantic which has offered the least restraint or discouragement to their evil doing? It must be strange blindness and depravity indeed, in any to pretend this is not a crying grievance, which loudly demands the most serious attention of those who preside in the respective Governments in America; it would be the same thing to say, seeking to avert publick calamity, or to promote the happiness of the people, are no part of their concern. Miserably degraded indeed, is the state of patriotism amongst us, when men of such vitiated and corrupt principles, have strength or influence enough to set up their particular interests in opposition to the true interest of their country, and beguile the people into a belief that it is the cause of liberty and common right. How can we, with a face of honest confidence, claim redress of the Parliamentary wrongs offered us, if we not only foster in our bosoms those dangerous enemies of our moral health and social peace, but suffer some of them to lord it over us, as the first men in the community, worthy to dictate measures for the publick good; nay, tacitly seem to approbate their insolently boasting of their crimes, as proofs of their patriotick virtue? It is now about eight years since the Act was passed declaring a right in the British Parliament to make laws binding on America in all cases whatsoever; so long have the devoted Colonies been under that tyrannical proscription; Administration with the Ministerial party in Parliament, have proceeded with a deliberate and cautious subtlety; they were doubtless apprized of the weight of the smuggling interest among us; they knew our true interests were in continual danger of being betrayed by this desperate faction; they knew whenever we deserted the constitutional ground of civil order, it must render us an easier prey; they tried expedient after expedient; they did and undid, to put our wisdom and virtue to the proof; at length they authorized the East India Company to export their teas to America and offer them for sale, subject to the obnoxious duty. How have we approved ourselves on this trying occasion? Have we acted like a wise or just people in opposing this insidious measure? Or have we not been trappan into a captious, disorderly, and unlawful opposition, giving our oppressors, thereby, an advantage over us greater than they could otherwise have had. We see them now driving over our rights and privileges with an hostile Jehu-like course, under colour of punishing our flagitious conduct; a conduct which we cannot justify.

The East India Company's attempt to vend their teas among us, naturally excited disgust in the merchant importers of dry goods, particularly in this city and New-York, where they had steadily adhered to that reasonable and orderly measure adopted a few years before, not to import that dutiable commodity; though other Colonies, disregarding that measure, did import it in such quantities, that they had a surplus to spare, some of which they sent to be sold among us, with certificates of its having paid the duty; which numbers of our people greedily purchased at an advanced price, not only on account of its superiour quality, but many had serious objections to the use of that which was introduced through the corrupt and filthy contraband channel; this excited no visible apprehensions or our liberty; patriotism supinely slumbered till the Ministry and East India Company united in aiming a blow at the Diana of American smugglers; her votaries and their adherents took the alarm; they saw it was in their favour that the merchants, from commercial considerations, were generally dissatisfied; they had the address, by inflammatory harangues and publications, to raise a ferment among the people; they were soon joined by those ambitious spirits, who are fond of any opportunity of giving themselves consequence with the populace; they made a notable stalking horse of the word Liberty, and many well meaning persons were duped by the specious colouring of their sinister zeal. Finding themselves thus strong, these new Lords made new laws, created new crimes, and devised new punishments; terrifick bulls were issued, denouncing vengeance against those who should dare to cross their measures. Where was the Printer who had the virtue or courage to publish one sober remonstrance against their outrageous career? The free trade of the King's subjects was obstructed; property was violated; and the publick thanks of the populace were demanded in justification of the conduct of desperadoes. In vain did a very few openly oppose these dangerous proceedings, and seriously remonstrate against such licentious trampling on law and civil order; the generality of the conscientious and judicious, who were sensible of the wicked root from whence it sprang, and saw its mischievous tendency were intimidated; and through a dastardly fear of exposing themselves to the outrageous insults of violent men, suppressed the honest sentiments their hearts suggested, and they in private avowed; and by this, their unmanly flinching, in the hour of trial, the publick was deprived of the benefit it would probably have received from their weight and influence.

Thus has the true strength of a real and virtuous patriotism been superseded by the traitorous fire of false spirits, which may have made us contemptible, but can never render us formidable to our oppressors. If a despotick Ministry and venal Parliament are enemies to our happy Constitution, surely these kind of patriots are not less so. It may be best not to take too particular notice of the part magistracy took during our late popular disorders; "speak not evil of dignities," the nobility of magistracy should not be degraded; true! may it therefore ever be clothed with just authority, and exercise that authority "to the terror of evil doers, and the praise and protection of them that do well."

We are, my fellow-citizens and countrymen, involved in difficulties of a very serious and alarming nature, the weight of which I sensibly feel, and am, therefore, anxious that we should no longer follow the bewildering counsels of false brethren, who, as we have sufficiently experienced, are but too ready, for base ends, to hunt us into trouble and distress from which they cannot extricate us. Let us endeavour to repair past errors; it is the first necessary step, in order to remove the evil from our understandings, which prevents our discerning the way to do right; remembering that we do not profess to be a Nation of Infidels, but to believe in the superintendence of a Providence who is just and equal in all his ways; and that, though we may cheat each other with fallacious mockeries, yet the supreme and all wise Disposer of events, the Judge of all the earth, who will do right, cannot be mocked. Let us with sincere and upright purpose of heart, apply the good and significant advice formerly given to the hypocrite: "First pull the beam out of thine own eye, that thou mayest see clearly how to take the mote out of thy brother's;" and being thus disposed to adhere to the wisdom of the just, we need not fear but that the King of Kings will furnish us with an impenetrable shield and buckler of defence.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN AT RED-STONE, RECEIVED AT WILLIAMSBURG, AUGUST 18, 1774.

On the 26th of July, our troops, to the amount of four hundred men, in eight companies, commanded by Major McDonald, met at the mouth of Fish Creek, on the Ohio, about one hundred and twenty miles below Fort Pitt. A council of war being held, it was unanimously determined to cross the Ohio, and proceed to destroy the Shawanese Town called Wagetomica, situated on the river Muskingum, about ninety miles from the said creek.

On the Sunday following, our advanced party discovered three Indians coming towards them on horseback; who, observing our party, rode off on our people firing one shot at them. On Tuesday, our advanced party met three Indians, supposed to be spies from a large body, which we afterwards found had lain about half a mile from our army. Upon our men firing upon them, they ran, giving the war whoop; which our people hearing, immediately formed in three columns, expecting to be attacked. In this order we advanced about half a mile, when we were fired upon by the Indians who lay in ambush; a battle ensued, in which we killed four Indians and wounded many more. We had two men killed, and five wounded. We drove the Indians before us about a mile and a half, they firing upon us from every rising ground, when at last they ran.

Our men being much scattered in the woods, Major McDonald collected them; and leaving a party with the wounded, marched about five miles. On our coming to the river opposite their town, we observed the Indians posted on the bank, intending to dispute our passage, each party endeavouring to conceal themselves behind trees, logs, &c., watching an opportunity to fire on each other. Here our men killed one Indian. At a council held here, it was agreed to cross lower down the river with a party in the night, to amuse the Indians. One of our interpreters called to them across the river, when a Delaware spoke in his language, asking who he was, and what he wanted. The interpreter telling his name, invited him over, with an assurance that no injury should be done him. The Indian knew him and came across the river, and informed our commander of the good disposition of the Delawares towards the white people; but that John Gibson and one Wilson, Indian traders, had been sent from Pittsburgh to acquaint them that a party of Virginians had marched against some of their towns, but they did not know which. Major McDonald told him he had particular instructions from the Governour of Virginia not to molest any Indians at peace with us, and particularly the Delawares, who had, on many occasions, behaved friendly to the white people, not only delivering several out of the hands of the Shawanese and Mingoes, but had taken great pains to dissuade them from striking the whites. The Delaware expressed great satisfaction that they were respected by the Virginians, who had been represented to them by the Pennsylvania traders as a cruel, barbarous people, that would spare none of the Indians, which had left the Delawares in great suspense what course to take. After this conversation he requested us to stay until he brought one Winganum, a Chief of the Delawares. We gave him part of such as we had. Soon after his departure he overtook two others of his Nation on their way to Winganum's, and returned with them, bringing a Mingo, who had that day been fighting against us. The Delawares were exceedingly pleased with meeting with so friendly a reception in that bloody path (as they expressed it) where the Shawanese and Mingoes had passed to murder so many of our people, especially as they had received from the traders terrible accounts of the Virginians intending to cut them off for the sake of their lands. But, said they, from our present experience, we find you a good people, or, as we are but three among so many warriors, you would now cut us in pieces; but you treat us as friends, which will make the hearts of our great men and Nation glad when we tell them this good news. We have called our people from among the Shawanese and Mingoes, and frequently advised the Shawanese not to strike the white people; but they refused to listen to our counsel, when we told them we should give them up to be cut off by the whites, which would be the case as they were only a handful. After this we parted in the most friendly manner. To prevent our destroying the Shawanese Towns, it was proposed that the Mingo should bring over two of their young warriors next morning as hostages, until their great men and ours could talk together; and he left us for that purpose.

The commander ordered Captain Michael Cresap, and Captain Hogeland, to cross the river before day, and secure the banks, to cover the landing of our men; which they did. Here we waited the return of the Mingo; but not coming as he promised, we proceeded towards their Upper Town, when we met him within two miles of the said town, coming (as he said) to inform us that the other Indians would not agree to deliver up any hostages; on which we advanced, but had not gone above two hundred yards before we discovered a party in ambush under a bank. On our endeavouring to surround them, they ran off, when about thirty of our men pursued them close, and a battle ensued, in which Captain Michael Cresap, tomahawked and scalped one Indian; and, from the quantities of blood on the woods, many must have been wounded. The Indians running, we set fire to the town, and destroyed every thing of value. As the Mingo knew of the ambush, and not informing us, we secured him; but as he had placed some confidence in us, we did not scalp him, but brought him prisoner. From this town we proceeded to the rest, five in number, all of which we burnt, together with about five hundred bushels of old corn, and every other thing they had. We also cut down and destroyed about seventy acres of standing corn. No Indians appearing, and provision falling short, we returned to Wheeling. On our march we passed through a Delaware Town, which the inhabitants had deserted; but as they were friends, we did not touch the least trifle except a little old corn, which we were then in great want of.

Since the above, we have been waiting for provisions, which are carrying out daily to Wheeling. In this quarter are now about seven hundred men, waiting for Lord Dunmore, who is expected every day, and who will, no doubt, put an end to this Indian war, and convince the Indians that their interest in future will be to live in peace and friendship with the English, and never more put confidence in a few villainous traders, who (as will appear hereafter) have been the cause of the mischiefs that have happened.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER, DATED GREAT BARRINGTON, AUGUST 18, 1774.

At the late opening of the Courts at Great Barrington, in Massachusetts Government, a body of fifteen hundred assembled, on an apprehension that the Judges were to proceed to act under the new regulations appointed by the Parliament of Great Britain, and although they were informed that the Act of Parliament for that purpose had not arrived, and consequently, the business of the Court would be conducted in the usual way, still they would not allow the Judges to proceed; giving them to understand it was required they quitted the town immediately, which was complied with. There were twelve hundred persons of the Massachusetts, and about three hundred from Litchfield and its vicinity, in Connecticut Government; a number of the latter were taken into custody by the Sheriff, and brought before the Honourable Eliphalet Dyer, Esq., who, with great solemnity and severity reprimanded the delinquents; he obliged them also to enter into recognisance for their appearance at the next Court, which measures have happily restored order and due deference to the laws in those parts of the two Provinces.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER, DATED BOSTON, AUGUST 20, 1774.

Letters by Captain Scott have this moment arrived. He brings intelligence that the people in England are rubbing up their eyes, and begin to awake. Governour Tryon is said not a little to contribute to this; he told the Lords of Council that it would not do to treat the Yorkers as he did the Regulators; they were very different kind of men. He said all the force he had could not have saved the tea, and therefore he sent it back. He was asked what he thought of the present measures adopted towards the Americans? He answered, they would undoubtedly produce a Congress. And what would be the result of that? He replied, he could not take upon him to say; perhaps the loss of all North America.

MATTHEW GRISWOLD TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

Litchfield, August 20, 1774.

SIR: At the present sessions of the Superiour Court in this place, the Attorney General for this county exhibited an information against sundry persons, inhabitants in the Northern part of the County of Litchfield, representing that on the 2d of August, instant, the persons named, with others unknown, did, in Canaan, in said county, riotously and unlawfully assemble together with an intent to disturb the peace of our Lord the King; and being so met, did proceed from thence to Great Barrington, in the County of Berkshire, and Province of the Massachusetts Bay, and there made an assault on the body of David Ingersoll, of said Great Barrington, (Esq.) and him carried from thence to said Canaan, and him did falsely imprison and restrain of his lawful liberty for the space of twelve hours against the peace &c.

The Court ordered a warrant to be issued to arrest and bring the persons complained of to answer to the matters in said complaint; which was done accordingly; and the Sheriff yesterday in the afternoon by virtue thereof brought seven of the persons complained of before this Court; who being set to the bar of the Court for the purpose aforesaid, two of the number moved for counsel, which was admitted. The counsel then moved that the process against those two should be continued to the next term; offered his reasons, which the Court judged sufficient, and ordered the continuance; and bail was taken accordingly. The evening coming on the Court adjourned till this morning, and the five other persons were held in the custody of the Sheriff, who this morning brought them into Court; they subjected themselves to trial. But the time for holding the sessions of the Court in this county being just expiring, it was impracticable to attend the trial of these persons, without breaking in and interrupting the order of the Circuit Courts of this Colony, as established by law. The Court for that reason ordered the process against the whole to be continued accordingly, and bail was given.

the persons arrested by the Sheriff were attended by about thirty persons of their friends, but no act of hostility was offered or attempted on any person. The spirit of the people in this county in general appears to condemn such disorders, and profess a firm resolution to support the administration of civil Government in this Colony, and avoid disturbances of the publick peace.

It was apprehended expedient to give your Honour early intelligence of the steps taken, and what was done in the affair referred to, which is accordingly done,

By your Honour's most obedient humble servant,

MATTHEW GRISWOLD.

To the Honourable Jonathan Trumbull, Esq., Governour.

JOSIAH QUINCY, JUN., TO JOHN DICKINSON.

Boston, August 20, 1774.

MUCH RESPECTED AND DEAR SIR: Your cordial approbation of my poor work communicates a happiness surpassed only by your kind invitation of me into the circle of your friends. Believe me, sir, that I recollect no feeling which would give me more solid, heartfelt satisfaction, than being considered by you as an honest friend, unless I except a consciousness of deserving that rank and confidence.

Your sentiments relative to that "Colony which shall advance too hastily before the rest, contrary to the maxims of discipline, &c., are no doubt just. Yet permit me, sir, to use a freedom, which your partiality seems to invite, and observe, that those maxims of discipline are not universally known in this early period of Continental warfare; and are with great difficulty practised by a people under the scourge of publick oppression. When time shall have taught wisdom, and past experience fixed bounds to the movements of a single Colony, its intemperate and over-hasty strides will be more unpardonable. But if we should unfortunately see one Colony, under a treble pressure of publick oppression, rendered impatient by the refinements, delays, and experiments of the Philadelphians, of their less oppressed and therefore more deliberate brethren; I say, if a Colony thus insulted, galled from without, and vexed within, should seem to advance and "break the line of opposition, ought it to incur the heavy censure of "betraying the common cause? the Though not to be justified, may not its fault be considered venial? Believe me, dear sir, you know not all our patriotick trials in this Province. Corruption (which delay gives time to operate) is the destroying angel we have most to fear. Our enemies wish for nothing so much as our tampering with the fatal disease. I fear much that timid or lukewarm counsels will be considered by our Congress as prudent and politick. Such counsels will inevitably enslave us - we subjugated, how rapid and certain the fall of the rest. Excuse my freedom of telling what I dread, though seeming to differ from those I honour and revere. We are, at this time, calm and temperate; and, partiality to my countrymen aside, I question whether any ancient or modern state can give an instance of a whole people suffering so severely with such dignity, fortitude, and true spirit. Our very enemies are dismayed, and though they affect to sneer at our enthusiasm, yet they so far catch the noble infirmity as to give an involuntary applause.

I see no reason to apprehend our advancing before our brethren, unless the plans they should adopt should very evidently be too languid and spiritless to give any rational hopes of safety to us, in our adherence to them. Sobrius esto is our present motto. At the urgent solicitation of a great number of warm friends to my country and myself, I have agreed to relinquish business and embark for London, and shall sail in eighteen days certainly. I am flattered, by those who, perhaps, place too great confidence in me, that I may do some good the ensuing winter at the Court of Great Britain; hence, I have taken this unexpected resolution. My design is to be kept as long secret as possible; I hope till I get to Europe. Should it transpire that I was going home, our publick enemies here would be as indefatigable and persevering to my injury as they have been to the cause in which I am engaged, heart and hand; perhaps more so, as personal pique would be added to publick malevolence.

I would solicit, earnestly, intelligence from you, sir, while in London. I shall endeavour to procure the earliest information from all parts of the Continent. As I propose dedicating myself wholly to the service of my country, I shall stand in need of the aid of every friend of America; and believe me, when I say that I esteem none more capable of affording me that aid than those who inhabit the fertile banks of the Delaware.

If you can lead me into any channel of doing real service to the common cause, I flatter myself you are not disinclined; and though it should never be in my power to cancel the obligation, it will ever be my study to remember it.

I am your most humble and obedient servant,

JOSIAH QUINCY, JUN.

JOHN DICKINSON TO ARTHUR LEE.

Fairfield, August 20, 1774.

DEAR SIR: A general Congress meets in Philadelphia the beginning of next month. These Colonies have appointed Deputies: Massachusetts Bay, New-Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, the Government on Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina. North Carolina it is said to appoint on this day; Georgia will also appoint, as we are assured.

The insanity of Parliament has operated like inspiration in America. They are mad to be sure, but in their phrenzy they have discovered invaluable truths.

The Colonists now know what is designed against them. All classes of people are surprisingly united in sentiment. The first step, in all probability, will be a general non-importation from Great Britain. The next, if grievances are not redressed, a general non-exportation to that Kingdom. If severities increase, events will inevitably take place which a man so connected with this Continent as you are, must view with inexpressible pain of mind.

The people in general through the country look forward to extremes with resolution. Of these, the brave Germans, many of whom have seen service, are in every sense truly respectable. Is it possible that the people of our mother country, so beloved and revered by us, can seriously think of sheathing their swords in bosoms so affectionate to them? Of engaging in a war that must instantly produce such deficiencies in her revenue, expose her to her natural enemies, and, if she conquers, must, in its consequences, drag her down to destruction; and, if she fails of success, as, if the Colonists have common sense, she certainly must, will involve her in immediate ruin?

Surely, sir, you may render your native country eminent services by publishing your sentiments in the present mournful prospect of affairs. That you may undertake the employment is the hearty wish of, dear sir, your affectionate friend, and most obedient servant,

JOHN DICKINSON.

ARTHUR LEE, London.

I have just heard that Georgia has appointed Deputies to attend the Congress.

WESTCHESTER (NEW-YORK) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Borough Town of Westchester, in New-York, the 20th of August, 1774,

James Ferris, Esquire, Colonel Lewis Morris, and Captain Thomas Hunt, were chosen a Committee to meet the Committee of the different towns and precincts within this county, at the White Plains, on Monday, the 22d instant, to consult on the expediency of appointing one or more Delegates to represent this county at the general Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, the first day of September next; and James Ferris, Esquire, being unanimously chosen Chairman, the Committee, after considering the very alarming situation of their suffering brethren, at Boston, occasioned by the late unconstitutional, arbitrary, and oppressive Act of the British Parliament for blocking up their port, as well as the several Acts imposing taxes on the Colonies, in order to raise a revenue in America, thought proper to adopt the following Resolutions, which were unanimously agreed to :

Resolved, First, That we do, and will bear true allegiance to his Majesty George the Third, King of Great Britain, and according to the British Constitution.

Second, That we coincide in opinion with our friends in New-York, and of every other Colony, that all Acts of the British Parliament, imposing taxes on the Colonies without their consent, or by their Representatives, are arbitrary and oppressive, and should meet the abhorrence and detestation of all good men; that they are replete with the purpose of creating animosities and dissensions between the mother country and the Colonies, and thereby tend to destroy that harmony and mutual agreement which it is so much the interest of both to cherish and maintain.

Third, That we esteem it our duty, and think it incumbent on all the Colonies in America, to contribute towards the relief of the poor and distressed people of Boston; and that a person of this Borough be appointed to collect such charitable donations, within the same, as may be offered for their support.

Fourth, That as a division in the Colonies would be a sure means to counteract the present intention of the Americans in their endeavours to preserve their rights and liberties from the invasion that is threatened, we do most heartily recommend a steadiness and unanimity in their measures, as they will have the happy effects of averting the calamity that the late tyrannical Act of the British Parliament would otherwise most assuredly involve us in.

Fifthly, That, to obtain a redress of our grievances, it has been thought most advisable in the Colonies to appoint a general Congress, we will take shelter under the wisdom of those gentlemen who may be chosen to represent us, and cheerfully acquiesce in any measures they may judge shall be proper on this very alarming and critical occasion.

JAMES FERRIS, Chairman.

PUBLICK MEETING, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA.

In consequence of letters from the Committees of Correspondence, for St. Mary's and Charles Counties, in Maryland, and from the Burgesses of Elizabeth City County, in this Colony, with information of the arrival of nine chests of tea, on board the brigantine Mary and Jane, Captain Chapman, consigned to some gentlemen of this town, a meeting of the inhabitants was requested, and accordingly held, at the Court House, on the 22d of August, 1774, when it was Unanimously Resolved, That the teas now on board the brigantine Mary and Jane, and consigned to Nell Jamieson and Company, George and John Bowness, and John Lawrence and Company, being subject to the payment of duties imposed by an Act of the British Parliament, ought to be sent back, and not suffered to be landed; and therefore, Ordered, That Captain Abyvon, Mr. Bousch, Captain Loyall, Mr. Richard Taylor, and Captain Selden, be a Committee to wait upon those gentlemen, to know whether they will comply with the above Resolution; and that they report their several answers.

The Committee accordingly waited on those gentlemen, and made the following return in writing:

"GENTLEMEN: We, your Committee, agreeable to your Resolve, have waited on the within mentioned Neil Jamieson and Company, George and John Bowness, and John Lawrence and Company, owners of the tea now on board the brigantine Mary and Jane, and acquainted them with your Resolution, who severally and respectively answered, that they were willing that the tea should be sent back.

"Certified under our hands this 22d day of August, 1774.

"GEORGE ABYVON, RICHARD TAYLOR,
"SAMUEL BOUSCH, JOHN SELDEN,
"PAUL LOYALL,

Which return being read and heard, it was Unanimously Voted, That the above Committee wait upon those gentlemen, owners of the tea, with the thanks of this meeting for their ready and cheerful acquiescence in the above Resolution.

WILLIAM DAVIES, Clerk.

LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE OF BOSTON, TO THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE FOR NEW-JERSEY.

Boston, August 22, 1774.

SIR: The Committee of Correspondence for this town have handed to the Committee of Donations a letter from you of the 28th ult., which breathes such a spirit of union and hearty concern for the rights of America, as must enkindle in every breast the highest opinion of the virtue and firmness of the inhabitants of New-Jersey. With hearts deeply impressed with gratitude, we note your kind intentions to contribute for the relief of the inhabitants of this town, suffering by means of the Boston Port Bill, and desire to know "in what way you can best answer our present necessities, whether cash remitted or articles of provision." For answer, if cash would be equally agreeable to our friends, it would be very acceptable at this time, but would leave that matter entirely to your convenience. The Christian sympathy and generosity of our friends through the Continent cannot fail to inspire the inhabitants of this town with patience, resignation, and firmness, while we trust in the Supreme Ruler of the universe, that he will graciously hear our cries, and in his time free us from our present bondage, and make us rejoice in his great salvation. Please to present our grateful acknowledgments to our friends of New-Jersey, and be assured we are, with great esteem, sir, your friends and fellow-countrymen,

NATHANIEL APPLETON, per order.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-JERSEY.

New-Jersey, August 23, 1774.

FRIENDS AND COUNTRYMEN: In a late address to you I have endeavoured to distinguish between taxes and duties; that the former ought to be imposed on our estates by our own Representatives; that the latter cannot be properly laid by any authority but that of Great Britain. That we are a part of the Great British Empire, and without losing every idea of a Colony, we cannot claim an exemption from duties and restrictions on trade.

I now beg leave to add, that this country was settled for the sole purpose of trade; and an absolute submission to the laws of the mother country, in paying customs and duties, was one of the terms our forefathers settled under. When we consider the design in planting Colonies, we should not be too fond of our own opinions, but hearken to those men who have made this subject their study, and examined it fully.

The great author of the Spirit of Laws, often quoted by our political writers, has given us not only his own sentiments, but the policy in Europe, of making these sentiments. Speaking of Colonies in his second volume, book twenty-one, chapter seventeen, he says, "The Colonies they (the European Nations) have formed, are under a kind of dependence, of which their is scarcely an instance "in all the Colonies of the ancients; whether we consider "them as holding of the state itself, or of some trading "company established in the state." Again: "The design "of these Colonies is to trade on more advantageous conditions than could otherwise be done with the neighbouring people, with whom all advantages are reciprocal. "It has been established, that the metropolis * alone shall "trade in the Colonies, and that from very good reason: "because the design of the settlement was the extension "of commerce, not the foundation of a new city, or a "new Empire; thus it is a fundamental law of Europe, "that all commerce with a foreign Colony shall be regarded as a mere monopoly, punishable by the laws of "the country."

No man can read these sentiments without perceiving the good policy upon which they are founded; for us to judge rightly of them, we should divest ourselves of those opinions we have been taught to entertain, and that ideal notion of empire, which some men among us, who have no "grace but what is founded in dominion," have been but too successful in propagating. When we do this the force of this author's sentiments will appear strongly to us, and if not fully convinced by them, we shall become so, when we reflect that one of the conditions of our forefathers emigrating to this Colony, or rather having leave to do so, was among others, that "in managing and carrying on trade "with the people there, and in passing and returning to "and fro," the Colony "should yield and pay to us, our "heirs and successors, the customs and duties therefore "due and payable, according to the laws and customs of "this our Realm."

These are the words of the first grant of this Colony, made by Charles the Second, and by the laws of trade passed in this King's reign, which are looked upon as the palladium of British commerce, as well as other Acts. The British Legislature have always made the trade of the Colonies their object, and ever kept in view the first intention of settling them. Under these laws our forefathers settled and improved their plantations; under them they and we ourselves have happily lived and enjoyed all the liberty that men could or can wish, and may yet do it if we will refuse to hearken to the sedition, nay, treason, that is daily buzzed into our ears by men who do not design our happiness, but only study their own emolument. They tell us we are cramped in our trade, and that if we permit this duty another will follow, and another, until we are ruined and deprived of all liberty.

If we, nay countrymen, have not a free trade with every Nation, remember that our forefathers settled here with this restraint, and that we are no losers by it, for in return we have been, and now are, "visibly compensated by the protection of the mother country," who has, and yet doth, defend us "by her arms, or supports us by her laws;" besides, my countrymen, as trade is the object of the mother country, we should remember that it is not her interest to destroy it, she will rather encourage it. It is true that duties will be laid for revenue or prohibition, but these will never be calculated to destroy trade; but to encourage beneficial, and destroy destructive commerce, by which the smuggler will be restrained, and the fair trader enjoy the fruits of his industry and honesty. But what right have we to enter into a quarrel about it? Let us remember our duty to the parent state, the terms on which our forefathers settled, lived, and prospered; under which we ourselves have grown rich and lived happily. Let us request the parent state to leave the taxation of our estates to our own Representatives, and, without a doubt, we may rely that Great Britain will never abridge us of our liberties, while we act within the sphere of our duty, and pursue not measures destructive of their commerce, and bid defiance to her laws.

I have hope (I wish I could say more) that the intended Congress will be productive of good to the Colonies. Should they calmly and without prejudice enter into a consideration of the dispute with the mother country, they have it in their power to preserve our liberties, and restore harmony between the Colonies and the mother state. But should they listen to, and be governed by, the folly of the times, and think that these Colonies were not planted nor protected for the extension of commerce, but for a new Empire, then will our once happy country become a scene of blood and distraction; we can have no recourse but to arms, and alas how shall we face the force of our mother country in the day of trial, when roused by our repeated insults, and enraged by our avowed declarations against her authority, "her fleets and armies siege our "cities, stop our trade, and we, by conquest, are reduced "to a state our mother country will even be grieved to "see."

PROVINCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

By the Governour. - A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas certain Handbills have been posted in sundry places in the town of Salem, calling upon the Merchants, Freeholders, and other Inhabitants of said town, to meet at the Town House Chamber, on Wednesday next, at nine o'clock in the morning, to consider of and determine upon measures for opposing the execution of divers late Acts of Parliament. And whereas, by a late Act of Parliament, all town meetings called without the consent of the Governour, (except the annual meetings in the months of March and May) are illegal.

I do strictly prohibit all persons from attending the aforesaid, or any other Meeting not warranted by law, as they will be chargeable with all the ill consequences that may follow thereon, and answer them at their utmost peril.

Given at Salem, the 23d of August, 1774.

THOMAS GAGE.

By his Excellency's command,

THOMAS FLUCKER, Secretary.
GOD save the King.

SALEM TOWN MEETING.

On Saturday, the 20th of August, 1774, printed notifications were posted up in this town, desiring the Merchants, Freeholders, and other Inhabitants, to meet at the Town House Chamber, on Wednesday the 24th, at nine o'clock in the morning, to appoint Deputies to meet at Ipswich, on the 6th of September next, with the Deputies of the other towns in the county, to consider of, and determine on such measures as the late Acts of Parliament, and our other grievances render necessary and expedient. These notifications purported, that it was the desire of the Committee of Correspondence that the inhabitants should thus assemble.

On Wednesday morning, at eight o'clock, the Governour sent a request to the Committee, that they would meet him at nine o'clock, telling them he had something of importance to communicate to them. They waited upon him accordingly, and were asked by him if they avowed those notifications? Being answered that it was known they were posted by order of the Committee, he then desired them to disperse the inhabitants, who, being assembled by them, they must abide all the consequences. It was answered, that the inhabitants being met together would do what they thought fit, and that the Committee could not oblige them to disperse. His Excellency declared it was an unlawful, seditious meeting; it was replied, neither the Committee nor the inhabitants supposed the meeting was contrary even to the Act of Parliament, much less to the laws of the Province. The Governour returned, "I am not going to "enter into a conversation on the matter; I came to execute the laws, not to dispute them, and I am determined "to execute them. If the people do not disperse, the "Sheriff will go first; if he is disobeyed, and needs support, I will support him." This he uttered with much vehemence of voice and gesture. The Governour ordered troops to be in readiness. They prepared accordingly as if for battle, left their encampment, and marched to the entrance of the town, there halted and loaded, and then about eighty advanced within an eighth of a mile from the Town House. But before this movement of the troops was known to the inhabitants, and while the Committee were in conference with the Governour, the whole business of the meeting was transacted, (being merely to choose Delegates) and the Honourable Robert Darby, Esq., Mr. John Pickering, Jun., Mr. Jonathan Ropes, Captain Timothy Pickering, Captain Jonathan Gardner, Jun., and Captain Richard Manning, were chosen Deputies from the several towns in the County of Essex, to attend the meeting to be held at Ipswich, on the 6th of September. After the meeting was over, news came that the troops were on the march; but they were now ordered to return to their camp.

Peter Frye, Esq., (by express orders from the Governour, as he declared to the Committee) issued a warrant for arresting the Committee of Correspondence, for the unlawfully and seditiously causing the people to assemble by that notification, without leave from the Governour, in open contempt of the laws, against the peace, and the statute in that case made and provided. Two of the Committee who were first arrested recognised, each in one hundred pounds, without sureties, to appear at the next Superiour Court at Salem, to answer to the above mentioned charge. The rest of the Committee who were arrested some time after have refused to recognise.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR WRIGHT TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED SAVANNAH, IN GEORGIA, AUGUST 24, 1774.

In mine of July 25th, No. 23, and August 13th, No. 24, I acquainted your Lordship that I should give you a full account of the conduct and proceedings of the Liberty people here, as soon as I knew for certain what they did or meant to do; and I mentioned that some papers were preparing by which I believed it would appear that these resolutions were not the voice of the people, but unfairly and insolently made by a junto of a very few only, but which papers are not yet completed. Every thing, my Lord, was done that could be thought of to frustrate their attempt, but this did not totally prevent it.

I have been informed of another summons and meeting to be in St. John's Parish, on the 30th instant; and, my Lord, as long as these kind of summonses and meetings are suffered, a private man take upon him to summons a whole Province, to consult upon and redress publick grievances, I apprehend there will be nothing but cabals and combinations, and the peace of the Province, and minds of the people, continually heated, disturbed, and distracted. And the Proclamation I issued against them is termed arbitrary and oppressive, and an attempt to debar them of their natural and lawful rights and privileges. In short, my Lord, if these calls and meetings are considered as illegal and improper, it will require the interposition of higher authority to remedy the evil, for the Executive powers of Government in the Colonies are too weak to rectify such abuses, and prosecutions would only be laughed at, and no grand jury would find a bill of indictment, and the persons ordering and carrying them on probably insulted and abused.

New-London, September 2, 1774.

Col. Willard, one of Governour Gage's new Council, * came to Union on Tuesday, August 24, 1774, to do some business; when two gentlemen, belonging to Windham, who had been his attorneys in the case met him, and publicly renounced him and his cause, and refused to assist him any more, as they looked upon him as a traitor to his country. The people rose, took and confined him one night, then carried him to Brimfield, where the Province people, about four hundred in number, met them. They called a Council of themselves, and condemned Colonel Willard to Neugate Prison, in Symsbury; and a number set off and carried him six miles on the way thither. Colonel Willard then submitted to take the oath hereto annexed, on which they dismissed him. One Captain Davis of Brimfield was present, who showing resentment, and treating the people with bad language, was stripped, and honoured with the new fashion dress of tar and feathers;

* The following is a list of the gentlemen appointed by his Majesty, Counsellors of this Province, agreeable to a late Act of Parliament:

Thomas Oliver, Esquire, Lieutenant Governour; Thomas Flucker, Esquire; Peter Oliver, Esquire; Foster Hutchinson, Esquire; Thomas Hutchinson, Esquire; Harrison Gray, Esquire; Samuel Danforth, Esquire; John Erving, Sen., Esquire; James Russel, Esquire; Timothy Ruggles, Esquire; Joseph Lee, Esquire; Isaac Winslow, Esquire; Israel Williams, Esquire; George Watson, Esquire; Nathaniel Ray, Esquire; Timothy Woodbridge, Esquire; William Vassal, Esquire; William Brown, Esquire; Joseph Green, Esquire; James Boutineau, Esquire; Andrew Oliver, Esquire; Josiah Edson, Esquire; Richard Lechmere, Esquire; Joshua Loving, Esquire; John Worthington, Esquire; Timothy Paine, Esquire; William Pepperell, Esquire; Jeremiah Powell, Esquire; Jonathan Simpson, Esquire; John Murray, Esquire; Daniel Leonard, Esquire; Thomas Palmer, Esquire; Isaac Royall, Esquire; Robert Hooper, Esquire; Abijah Willard, Esquire; John Erving, Jun., Esquire.

Province of MASSACHUSETTS BAY, SALEM, AUGUST 8, 1774. - His Majesty having been pleased to appoint the Honourable Thomas Oliver, Esquire, to be Lieutenant Governour of this Province, his Honour's commission was accordingly this day published in the Council Chamber, and the several oaths administered to him by his Excellency the Governour; after which the following gentlemen took the oaths necessary to qualify themselves for a seat in Council, being appointed by mandamus from his Majesty: Honourable Thomas Oliver, Esquire; Lieutenant Governour; Thomas Flucker, Esquire; Foster Hutchinson, Esquire; Harrison Gray, Esquire; Joseph Lee, Esquire; Isaac Winslow, Esquire; William Brown, Esquire; James Boutineau, Esquire; Joshua Loring, Esquire; William Pepperell, Esquire; John Erving, Jun., Esquire.

BOSTON, AUGUST 22. - Tuesday last, August 15, the following gentlemen took the oaths requisite to qualify them for their seats at the Council Board, viz: Samuel Danforth, Peter Oliver, Richard Lechmere, Jonathan Simpson, Josiah Edson, Nathaniel Ray, Thomas, Timothy Ruggles, Timothy Paine, Abijah Willard, Tho. Hutchinson, Jun., John Murray, Daniel Leonard, and George Watson, Esquires.

a proof this, that the Act for tarring and feathering is not repealed!

Confession of Colonel WILLARD, of LANCASTER:

Whereas I, Abijah Willard, of Lancaster, have been appointed, by mandamus, a Counsellor for this Province, and having without due consideration taken the oath, do now freely and solemnly declare that I am heartily sorry that I have taken the said oath, and do hereby solemnly and in good faith promise and engage that I will not sit or act in the said Council, nor in any other that shall be appointed in such manner and form, but that I will as much as in me lies, maintain the Charter rights and liberties of this Province; and do hereby ask the forgiveness of all honest, worthy gentlemen that I have offended, by taking the above said oath; and desire this may be inserted in the publick prints.

Witness my hand,

ABIJAH WILLARD.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM TAUNTON, MASSACHUSETTS, AUGUST 24, 1774.

Last Monday afternoon about five hundred of the inhabitants of this and the adjacent towns assembled on the parade, near the Court House, in order to express the disquietude of their minds on hearing the alarming news, that Daniel Leonard, Esquire, who was lately in an unconstitutional manner appointed one of the Council of this Province, has accepted and was sworn into that office; but the sudden disappearance of that gentleman prevented the friendly cautions intended by his kind and honest, though incensed neighbours; there was not the least disorder or appearance of violence in any of the Assembly; but after a modest declaration of their sentiments relating to some late Ministerial manoeuvres, and having received some pacificatory promises from certain friends of the said Counsellor, they all withdrew.

The following evening, certain sons of Belial were so daring as to fire several balls into one of Mr. Leonard's chamber windows, where it was supposed Captain Williams, the Deputy Sheriff lodged; whether this was done on account of some old grudge against him, or on account of his appearing to side with the tory party, or whether, (which is most probable) some of that party were the perpetrators of a black crime, in order to bring down the vengeance of Government upon the whigs, is not yet known. However, it is natural to observe here, that the authors and ranters of the late violent Governmental measures, may, from such popular measures, calculate (if they have any knowledge of omens) their own hidden fate, and that of all their cabal; while the hands of the populace are daily strengthening, having their souls duly touched with a sense of the wrongs already offered them, as well as of those threatened.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM TAUNTON, MASSACHUSETTS, DATED AUGUST 25, 1774.

We hear that Brigadier Ruggles, one of the new made Counsellors, being at Colonel Toby's, at Dartmouth, the people assembled there one day this week, and ordered him to depart forthwith, upon which the Colonel promised them he would go the next morning by sun an hour high; but before that time the Brigadier's horse had his mane and tail cut off, and his body painted all over; since which he took refuge at Colonel Gilbert's, at Freetown.

This morning about two hundred men met at the Ware Bridge in this town, and after chosing a Moderator, appointed a Committee to warn the towns of Dighton, Swansey, Rynham, Norton, Mansfield, Attleborough, and Easton, to meet to-morrow at eight o'clock, when it is thought two or three thousand men will be assembled, from whence they will proceed to Freetown to wait on Colonel Gilbert, and desire of him not to accept of the office of the High Sheriff, under the present administration of the new laws, and that if he should, he must abide by the consequences; also to desire Brigadier Ruggles to depart this county immediately. Such is the spirit of this county. They seem to be quite awake, and to have awoke in a passion. It is more dangerous being a tory here than at Boston, even if no troops were there.

The Deputies then proceeded to make choice of a Moderator, when Colonel JOHN HARVEY was unanimously chosen, and Mr. ANDREW KNOX appointed Clerk.

The Meeting then adjourned till eight o'clock to morrow morning.

Friday, August 26, 1774.

The Meeting met according to adjournment:

Mr. Hewes, one of the members of the Committee of Correspondence, presented several Letters from the Committees of Correspondence of the other Colonies in America, and the several Answers thereto; which, on motion, were ordered to be read.

And after the most mature deliberation had thereon:

Resolved, That three Delegates be appointed to attend the general Congress, to be held at Philadelphia sometime in September next.

The Meeting adjourned till eight o'clock to morrow morning.

The Meeting met according to adjournment; and came to the following Resolutions, to wit:

We, his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Deputies from the several Counties and Towns of the Province of North Carolina, impressed with the most sacred respect for the British Constitution, and resolved to maintain the succession of the House of Hanover, as by law established, and avowing our inviolable and unshaken fidelity to our Sovereign, and entertaining a sincere regard for our fellow-subjects in Great Britain, viewing with the utmost abhorrence every attempt which may tend to disturb the peace and good order of this Colony, or to shake the fidelity of his Majesty's subjects resident here; but, at the same time conceiving it a duty which we owe to ourselves and posterity, in the present alarming state of British America, when our most essential rights are invaded by powers unwarrantably assumed by the Parliament of Great Britain, to declare our sentiments in the most publick manner, least silence should be construed as acquiescence, and that we patiently submit to the burthen which they have thought fit to impose upon us:

Resolved, That his Majesty George the Third is lawful and rightful King of Great Britain, and the Dominions thereunto belonging, and of this Province, as part thereof, and that we do bear faithful and true allegiance unto him as our lawful Sovereign; that we will to the utmost of our power maintain and defend the succession of the House of Hanover, as by law established, against the open or private attempts of any person or persons whatsoever.

Resolved, That we claim no more than the rights of Englishmen without diminution or abridgment; that it is our indispensable duty and will be our constant endeavour, to maintain those rights to the utmost of our power consistently with the loyalty which we owe Sovereign, and a sacred regard for the British Constitution.

Resolved, It is of the very essence of the British Constitution, that no subject should be taxed, but by his own consent, freely given by himself in person, or by his legal Representatives, and that any other than such a taxation is highly derogatory to the rights of a subject, and a gross violation of the Grand Charter of our liberties.

Resolved, That as the British subjects resident in North America, have not, nor can have, any representation in the Parliament of Great Britain, therefore any Act of Parliament imposing a tax upon them, is illegal and unconstitutional; that our Provincial Assemblies, the King by his Governours constituting one branch thereof, solely and exclusively possess that right.

Resolved, That the duties imposed by several Acts of the British Parliament upon tea and other articles, consumed in America, for the purpose of raising a revenue, are highly illegal and oppressive, and that the late exportation of tea by the East India Company, to different parts of America, was intended to give effect to one of the said Acts, and thereby establish a precedent highly dishonourable to America, and to obtain an implied assent to the powers which Great Britain had unwarrantably assumed, of levying a tax upon us without our consent.

Resolved, That the inhabitants of the Massachusetts Province have distinguished themselves in a manly support of the rights of America in general, and that the cause in which they now suffer is the cause of every honest American who deserves the blessings which the Constitution holds forth to them. That the grievances under which the town of Boston labours at present are the effect of a resentment levelled at them for having stood foremost in an opposition to measures which must eventually have involved all British America in a state of abject dependence and servitude.

The Act of Parliament, commonly called the Boston Port Act, as it tends to shut up the port of Boston, and thereby effectually destroy its trade, and deprive the merchants and manufacturers of a subsistence which they have hitherto procured by an honest industry; as it takes away the wharves, quays, and other property of many individuals by rendering it useless to them; and as the duration of this Act depends upon circumstances founded merely in opinion, and in their nature indeterminate, and thereby may make the miseries it carries with it even perpetual,

Resolved, Therefore, that it is the most cruel infringement of the rights and privileges of the people of Boston, both as men and members of the British Government.

Resolved, That the late Act of Parliament, for regulating the Police of that Province, is an infringement of the Charter right granted them by their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and tends to lessen that sacred confidence which ought to be placed in the acts of Kings.

Resolved, That trial by Juries of the vicinity is the only lawful inquest that can pass upon the life of a British subject, and that it is a right handed down to us from the earliest ages; confirmed and sanctified by Magna Charta itself, that no freeman shall be taken and imprisoned, or dispossessed of his free tenement and liberties, or outlawed, or banished, on any wise hurt or injured, unless by the legal judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land, and therefore all who suffer otherwise are not victims to publick justice, but fall a sacrifice to the powers of tyranny and high-handed oppression.

Resolved, That the Bill for altering the administration of justice, in certain criminal cases within the Province of Massachusetts Bay, as it empowers the Governours thereof to send to Great Britain for trial all persons who, in aid of his Majesty's officers, shall commit any capital offence, is fraught with the highest injustice and partiality, and will tend to produce frequent bloodshed of the inhabitants, as this Act furnishes an opportunity to commit the most atrocious crimes with the greatest probability of impunity.

Resolved, That we will not directly or indirectly after the first day of January 1775, import from Great Britain any East India goods, or any merchandise whatever, medicines excepted, nor will we after that day import from the West Indies, or elsewhere, any East India or British goods or manufactures, nor will we purchase any such articles so imported of any person or persons whatsoever, except such as are now in the country, or may arrive on or before the first day of January, 1775.

Resolved, That unless American grievances are redressed before the first day of October, 1775, we will not after that day, directly or indirectly export tobacco, pitch, tar, turpentine, or any ether article whatever to Great Britain, nor will we sell any such articles as we think can be exported to Great Britain with a prospect of gain, to any person or persons whatever, with a design of putting it in his or their power to export the same to Great Britain, either on our own, his or their account.

Resolved, That we will not import any slave or slaves, or purchase any slave or slaves, imported or brought into this Province by others, from any part of the world, after the first day of November next.

Resolved, That we will not use, nor suffer East India tea to be used in our families, after the tenth day of September next, and that we will consider all persons in this Province, not complying with this resolve, to be enemies to their country.

Resolved, That the venders of merchandise within this Province ought not take advantage of the resolves relating to non-importation in this Province, or elsewhere, but ought to sell their goods and merchandise, which they have, or may hereafter import, at the same rates they have been accustomed to sell them within three months last past.

Resolved, That the people of this Province, will break off all trade, commerce and dealing, and will not maintain any the least trade, dealing or commercial intercourse with any Colony on this Continent, or with any city or town, or with any individual in such Colony, city, or town, which shall refuse, decline, or neglect to adopt and carry into execution such general plan as shall be agreed to in the Continental Congress.

Resolved, That we approve of the proposal of a general Congress, to be held in the City of Philadelphia, on the 20th of September next, then and there to deliberate upon the present state of British America, and to take such measures as they may deem prudent to effect the purpose of describing with certainty the rights of Americans; repairing the breaches made in those rights; and for guarding them for the future from any such violations done under the sanction of publick authority.

Resolved, That William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, and Richard Caswell, Esquires, and every of them be Deputies to attend such Congress; and they are hereby invested with such powers as may make any act done by them, or consent given in behalf of this Province, obligatory in honour upon every inhabitant thereof, who is not alien to his country's good, and an apostate to the liberties of America.

Resolved, That they view the attempts made by the Minister upon the town of Boston, as a prelude to a general attack upon the rights of the other Colonies; and that upon the success of this depends in a great measure, the happiness of America, in its present race, and in posterity; and that therefore it becomes our duty to contribute in proportion to our abilities to ease the burthen imposed upon that town for their virtuous opposition to the Revenue Acts, that they may be enabled to persist in a prudent and manly opposition to the schemes of Parliament, and render its dangerous designs abortive.

Resolved, That liberty is the spirit of the British Constitution, and that it is the duty, and will be the endeavour of us as British Americans, to transmit this happy Constitution to our posterity in a state, if possible, better than we found it; and that to suffer it to undergo a change which may impair that invaluable blessing, would be to disgrace those ancestors, who, at the expense of their blood, purchased those privileges which their degenerate posterity are too weak or too wicked to maintain inviolate.

Resolved, That at every future Provincial Meeting, when any division shall happen, the method to be observed, shall be to vote by the counties and towns (having a right to send Members to Assembly) that shall be represented at every such meeting; and it is recommended to the Deputies of the several counties that a Committee of five persons be chosen in each county, by such persons as accede to this Association, to take effectual care that these resolves be properly observed, and to correspond occasionally with the Provincial Committee of Correspondence of this Province.

Resolved, That each and every county in this Province raise, as speedily as possible, the sum of twenty pounds, Proclamation money, and pay the same into the hands of Richard Caswell, Esquire, to be by him equally divided among the Deputies appointed to attend the general Congress at Philadelphia, as a recompense for their trouble and expense in attending the said Congress.

Resolved, That the Moderator of this meeting, and in case of his death, Samuel Johnson, Esquire, be empowered, on any future occasion that may in his opinion require it, to convene the several Deputies of this Province, which now are or hereafter shall be chosen, at such time and place as he shall think proper; and in case of the death or absence of any Deputy, it is recommended that another be chosen in his stead.

Resolved, That the following be Instructions for the Deputies appointed to meet in general Congress on the part of this Colony, to wit:

That they express our sincere attachment to our most gracious Sovereign King George the Third, and our determined resolution to support his lawful authority in the Province; at the same time, that we cannot depart from a steady adherence to the first law of nature: a firm and resolute defence of our persons and properties against all unconstitutional encroachments whatsoever.

That they assert our right to all the privileges of British subjects, particularly that of paying no taxes or duties but with our own consent; and that the Legislature of this Province have the exclusive power of making laws to regulate our internal polity, subject to his Majesty's disallowance.

That should the British Parliament continue to exercise the power of levying taxes and duties on the Colonies, and making laws to bind them in all cases whatsoever; such laws must be highly unconstitutional and oppressive to the inhabitants of British America, who have not, and from their local circumstances cannot have, a fair and equal representation in the British Parliament, and that these disadvantages must be greatly enhanced by the misrepresentation of designing men, inimical to the Colonies, the influence of whose reports cannot be guarded against, by reason of the distance of America from them, or as has been unhappily experienced in the case of the town of Boston, when the ears of Administration have been shut against every attempt to vindicate a people who claimed only the right of being heard in their own defence.

That therefore until we obtain an explicit declaration and acknowledgment of our rights, we agree to stop all imports from Great Britain after the first day of January, 1775; and that we will not export any of our commodities to Great Britain after the first day of October, 1775.

That they concur with the Deputies or Delegates from the other Colonies, in such Regulations, Addresses, or Remonstrances, as may be deemed most probable to restore a lasting harmony and good understanding with Great Britain, a circumstance we most sincerely and ardently desire; and that they agree with the majority of them in all necessary measures for promoting a redress of such grievances as may come under their consideration.

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Honourable John Harvey, Esquire, Moderator, for his faithful exercise of that office, and the services he has thereby rendered to this Province, and the friends of America in general.

Williamsburg, August 25, 1774.

Last night an express arrived from Pittsylvania County, who brings the melancholy intelligence that several families have lately been cut off at Sinking Creek, on the line between this Colony and North Carolina, by parties of Choctaw, Shawanese, and Delaware Indians; and that it was reported there were ten Nations who had leagued to go to war against the settlements, some of them very powerful. We hear the express was sent by Colonel Gordon, of Pittsylvania, requesting a supply of arms and ammunition (of which it seems the back inhabitants are in great want) the young men there having declared their readiness to go out in their country's defence, and for the protection of their properties and friends from the cruelty and depredations of the savages.

Lord Dunmore, we hear, with about fifteen hundred men under his command, was to march in a few days for the mouth of New River, where he is to be joined by Colonel Lewis and Colonel Preston with a body of twelve or fifteen hundred more; their destination is said to be against some of the Indian towns.

Williamsburg, August 25, 1774.

Wednesday evening last an express arrived in this city, who reports that many families have very lately been barbarously murdered on the frontiers of Pennsylvania and Virginia, and that his Excellency Lord Dunmore is endeavouring all in his power to repel those hostile and inhuman savages. Colonel Preston and Colonel Lewis it seems have raised a thousand men each; and it is reported also, that a like number have enlisted under his Lordship's banner, he, as well as them, being greatly exasperated at the late cruel and intolerable treatment of the Indians towards the white people residing at or near the back parts of this Colony.

LETTER FROM LORD DARTMOUTH TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Whitehall, August 26, 1774.

It having been represented to the King that the Government of Pennsylvania has taken a resolution to extend its jurisdiction up to the line settled by Commissioners, between that Province and Maryland, although the Guardians of the Heir of Lord Baltimore have declared their incapacity in point of law to concur in a ratification of that line, and consequently their inability to take the like step on their part; and it being apprehended that such a partial extension of jurisdiction may have the effect to disturb the peace of the King's subjects settled on the frontiers of both Provinces, and may occasion violence and bloodshed, I am commanded by the King to signify to you his Majesty's pleasure, that you do desist from issuing any orders for extending the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania beyond those places where it has been hitherto usually exercised, until the present difficulty on the part of Maryland shall be removed, or until his Majesty's further pleasure be known. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

FOURTH SERIES.

DARTMOUTH.

Deputy Governour Penn.

GOVERNOUR PENN TO ROBERT EDEN.

Philadelphia, May 16, 1774.

SIR: On the receipt of your Excellency's letter of the 31st of January last, I resolved, in compliance with your request, to delay the issuing a Proclamation for the exercise of the jurisdiction of this Province up to the lines run and marked by the Commissioners under the Proprietary agreements as the boundaries between Maryland and Pennsylvania, and the three Lower Counties, till it was known whether the guardians of Mr. Harford would sign the Commissioners' Return, and instruct you to join in such Proclamation. I am now to inform you sir, that that point is reduced to a certainty, Mr. Wilmot, our solicitor, having lately advised me that the guardians have expressly refused an application made to them for that purpose, conceiving it to be a matter in which, from the nature of their trust, they cannot legally intermeddle. Although I have always been advised that the running and marking the divisional lines under the Proprietary Agreements, enforced by the decrees in chancery, and ratified by his Majesty in Council, on the joint petition of both Proprietors, is of itself final and conclusive on all parties, and that nothing is essentially wanting to substantiate these proceedings, yet I should have been glad your Excellency could have thought yourself justified in joining with me in a Proclamation to extend the jurisdiction of both Provinces, according to the lines thus settled; as it would leave without excuse those who might be disposed to give opposition to the measure on either side. But as it is now evident that Mr. Harford's guardians will give you no instructions on this head, I cannot, consistent with the justice due to the people settled on our side of those lines, who have been, and yet are, in a great measure, in a lawless state, any longer defer affording to them that protection they have so repeatedly applied for, and which they have a right to claim from this Government. I have, therefore, come to a resolution, by the advice of my Council, to issue the Proclamation ex-parte, and hope your Excellency, before you embark for England, will take such measures on the occasion as you may judge most proper to prevent the peace of the two Provinces from being again disturbed, and those valuable purposes from being defeated that induced the respective Proprietaries to enter into the agreement for settling their boundaries, and which, in their execution, have been attended with an immense expense to them. I sincerely wish you a happy voyage, and am, with great respect, your Excellency's obedient humble servant,

JOHN PENN.

His Excellency Robert Eden, Esquire.

ROBERT EDEN TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Annapolis, May 21, 1774.

SIR: The guardians of the Proprietor of Maryland, appointed by the Lord Chancellor of England, declined, I presume, signing the Return of the Commissioners in their capacity of guardians because they might think it improper to do the act without the especial direction of the Lord Chancellor, upon an application bringing the matter before his Lordship in a regular course of proceeding, their Ward being under his particular protection; but whatever may have been the reason, whether that which I have suggested, or any other, why the guardians have declined the measure, I conceive (and the Council of this Province, whom I have consulted, are of the same opinion) that it would be most improper for me, in my station, to undertake, in any degree, the exercise of a power which the guardians have refused, upon the declared principle, that it is a matter in which, from the nature of their trust, they cannot intermeddle.

What may be the effect in respect of the peace of the two Provinces of an ex-parte Proclamation issued by your Government, I do not undertake to say, nor do I doubt but that the tendency of such a measure will be most maturely considered before the execution of it, though for my own part I am not without apprehension that some disagreeable disturbances may be the consequence of such an ex-parte Proclamation, and I cannot but express my wish that it may be deferred.

I expect to take my departure from Maryland in a few days, and will embrace a very early opportunity, after my arrival in England, to communicate your letters to the guardians; but till instructions shall be sent hither to direct the conduct of the Provincial Government, I believe I may venture to assure you, no steps will be taken here to indicate a concurrence with, or an admission of, the propriety of the measure you propose.

I am, sir, &c.,

ROBERT EDEN.

The Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governour of Pennsylvania.

GOVERNOUR PENN TO RICHARD LEE.

Philadelphia, September 26, 1774.

SIR: In Consequence of letters lately received from England I have made publick notification of the Provincial boundary lines run by Messrs. Dixon and Mason, between this Province and the Lower Counties on Delaware and Maryland. The jurisdiction of this Province will be exercised accordingly up to those lines; and, although your Government has not thought itself at liberty to concur in that most just, reasonable, and necessary measure, for want of proper instructions, I am persuaded it will not give an opposition which can serve no purpose but to disturb the publick peace.

I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient, and most humble servant,

JOHN PENN

The Honourable Richard Lee, Esquire.

GENERAL BRATTLE TO GENERAL GAGE.

Cambridge, August 26, 1774.

Mr. Brattle presents his duty to his Excellency Governour Gage, he apprehends it is his duty to acquaint his Excellency, from time to time, of every thing he hears and knows to be true, and is of importance in these troublesome times, which is the apology Mr. Brattle makes for troubling the General with this letter.

Captain Minor, of Concord, a very worthy man, this minute informed Mr. Brattle that there had been repeatedly made pressing applications to him to warn his company to meet at one minute's warning, equipped with arms and ammunition, according to law; he had constantly denied them, adding, if he did not gratify them he should be constrained to quit his farms and town. Mr. Brattle told him he had better do that than lose his life and be hanged for a rebel. He observed that many Captains had done it, though not in the regiment to which he belongs, which was and is under Colonel Elisha Jones, but in a neighbouring regiment.

Mr. Brattle begs leave humbly to quere, whether it would not be best that there should not be one commissioned officer of the militia in the Province.

This morning the Selectmen of Medford came and received their town stock of powder, which was in the Arsenal on Quarry Hill, so that there is now therein the King's powder only, which shall remain there as a sacred depositum till ordered out by the Captain-General.

To his Excellency General Gage, &c., &c.

ADAM STEPHEN TO R. H. LEE.

Berkley Court House, August 27, 1774.

SIR: Lord Dunmore orders me to the Ohio with his Lordship, to endeavour to put matters on a footing to establish a lasting peace with the brave Natives, who, in my opinion, would behave well were they not poisoned by the blackguard traders allowed to go among them to their different towns. This prevents my attending the general Congress, where I would expect to see the spirit of the Amphyctions shine as that illustrious Council did in their purest times, before debauched with the Persian gold.

The fate of America depends on your meeting, and the eyes of the European world hang upon you, waiting the event. Despotism and the Roman Catholick religion is established in Canada. Can we be said to enjoy liberty, if the villain who ravishes our wives, deflowers our daughters, or murders our sons, can evade punishment by being tried in Britain, where no evidence can pursue him.

A Governour to suppose me guilty of a crime, and tell me there can be no fair trial in America, that is, there are not honest men to be found in my country to try me, he must send me home to rot in Newgate, is shocking to human nature. Could I get within musket-shot of him, I would put him to death; he should never attempt to send home another. In the mean time I must acquaint you, that the situation of America, that is, the parts of it I am acquainted with, is unhappy in not being provided with arms and ammunition. At the Congress this ought to be privately taken into consideration; a plan laid for encouraging numbers of gun-lock smiths to come in; a number of locks to be imported, with caution to prevent suspicion; and as many arms as could be got. I imagine that we want one hundred thousand stand of arms. We have great difficulty in fitting out the few men we want on this occasion. Contrive a supply of ammunition; let some be brought in by every ship. I wish the united wisdom of America may prevent it, but I expect from their determined system of arbitrary power at home, that matters will come to extremity. It appears to me, that they intend to irritate America into rebellion, and then govern us like a conquered people. Try all fair means with the greatest address to avoid it, but be prepared for the worst as soon as possible; this ought not to escape consideration at this time, and it is a thing that requires the utmost address. Let us be provided with arms and ammunition, and individuals may suffer, but the gates of hell cannot prevail against America; our greatest enemies would be the despotick tools of Canada. Before provision is made for these things, the hand of power will prevail. I wish the happy issue of your Councils, and am, with respect, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

ADAM STEPHEN.

P. S. Pardon this scrawl, I am on the march.

PALATINE (TRYON COUNTY, N. Y.) RESOLUTIONS,

Resolutions adopted by the Inhabitants of Palatine District, Tryon County, New-York, at a Meeting held August 27, 1774.

This Meeting looking with concern and heartfelt sorrow on the alarming and calamitous condition which the inhabitants of Boston are in, in consequence of the Act of Parliament blocking up the port of Boston, and considering the tendency of the late Acts of Parliament, for the purpose of raising a revenue in America, has to abridging the liberties and privileges of the American Colonies, do Resolve :

1. That King George the Third is lawful and rightful Lord and Sovereign of Great Britain, and the Dominions thereunto belonging; and that as part of his Dominions we hereby testify that we will bear true faith and allegiance unto him, and that we will, with our lives and fortunes, support and maintain him upon the throne of his ancestors, and the just dependence of these, his Colonies, upon the Crown of Great Britain.

2. That we think and consider it as our greatest happiness to be governed by the laws of Great Britain, and that, with cheerfulness, we will always pay submission thereunto, as far as we consistently can with the security of the constitutional rights and liberties of English subjects, which are so sacred that we cannot permit the same to be violated.

3. That we think it is our undeniable privilege to be taxed only with our own consent, given by ourselves or our Representatives, That taxes otherwise laid and exacted are unjust and unconstitutional. That the late Acts of Parliament, declarative of their right of laying internal taxes on the American Colonies are obvious encroachments on the rights and liberties of the British subjects in America.

4. That the Act for blocking up the port of Boston is oppressive and arbitrary; injurious in its principles, and particularly oppressive to the inhabitants of Boston, whom we consider brethren suffering in the common cause.

5. That we will unite and join with the different Districts of this county, in giving whatever relief it is in our power to the poor distressed inhabitants of Boston; and that we will join and unite, with our brethren of the rest of this Colony, in any thing tending to support and defend our rights and liberties.

6. That we think the sending of Delegates from the different Colonies, to a general Continental Congress, is a salutary measure, and absolutely necessary at this alarming crisis; and that we entirely approve of the five gentlemen chosen Delegates for this Colony, by our brethren of New-York, hereby adopting and choosing the same persons to represent this Colony in the Congress.

7. That we hereby engage faithfully to abide by, and adhere to, such regulations as shall be made and agreed upon by the said Congress.

8. That we consider it necessary that there be appointed a Standing Committee, of this county, to correspond with the Committees of New-York and Albany; and we do hereby appoint Christopher P. Yates, Isaac Paris, John Frey, and Andrew Fink, who, together with persons to be appointed by the other Districts of this county, are to compose a Committee of Correspondence to convey the sentiments of this county, in a set of Resolves, to New-York.

9. It is voted, by this meeting, that copies of the proceedings of this day, certified by the Chairman, be transmitted to the Supervisors of the different Districts of this county, and that we recommend it to the inhabitants of the said Districts to appoint persons to compose a Committee of Correspondence.

GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Salem, August 27, 1774.

MY LORD: I had the honour to receive your Lordship's separate letter, dated 3d of June, on the 6th instant, in which came enclosed two Acts of Parliament, for regulating the Government of the Massachusetts Bay, and for the more impartial administration of justice in the said Province; together with an additional instruction to the Governour; Mr. Oliver's appointment of Lieutenant Governour; and a printed copy of an amendment to the Meeting Bill for America, relating to the clause for quartering the King's troops.

No time was lost in forming the new Council. I assembled all the Members who could be collected, on so short a notice, on the 8th instant, and appointed the whole to meet on the 16th instant. The list enclosed will inform your Lordship of the names of the gentlemen sworn in; of those who have refused to accept the nomination, or are wavering, absent, or dead.

The twenty-four who have accepted the honour the King has conferred upon them, are as respectable persons as any in the Province, and the Lieutenant Governour is generally approved of by all parties. I must defer sending your Lordship recommendations to the vacancies, to another opportunity; for, though I have several in my mind, I am first to be assured of their willingness to act; and the number of Counsellors being considerable, gives time to look out for others. Your Lordship judged right, that art would be practised, on this occasion, to intimidate and prejudice; been force was attempted on Mr. Ruggles, by a number of people collected on the road, near Worcester, with intent to stop him, but he made his way through them.

My former letters have acquainted your Lordship that the Acts in question had been published here, and people have had leisure to consider means to elude them; in doing which, they are very expert. At a town meeting held at Boston, in July, in order to avoid the calling a meeting afterwards, they adjourned themselves to the 9th of August, and adjourned again on that day, to some time in October. I assembled the Selectmen, in Boston; had the clause read respecting town meetings; told them I expected their obedience to it; that I should put the Act in force; and that they would be answerable for any bad consequences. They replied, they had called no meeting; that a former meeting had only adjourned themselves.

I laid the affair of adjournments before the new Council, and found some of opinion that the clause was thereby clearly evaded, and nearly the whole unwilling to debate upon it; terming it a point of law which ought to be referred to the Crown lawyers, whose opinions is to be taken upon it, and by which I must govern myself.

Another clause of the Act is likewise referred to the lawyers, concerning the removal of Sheriffs. Upon intimating to the Council my desire to remove a Sheriff, some immediately objected that it did not belong to the Council, for that the Governour was alone empowered to remove any of the Sheriffs now in office, and that the Act only required consent of Council to remove such Sheriff as the Governour should appoint, by his own authority, and want to remove afterwards.

It was the unanimous opinion of the Council, that an Assembly should be called as early as possible, and writs will be issued for their meeting by the latter end of October.

The state of the Province was, at the same time, taken into consideration, and a letter read that I had received from Hampshire County, an extract of which I transmit your Lordship; and several Members gave an account of the state of their respective counties, from whence it appeared that the phrenzy had spread, in a greater or less degree, through all; of which I shall write more fully before closing my letter.

Since the unwarrantable impeachment of the Chief Justice, I understand he has never taken his seat upon the bench, but he has promised me to attend the Superiour Court, at Boston, towards the end of the month; and I hope he will preside also in said Court, to be held at Worcester, in September, notwithstanding the threats thrown out against him. I have engaged to meet him at Boston, to prevent violence, which, from the present system, I don't expect to meet with there; and I believe that I must attend him also at Worcester, where I am to expect it.

By the plan lately adopted, forcible opposition and violence is to be transferred from the town of Boston to the country.

The copy enclosed of a letter from the Boston Committee of Correspondence, to the several counties, will sufficiently evince the intention of those leaders, who, by said letter, emissaries, and other means, have contrived, while Boston affects quiet and tranquillity, to raise a flame, not only throughout this Province, but also in the Colony of Connecticut. The original letter is signed by the Town Clerk, though, from a caution lately observed, they omit his name in the newspaper, from whence the enclosed is taken.

In consequence of the new plan popular rage has appeared at the extremity of the Province, abetted by Connecticut, which the extract of the letter from Hampshire, read in Council, shews; it is very high, also, in Berkshire County, and makes way rapidly to the rest. In Worcester they keep no terms; openly threaten resistance by arms; have been purchasing arms; preparing them; casting balls, and providing powder; and threaten to attack any troops who dare to oppose them. Mr. Ruggles, of the new Council, is afraid to take his seat as Judge of the Inferiour Court, which sets at Worcester, on the 7th of next month; and I apprehend that I shall soon be obliged to march a body of troops into that township, and perhaps into others, as occasions happen, to preserve the peace.

The Delegates, as they are called, from this Province, are gone to Philadelphia to meet the rest, who are to form the general Congress; and it is thought it will be determined there, whether the town of Boston is to comply with the terms of the Port Bill. It is not possible to guess what a body, composed of such heterogeneous matter, will determine; but the Members from hence, I am assured, will promote the most haughty and insolent Resolves, for their plan has ever been, by threats and high-sounding sedition, to terrify and intimidate.

Some believe that the Congress has been consented to in other Provinces only to amuse those among themselves who have been so strangely violent in support of Boston, and to which their own Provincial factions have not a little contributed; others fear a non-importation, and I hear the merchants are sending for double the quantity of goods they usually import; and in order to get credit for them, are sending home all the money they can collect, insomuch that bills have risen at New-York above five per cent. From this circumstance your Lordship may judge of others; they want to force you into their terms, by threatening ruin to your merchants and manufacturers; and at the same time are procuring all the merchandise they can get from them, lest they should be in want of it themselves.

The Council being formed, the Assembly must act with it, or annihilate the Legislature, and there is a surmise that will be the case; and since the Boston Committee have applied to the country, they have in some counties, I understand, held county meetings, and intend it in all; it has not transpired what has been done, but report says they mean to have no Courts of Justice, unless the Judges agree not to obey the new Acts; and that the Inferiour Court has been stopped in Berkshire County, and the Judges mal-treated. I have it only from report, but fear there is some foundation for it.

I transmit your Lordship a notification posted up in Salem for the choice of Deputies for a County Meeting, in which your Lordship will observe another evasion about town meetings; for this is called by the Committee of Correspondence, and not by the Selectmen. Being on the spot, I issued a Proclamation on the morning of the intended meeting, to prevent it, and the Sheriff with other Magistrates attending me, I told the Committee to tell the people assembled and assembling to disperse, else I should proceed, and send the Sheriff to disperse them; and they, the Committee, should answer for any bad consequences. The people behaved with great decency, and retired immediately, though I doubt not, as the Deputies ever previously agreed to, that they did their business as effectually as if they had gone into their chamber of meeting. Nothing but a general phrenzy can make the Province suffer the inconveniences that must arise from the want of a Legislature and Courts of Justice; therefore, hope it is only a fit of rage that will cool; besides, the Courts can, and will be protected in many places.

It is agreed that popular fury was never greater in this Province than at present, and it has taken its rise from the old source at Boston, though it has appeared first at a distance. Those demagogues trust their safety in the long forbearance of Government, and an assurance that they cannot be punished. They chicane, elude, openly violate, or passively resist the laws, as opportunity serves; and opposition to authority is of so long standing, that it has become habitual.

In this situation I find things, and must do the best I can to put them into a better state. Connecticut, I understand, is alarmed at the alteration in this Charter, which occasions the commotions in that Province; and if the leaders change their plan of opposition, which has hitherto been to menace and intimidate, tease and tire out, and create ideas of greater resistance in the people, and drive them to further extravagances, I conceive we should have to oppose this Province and Connecticut. I do not apprehend any assistance would be given by the other Colonies.

Since my last to your Lordship, the fiftieth regiment landed from Halifax, and is encamped near Salem; and General Haldimand has sent the Welsh Fusiliers from New-York, and replaced them by the forty-seventh regiment, from New-Jersey. I believe your Lordship, considering the state of affairs here, will not think it advisable for me to part with any of the regiments; and I mean to advise with the Admiral about sending back the transports,

I have the honour to be, with the greatest regard, respect, and esteem, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient and humble servant,

THOMAS GAGE

Boston, August 29, 1774.

A report having been industriously propagated in New-York, that the principal inhabitants of this town are converting the donations of their brethren in the neighbouring Colonies, which were intended for the relief of the suffering poor of this place, to their own private emolument, contrary to the charitable intentions of the benevolent contributors; and as such report is entirely without any manner of foundation, the publick are desired not to credit it; the following narrative being a true state of the case:

On the reception of the Boston Port Act, the chief concern of the principal inhabitants was to provide relief for all such whose support depended on their daily labour; and, in the next place, for those tradesmen, whose small funds, though sufficient for the common purposes of life, yet would soon be exhausted, if their resources were cut off. They considered the employment of all these, especially the former, as a much more prudent measure than feeding them without any employment at all. They therefore adopted such plans of business for their exercise, as were likely to be the most useful to the publick, as well as most conducive to the health and good order of the employed. Accordingly, the labourers were set to cleaning docks, making dykes, new laying old pavements in the publick streets, &c. These were all publick concerns and of no advantage to any individual, any further than as a member of the community to which he or she belonged. Not a single wharf, dock, dyke, or pavement, belonging to any individual, was ordered to be made or repaired; but only such as by the constant usage of the town, had always been supported at the expense of the publick.

The principal inhabitants of this town have invariably considered the generous benefactions of their charitable and patriotick brethren in the other Colonies, as given entirely for the relief of their indigent fellow-citizens. But would it not be offering the greatest insult to the good sense of their benevolent neighbours, to suppose that they intended to maintain a very great number of healthy, able-bodied people in idleness, which must certainly be attended with great prejudice to them, as well as to the town in general, both now and hereafter? or that, they regret to see and hear that our poor citizens are employed in works which will be a publick benefit?

Should the publick interest of the town of Boston be finally advanced by these services, in saving some future taxes, * (and they even become a small compensation for the inconceivable damage which it is now sustaining, by a suspension of all its principal business,) can it be imagined that there is a single person, in the almost endless list of contributors, who is sorry to find, that which he voluntarily gave is like to be productive of publick advantage? It is much more candid, as well as charitable, to think that it must be a matter of the greatest satisfaction to every benevolent mind to hear, that what was only intended for one good purpose had answered two.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER DATED BOSTON, AUGUST 29, 1774.

Affairs here are daily becoming more and more serious. The new Counsellors are all driven into this town by force of arms. The Judges at Great Barrington turned off the bench. All the Protesters, with the Addressers to Mr. Hutchinson, are obliged to fly hither for refuge - even those that addressed General Gage. To-morrow will be the great, the important day here. Chief Justice Oliver, impeached by the Assembly last winter, for holding that office under his Majesty's appointment, will sit on the bench at the Superiour Court; the Discontents vow he shall not; but the General has come hither from Salem to support him, so we shall see which will prove the strongest. The Governour has apprehended the Committee of Correspondence at Salem, for holding town meetings against the new Act for regulating this Government. Some interesting measures will shortly be adopted of which you will have early intelligence from my brother, whom I expect here to-morrow. The Scarborough will sail on Thursday with the Governour's despatches for England, in which ship I shall take my passage.

The people at Salem and Marblehead talked in very high terms of their numbers, and of opposing the King's troops there. Admiral Graves declared if they stirred, he would remove one of his Majesty's ships thither and reduce both towns to obedience. I am of opinion that few days will elapse before the Province is declared in open rebellion, by hoisting the King's Standard; to which all true friends of King George the Third and his Government will repair. Such is the unfortunate state of affairs in this part of the Province; you may justly pronounce them very wild indeed.

Boston, August 29, 1774.

On Saturday morning, the 27th instant, there assembled on the Common in Worcester, fifteen hundred people, and made choice of five of their number as a Committee, viz: Messrs. Joseph Gilbert, John Goulding, Edward Rawson, Thomas Dennie, and Joshua Biglow, to wait on the Honourable Timothy Paine, Esquire, lately appointed Counsellor, by mandamus, from his Majesty, to demand of him satisfaction to the people for having qualified himself for said office; and having waited on Mr. Paine accordingly, he asked them what satisfaction they wanted? They answered, a total resignation of his office, and desired him to write it, upon which he withdrew, and in a few minutes returned to them with what he had wrote, which was a total resignation of his office, and a promise never to set again as Counsellor, unless agreeable to Charter; he then asked if that was satisfactory? They replied he must wait on the people, which he thought unreasonable, after he had complied with their demand; but they said it was in vain, unless he made his personal appearance, the people would not be satisfied; and after their promising to protect him from insult, he waited on them to the body of the people, where Mr. Dennie read his resignation, with which numbers were dissatisfied, requiring that Mr. Paine should read it himself, and that with his hat off; he then told the Committee that he had complied with all they required, on their promising him protection, and that he then called on them for it; but they gave him to understand the people would not be satisfied till he complied with their demand, which he did, and was then conducted near to his own house by the Committee, and dismissed. The people then drew off, those of each town forming a company, and marched for Rutland, the town in which the Honourable John Murray, Esquire, (another new Counsellor) resides.

A Proposal from different parts of the Country. - It is proposed that an estimate should be formed by indifferent people, of the value of all the real estates in Boston, that, so if the estates in it, should be sunk in their value by the Port Bill's continuing to be enforced, or should otherwise be ruined by the rage of our common enemies, the country might be able to form a judgment of the retribution that should be made to the sufferers. This does honour to the publick virtue of our country.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED NEW-HAMPSHIRE, AUGUST 29, 1774,

Since my letter, No. 64, the Convention of persons chosen by many towns, in consequence of the invitation in that letter referred to, met at Exeter, and elected Colonel Folsom and Major Sullivan, to be Delegates for this Province, at the Congress to be held in Philadelphia, on the first day of September next. The paper, No. 1, herewith enclosed, is a copy of the instructions given to those gentlemen, and is the best explanation of their service and employment that I can obtain. I am informed that this Convention collected and brought from their respective towns, about one hundred and twenty guineas, which was paid into the hands of John Giddinge, Esquire, (who they elected Treasurer,) to defray the expense incurred by the Delegates aforementioned, who set off on their journey to Philadelphia, on the 10th instant.

The Committee of Correspondence elected by the late Assembly, and of course dissolved with them, wrote circular letters to all the towns in this Province, a copy of which, and printed form of the non-importation and non-consumption agreement, recommended in that letter, and accompanying it, is herewith transmitted, No. 2. Some few towns generally subscribed, many others totally rejected it. The Committee appear conscious that their powers (if any they ever had) ceased with the Assembly that elected them, for they do not date the day of the month, because it succeeded the dissolution; it is certain they had not acted nor even met together before that. I think this Province is much more moderate than any other to the Southward, although the spirit of enthusiasm is spread, and requires the utmost vigilance and prudence to restrain it from violent excess; this will appear by the enclosure, No. 3, which was carried nemine contradicente, in this town, upon an attempt some few nights preceding, by a parcel of boys and sailors, to insult a woman who sold tea. Since this vote the town has been perfectly quiet, those who had tea have sold it without molestation. The inhabitants have now almost universally discontinued the use of Bohea tea, and I apprehend will entirely within three months from this date.

The Town Clerk of Boston, who is said to be a zealous leader of the popular opposition, has been in this town about a week, and immediately appears a publication in the New-Hampshire Gazette, recommending donations for Boston, which has been followed with a notification to convene in town meeting "to grant relief to the poor of the town of Boston," on the 12th of September next. It is probable no town grant will be made, and the meeting issue in appointing a Committee to receive and transmit voluntary donations, which, I believe, will not afford much comfort to them, or greatly credit the charitable munificence of these town meetings; grants are always and ever will be greater on popular pretences than private subscriptions, because those that vote in publick pay by far the least part of the grant; as is ever the case with Selectmen, who having power over the apportionment of rates, probably do not exercise it to their own detriment, and thence more easily join in facilitating and augmenting such gifts, which, from the nature of the office, they have great influence upon. It is greatly to be wished that gentlemen of property, experience, and education, could be persuaded to accept of office of Selectmen; but it is impracticable, if they are disinterested, and without other views than the publick good, it is a very laborious and unprofitable employment; and as I have nothing in my power whereby to reward such good men, they all decline, and the interior regulation of the capital falls into the hands of those who can submit to make it worth their attention.

I beg leave to assure your Lordship of my most faithful diligence in his Majesty's service, and, with the greatest deference, to hope for such favourable representation thereof, I am, &c., J. WENTWORTH.

P. S. The enclosure, No. 4, met with very little encouragement, and obtained but few signers, (except two or three) who were only among the lower order of people, who signed before they were invited to, and on the same invitation would sign any other paper. J. W.

PROVIDENCE (RHODE ISLAND) TOWN MEETING.

At a Town Meeting held at Providence, on the last Tuesday of August, 1774,

The Honourable DARIUS SESSIONS, Esq., Moderator:

Whereas, at the last session of Assembly an order was passed that John Smith would receive the quota of the arms belonging to the County of Providence, and deliver them to his Honour the Deputy Governour. Whereupon it is by this meeting Voted, that John Smith be appointed to procure the said small arms to be cleaned and made fit for use, and to procure proper chests for the same, all of which expenses to be paid by this town after his accounts have passed the Town Audit.

It is resolved by this meeting that this town ought not to be made the asylum of any person or persons of whatever town, place, or city, within the British Dominions, whose principles and practices being inimical to the liberties of our country and its happy Constitution, have rendered or shall render them obnoxious to the inhabitants of such place or places from which they may emigrate, and that all such ought be discouraged by every prudent and legal measure. And the honourable Town Council are hereby requested to exert themselves for the removal and ejection of all such persons, so far as by law they may be warranted, as their being admitted among us may tend greatly to endanger the peace, order, and tranquillity of the town, as by recent instances has been manifested.

At a Town Meeting held at Providence, on the 31st day of August, 1774, called by a warrant,

The Honourable DARIUS SESSIONS, chosen Moderator:

Whereas, on the evening of the 30th August, instant, a number of persons imprudently and tumultuously assembled themselves together in a manner that did disturb the peace and order of the town, and as such proceedings are of evil example, and repugnant to the good and wholesome laws of this town and Colony, which if executed we deem sufficient to support the quiet and tranquillity thereof; and such doings being ever derogatory to the honour of the town, and subversive of our rights and liberties to their very foundation, this town do protest against such proceedings, and desire the Civil Magistrates therein to exert themselves to their utmost to prevent and suppress all such unhappy disturbances in future, in doing which they may rely upon the aid and support of the freemen and well-disposed inhabitants of this town at all times.

Voted, That this Vote be published (together with the Resolve of yesterday) in the next Providence Gazette.

The meeting was then dissolved.

JONA. ARNOLD, Deputy Clerk.

Hartford, September 1, 1774.

Tuesday, August 30, being the day the County Court was to sit at Springfield, a great concourse of people, judged to be about three thousand, assembled at the Court House in that place, and appointed a Committee to wait on the Court and request their appearance amongst the people, which they immediately complied with, when they very willingly signed the following engagement, viz:

"We, the subscribers, do severally promise, and solemnly engage to all people now assembled at Springfield, in the County of Hampshire, on the 30th day of August, 1774, that we never will take, hold, execute, or exercise any commission, office, or employment whatsoever, under, or in virtue of, or in any manner derived from any authority pretended or attempted to be given by a late Act of Parliament, entitled, 'An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England.'" Signed by eighteen persons.

After the above was delivered to the people in writing, they all dispersed.

Boston, September 1, 1774.

Tuesday, August 30, being the day the Superiour Court was to be holden here, the Chief Justice, Peter Oliver, Esquire, and the other Justices of the said Court, together with a number of Gentlemen of the Bar, attended by the High and Deputy Sheriffs, walked in procession from the State House to the Court House, in Queen street. When the Court were seated and the usual proclamations made, a list of the names of the gentlemen returned to serve as Grand Jurors, was presented to them, and the Court appointed Mr. Ebenezer Hancock Forman, but he refusing to be sworn, and the question being put to them all severally, whether they would take the oath, they one and all refused; and being asked whether they had any reasons to offer for their thus refusing, they answered they had, and that they were committed to writing; the Court requested to see them, but the Jurors refused giving the Court the original paper, unless they were first permitted to read it in Court, or after reading, the Court would promise to return it to them again.

The Petit Jurors were then called for, and a list of their names being handed to the Court, they appointed Mr. Bartholomew Kneeland Foreman of the first Jury, and Mr. Nathan Frazer of the second. Mr. Kneeland had the oath proposed to him, which he declined taking, and being asked for what reasons, referred to a paper which he said was drawn up with their unanimous consent, and begged leave to read it to the Court. The Court refused to hear the paper read, and the oath was proposed to each Juror in order, and declined as by the Foreman. Their reasons being demanded, they generally referred to the paper, till it came to the turn of Mr. Thomas Chase, who begged leave to read the paper then in his hand, but was told by the Chief Justice that he might give his own reasons without reading the paper, to which he agreed, and said that one of his reasons was, that Peter Oliver, Esq., Chief Justice of the Court, stood impeached by the late honourable House of Representatives of this Province in their own name, and in the name of this Province, of divers high crimes and misdemeanors. Being asked by the Chief Justice if he gave that as a reason for his refusing to be sworn, he answered, "yes, that is one reason." The Court then called upon another of the Petit Jurors to be sworn, but he refused, and referred to the paper for his reasons as aforesaid.

The Chief Justice then desired the Court might peruse the paper, which should be returned to the Jurors again; which was agreed to, read, and returned. The Court then proposed the same condition to the Grand Jury, which was complied with, and the contents delivered.

REASONS OF THE GRAND JURORS FOR REFUSING TO BE SWORN.

The Freemen who were returned to serve as Grand Jurors at the Superiour Court, for this term, made their appearance in the Court House yesterday; and, before a numerous assembly, (Peter Oliver, Edmund Trowbridge, Foster Hutchinson, William Cushing, and Wm. Brown, Esquires, sitting on the bench as Judges,) they all, to the number of twenty-two, declined acting as Jurors, for reasons which they had previously drawn up in writing, and signed, and appointed to be read there by their Chairman; but the above said Judges, refusing to hear the same openly read, desired to have the reading of it to themselves, which being complied with, the Jurymen withdrew from the Court House to the Exchange Tavern, where they unanimously voted that, in order to justify their refusal to the world, their aforementioned reasons should be printed in the publick papers.

Boston, August 30, 1774.

County of SUFFOLK

We, who are returned by the several towns in this county, to serve as Grand Jurors at the Superiour Court, for this present term, being actuated by a zealous regard for peace and good order, and a sincere desire to promote justice, righteousness, and good government, as being essential to the happiness of the community, would now most gladly proceed to the discharge of the important duty required in that department, could we persuade ourselves that by doing thus it would tend to our reputation, or promote the welfare of our country; but when we consider the dangerous inroads that have been made upon our civil Constitution; the violent attempts now making to alter and annul the most essential part of our Charter, granted by the most solemn faith of Kings, and repeatedly recognised by British Kings and Parliament; while we see the open and avowed design of establishing the most complete system of despotism in this Province, and thereby reducing the free-born inhabitants thereof to the, most abject state of slavery and bondage; we feel ourselves necessarily constrained to decline being empannelled, for reasons that we are ready to offer to the Court, if permitted, which are as follows:

First. Because Peter Oliver, Esquire, who sits as Chief Judge of this Court, has been charged with high crimes and misdemeanors, by the late honourable House of Representatives, the grand inquest of this Province, of which crimes he has never been legally acquitted, but has been declared by that House to be unqualified to act as Judge of that Court.

Secondly. Because, by a late Act of the British Parliament, for altering the Constitution of this Province, the continuance of the present Judges of this Court, as well as the appointment of others, from the first day of July last, is made to depend solely on the King's pleasure, vastly different from the tenure of the British Judges; and as we apprehend they now hold their places, only in consequence of that Act, all the judicial proceedings of the Court will be taken as concessions to the validity of the same, to which we dare not consent.

Thirdly. Because three of the Judges, being the major part of the Court, namely: the said Peter Oliver, Esquire, Foster Hutchinson, Esquire, and Wm. Brown, Esquire, by taking the oath of Counsellors, under the authority of the aforesaid Act, are (as we are informed) sworn to carry into execution all the late grievous Acts of the British Parliament, among the last of which is one, made ostensibly for the impartial administration of justice in this Province, but as we fear, really for the impunity of such persons as shall, under pretext of executing those acts, murder any of the inhabitants thereof; which Acts appear to us to be utterly repugnant to every idea of justice and common humanity, and are justly complained of, throughout America, as highly injurious and oppressive to the good people of this Province, and manifestly destructive of their natural, as well as constitutional rights.

Fourthly. Because we believe, in our consciences, that our acting in concert with a Court so constituted, and under such circumstances, would be so far betraying the just and sacred rights of our native lands, which were not the gift of Kings, but were purchased solely with the toil, the blood and treasure of our worthy and revered ancestors; and which we look upon ourselves as under the most sacred and inviolable obligations, to maintain, and to transmit, whole and entire, to our posterity.

Therefore we, the subscribers, unanimously decline serving as Grand Jurors at this Court.

The Reasons of the Petit Jurors were as follows:

Boston, August 30, 1774.

Suffolk, SS.

To the Honourable Justices of the Superiour Court of Judicature, Court of Assize, &c.:

May it please your Honours:

We, the subscribers, returned by this County to serve as Petit Jurors this term, beg leave to acquaint your Honours that, as the Honourable Peter Oliver, Esquire, stands impeached, by the late honourable House of Commons of this Province, in their own name, and in the name of the people of this Province, of high crimes and misdemeanors, which impeachment, with the reasons therefor, as they are publick, would be needless for us to repeat.

We would also beg leave to acquaint your Honours that, as, by a late Act of the British Parliament, the continuance of the Judges of the Superiour Court is, since the first of July last, made to depend upon said Act, which it is apprehended places their dependence entirely upon the Crown, and which is esteemed a great infringement of the Charter rights of this Province.

Taking the above premises into our most serious consideration, we beg leave to acquaint your Honours that we cannot, in our consciences, from a sense of that duty we owe to our country, to ourselves, and to posterity, act against the united voice of this people; therefore beg your Honours will excuse us when we say, we decline serving as Petit Jurors for this Court.

After the Court had read the papers, the Clerk of the Court, by order of the Chief Justice, asked them, seriatim, if they would be sworn, and every one refused. The Court said they would consider of their reasons, and the Juries withdrew. The Court then adjourned to ten o'clock, next day, when they met, exclusive of Mr. Oliver; and, to the inexpressible grief of their fellow-citizens, went on to such business as is usually transacted without Juries.

MIDDLESEX (MASSACHUSETTS) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Committees from every town and district, in the County of Middlesex, and Province of Massachusetts Bay, held at Concord, in the said County, on the 30th and 31st of August, 1774, to consult upon measures proper to be taken at the present very important day,

The Hon. JAMES PRESCOTT, Esquire, Chairman:

After having read the late Act of the British Parliament, entitled "An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in New England," and debated thereon; voted that a Committee be appointed to take into consideration the said Act, and report to this meeting.

Voted, also, that Mr. Jonathan Williams Austin, of Chelmsford, Captain Thomas Gardiner, of Cambridge, Doctor Isaac Foster, of Charlestown, Captain Josiah Stone, of Farmingham, Mr. Richard Deavens, of Charlestown, Doctor Oliver Prescott, of Groton, Henry Gardiner, Esquire, of Stow, Mr. William Brown, of Farmingham, and Mr. Ebenezer Bridge, Jun., of Billerica, be the Committee; who reported as follows:

It is evident, to every attentive mind, that this Province is in a very dangerous and alarming situation. We are obliged to say, however painful it may be to us, that the question now is, whether, by a submission to some late Acts of the Parliament of Great Britain, we are contented to be the most abject slaves, and entail that slavery on posterity after us; or, by a manly, joint, and virtuous opposition, assert and support our freedom.

There is a mode of conduct, which, in our very critical circumstances, we would wish to adopt; a conduct, on the one hand, never tamely submissive to tyranny and oppression; on the other, never degenerating into rage, passion, and confusion. This is a spirit which we revere, as we find it exhibited in former ages, and will command applause to the latest posterity.

The late Acts of Parliament pervade the whole system of jurisprudence, by which means we think the fountains of justice are fatally corrupted. Our defence must therefore be immediate, in proportion to the suddenness of the attack, and vigorous in proportion to the danger.

We must now exert ourselves, or all those efforts, which for ten years past have brightened the annals of this country, will be totally frustrated. Life and death, or, what is more, freedom and slavery, are, in a peculiar sense, now before us; and the choice and success, under God, depend greatly upon ourselves. We are, therefore, bound, as struggling, not only for ourselves, but future generations, to express our sentiments in the following Resolves; sentiments which, we think, are founded in truth and justice, and, therefore, sentiments we are determined to abide by.

Resolved, That as true and loyal subjects of our gracious Sovereign George the Third, King of Great Britain, &c., we, by no means, intend to withdraw our allegiance from him; but, while permitted the free exercise of our natural and Charter rights, are resolved to expend life and treasure in his service.

Resolved, That when our ancestors emigrated from Great Britain Charters and solemn stipulations expressed the conditions; and what particular rights they yielded; what each party had to do and perform; and which each of the contracting parties were equally bound by.

Resolved, That we know of no instance in which this Province has transgressed the rules on their part, or any ways for feited their natural and Charter rights to any power on earth.

Resolved, That the Parliament of Great Britain have exercised a power contrary to the above mentioned Charter, by passing Acts which hold up their absolute supremacy over the Colonists; by another Act blocking up the port of Boston; and by two late Acts, the one entitled "An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay;" the other entitled "An Act for the more impartial administration of justice in "said Province;" and by enforcing all these iniquitous Acts with a large armed force, to dragoon and enslave us.

Resolved, That the late Act of Parliament, entitled "An Act for the better regulating the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England," expressly acknowledges the authority of the Charter granted, by their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, to said Province; and that the only reasons suggested in the preamble to said Act, which is intended to deprive us of the privileges confirmed to us by said Charter, are the inexpediency of continuing those privileges, and a charge of their having been forfeited, to which charge the Provinces have had no opportunity of answering.

Resolved, That a debtor may as justly refuse to pay his debts, because it is expedient for him, as the Parliament of Great Britain deprive us of our Charter privileges, because it is inexpedient to a corrupt Administration for us to enjoy them.

Resolved, That in all free states there must be an equilibrium in the Legislative body, without which constitutional check they cannot be said to be a free people.

Resolved, That the late Act, which ordains a Council to be appointed by his Majesty his heirs, and successors, from time to time, by warrant under his or their signet or sign manual, and which ordains that the said Counsellors shall hold their offices, respectively, for and during the pleasure of his Majesty, his heirs, and successors, effectually alters the constitutional equilibrium; renders the Council absolute tools and creatures, and entirely destroys the importance of the Representative body.

Resolved, That no state can long exist free and happy where the course Of justice is obstructed; and that when trials by Juries, which are the grand bulwarks of life and property, are destroyed or weakened, a people fall immediately under arbitrary power.

Resolved, That the late Act, which gives the Governor of this Province a power of appointing Judges of the Superiour and Inferiour Courts, Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, the Attorney Generals, Provosts, Marshals; and Justices of the Peace; and to remove all of them, (the Judges of the Superiour Court excepted) without consent of Council, entirely subverts a free administration of justice; as the fatal experience of mankind, in all ages, has testified that there is no greater species of corruption than when judicial and executive officers depend, for their existence and support, on a power independent of the people.

Resolved, That by ordaining Jurors to be summoned by the Sheriff only, which Sheriff is to be appointed by the Governour without consent of Council; that the security which results from a trial by our peers, is rendered altogether precarious, and is not only an evident infraction upon our Charter, but a subversion of our common rights as Englishmen.

Resolved, That every people have an absolute right of meeting together to consult upon common grievances, and to petition, remonstrate, and use every legal method for their removal.

Resolved, That the Act which prohibits these constitutional meetings cuts away the scaffolding of English freedom, and reduces us to a most abject state of vassalage and slavery.

Resolved, That it is our opinion these late Acts, if quietly submitted to, will annihilate the last vestiges of liberty in this Province, and therefore, we must be justified by God and the world in never submitting to them.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this body, that the present Act, respecting the Government of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, is an artful, deep laid plan of oppression and despotism, and that it requires great skill and wisdom to counteract it. This wisdom we have endeavoured to collect from the united sentiments of the country; and although we are grieved that we are obliged to mention any thing that may be attended with such very important consequences as may now ensue, yet a sense of our duty as men, as freemen, as Christian freemen, united in the firmest bonds, obliges us to resolve that every Civil Officer now in commission in this Province, and acting in conformity to the late Act of Parliament, is not an Officer agreeable to our Charter; therefore, unconstitutional, and ought to be opposed in the manner hereafter recommended.

Resolved, That we will obey all such Civil Officers now in commission, whose commissions were issued before the first day of July, 1774, and support them in the execution of their offices, according to the manner usual before the late attempt to alter the Constitution of this Province; nay, even although the Governour should attempt to revoke their commissions; but that if any of said officers shall accept a commission under the present plan of arbitrary Government, or in any way or manner whatever assist the Governour or Administration in the assault now making on our rights and liberties, we will consider them as having forfeited their commissions, and yield them no obedience.

Resolved, That whereas the Honourable Samuel Danforth and Joseph Lee, Esquires, two of the Judges of the Inferiour Court of Common Pleas for this county, have accepted commissions under the new Act, by being sworn members of his Majesty's Council appointed by said Act, we therefore look upon them as utterly incapable of holding any office whatever.

And whereas a venire on the late Act of Parliament, has issued from the Court of Sessions, signed by the Clerk, we think they come under a preceding resolve of acting in conformity to the new Act of Parliament; we therefore resolve, that a submission to Courts thus acting, and under these disqualifications, is a submission to the Act itself, and of consequence, as we are resolved never to submit one iota to the Act, we will not submit to Courts thus constituted, and thus acting in conformity to said Act.

Resolved, That as, in consequence of the former Resolve, all business at the Inferiour Court of Common Pleas and Court of General Sessions of the Peace, next to be holden at Concord, must cease; to prevent the many inconveniences that may arise therefrom, we resolve, that all actions, writs, suits, &c., brought to said Court ought to remain in the same condition as at present (unless settled by consent of parties) till we know the result of a Provincial and Continental Congress. And we resolve, that no Plaintiff in any cause, action, or writ aforesaid, ought to enter said action in said Court thus declared to be unconstitutional. And we resolve, if the Court shall sit in defiance to the voice of the county, and default actions, and issue executions accordingly, no officer ought to serve such process. And we are also determined to support all Constables, Jurors, and other officers, who, from these constitutional principles, shall refuse obedience to Courts which we have resolved, are founded on the destruction of our Charter.

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this body of Delegates, that a Provincial Congress is absolutely necessary in our present unhappy situation.

These are sentiments which we are obliged to express, as these Acts are intended immediately to take place. We must now either oppose them, or tamely give up all we have been struggling for. It is this that has forced us so soon on these very important resolves. However, we do it with humble deference to the Provincial and Continental Congress, by whose Resolutions we are determined to abide; to whom, and the world, we cheerfully appeal for the uprightness of our conduct.

On the whole, these are "great and profound questions." We are grieved to find ourselves reduced to the necessity of entering into the discussion of them; but we deprecate a state of slavery; our fathers left a fair inheritance to us, purchased by a waste of blood and treasure; this we are resolved to transmit equally fair to our children after us; no danger shall affright, no difficulties intimidate us; and if in support of our rights, we are called to encounter even death, we are yet undaunted, sensible that he can never die too soon, who lays down his life in support of the laws and liberties of his country.

Which Report being maturely deliberated,

Voted, That the sense of the whole body respecting the same, be collected by yeas and nays, which being done, there were one hundred and forty-six yeas; and four nays.

Voted, That it be recommended to the several towns and districts in this county, that each appoint one or more Delegates to attend a Provincial meeting to be holden at Concord, on the second Tuesday of October next.

Voted, That a fair copy of the proceedings of this meeting be made out and forwarded to the Grand Continental Congress, and also to the Town Clerk of each town in this county.

Voted, That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Honourable James Prescott, Esquire, for his faithful services as Chairman.

Voted, That this meeting be dissolved. And it was accordingly dissolved. EBENEZER BRIDGE, Clerk.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF PENNSYLVANIA.
Philadelphia, August, 1774.

All vices have travelling names. Submission to the British Parliament, for a while, assumed the name of Moderation. After being detected and exposed under the garb of that necessary virtue, it has assumed the name of Petition and Remonstrance. It shall be the business of this Address to show the danger of relying upon those measures alone for a redress of American Grievances.

The scheme for enslaving the Colonies has been pursued with a subtlety and perseverance which indicate a determination and certainty of success. Every session of Parliament, and every Council Board at Whitehall, since the year 1762, have produced some new exertions of arbitrary power against America.

The Colonies began their opposition to the British Parliament by Petitions and Remonstrances, in their legislative capacities. The first American Congress confined their opposition to Petitions and Remonstrances only. They addressed our King, as a father; and the Parliament, as brethren. Their Petitions were humble, dutiful, and respectful. But what was their effect? They were rejected with contempt; and to show that they had no hand in obtaining a redress of our grievances, the Stamp and Revenue Acts were repealed, only because they were found to be hurtful to the commercial interests of Great Britain.

The inhabitants of Massachusetts Bay lately presented a most humble, dutiful, and respectful Petition to the King, praying that Governour Hutchinson might be removed from their Province. But what was its effect? It was pronounced at Whitehall a "seditious; vexatious, and scandalous libel." The Governour, it is true, was removed, but it was only to be rewarded for his treachery.

It might not be foreign to our purpose to mention the contempt with which Petitions have been treated, when coming even from the citizens of London, in order to show that that mode of obtaining redress of grievances has now lost its influence.

Petitions and Remonstrances promise less at the present juncture than ever. Our King has been inflamed against us. Both Houses of Parliament breathe vengeance, and are impatient to seal our subjection with the sword. If Petitions and Remonstrances from our Assemblies did no good, in the infancy of our dispute with Great Britain, what can be expected from them when they come from a Congress of Deputies of all the Colonies? To pay the least regard to Petitions or Remonstrances from that body, would be an acknowledgement of its usefulness and authority.

Much might be lost by a delay of six months, The publick spirit will subside. Boston must resist or yield. Bribery will stretch her cursed hand across the Ocean; for we have too much reason to fear that in the present struggle the greatest enemies to American Liberty will be found, or created, among ourselves.

I could name the persons who first broached the scheme of petitioning and remonstrating only: but I spare them the weight of popular vengeance. They are men who prefer one more cargo of British Goods to the salvation of America. They are men who have friends soliciting favours at Court, or who expect to rise into importance upon the ruins of American Liberty. There are men, honest men too, amongst us, who have adopted this scheme from a mistaken zeal for unanimity, with persons of such principles as those we have described.

Great Britain stands upon her commerce. The American Colonies are the pillars of that commerce. While this is the case, let us not barely implore, but demand, our liberty. It was in this manner the Barons obtained the Magna Charta from King John, at Runny Mead. It is in this manner only that we shall act like freemen, and show that we feel our weight in the scale of the British Empire. Posterity would blush to receive their liberty from our hands, should we establish it upon the precarious tenure of a Sovereign's mercy.

Awake, my countrymen, to a sense of your danger. Let Pennsylvania share with her sister Colonies in the glory of saving America. Let no obstacles from our city be thrown in the way of an immediate Non-importation Agreement. Let the foreign Members of the Congress see that the Pennsylvanians are not behind their native Colonies in publick spirit; and let us show what may appear paradoxical, but is certainly true, that the Resolves of our Provincial Committee, for petitioning and remonstrating only, do not contain the sentiments of above fifty men in the whole Province.

SIDNEY.

TO THE HONOURABLE DELEGATES THAT NOW ARE, OR SHORTLY WILL BE, CONVENED IN GENERAL CONGRESS.

Connecticut, August, 1774.

HONOURABLE SIRs: Sometimes a gleam of light will appear from the midst of darkness; and the Councils of Kings have been known to receive benefit from persons of the greatest obscurity; then suffer an individual to approach you, nor reject him with disdain, til you are convinced his presumption deserve your neglect. On you, great sirs; and your important decisions, the eyes and expectations of millions are fixed; on your present resolutions depend the fate of this great Empire, and the fate of the parent Empire also; death or life, liberty or bondage, must be the important alternatives of your firm virtue, or your supine relaxation; if you clothe yourselves with the first, you will shine like fixed stars in the Heavens; but if you descend to the latter, infamy and dishonour, shame and disgrace, nay, perhaps death itself, will be the reward of the attempt without success.

Then permit me to ask, what are you met for? Is it to redress the wrongs and oppressions of this injured land? Is this solemn purpose strongly impressed on every one of your own hearts; and are you certain it is the ardent desire of your constituents also? If this is the case, what method must you, or will you, take to accomplish the important end? Must it be by Petition, Remonstrance, or an abject submission to power? O that ye knew the temper of your adversaries! I trust you do, and then you will shun these modes, as so many rocks and shallows, which ever have, and ever will, fail to produce any thing but delusion; to our utter destruction. Or shall negotiation take place? This will be branded as the highest presumption and insolence, and will be punished with ten-fold rigour. No, ye patriots, all these attempts will be as fruitless in experiment, as they are idle in contemplation. But Heaven and nature are still your guardians, and have pointed out the only path. A Non-importation, if firmly adhered to, will do much, but alone will not answer the intended end; the design of its operation can be artfully evaded by our enemies, and lengthened out for a long season, till, by our own impatience, we are split into divisions, and prove (as one of them has emphatically expressed it) only a rope of sand. But a Non-exportation is entirely in our own power; and by adopting it in the fullest latitude, we can most certainly preserve ourselves, and at the same time absolutely defeat our enemies, without being either insolent or mean. This, indeed, will be striking the axe to the root of the tree, and here only will be found our own importance. I know it will be urged, that this will be a present grievance to ourselves, and the utmost cruelty to the West Indies, Ireland, and other places; but the injury to us will be only temporary and trifling, for it must be very short, and will ensure success; and with respect to our neighbours, when two houses are equally in flames, whose shall we endeavour to extinguish first, our own or that of our friend?

I know many objections to a plan of this kind will be started by self-interested men; but is this a time for us to think of accumulating fortunes, or even adding to our estates? If we can subsist, 'tis all we ought to expect. This land is blessed with plenty, and can furnish food and employment for all its inhabitants for a long time, without any foreign trade at all. Then let not the bounties of Heaven, which have crowned this present year with joy and gladness; become a snare for us in the hands of the tempter, and prompt us to say, now our stores and granaries are full, and our oxen and fatlings are ready, let us fear nothing, but commit them to the seas and the winds; we will have present profit though we pay for it with future ages of misery and pain. O! ye noble guardians of our rights, think on these things; do something that will prove effectual, or do nothing. To you we all look up; your country, virtue, honour, fame, life, and liberty, or all their woful contrasts are before you; and, as you shall conduct the arduous task, unborn millions will either bless or execrate your names.

JUBA.

QUERIES PROPOSED TO AMERICA.

Philadelphia, September, 1774.

1st. Whether the restraint laid by the People of Virginia on their Delegates, with respect to the article of Non-exportation, does not tend to render the Congress totally ineffectual; as every other Province must have an equal right to restrict their respective Delegates in any particular article which they may suppose will affect them: for instance, Pennsylvania might restrain them in the article of non-importation of Cloth; New-York of Hats and Tea; New England of Flannels and Calicoes; in short, each Province making its particular exceptions, they leave a door open to the admittance of every article of commerce which Great Britain or the India Company has to export.

2d Whether there is not the strongest reason to suppose that the Ministry have taken precaution to counteract, or at least to weaken, the operation of simple Non-importation, consequently that a Non-importation Resolve, simply, will answer no purpose?

3d. Whether it is not almost universally allowed, and whether all accounts from England do not agree, that a Non-exportation to the West India Islands would be the most certain and rapid means of obtaining redress?

4th. Whether (this being granted) there is any reason to believe that the people are so wanting in public spirit as not to abide by this Resolve if the Congress enters into it? or, whether this notion, of the people's want of public spirit to abide by it, is not endeavoured to be propagated by Merchants interested in the commerce, in order to divert the Congress from this most effectual Resolve?

5th. Whether the manifest, and, indeed, the avowed intention of the Quebec Bill, is not to make use of the Canadians as instruments for the enslavement of the British Colonies?

6th. Whether General Carleton will not embody and discipline a formidable number for this purpose, and immediately?

7th. Whether it is not necessary that some force should, without loss of time, be prepared to resist them?

8th. Whether the Militia, on its present footing, can be depended upon?

9th. Whether if the Militia (established as it is) cannot be depended upon, some other mode should not be adopted?

10th. Whether, from the apparent spirit prevalent in the commonalty of this Continent, there is not the strongest reason to believe that they Would submit themselves to a temporary Meeting Act; that is, that each man would, for a time, cede a portion of his individual liberty for the security of the rest?

11th. Whether, if this spirit really exists in the people, it would not be wise to avail ourselves of it, and obtain their assent to laws necessary for the maintenance of that order and discipline without which no defence can be made?

12th. Whether, as it is most certain the consent of the Governours of the respective Provinces will not be obtained to such laws, the people may not, antecedent to all written Statutes, that is, a law of God nature, and self-defence, enact them by their own authority.

13th. Whether a fund necessary for the support of a body of Troops, sufficient to repel an invasion from Canada, should not be immediately prepared?

14th. Whether the apprehensions of further irritating the Ministry, by such a measure, is not childish and absurd, as it is manifest they cannot be more hostile to America than they are at present?

15th. Whether it is not more rational to work on the fears of such a Ministry, than to dread an increase of their animosity?

16th. Whether a conduct so becoming men, struggling in the cause of liberty, would not make an impression advantageous to the Americans on the minds of the people of England, who (however they may be deluded for a time) are undoubtedly an honest, generous, brave people, and enthusiastick admirers of those who vigorously defend their rights and liberties?

17th. Whether the obtaining the good opinion of the people of England does not promise more solid advantage to the cause of America than she can possibly flatter herself with from a Petition and Address to the King and Parliament - one of which is inveterately obstinate in the pursuit of despotism, the other notoriously abandoned, by corruption, to all virtue, feeling, find shame?

18th. Whether, therefore, a sensible manly, brave Remonstrance from the People of America to the People of England, setting forth their rights, as men and fellow-subjects, and asserting their resolution to defend them, would not be productive of better effects than any Petition or Address to such a King, and such a Parliament?

TO THE PEOPLE OF AMERICA.

Boston, September, 1774,

As every individual of British America must be vastly interested in the Resolutions of the approaching Congress, it cannot be thought foreign to any person's own concerns, if he communicates his sentiments to them. Numbers of persons have given their opinions on this occasion, and the Congress doubtless have a right to expect the best thoughts of every one on the subject. Among the various opinions delivered on this occasion, the following seem to be the most worthy of notice:

I. A Petition or Remonstrance to Parliament against their late Acts, with a decent and firm declaration of the rights and liberties of the Americans.

II. A suspension of Trade with Great-Britain till the said Acts be repealed.

III. A suspension of all our Trade with Great Britain, Iceland, and the West Indies, till said Acts be repealed.

I design to consider each of these, with their probable effects; premising these three things: 1. That the said Acts sap, to the very foundation, every principle of American liberty. 2. That all England are united in enforcing those Acts; and, 3. That, therefore, the Americans ought to adopt such measures as will most effectually prevent their operation, and effect their repeal, in the speediest manner that can be devised?

I. As to the first, I have the following objections to presenting any Petitions or Remonstrances to the British Parliament:

1. They will not acknowledge the Congress to be any legal body or proper representative of America; and, therefore, any Petition will be loss of labour, and loss of time, without effecting our deliverance.

2. The substance of the Petition will be highly disgusting to them; for, couch it in the softest terms possible, yet the plain English of it must be, that they have made the said Acts without any right or authority, and if their authority had been good, yet the said Acts are in their nature unjust and wicked, and the Americans will plague and distress Great Britain, in every way possible, till they are repealed, which is so extremely contrary to the present sentiments of Great Britain, that little advantage is to be expected therefrom.

3. Any kind of declaration of our rights and liberties, will bring the question of American rights into view, and make it the yest of a dispute, which can never be determined; for, it is certain, the Americans never will acknowledge the legislative and taxing power of the British Parliament, nor will the British Parliament ever relinquish that claim. All we can expect is, that the British Parliament will, on some prudential considerations; suspend the exercise of it; not that they will give up the principle. This question, therefore, ought, by all means, to be kept out of sight, because there is no hopes of its being ever settled, and any discussions of it will certainly widen the breach.

4. If the British Parliament should consent to enter into treaty with us on the subject of American rights, (which I think not at all probable,) yet we have by no means an equal chance with them in the treaty, for they will plead at ease, but we must plead in pain. Whilst we are in treaty with them, we feel the pain of our Ports shut; our right and property in wharves, landings, bills of lading, charter parties, &c., vacated; our Charter grossly violated; and liberties lost; they, on the other hand, are at ease, and in full triumph over our fortunes, liberties, and lives.

A person in distress has not an equal command of his best faculties, or an equal courage to exert them, with one at ease and out of danger. 'Tis said that Cortes, the conqueror of Mexico, demanded of Montezuma, the Emperor, a surrender of his cash; the Emperor made some objections, and desired a treaty on the reasonableness of the demand, on which Cortes heated a gridiron red hot and seated poor Montezuma with his bare backside on it, and consented to treat with him as long as he pleased. I don't know that Great Britain would consent to treat with us on the subject of our rights, even in our excruciating distress; but if they should be so condescending, there would be so much of duress in the whole treaty, that I doubt much if the Americans would admit of its validity, if the conclusion should not be favourable to them. I am indeed utterly averse to such an unequal treaty. Either let us be first put out of pain, or let them be put into equal pain, and then equal conclusions, if any, may be expected.

5. The British Parliament are not supposed to yield any thing to the ardours and passions of a petition, but their decisions are ever governed by facts and the reasons of them. But we cannot, in any petition, suggest any new matter with which the British Parliament were not perfectly acquainted when they passed the Acts; the whole subject has been long since exhausted, and every argument against all the Bills were set in the strongest light, by many very able speakers, when the Bills were debated. It will, therefore, be vain and ridiculous, and may perhaps be deemed disrespectful, for our Congress to offer a petition filled with old, trite, threadbare matters and arguments, which had a full discussion when the Acts passed.

6. Any petition, memorial, remonstrance, or by whatever other name it may be called, will be deemed to imply a confession of the right of the British Parliament to make the laws against which we remonstrate, which the Americans most certainly do not intend to acknowledge.

7. But what will be as fatal perhaps as any of the rest, if the Congress present a petition to Parliament, it may be received and depend a year or two there for consideration and answer, during all which time it may be thought very improper and indecent for us to adopt and pursue any other means of deliverance, and it will be strongly urged that we ought at least to suspend any other methods of redress, till we know the result of Parliament on our petition.

II. After all this, if it should be deemed expedient to present a petition, and lest words alone, however forcible, should not have sufficient weight, further active measures should be thought necessary to give energy to the same, it remains to be considered what these further measures ought to be; arms certainly ought to be the last thing in view. A suspension of our trade is, by most people, thought sufficient to effect our deliverance; and some think that a suspension of our trade with Great Britain only will effect the great end desired. On which I would observe,

1. However effectual this measure may be, it will be a slow one. Great Britain has great resources of raw materials besides her importations from us; she has many great vents for her merchandise besides her exports to us; the matter in dispute they look on of great importance, and they will suffer long before they will yield it; they will feel a suspension of our trade heavily, but not ruinously; the inconveniences to them will not be felt so immediately as will be necessary to force an immediate deliverance for us, and any long delay may prove fatal to us; for,

2. The success of our resolutions depends on the continued and united practice of millions; the minds of all ranks and conditions of people are now filled with a sense of our danger, and willing to unite in adopting and pursuing any practicable means of deliverance, but time may wear this high sense out of their minds. 'Tis madness to lose the universal warmth and zeal of all America by needless delays; such stupid, sleepy, dreaming conduct will cost our poor posterity hungry bellies, aching hearts, and tears of blood.

3. Yet there is one advantage arising naturally from a suspension of trade with Great Britain only; however slow its operations may be, it will give America time to complete their own manufactures, to correct their infatuation for British luxuries, and teach their merchants that they will grow rich faster by supplying raw materials than by importing finished goods.

III. I am now to consider what will be the probable consequences of a suspension of our trade with Great Britain, Ireland, and the West Indies.

1. All the wisdom and wealth of England and Ireland united cannot sow Ireland with flax without the American seed; thirty-four thousand hogsheads of which is annually exported to Ireland from the Provinces of New-York and Philadelphia only. If the flax is not sown there can be no crop: and consequently no material to employ the linen manufacturers, and thus three hundred thousand people must be thrown out of business, and of course out of bread; and the linen merchants be disenabled from supplying their customers, and so must lose their custom, and suffer that branch of trade to slide into the hands of other Nations, from whom it will be difficult to recover it. All the wisdom and power of Great Britain cannot prevent or remedy these evils, otherwise than by repealing the offensive Acts, and thereby opening the ports of America time enough for shipping seed in season for sowing Ireland next spring; the subject will not admit of dilatory deliberations; to delay will be to be ruined; if the seed time is suffered to pass without seed, no wisdom can prevent the ruin of the Irish linen manufacture, or the insurrection of millions of starving, unemployed people. The inconvenience of this suspension of trade is very little to America; no farmer depends upon his flaxseed for the supplies of the year; 'tis a rich farmer who raises half a dozen bushels, and he can keep it over the year without sensible inconvenience.

2. Suspending our trade with the West Indies will ruin every plantation there. They can neither feed their negroes without our corn, nor save their crops without our lumber. A stoppage of North American supplies will bring on a famine, and scarcity too ruinous to be risked without the most stupid madness. It will instantly lie with the British Parliament to determine whether the West Indies shall be starved and ruined or not, and it will be necessary for them to determine quick, or the damages of delay will soon become irreparable. The damage of this suspension of trade would not be much to America; we cut our choicest timber for lumber too freely; our lumber cutters would serve themselves and country better were they employed in clearing and cultivating land. We can fill the West Indies with provisions this fall, and I dare say the British Parliament will remove all obstructions to our shipping more next spring. That the suspension will probably last only through the winter, which is not a season for much business. Besides, all the ports in Europe are open for our provisions, and if we lose a little in the price, we may afford it, inasmuch as we shall make great savings in the article of rum, and other West India luxuries. If it is objected that England alone has offended us, why should we smite Ireland and the West Indies? I answer, the funds which support the Irish linen manufacture and the West India plantations lie very much in London; the linen of Ireland and the produce of the West Indies are mostly due to London before they are made; and, therefore, ruining the Irish linen manufacture and the produce of the West India plantations, would greatly affect the Irish and West India merchants in London; it would break not single and principal houses only, but would oblige whole streets of them to shut up at once, and hasten to Parliament with such tales of woe as the stubborn omnipotence of that haughty House could not refuse to hear, or be able to remedy otherwise than by a repeal of the offensive Acts. But if the British Parliament should be mad enough to risk all these evils, and continue the Acts, America might live very well a number of years without them. 'Tis likely our provisions would be plenty and cheap, so that our poor might be supplied easily; we should save the annual millions we now pay for East India, West India, and British superfluities; our own manufactures would thrive; the cultivation of our country would be greatly increased; we should be gradually recovered from our ridiculous imitations of British fashions and extravagances; and, for any thing I can see, may soon be as happy as the ancient shepherds of Arcadia; we have a finer country than they ever had, and a Heaven equally propitious.

3. How far a suspension of our trade with Great Britain may affect them is not certain, but no doubt that blow, in conjunction with the other before mentioned particulars, would operate strongly; it would reduce the employment of many thousands of people; would lessen the sales of the East India Company, and would diminish the publick revenue near a million sterling per annum, about half of which sum arises yearly from the single article of tobacco.

These are effects which no wisdom can prevent or avoid; they will leave the British Parliament time to deliberate, however mortifying it may be to them to apply the only remedy which can relieve their distress; but should they be disposed to spin out delays, in full sight of the ghastly irresistible approaches of such ruinous and complicated misery, we should at least have the advantage of being on a footing with them, they would be in pain as well as we, and would at least have equal inducement to put a speedy end to it. Their interest would soon conquer their pride, and their revenge must be speedily sacrificed to their ease.

I look on the dignity of the American Congress equal to any Assembly on earth, and their deliberations and resolutions more important in their nature and consequences than any which were ever before agitated in council. The value and character of America will be fixed, merely as the Congress shall estimate them, and if they assert the rights and liberties of America with that precision and effect, which is universally expected from them, there can be no doubt but their resolves and advices will be honoured with universal approbation and obedience, and I hope and trust they will think it below their dignity, as well as inconsistent with their prudence, to degrade their importance and waste their time in humiliating and fruitless measures, when they have it in their power to assert the rights of their Country with a force and effect which the united wisdom and strength of all their enemies can by no means withstand.

I don't apprehend that all we can do will be too much. Our all is at stake; our enemies are powerful and determined; trifling expedients will be ridiculous; delays will ruin us; every moment is a moment of the utmost importance; all the world are now viewing, and all posterity will look back, on the doings of this Congress.

A LETTER FROM A VIRGINIAN TO THE MEMBERS OF THE CONGRESS, TO BE HELD AT PHILADELPHIA, ON THE FIRST OF SEPTEMBER, 1774.

Let us no longer deceive ourselves with the vain hopes of a speedy repeal of the Tea Act, because we triumphed in the repeal of the Stamp Act; the Acts themselves are totally different in their principles and their operations; the occasion by no means similar. We have advanced from one extravagant claim to another, made such sudden turnings and windings, taken such wild and rapid flights, that the boldest of our followers can follow us no longer; our most zealous advocates are ashamed to plead a cause which all men, but ourselves, condemn. Can we any longer doubt that our friends, on the other side of the Atlantic, as well as our enemies, although they differ in the mode of exercising the authority of Parliament over us, are almost universally agreed in the principle? Are we not convinced from a thousand testimonies, that the clamour against us is universal and loud? Is this, gentlemen, a season to frighten the parent country into a repeal? No man of spirit in private life, even on the slightest quarrel, will submit to be bullied and exposed to the scorn and derision of the little circle he lives in. Can we seriously hope that a great Nation, a proud Nation, will be insulted and degraded with impunity by her Colonies, in the face of every rival Kingdom in Europe? Let us then, gentlemen, relinquish forever a project fraught with absurdity and ruin. Let your constituents hope that the occasion of such an important Assembly will not be wantonly squandered in opprobrious reproaches, in bidding defiance to the mother country, but m digesting and proposing some new plan of accommodation worthy her notice and exceptance. Disputes are generally vain and endless where there are no arbitrators to award, no judges to decree. Where arguments, suspected to be drawn from interest and passion are addressed to interest and passion, they produce no conviction. We may ring eternal changes on taxation and representation, upon actual, virtual, and non-representation. We may end as we began, and disagree eternally; but there is one proposition, a self-evident proposition, to which all the world give their assent, and from which we cannot withhold ours: that whatever taxation and representation may be, taxation and Government are inseparable.

On the subject of taxation the authority of Mr. Locke is generally quoted by our advocates, as paramount to all other authority whatever. His Treatise on Government, as far as his ideas are practicable with the corrupt materials of all Governments, is undoubtedly a most beautiful theory, the noblest assertion of the unalienable rights of mankind. Let us respect it as the opinion of a wise and virtuous philosopher and patriot, but let us likewise, as good subjects, revere the laws of the land, the collected wisdom of ages, and make them the sole rule of our political conduct. Let not Mr. Locke be quoted partially by those who have read him, to mislead thousands who never read him. When he is brought as an authority that no subject can be justly taxed without his own consent, why do not they add his own explanation of that consent? i. e. "the consent of the majority, giving it either by themselves or their Representatives chosen by them." Do we compose the majority of the British community? Are we, or are we not, of that community? If we are of that community, but are not represented, are we not in the same situation with the numerous body of copy-holders, with the inhabitants of many wealthy and populous towns; in short, with a very great number of our fellow-subjects, who have no votes in elections? Shall we affirm that these are all virtually represented, but deny that we are so; and at the same time be too proud to solicit a representation? Or, under the trite and popular pretences of venality and corruption, laugh at it as impracticable? Shall we plunge at once into anarchy, and reject all accommodation with a Government (by the confession of the wisest men in Europe, the freest and the noblest Government on the records of history,) because there are imperfections in it, as there are in all things, and in all men? Are we confederates, or allies; or subjects of Great Britain? In what code of laws are we to search for taxation, under the title and condition of requisition, as we understand the word? In what theory of Government, ancient, or modern? Is it to be found any where on earth, but in modern harangues, modern pamphlets? And in these only as temporary expedients. the supply of Government must be constant, certain, and proportioned to the protection it affords; the moment the one is precarious, the other is so too; the moment it fails, civil society expires. We boast much of our bountiful compliance with the requisitions made during the last war, and in many instances with reason; but let us remember and acknowledge that there was even then more than One rich Province that refused to comply, although the war was in the very bowels of the country. Can Great Britain then depend upon her requisitions in some future war a thousand leagues distant from North America, on which, as we may have no immediate local interest, we may look perhaps with little concern.

From the infancy of our Colonies to this very hour we have grown up and flourished under the mildness and wisdom of her excellent laws; our trade, our possessions, our persons, have been constantly defended against the whole world, by the fame of her power, or by the exertion of it. We have been very lately rescued by her from enemies who threatened us with slavery and destruction, at the expense of much blood and treasure, and established after a long war (waged on our accounts, at our most earnest prayers) in a state of security, of which there is scarce an example in history. She is ever ready to avenge the cause of the meanest individual among us, with a power respected by the whole world. Let us then no longer disgrace ourselves by illiberal, ungrateful reproaches, by meanly ascribing the most generous conduct to the most sordid motives; we owe her birth, our progress, our delivery, to her; we still depend on her for protection; we are surely able to bear some part of the expense of it; let us be willing to bear it. Employ then, gentlemen, your united zeal and abilities in substituting some adequate, permanent, and effectual supply (by some mode of actual representation,) in the place of uncertain, ineffectual requisitions, or in devising some means of reconciling taxation, the indispensable obligation of every subject, with your ideas of the peculiar and inestimable rights of an Englishman.

These are objects worthy a Congress; measures that will confer lasting benefits on your country, and immortal honour on yourselves.

If, on the contrary, like independent states, you arrogate to yourselves the sole right of judging and deciding in your own cause; if you persist in denying the supreme power of Parliament, which no Parliament will ever renounce, like independent states, we have no appeal but to the God of Battles. Shall we dare lift up our eyes to that God, the source of Truth and Justice, and implore his assistance in such a cause? There are causes, where, in spite of the ridiculous tenets of pious, deluded enthusiasts, or of the wicked and monstrous doctrines of slaves and tyrants, the very principles, the original principles on which civil society depends, require, where God and nature call aloud for resistance. Such causes existed in the horrid catalogue of oppressions and crimes under a Philip the Second, a Catharine of Medicis, and in the list of grievances during one period at least, of the reign of this ill educated, the ill advised, the unhappy Charles. On such melancholy occasions, men of sentiment, spirit, and virtue, the only genuine sons of liberty, engage in the honourable cause of freedom, with God on their side, and indignantly sacrifice every advantage of fortune, every endearment of life, and life itself. Do such causes exist now among us? Did they ever exist? Are they likely to exist?

Open, if it be not too late, the eyes of our infatuated countrymen; teach them to compare their happy situation with the wretchedness of nine-tenths of the globe; shew them the general diffusion of the necessities, the conveniences and pleasures of life, among all orders of people here; the certain rewards of industry, the innumerable avenues to wealth, the native unsubdued freedom of their manners and conversation; the spirit of equality, so flattering to all generous minds, and so essential to the enjoyment of private society; the entire security of their fortunes, liberty and lives; the equity and lenity of their civil and criminal justice, the toleration of their religious opinions and worship.

Teach them to compare these invaluable privileges and enjoyments with the abject and miserable state of men debased by artificial manners, lost to all generous and manly sentiment; alternately crouching and insulting, from the vain and humiliating distinctions of birth, place, and precedence; trembling every moment for their liberty, their property, their consciences, and their lives; millions toiling, not for themselves, but to pamper the luxury and riot of a few worthless, domineering individuals, and pining in indigence and wretchedness; save them from the madness of hazarding such inestimable blessings, in the uncertain events of a war, against all odds, against invasions from Canada, incursions of savages, revolt of slaves, multiplied fleets and armies; a war which must begin where was commonly end, in the ruin of our trade, in the surrender of our ports and capitals, in the misery of thousands. Teach them in mercy, to beware how they wantonly draw their swords in defence of political problems, distinctions, refinements; about which the best and the wisest men, the friends as well as the enemies of America, differ in their opinions, lest while we deny the mother country every mode, every right of taxation, we give her the right of conquest.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR MARTIN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED NEWBERN, NORTH CAROLINA, SEPTEMBER 1, 1774.

Your Lordship will not be surprised to hear that the people of this Colony have followed the example of the rest of the Continent: in caballing and forming resolutions upon the late measures of Government, with regard to the divisions in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. The readiness with which the intemperate declarations of the Virginia Assembly were adopted and re-echoed here, will have shown your Lordship, that this people are of but too congenial disposition. What system the other Continental Assemblies have formed by their Committees of Correspondence, which your Lordship must know have been appointed, I cannot tell, having never understood that their proceedings have transpired more than those of the Committee here, of which nothing appears upon the Assembly's Journal, but the resolves entered into on the first establishment of that Committee, and that letters had been received from the Committees in the other Colonies, the contents of which are held secret. Whatever measures may have been taken, the combination is assuredly at least indecent and inglorious.

The first intimation that I received, except from vague rumour, of the measures lately taken here, was from the enclosed letter of a Committee at Wilmington, to the freeholders of Craven County, where my residence is fixed. Whereupon I immediately ordered the Council to be summoned, that I might advise with them on the measures proper to be taken to discourage and prevent such unlawful and indecent proceedings. Your Lordship will see, by the minutes of that Board, herewith transmitted, that on the 12th of last month, I laid the letter before them, and that I issued with their advice, a Proclamation the next day; apprehending however, that under the total inability of Government to enforce even what common decorum required, the proposed meeting of Deputies at Newborn, the seat of Government, that was ultimately agreed to be the place of rendezvous, would be accordingly held, and considering it would be my duty to be at hand, to discourage their proceedings as much as lay in my power, and to take such measures as circumstances should require, for the maintenance of order and government, I resolved there to wait, until the time of meeting was past, although the very impaired state of my health made it highly expedient to remove, at that season from so unwholesome a situation; whence, at the very time, I was compelled to send my family to New-York, as the only chance of preserving it from destruction.

Boston, September 5, 1774.

On Thursday morning, September 1st, half past four, about two hundred and sixty troops commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Maddison, embarked on board thirteen boats at the Long Wharf, and proceeded up Mystic River to Temple's farm, where they landed, and went to the powder house on Quarry Hill, in Charlestown bounds, whence they have taken two hundred and fifty half barrels of powder, the whole store there, and carried it to the Castle.

A detachment from this corps went to Cambridge, and brought off two field pieces, which had been lately sent there for Colonel Brattle's regiment. The preparation for this scandalous expedition caused much speculation, as some who were near the Governour gave out that he had sworn the Committee of Salem should recognise or be imprisoned; nay, some said be put on board the Scarborough, and sent to England forthwith.

The Committee of Boston sent off an express after ten, on Wednesday evening, to advise their brethren of Salem of what they apprehended was coming against them, who received their message with great politeness, and returned an answer purporting their readiness to receive any attacks they might be exposed to for acting in pursuance to the laws and interest of their country as became men and Christians.

From these several hostile appearances the County of Middlesex took the alarm, and on Thursday evening began to collect in large bodies, with their arms, provisions, and ammunition, determining by some means to give a check to a power which so openly threatened their destruction, and in such a clandestine manner rob them of the means of their defence. And on Friday morning some thousands of them had advanced to Cambridge, armed only with sticks, as they had left their fire-arms, &c., at some distance behind them. Some indeed, had collected on Thursday evening, and surrounded the Attorney General's house, who is also Judge of Admiralty on the new plan of Nova-Scotia; and being provoked by the firing of a gun from a window, they broke some glass, but did no more mischief. The company, however, concerned in this were mostly boys and negroes, who soon dispersed.

On perceiving the concourse on Friday morning, the Committee of Cambridge sent an express to Charlestown, who communicated the intelligence to Boston, and their respective Committee proceeded to Cambridge without delay. When the first of the Boston Committee came up, they found some thousands of people assembled round the Court House steps, and Judge Danorth standing upon them, speaking to the body, declaring, in substance, that having now arrived at a very advanced age, and spent the greater part in the service of the publick, it was a great mortification to him to find a step lately taken by him so disagreeable to his country, in which he conscientiously had meant to serve them; but finding their general sense against his holding a seat at the Council Board on the new establishment, he assured them that he had resigned the said office, and would never henceforth accept or act in any office inconsistent with the Charter rights of his country; and in confirmation of said declaration, he delivered the following certificate drawn up by himself, and signed with his own hand, viz:

"Although I have this day made an open declaration to a great concourse of people, who assembled at Cambridge, that I had resigned my seat at the Council Board; yet, for the further satisfaction of all, I do hereby declare, under my hand, that such resignation has actually been made, and that it is my full purpose not to be any way concerned as a member of the Council at any time hereafter.

"S. DANFORTH.

"September 2, 1774."

Judge Lee was also on the Court House steps, and delivered his mind to the body in terms similar to those used by Judge Danforth; and delivered the following declaration also drawn up and signed by him, viz:

"Cambridge, September 2, 1774.

"As great numbers of the inhabitants of the county are come into this town since my satisfying those who were met, not only by declaration, but by reading to them what I wrote to the Governour at my resignation, and being desirous to give the whole county and Province full satisfaction in this matter, I hereby declare my resignation of a seat in the new constituted Council, and my determination to give no further attendance.

JOS. LEE."

Upon this a vote was called for, to see if the body was satisfied with the declarations and resignations abovesaid, and passed in the affirmative, nem. con.

It was then moved to know whether that body would signify their abhorrence of mobs, riots, and the destruction of private property, and passed in the affirmative, nem. con.

Colonel Phips, the High Sheriff of the county, then came before the Committee of the body, and complained that he had been hardly spoken of for the part he had acted in delivering the powder in Charlestown Magazine to the soldiery; which the Committee candidly considered and reported to the body, that it was their opinion the High Sheriff was excusable, as he had acted in conformity to his order from the Commander-in-chief. Colonel Phips also delivered the following declaration by him subscribed, viz:

"Colonel Phips's Answer to the Honourable body now in meeting on the Common, viz:

"That I will not execute any precept that shall be sent me under the new Acts of Parliament for altering the Constitution of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay; and that I will recall all the venires that I have sent out under the new establishment.

DAVID PHIPS.

"Cambridge, September 2, 1774."

Which was accepted as satisfactory.

About eight o'clock his Honour Lieutenant Governour Oliver set off from Cambridge to Boston, and informed Governour Gage of the true state of matters, and the business of the people; which, as his Honour told the Admiral, was not a mad mob, but the freeholders of the county, promising to return in two hours and confer further with them on his own circumstance as President of the Council.

On Mr. Oliver's return, he came to the Committee and signified what he had delivered to the body in the morning, viz: that as the commissions of Lieutenant Governour and President of the Council seemed tacked together, he should undoubtedly incur his Majesty's displeasure if he resigned the latter and pretended to hold the former; and no body appeared to have any objection to his enjoying the place he held constitutionally; he begged he might not be pressed to incur that displeasure, at the instance of a single county, while any other Counsellor held in the new establishment; assuring them however, that in ease the mind of the whole Province, collected in Congress, or otherwise, appeared for his resignation, he would by no means act in opposition to it. This seemed satisfactory to the Committee, and they were preparing to deliver it to the body, when Mr. Commissioner Hallowell came through the town on his way to Boston. The sight of that obnoxious person so inflamed the people, that in a few minutes about one hundred and sixty horsemen were drawn up, and proceeded in pursuit of him on the full gallop. Captain Gardner, of Cambridge, first began a parley with one of the foremost, which caused them to halt while he delivered his mind very fully in dissuasion of the pursuit, and was seconded by Mr. Deavens, of Charlestown, and Dr. Young, of Boston. They generally observed that the object of the body's attention that day seemed to be the resignation of the unconstitutional Counsellors; and that it might introduce confusion into the proceedings of the day, if any thing else was brought upon the carpet till that important business was finished; and in a little time the gentlemen dismounted their horses and returned to the body.

But Mr. Hallowell did not entirely escape, as one gentleman of small stature pushed on before the general body, and followed Hallowell, who had made the best of his way till he got into Roxbury, where Mr. Bradshaw overtook and stopped him in his chaise. Mr. Hallowell snapped his pistols at him, but could not disengage himself from him till he quitted the chaise and mounted his servant's horse, on which he drove into Boston with all the speed he could make; till the horse failing within the gate, he ran on foot to the camp, through which he spread consternation, telling them he was pursued by some thousands, who would be in town at his heels, and destroy all friends of Government before them.

A gentleman in Boston observing the motion in the camp, and concluding they were on the point of marching to Cambridge, from both ends of the town, communicated the alarm to Dr. Roberts, then at Charlestown Ferry, who having a very fleet horse, brought the news in a very few minutes to the Committee, then at dinner. The intelligence was instantly diffused, and the people whose arms were nearest, sent persons to bring them, while horsemen were despatched both ways to gain more certain advice of the true state of the soldiery. A greater fervour and resolution probably never appeared among any troops.

The despatches soon returning, and assuring the body that the soldiers still remained and were likely to remain in their camp, they resumed their business with spirit, and resolved to leave no unconstitutional officer within their reach in possession of his place. On this the Committee assembled again, and drew up the paper, of which the following is a copy, and at the head of the body delivered it to Lieutenant Governour Oliver to sign, with which he complied, after obtaining their consent to add the latter clause, implying the force by which he was compelled to do it. Mr. Mason, Clerk of the County of Middlesex, also engaged, in his office, to do no one thing in obedience to the new Acts of Parliament impairing our Charter.

"Cambridge, September 2, 1774.

"I, Thomas Oliver, being appointed by his Majesty to a seat at the Council Board, upon, and in conformity to the late Act of Parliament, entitled, 'An Act for the better regulation of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay,' which being a manifest infringement of the Charter rights and privileges of this people, I do hereby in conformity to the commands of the body of this county now convened, most solemnly renounce and resign my seat at said unconstitutional Board, and hereby firmly promise and engage, as a man of honour and a Christian, that I never will hereafter, upon any terms whatsoever, accept a seat at said Board on the present novel and oppressive plan of Government.

"My house at Cambridge being surrounded by about four thousand people, in compliance with their commands, I sign my name,

TO THE PRINTER OF THE MASSACHUSETTS GAZETTE.

In the publications of last Monday, the transactions at Cambridge, on Friday, the 2d of September, having been so generally related, I am constrained, in support of my character, to give the publick a more particular account of those parts in which I was so unhappily involved.

Early in the morning of that day a number of the inhabitants of Charlestown called at my house, to acquaint me that a large body of people from several towns in the county were on their way coming down to Cambridge; that they were afraid some bad consequences might ensue, and begged I would go out to meet them, and endeavour to prevail on them to return.

In a very short time, before I could prepare myself to go, they appeared in sight. I went out to them, and asked the reasons of their appearance in that manner; they respectfully answered, they "came peaceably to inquire into their grievances, not with design to hurt any man." I perceived they were the land-holders of the neighbouring towns, and was thoroughly persuaded they would do no harm. I was desired to speak to them; I accordingly did, in such a manner as I thought best calculated to quiet their minds. They thanked me for my advice, said they were no mob, but sober, orderly people, who would commit no disorders; and then proceeded on their way. I returned to my house. Soon after they had arrived on the Common at Cambridge, a report arose that the troops were on their march from Boston; I was desired to go and intercede with his Excellency to prevent their coming. From principles of humanity to the country, from a general love of mankind, and from persuasions that they were this orderly people, I readily undertook it; and is there a man on earth, who, placed in my circumstances, could have refused it? I am informed I am censured for having advised the General to a measure which may reflect on the troops, as being too inactive upon such a general disturbance; but surely such a reflection on the military can never arise but in the minds of such as are entirely ignorant of these circumstances. Wherever this affair is known, it must also be known it was my request the troops should not be sent, but to return; as I passed the people I told them, of my own accord, I would return and let them know the event of my application, (not, as was related in the papers, in confer with them on my own circumstances as President of the Council.) On my return I went to the Committee, I told them no troops had been ordered, and from the account I had given his Excellency, none would be ordered. I was then thanked for the trouble I had taken in the affair, and was just about to leave them to their own business, when one of the Committee observed, that as I was present, it might be proper to mention a matter they had to propose to me. It was, that although they had a respect for me as Lieutenant Governor of the Province, they could wish I would resign my seat. I told them I took it very unkind that they should mention any thing on that subject; and, among other reasons, I urged, that, as Lieutenant Governor, I stood in a particular relation to the Province in general, and, therefore, could not hear any thing upon that matter from a particular county. I was then pushed to know, if I would resign when it appeared to be the sense of the Province in general; I answered, that when all the other Counsellors had resigned, if it appeared to be the sense of the Province I should resign, I would submit.

They then called for a vote upon the subject, and, by a very great majority, voted my reasons satisfactory. I inquired whether they had full power to act for the people, and being answered in the affirmative, I desired they would take care to acquaint them of their votes, that I should have no further application made to me on that head; I was promised by the Chairman, and a general assent, it should be so. This left me entirely clear and free from any apprehensions of a further application upon this matter, and perhaps will account for that confidence which I had in the people, and for which I may be censured. Indeed, it is true, the event proves I had too much, but reasoning from events yet to come, is a kind of reasoning I have not been used to.

In the afternoon I observed large companies pouring in from different parts; I then began to apprehend they would become unmanageable, and that it was expedient to go out of their way. I was just going into my carriage when a great crowd advanced, and, in a short time, my house was surrounded by three or four thousand people, and one quarter part in arms. I went to the front door, where I was met by five persons, who acquainted me they were Committee from the people to demand a resignation of my seat at the Board. I was shocked at their ingratitude and false dealings, and reproached them with it. They excused themselves by saying the people were dissatisfied with the vote of the Committee, and insisted on my signing a paper they had prepared for that purpose. I found I had been ensnared, and endeavoured to reason them out of such ungrateful behaviour. They gave such answers that I found it was in vain to reason longer with them; I told them my first considerations were my honour, the next my life; that they might put me to death or destroy my property, but I would not submit. They began then to reason in their turn, urging the power of the people, and the danger of opposing them. All this occasioned a delay, which enraged part of the multitude, who, pressing into my back yard denounced vengeance to the foes of their liberties. They endeavoured to moderate them, and desired them to keep back, for they pressed up to my windows, which then were open; I could from thence hear them at a distance calling out for a determination, and, with their arms in their hands swearing they would have my blood if I refused. The Committee appeared to be anxious for me, still refused to sign; part of the populace growing furious, and the distress of my family, who heard their threats, and supposed them just about to be executed, called up feelings which I could not suppress; and nature, ready to find new excuses, suggested a thought of the calamities I should occasion, if I did not comply; I found myself giving way, and began to cast about to contrive means to come off with honour, I proposed they should call in the people to take me out by force, but they said the people were enraged, and they would not answer for the consequences; I told them I would take the risk, but they refused to do it: Reduced to this extremity, I cast my eyes over the paper; with a hurry of mind and conflict of passion which rendered me unable to remark the contents, and wrote underneath the following words: "My house at Cambridge being surrounded by four thousand people, in compliance with "their commands, I sign my name, Thomas Oliver," The five persons took it, carried it to the people, and, I believe, used their endeavours to get it accepted. I had several messages that the people would not accept it with these additions, upon which I walked into the court yard, and declared I would do no more, though they should put me to death.

I perceived that those persons who formed the first body which came down in the morning, consisting of the land-holders of the neighbouring towns, used their utmost endeavours to get the paper received with my additions; and I must, in justice to them, observe, that, during the whole transaction, they had never invaded my enclosures, but still were not able to protect me from the insults which I received from those who were in arms. From this consideration I am induced to quit the country, and seek protection in the town.

THOMAS OLIVER.

Boston, September 7, 1774.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM ST. JOHN'S PARISH, IN GEORGIA, DATED SEPTEMBER 2, 1774.

The struggle in the cause of liberty in the Province of Georgia has been very considerable. At a General Convention at Savannah; on the 10th day of August, a number of spirited Resolutions were entered into, and unanimously agreed upon, as you may see published in the Georgia Gazette; but a difference of opinion arising on this proposition, viz: "Whether Deputies should be sent to join "with the Deputies of the other Colonies at the General "Congress," it was over-ruled in the negative; but this negative was maintained by a majority of numbers of gentlemen of Savannah, who were not properly constituted, and had no right to vote in the case. The other Parishes immediately expressed their dissatisfaction, and made a second attempt, in which the Parish of St. John took the lead, and came to this further Resolution: "That if the "majority of the other Parishes would join with them, they "would send Deputies to join the General Congress, and "faithfully and religiously abide by, and conform to, such "determinations and resolutions as should be there entered into, and come from thence recommended." Their meeting was on the 30th of August, at which time there appeared Representatives from two Parishes, viz: St. George's and St. David's, to join with the Parish, of St. John, (and we since learn that the Parish of St. Andrew have acceded to the same resolution) and those Parishes went so far as even to nominate one Deputy, who will, if the other Parishes agree, finally attend at the General Congress.

The Parish of St. John have been remarkably unanimous and spirited in this important affair; have opened a subscription for the relief of the unhappy sufferers at Boston; and in this single Parish have already subscribed to the amount of two hundred barrels of rice, which is to be forwarded by the Committee of Correspondence; and they, with the other Parishes that join them, express the strongest desire to be united with the other Colonies, in every constitutional measure, for the removal of publick grievances, and are willing, in this noble struggle, to exert themselves to the utmost; to make every sacrifice that men, impressed with the strongest sense of their rights and liberties, and warm with the most benevolent feelings for their oppressed brethren, can make, to stand firmly, or fall gloriously, in the common cause.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 2, 1774.

Your Lordship's despatch, No. 6, is duly received. Your Lordship will know that the state, not of this Province only, but of the rest, is greatly changed since Mr. Hutchinson left America.

Though I saw things were bad when I wrote from Salem, I found them much worse than I expected when I arrived here. Several of the new Counsellors who dwell at a distance, have fled from their houses, and been obliged to seek protection among the troops at Boston; in that number were Messrs. Ruggles, Edson, Leonard, and Murray; and Messrs. Loring and Pepperell are lately come into town. The object of the people was to force them to give up their seats in Council, which has taken effect with Mr. Paine, who was seized and roughly treated. There are bad reports of Mr. Watson, though I have no news from him; but Mr. Willard was grievously mal-treated, first in Connecticut, where he went on business; and every township he passed through on his way home, in this Province, had previous notice of his approach, and ready to insult him; arms were put to his breast, with threats of instant death, unless he signed a paper, the Contents of which he did not know or regard. He went home, after making me that report; but the news is, that a large body was marching to his house, in Lancaster, to force him to some other concessions.

Upon the first rumour of disturbance Mr. Andrew Oliver resigned his seat in Council, as have also, since, Mr. Isaac Winslow, Thomas Hutchinson, Lee, of Cambridge, Danforth, and, this moment, Mr. Watson.

With regard to the clause in the new Acts, relative to town meetings, so many elusions are discovered, under various pretensions, of adjournments; electing to vacant offices; people assembling peaceably, without notification, upon their own affairs; and, withal, no penalty, that no persons I have advised with can tell what to do with it; at a distance they go on as usual; but worse transactions make that matter of little consequence in the present moment.

I came here to attend the Superiour Court, and in the intention to send a body of troops to Worcester, to protect the Court there; and, if wanted, to send parties to the houses of some of the Counsellors, who dwell in that county; but finding from undoubted authority, that the flames of sedition had spread universally throughout the country, beyond conception; the Counsellors already drove away, and that no Court could proceed on business, I waited the event of the sitting of the Superiour Court here, on the 30th ultimo; the Judges met, but could get neither Grand nor Petit Jury.

I ordered a Council to assemble; but upon the representation that they should be watched, stopped, and insulted on the road to Salem, and desiring to be assembled here, I hope his Majesty will approve of my consenting to their request.

The council was of opinion that it was very improper to weaken the troops here, by any detachments whatever, as they could not be of any use to the Courts, as no jurors would appear, and by that means defeat their proceedings; and that disturbance being so general, and not confined to any particular spot, there was no knowing where to send them to be of use; and would terminate only in dividing them in small detachments, and tempt numbers to fall upon them, which was reported to be the scheme of the directors of these operations.

It was considered that the whole was at stake. Connecticut and (they add) Rhode Island as furious as they are in this Province; and that the first, and only step now to take, was to secure the friends of Government in Boston, and reinforce the troops here with as many more as could possibly be collected, and to act as opportunities and exigencies shall offer.

I have for some time consulted with General Haldimand about securing the magazines at New-York, part of which is in Castle William; though, by all accounts, every thing there is quiet; the people, in general, moderate and well affected to all measures but taxations; and as I don't see that the regiment there, or the part of the eighteenth at Philadelphia, can in any case, be of any use where they are, I propose to order Major General Haldimand, with those corps, to this place. I have thoughts, also, of sending transports to Quebec for the tenth and fifty-second regiments, who were to have been relieved this year, if the internal circumstances of that Province admit it. I think there can be no danger from without, as the river will be impracticable soon after they come down it, and we may be ready, in the spring, to reinforce the garrison. I am unwilling to weaken Quebec, and nothing but extremity of affairs could make me think of it.

This state of affairs, I give your Lordship, is from numberless accounts from gentlemen thoroughly acquainted with the country, and who know the pitch of enthusiasm to which the people are now raised; - gentlemen, who are sensible, remarkably firm, and not to be intimidated; among others, Messrs. Ruggles, Murray, Leonard, and Edson, who have abandoned their dwellings to the mercy of the people, as have lately Messrs. Loring and Pepperell.

Civil Government is near its end; the Courts of Justice expiring one after another; and where there is no other reason for not suffering them, it is, that the Judges of the Inferiour Courts, as well as the Justices, are under the Governour's influence by the new Acts, though the said Acts don't take place, as to juries, till next month; but he may now turn them, the Judges, and Justices, out at pleasure, though he has as yet made no change in them.

Precepts are issued for the calling an Assembly in the beginning of next month, though uncertain whether the people will choose Representatives; but we may be assured, if chosen, that they will not act with the new Council; and, it is supposed, the project has been to annihilate the said Council, before meeting, to throw the refusal upon the Governour to act with the old Council, elected last sessions; so that we shall shortly be without law or Legislative powers.

The Judges of the Superiour Court have been with me, in a body, to represent the impossibility of carrying on the business of their Court, in any part of the Province; that the force there was by far too small to protect them every where, and, after all, no Jurors would swear in; that it was needless laying fines, which they could not do on Grand Juries, there being no law for it in the Province; and, withal, it would be in vain, the refusal being universal.

I mean, my Lord, to secure all I can by degrees; to avoid any bloody crisis as long as possible, unless forced into it by themselves, which may happen. His Majesty will, in the mean time, judge what is best to be done; but your Lordship will permit me to mention, that as it is judged here that it will be resolved to stem the torrent, and not yield to it, that a very respectable force should take the field. The regiments are now composed of small numbers; and irregulars will be very necessary in this country, many of which, of one sort or other, I conceive, may be raised here. Nothing that is said at present can palliate; conciliation, moderation, reasoning, is over; nothing can be done but by forcible means.

I transmit your Lordship a minute of Council, and copies of attested papers and letters.

A vast concourse of people assembled this day, from various parts, about eight miles from this; they have frightened and pursued many obnoxious people, as they term them; nobody has asked assistance, and I have just received a letter from Mr. Oliver, the Lieutenant Governour, to beg I would, on no account, send any troops there, for that it would prove fatal to him.

Mr. Simpson, another Counsellor, has just resigned.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1774.

In my letter of yesterday I just made mention of a letter in the moment received from Lieutenant Governour Oliver. That gentleman came to me yesterday about noon, and acquainted me that a number of people had passed his house in Cambridge, going into that town, which is about eight miles from this; but that he had talked to them, and they listened to his advice, to be quiet and return peaceably home, which they promised to do without making any disturbance. It was supposed they assembled in order to force Messrs. Danforth and Lee to resign their seats in Council, which they had done the day before, and on account of some ammunition belonging to the Province, in the Arsenal in Cambridge, which I had before sent a detachment to secure, and lodged it in Castle William. It was therefore concluded, that all objects being removed, for that they were satisfied of his being in the Council, as he was at the same time Lieutenant Governour, the people would immediately go away; and he therefore begged I would not think of ordering any troops there, as there would be no occasion for it, and it could only be productive of mischief. Some hours afterwards, three of the Commissioners of the Customs passed through Cambridge; saw great numbers of people assembled, but no noise, and no great insult offered them; but one of them, viz: Mr. Hallowell, against whom some of the chiefs of this place are piqued, sent people after him, and he was pursued almost to this town; persons were sent out, and returned with the report that all was quiet near the town, and no numbers seen. I expected to hear from the Sheriff, Mr. Phips, if any thing extraordinary happened at Cambridge, but received no further advice, till near six in the evening, when the letter which I have mentioned, and enclose, was brought me from the Lieutenant Governour, about which time the insurgents had finished their business, and went off, after forcing him to resign his seat in Council I have found since, that when Mr. Oliver came first to me, it was in consequence of the people's desire, and of their assurances that no disturbance or violence would happen; and he was so confident in their promises, and of his own influence over them, as to go back to Cambridge, and in his way met the Sheriff, whom he persuaded to go with him. They thus both fell into the snare; for they obliged the Sheriff to sign a paper, as well as Mr. Oliver.

LETTER FROM A MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT TO COLONEL CHARLES LEE, DATED LONDON, SEPTEMBER 3, 1774.

I received your long letter with great pleasure, and will answer it as fully as I am able. You must have misunderstood me, in what I said of the Bill to alter the Massachusetts Government, if you imagined I had either concurred in, or even forborne to express my fullest disapprobation of it, when it was depending in the House. The fact is so much otherwise, that I fought it through every stage, almost alone, when most of the Opposition were attending the New-Market meeting or other occupations, equally entitled to be preferred to that duty. I may have said indeed, that I prefer the form of the English Government to that of any other country upon earth, because it appears to me most calculated to reconcile necessary restraint and natural liberty, and to draw the line between them. It is the Government I was born under, I am happy to live under, and would willingly die to preserve and transmit entire; but I look upon the first principle of that Constitution to be, that the whole must be governed by the will of the whole; and that any Government where the authority residing with the few is supported by any other power than that of the many, in consequence of their free concurrence and full approbation, is the worst of tyranny. Judge then, my dear friend, whether I could approve of tearing from a free and happy people that form of Government which had been purchased with the blood, and established by the wisdom of their ancestors; and of subverting that excellent polity, endeared to them by their prosperity, and sanctified by the most laudable of human predilections, a veneration for their ancestors, and an enthusiasm for the permanence of their liberties. Nolumus Leges Angliæ mutari, was the noblest expression that ever bore testimony to the spirit of a free Legislature. I think it as laudable at Boston now, as it was in London some centuries ago. So far I stand upon the ground of natural right and manly feeling--thus much I say because - Homo sum - but to descend to the humbler ground of policy, nothing can be so absurd or impolitick, as to shake a frame sanctified by long possession, for the caprice of a moment, or the fancies of a few; to sacrifice the wisdom of ages to the presumption of an hour; and to divert the stream of Government, which has fertilized the country, and enriched the people, by channels which it has gradually formed for itself, by surmounting or eluding all the obstacles it has met with in its course, from those channels, by dams raised by strange hands unacquainted with the country, which if they are not borne down by the torrent, must deluge the country, and destroy the ancient land-marks. If, therefore, I prefer in speculation the Government of Virginia to that of Massachusetts Bay, it is not from thinking that what appears best in the abstract, should be imposed on all; on the contrary, I am convinced that the minds of individuals and the manners of a people form and adapt themselves naturally and imperceptibly to the mode of Government under which they are born. The modifications of municipal institutions are in themselves indifferent, provided they are approved by the people; but it is of the essence of freedom, and common to all free Governments, that the people should be convinced the laws they live under are of their own choosing, and that there is no power on earth that can prolong their existence, or give force to their injunctions one hour after the disapprobation of the mass of the people is signified.

I have been the more full upon this subject, because I would not willingly be mistaken in my principles in so material a point. Now I am upon the subject of Massachusetts, I cannot help expressing my surprise that you should have been so far misinformed, as to have believed that I, amongst the rest, could speak with "approbation of that scoundrel Hutchinson;" so far from it, that I agree with you in the epithet, and was the only person in the House that declared any detestation of his character, and my conviction that his whole conduct had been that of a parricide, who had attempted to ruin his country, to serve his own little narrow selfish purposes. This I did in such pointed terms, that I was informed he had afterwards waited upon a friend of mine, who did not see his character in so just a light, to thank him for what he was pleased to call defending him against me. Be assured I shall never speak well of a man who recommends an abridgment of English liberties in any part of the globe where one spark remains unsmothered by corruption, and unextinguished by violence.

As to the Quebec Bill, I can with pleasure, assure you, that I opposed it with activity throughout; and though I could not overset it, I was at least fortunate enough to set a defined bound to despotism; and say, so far shalt thou go, and no further, by drawing the line which protected New-York and Pennsylvania; though I have since been told that Burke takes the merit to himself, but upon what grounds I know not, as I proposed the fine without any communication with him.

As to myself, I am out of Parliament, without any prospect of being in; and though I should have thought it infamous to have deserted my post and not endeavoured to get in, yet I hardly can say that I much regret being out, there is so little prospect of doing good. Yours, &c.

London, September 3, 1774.

By the general concord and union of our fellow-subjects in America, and by the Solemn League and Covenant they have entered into, to defend, support, and maintain their Charters, rights, and liberties, it is very plain that their publick virtue is not vitiated, nor their morals and principles corrupted and debauched; and therefore it may be dearly foreseen, that the attack now made upon them will fail, and will redound to their honour, and to the disgrace, if not punishment, of those who planned it. It is absolutely impossible to enslave millions of people possessing such immense territories, who are resolved at all risks and hazards to defend their rights and freedom; for while they retain such a virtuous publick spirit they will be invincible. Our arbitrary Minister having fully experienced the infamous corruption and total defect of all publick spirit in the majority of the Representatives of Old England, was probably led to imagine that the people were as corrupt and void of all publick virtue in the New; but in this he hath found himself egregiously mistaken. It now appears that our American brethren have a just value for their freedom, and are determined to support it; far from submitting to the attempt upon it, they have set us a glorious example for uniting in defence of our rights and liberties at home, and not to suffer them either to be taken from us by force, or stolen from us by fraud; and surely the people of England are not yet so totally sunk in dissipation, so debilitated by luxury, or vitiated by corruption, as not to perceive the indispensable duty and moral rectitude of their conduct, and to strive to imitate their illustrious precedent. It is therefore to be hoped that all honest Englishmen, all uncorrupted freemen and lovers of their country, will join hand and heart together, and enter into one common association to defend and support at the ensuing general ejection, that great right of the people, the making of their own laws, and which can no ways be maintained but by a free and uncorrupt choice of persons to represent them in Parliament. All the evils of the Nation, and all the grievances which the people now groan under, arise from corrupt and dishonest Representatives in Parliament; from having such persons therein, as have no kind of regard for the rights and interest of the people; as takes away every idea of a national representation, and turns such an Assembly into a meeting of the creatures of the Crown, wherein the people of England are no more essentially represented than the people of America.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON, TO A CORRESPONDENT IN NEW-YORK, DATED SEPTEMBER 3, 1774.

The tools of Administration are at present more than usually calm; a calm that perhaps may be only a prelude to a storm. They are anxiously waiting to hear the result of the Congress, and, judging the Americans by themselves, were so sanguine in their expectations that the terror of their armaments would frighten you into submission to their edicts, that they cannot yet erase the idea, but still expect you to beg mercy, cap in hand. An express was sent to General Amherst, who had a private conference, but the result is not known. It is said that it was proposed to him to go with one thousand Hanoverians to America, or the third regiment of the Guards, &c., and that Sir William Draper is appointed a Governour, and is going with troops (it is supposed) to New-York. Mansfield is gone to France, many think to concert measures with the French Court against America, or to bring in the Pretender. It is whispered that the friends at Court will themselves invite him, and lay the blame on the Americans. A similar conduct has been pursued with regard to the Indians, and with some of your Colony disputes about patents and boundaries.

Many of your friends here are horribly afraid that some of the baits laid by the Ministry to enslave you will succeed. It is said many of your leading men will be tempted by lucrative places, as agents or contractors for Government, in the purchase of wheat and other necessary articles; which, besides raising domestick enemies (the most dangerous of any) among yourselves, will answer the double purpose of reducing you to poverty, (in the midst of plenty) and then to slavery. Besides, it is proposed to lay many tempting advantages in the way of those who join in the scheme from which all others are to be excluded; in short, your virtue will be tried to the utmost, by those whose long practice and experience in all the arts of corruption will be but too likely to ensure them success, and will make it necessary to exert your utmost vigilance to guard against deception, and especially that you be not betrayed by those in whom you may confide among yourselves.

Your Committee disputes have been published in all the papers, over and over, and have been disadvantageous to your cause. Lord Chatham, and all your friends, are anxiously concerned at your critical situation; but your unanimity, and the spirit and propriety of your resolutions, rejoiced the heart of every friend to constitutional freedom, and has done the highest honour to America. Maintain your firmness and unanimity, and depend upon Heaven for success; hope nothing from the people here - but if you persevere, we shall soon join you by thousands; more and more daily espouse your cause, and, I believe it will shortly be as much ours as yours. It will not be worth while to send here any Deputies from the Congress - they would only be insulted and treated with contempt; but at home they may do all the business effectually. I expect fifteen hundred respectable people, of considerable property, will shortly remove to reside in America; but the Ministry, in order to discourage emigration, are endeavoring to make living there as uneasy as it is here.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON, DATED SEPTEMBER 4, 1774.

The unanimity of the Colonies is an honour to your cause, and will make even your enemies respect you. The most embittered advocates for tyranny cannot help approving a love of liberty, and an undaunted sacrifice of every subordinate advantage for its support and preservation. Be as a body animated with one soul. Be firm and steady in all your operations; but, as you love liberty, as you wish success to its cause, as you desire to have your present struggle applauded through Europe, let your measures be concerted in a calm, open, and temperate manner. Riot and tumult will be construed as marks that your opposition proceeds from licentiousness, and of consequence that your cause is only supported by the multitude. Zeal and temper blended will discover a fixed and stationary love of freedom, not the mad impulses and ragings of passions. Let not any of your resolves, and if possible none of your productions, contain harsh reflections against Great Britain. Such heated publications alienate from you the affections of the people in England, and lead them to think you enemies to the name of Briton; whereas by mild and distinguishing measures you may gain them to your favour.

Petition and remonstrance seem to me the most probable mode of succeeding. Administration will be willing to come to an amicable settlement and adjustment of the bounds of your privileges, and the authority of Parliament, provided it might be done with safety to the dignity of Government. Is it not more reasonable, as well as more prudent, to attempt a settlement of your contradictory claims by treaty than by violence? Violence, if attended with success on either side will be injurious to both. An Englishman will reason that, though an American could not be justly taxed without the consent of the Representative, yet such a plea will not excuse him in destroying the property of any individual or body of Englishmen; that the India Company should, therefore, be indemnified by the Bostonians, and submission made for the insult offered to Government. To assert that this would be giving up the point in dispute, is the most ridiculous position that ever dropped from the pen of a raving politician. Is the making restitution for another's property destroyed, a concession of right in the injured party to tax you without your consent? Is the making a due submission and acknowledgment, when you have done wrong, to give Government a precedent of taxation without representation? These ideas have no more agreement than the paying a lawfid debt has to that of being a slave, or a French horn to a hasty pudding.

Such pretences as these disgrace your cause, and give your enemies ground of triumph. While you contend against the injustice of others give a noble instance of your readiness to do justice, even to your enemies.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM DEPUTY GOVERNOUR PENN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER 5, 1774.

In my several letters of the 31st May, and the 4th July, I gave your Lordship an account of the temper and disposition of the people of America with respect to the several Boston Acts of Parliament, and of the measures which I then understood were intended to be pursued. And I am now to inform your Lordship that Deputies from the Colonies of Massachusetts Bay, New-Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, the three Lower Counties, Maryland, Virginia, and South Carolina, have met, by appointment, in this city, as the most central place, and assembled this morning, for the first time, in general Congress, as it is called, to consult on the proper means of obtaining relief from hardships which they suppose to be entailed on the Colonies by those Acts of Parliament. It is said that Deputies are also expected from the Colonies of North Carolina and Georgia, but they have not yet made their appearance.

It is impossible to say what the result of their deliberations may be, but I shall not fail to inform your Lordship of them by the very first opportunity that offers after they are known. I think it, however, my indispensable duty to his Majesty to acquaint your Lordship that, from the best intelligence I have been able to procure, the resolution of opposing the Boston Acts, and the Parliamentary power of raising taxes in America for the purpose of raising a revenue, is, in a great measure, universal throughout the Colonies, and possesses all ranks and conditions of people. They persuade themselves there is a formed design to enslave America, and although the Act for regulating the Government of Canada does not immediately affect the other Provinces, it is nevertheless held up as an irrefragable argument of that intention. General, however, as the resolution is to oppose, there is great diversity of opinions as to the proper modes of opposition. Some are said to be for remonstrance alone upon a state of grievances and claims. Others are for a general, and others, again for a partial non-exportation and non-importation, without any remonstrance. This perhaps may be the source of divisions which will not be easily got over.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GEORGIA, TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED SEPTEMBER 7, 1774.

Some people here would suddenly enter into a non-importation agreement, but they are by far the minority; and indeed it would be highly imprudent and ungenerous for us to meddle at any rate with the disputes in which the rest of the Colonies are engaged, considering the pecuniary aid of Parliament we annually have, and do continue to receive; also our present situation with the Creek Indians, who refusing to give satisfaction for the depredations already committed on the back settlements, daily threaten us with fresh hostilities to the center, which we are by no means able to resist, as they can muster four thousand gun-men.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR COLDEN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED NEW-YORK, SEPTEMBER 7, 1774.

The destruction of Captain Chambers's tea, was so unexpected and sudden that no measures could be previously thought of to prevent it.

Afterwards the gentlemen of property and principal merchants attended the meetings of the populace, when called together by their former demagogues, who thereby have lost their influence, and are neglected. The populace are now directed by men of different principles, and who have much at stake. Many papers have been published in this city to expose the measures which had been proposed by the former demagogues in opposition to Government. Men now speak and publish sentiments in favour of Government, and argue upon the political subjects of the times, with much greater freedom and security than has been known here for some years past, which I hope is a sign that the licentious spirit which has governed the people to their great disgrace is checked. We have no more burning of effigies or putting cut-throat papers under people's doors.

I hope I am not deceived in thinking that the people of this Province will cautiously avoid giving any new offence to the Parliament, but great numbers are so fluctuating, that some unexpected incident may produce bad effects.

The five gentlemen whom I formerly informed your Lordship were appointed by this city to be their Delegates at the general Congress, went to Philadelphia, the place of meeting, last week. Seven counties of this Province neither appointed Delegates for themselves, nor concurred in the choice made by the city; and two counties have sent Delegates of their own. I found the city Delegates were embarrassed by this dissension of the people.

EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO GOVERNOUR PENN.

Whitehall, September 7, 1774.

SIR: I have received your letters of the 5th and 30th of July, and am very much obliged to you for the early intelligence they contain of publick occurrences within your Province; upon which I have only to observe that it has given the King great concern to find that his subjects in the different Colonies in North America have been induced, upon the grounds stated in their different Resolutions, to nominate Deputies to meet in general Congress at Philadelphia.

If the object of this Congress be humbly to represent to the King any grievances they may have to complain of, or any propositions they may have to make on the present state of America, such representation would certainly have come from each Colony with greater weight in its separate capacity, than in a channel of the propriety and legality of which there may be much doubt.

I fear however the measure is gone too far to encourage any hope that it has been retracted, and I can only express my wishes that the result of their proceedings may be such as not to cut off all hope of that union with the mother country which is so essential to the happiness of both.

The enclosed copy of my letter of this day's date to Lord Dunmore, (which I send you for your information) will inform you of the light in which the conduct of the people of Virginia towards the Indians upon the Ohio is considered by the King.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH

Deputy Governour Penn

EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE EARL OF DUNMORE.

Whitehall, September 8, 1774.

MY LORD: The Deputy Governour of Pennsylvania in his message to the House of Representatives, on the 18th of July last, asserts that the hostility of the Indians upon the River Ohio, which has spread such general alarm and distress throughout the back settlements, was occasioned by the unprovoked ill treatment of those Indians by the people of Virginia, who had barbarously murdered about eleven of the Delawares and Shawanese tribes, and that many friendly Indians, who had generously afforded protection to the persons and goods of Indian traders from the violence of some of their young warriors, and who were, at the risk of their own lives, escorting those traders to their friends near Pittsburgh, were, contrary to all faith, attacked, and some of them wounded by a party of Virginians sent out for the purpose by one Conolly, a militia captain, having a commission from the Government of Virginia.

My intelligence through a variety of other channels confirms these facts, and adds further that this Conolly, using your Lordship's name, and pleading your authority, has presumed to re-establish the Fort at Pittsburgh, which was demolished by the King's express orders; that he has destroyed the King's boats, which were kept there for the purpose of a communication with the Illinois country; and that parties were sent out by his authority, or under his direction, for the purpose of building forts lower down the River Ohio.

The duty I owe the King, and the regard I entertain for your Lordship, induce me to take the earliest opportunity of acquainting your Lordship with this information, to the end that the facts asserted, if not true, may be contradicted by your Lordship's authority; but, if otherwise, which I cannot suppose to be the case, such steps may be taken as the King's dignity and justice shall dictate.

I am, &c., DARTMOUTH
Earl of Dunmore.

Williamsburg, Virginia, September 8, 1774.

The Delegates from the counties, at the late Convention, having signified their opinion that the officers fees, since the expiration of the Act for regulating and collecting them, cannot be legally taxed, it seems none of the County Courts will proceed to do business until there be a session of the General Assembly; and the gentlemen of the General Court Bar, doubting the return of two of their body, who are appointed as Deputies for this Colony at the Congress, time enough to prepare for the approaching General Court, and convinced, if that honourable Court should then proceed to business, it would add much to the uneasiness of the present times, have thought it most advisable (all these circumstances considered) now to countermand the attendance of such witnesses as may have been summoned, in order to save a great, and, probably, a fruitless expense to their clients. It is, therefore, presumable there will be no trial at the next General Court, except in criminal cases; in which all the Justices in the Colony are determined to proceed, for preserving that good order so necessary at this critical period.

Boston, September 8, 1774,

Last Monday, the 5th instant, the Selectmen of this town waited on his Excellency Governour Gage, to acquaint him that the inhabitants were much alarmed to find that he had ordered the breaking up the ground near the fortification on the Neck; and requested of his Excellency that he would explain to them his design in that extraordinary movement, that they might, thereby, have it in their power to quiet the minds of the people; when his Excellency replied to the following purpose: That he had no intention of stopping up the avenue to the town, or of obstructing the inhabitants, or any of the country people, coming in or going out of town as usual; that he had taken his measures, and that he was to protect his Majesty's subjects, and his Majesty's troops in this town; and that he had no intention of any thing hostile against the inhabitants.

Boston, September 9, 1774.

This day, the Selectmen of Boston, waited on his Excellency General Gage, with the following Address:

May it please your Excellency:

The Selectmen of Boston, at the earnest desire of a number of gentlemen of the town and country, again wait on your Excellency to acquaint you that since our late application, the apprehensions of the people, not only of this, but of the neighbouring towns, are greatly increased by observing the designs of erecting a fortress at the entrance of the town; and of reducing the metropolis, in other respects, to the state of a garrison. This, with complaints lately made of abuse from some of the guards, posted in that quarter, assaulting and forcibly detaining several persons who were peaceably passing in and out of the town, may discourage the market people from coming in with their provisions, as usual, and oblige the inhabitants to abandon the town. This event we greatly deprecate, as it will produce miseries which may hurry the Province into acts of desperation. We should, therefore, think ourselves happy if we could satisfy the people that your Excellency would suspend your present design, and not add to the distresses of the inhabitants, occasioned by the Port Bill, that of garrisoning the town.

JOHN SCOLLY, Chairman of the Committee.

TO WHICH HIS EXCELLENCY WAS PLEASED TO RETURN THE FOLLOWING ANSWER:

GENTLEMEN: When you lately applied to me respecting my ordering some cannon to be placed at the entrance of this town, which you term the erecting a fortress, I so fully expressed my sentiments, that I thought you were satisfied the people had nothing to fear from that measure, as no use would be made thereof unless their hostile proceedings should make it necessary; but as you have this day acquainted me that their fears are rather increased, I have thought proper to assure you that I have no intention to prevent the free egress and ingress of any person to and from the town, or reducing it to the state of a garrison; neither shall I suffer any under my command to injure the person or property of any of his Majesty's subjects; but as it is my duty, so it shall be my endeavour, to preserve the peace and promote the happiness of every individual; and I earnestly recommend to you, and every inhabitant, to cultivate the same spirit; and I heartily wish they may live quietly and happily in the town.

THOMAS GAGE.

To the Gentlemen Selectmen of the town of Boston.

SUFFOLK COUNTY (MASSACHUSETTS) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Meeting of the Delegates of every Town and District of the County of Suffolk, on Tuesday, the 6th of September, at the house of Mr. Richard Woodward, of Dedham; and by adjournment at the house of Mr. Vose, of Milton, on Friday, the 9th instant,

JOSEPH PALMER, Esquire, being chosen Moderator, and WILLIAM THOMPSON, Esquire, Clerk,

A Committee was chosen to bring in a Report to the Convention; and the following, being several times read, and put, paragraph by paragraph, was unanimously voted, viz:

Whereas the power, but not the justice, the vengeance, but not the wisdom, of Great Britain, which of old persecuted, scourged, and excited our fugitive parents from their native shores, now pursues us, their guiltless children, with unrelenting severity. And whereas, this then savage and uncultivated desert, was purchased by the toil and treasure, or acquired by the blood and valour of those our venerable progenitors; to us they bequeathed the dear-bought inheritance; to our care and protection they consigned it; and the most sacred obligations are upon us to transmit the glorious purchase, unfettered by power, unclogged with shackles, to our innocent and beloved offspring. On the fortitude, on the wisdom, and on the exertions of this important day, is suspended the fate of this new world, and of unborn millions. If a boundless extent of Continent, swarming with millions, will tamely submit to live, move, and have their being at the arbitrary will of a licentious Minister, they basely yield to voluntary slavery, and future generations will load their memories with incessant execrations. On the other hand, if we arrest the hand which would ransack our pockets; if we disarm the parricide which points the dagger to our bosoms; if we nobly defeat that fatal edict which proclaims a power to frame laws for us in all cases whatsoever, thereby entailing the endless and numberless curses of slavery upon us, our heirs, and their heirs forever; if we successfully resist that unparalleled usurpation of unconstitutional power, whereby our capital is robbed of the means of life; whereby the streets of Boston are thronged with military executioners; whereby our costs are lined and harbours crowded with ships of war; whereby the Charter of the Colony, that sacred barrier against the encroachments of tyranny is mutilated, and, in effect, annihilated; whereby a murderous law is framed to shelter villains from the hand of justice; whereby that unalienable and inestimable inheritance which we derived from nature, the Constitution of Britain, and the privileges warranted to us in the Charter of the Province, is totally wrecked, annulled, and vacated, posterity will acknowledge that virtue which preserved them free and happy; and while we enjoy the rewards and blessings of the faithful, the torrents of panegyrics will roll our reputations to the latest period, when the streams of time shall be absorbed in the abyss of eternity. - Therefore we have resolved, and do resolve,

1. That whereas his Majesty King George the Third, is the rightful successor to the Throne of Great Britain, and justly entitled to the allegiance of the British Realm, and agreeable to compact of the English Colonies in America; therefore, we the heirs and successors of the first planters of this Colony do cheerfully acknowledge the said George the Third to be our rightful Sovereign; and that said covenant is the tenure and claim on which are founded our allegiance and submission.

2. That it is an indispensable duty which we owe to God, our country, ourselves, and posterity, by all lawful ways and means in our power, to maintain, defend, and preserve those civil and religious rights and liberties for which many of our fathers fought, bled, and died, and to hand them down entire to future generations.

3. That the late Acts of the British Parliament for blocking up the harbour of Boston; for altering the established form of Government in this Colony; and for screening the most flagitious violators of the laws of the Province from a legal trial, are gross infractions of those rights to which we are justly entitled by the laws of nature, the British Constitution, and the Charter of the Province.

4. That no obedience is due from this Province to either or any part of the Acts above mentioned; but that they be rejected as the attempts of a wicked Administration to enslave America.

5. That so long as the Justices of our Superiour Court of Judicature, Court of Assize, &c., and Inferiour Court of Common Pleas in this county, are appointed, or hold their places by any other tenure than that which the Charter and the laws of the Province direct, they must be considered as under undue influence, and are therefore unconstitutional officers, and as such, no regard ought to be paid to them by the people of this county.

6. That if the Justices of the Superiour Court of Judicature, Assize, &c., Justices of the Court of Common Pleas, or of the General Sessions of the Peace, shall sit and act during the present disqualified state, this county will support and bear harmless all Sheriffs and other Deputies, Constables, Jurors, and other Officers, who shall refuse to carry into execution the orders of said Court; and as far as possible to prevent the many inconveniences which must be occasioned by a suspension of the Courts of Justice, we do most earnestly recommend it to all creditors that they show all reasonable and every generous forbearance to their debtors, and to all debtors to pay their just demands with all possible speed; and if any disputes relative to debts or trespasses, shall arise which cannot be settled by the parties, we recommend it to them to submit all such cases to arbitration; and it is our opinion that the contending parties, or either of them, who shall refuse so to do, ought to be considered as co-operating with the enemies of this country.

7. That it be recommended to the Collectors of Taxes, Constables, and all other Officers, who have publick moneys in their hands, to retain the same, and not to make any payment thereof to the Provincial County Treasurer, until the Civil Government of the Province is placed upon a constitutional foundation, or until it shall otherwise be ordered by the proposed Provincial Congress.

8. That the persons who have accepted seats at the Council Board, by virtue of a mandamus from the King, in conformity to the late Act of the British Parliament, entitled "An Act for the regulating the Government of the Massachusetts Bay," have acted in direct violation of the duty they owe to their country, and have thereby given great and just offence to this people; therefore, resolved, that this county do recommend it to all persons who have so highly offended by accepting said departments, and have not already publicly resigned their seats at the Council Board, to make publick resignation of their places at said Board, on or before the 20th day of this instant September; and that all persons refusing so to do, shall, from and after that day, be considered by this county as obstinate and incorrigible enemies to this country.

9. That the fortifications begun and now carrying on upon Boston Neck, are justly alarming to this county, and we us reason to apprehend some hostile intention against that town; more especially as the Commander-in-chief has, in a very extraordinary manner, removed the powder from the Magazine at Charlestown, and has also forbidden the keeper of the Magazine at Boston to deliver out to the owners the powder which they had lodged in said Magazine.

10. That the late Act of Parliament for establishing the Roman Catholick religion and the French laws in that extensive country now called Canada, is dangerous in an extreme degree to the Protestant religion, and to the civil rights and liberties of all America; and therefore, as men and Protestant Christians, we are indispensably obliged to take all proper measures for our own security.

11. That whereas our enemies have flattered themselves that they will make an easy prey of this numerous, brave, and hardy people, from an apprehension that they are unacquainted with military discipline; we, therefore, for the honour, defence, and security of this county and Province, advise, as it has been recommended to take away all commissions from the officers of the militia, that those who now hold commissions, or such other persons be elected in each town as officers of the militia, as shall be judged of sufficient capacity for that purpose, and who have evidenced themselves the inflexible friends to the rights of the people; and that the inhabitants of these towns and districts who are qualified, to use their utmost diligence to acquaint themselves with the art of war as soon as possible, and do, for that purpose, appear under arms at least once every week.

12. That, during the present hostile appearances on the part of Great Britain, notwithstanding the many insults and oppressions which we most sensibly resent, yet, nevertheless, from our affection to his Majesty, which we have at all times evinced, we are determined to act merely upon the defensive, so long as such conduct may be vindicated by reason and the principles of self-preservation, but no longer.

13. That, as we understand it has been in contemplation to apprehend sundry persons of this county, who have rendered themselves conspicuous in contending for the violated rights and liberties of their countrymen, we do recommend, should such an audacious measure be put in practice, to seize and keep in safe custody every servant of the present tyrannical and unconstitutional Government, throughout the county and Province, until the persons so apprehended be liberated from the bands of our adversaries, and restored safe and uninjured to their respective friends and families.

14. That until our rights are fully restored unto us, we will, to the utmost of our power, and recommend the same to the other counties, withhold all commercial intercourse with Great Britain, Ireland, and the West Indies, and abstain from the consumption of British merchandise and manufactures, and especially of East India teas and piece goods, with such additions, alterations, and exceptions only, as the Grand Congress of the Colonies may agree to.

15. That, under our present circumstances, it is incumbent on us to encourage arts and manufactures among us by all means in our power; and that * * * * * be and hereby are appointed a Committee to consider of the best ways and means to promote and establish the same, and to report to this Convention as soon as may be.

16. That the exigencies of our publick affairs demand that a Provincial Congress be called to concert such measures as may be adopted and vigorously executed by the whole people; and we do recommend it to the several towns in this county to choose members for such a Provincial Congress, to be holden at Concord, on the second Tuesday of October next ensuing.

17. That this county, confiding in the wisdom and integrity of the Continental Congress, now sitting at Philadelphia, will pay all due respect and submission to such measures as may be recommended by them to the Colonies, for the restoration and establishment of our just rights, civil and religious, and for renewing that harmony and union between Great Britain and the Colonies so wished for by all good men.

18. That whereas, the universal uneasiness which prevails among all orders of men, arising from the wicked and oppressive measures of the present Administration, may influence some unthinking persons to commit outrage upon private property, we would heartily recommend to all persons of this community not to engage in any routs, riots, or licentious attacks upon the properties of any person whatsoever, as being subversive of all order and government; but, by a steady, manly, uniform, and persevering opposition, to convince our enemies that in a contest so important - in a cause so solemn, our conduct shall be such as to merit the approbation of the wise, and the admiration of the brave and free of every age and of every country.

19. That, should our enemies, by any sudden macœuvres, render it necessary to ask the aid and assistance of our brethren in the country, some one of the Committee of Correspondence, or a Selectman of each town, or the town adjoining where such hostilities shall commence, or shall be expected to commence, shall despatch couriers with written messages to the Selectmen or Committees of Correspondence of the several towns in the vicinity, with a written account of such matter, who shall despatch others to Committees more remote, until proper and sufficient assistance be obtained; and that the expense of said couriers be defrayed by the county, until it shall be otherwise ordered by the Provincial Congress.

At a Meeting of Delegates from several Towns and Districts in the County of Suffolk, held at Milton, on Friday the 9th of September, 1774, Voter, That Doctor Joseph Warren and Doctor Benjamin Church, of Boston; Deacon Joseph Palmer, Germanatown; Captain Lemuel Robinson, Dorchester; Captain William Heath, Roxbury; Colonel Ebenezer Thayer, Braintree; William Holden, Esq., Dorchester; Colonel William Taylor, Milton; Captain John Homans, Dorchester; Isaac Gardiner, Esq., Brookline; Mr. Richard Woodward, Dedham; Captain Benjamin White, Brookline; Doctor Samuel Gardiner, Milton; Nathaniel Summer, Esq., Dedham, and Captain Thomas Aspinwall, Brookline, be a Committee to wait upon his Excellency the Governour, to inform him that the people of this county are alarmed at the fortifications making on Boston Neck, and to remonstrate against the same; and the repeated insults offered by the soldiery to persons passing and repassing into that town, and to confer with him upon these subjects.

Attest, WILLIAM THOMSON, Clerk.

To his Excellency the Honourable THOMAS GAGE, Captain-General and Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's Province of MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

May it please your Excellency:

The County of Suffolk being greatly, and in their opinion justly alarmed at the formidable appearance of hostility now threatening his Majesty's good subjects of this county, and more particularly of the town of Boston, the loyal and faithful capital of this Province; beg leave to address your Excellency, and represent that the apprehensions of the people are more especially increased by the dangerous design now carrying into execution, of repairing and manning the fortifications at the south entrance of the town of Boston, which when completed, may at any time be improved to aggravate the miseries of that already impoverished and distressed city, by intercepting the wonted and necessary intercourse between the town and country, and compel the wretched inhabitants to the most ignominious state of humiliation and vassalage, by depriving them of the necessary supplies of provisions for which they are chiefly dependent on that communication: we have been informed that your Excellency, in consequence of the application of the Selectmen of Boston, has indeed disavowed any intention to injure the town, in your present manoeuvres, and expressed your purpose to be for the security of the troops and his Majesty's subjects in the town; we are at a loss to guess, may it please your Excellency, from whence your want of confidence in the loyal and orderly people of this county could originate; a measure so formidable, carried into execution from a pre-conceived, though causeless jealousy of the insincerity of his Majesty's troops and subjects in the town, deeply wounds the loyalty, and is an additional injury to the faithful subjects of this county, and affords them a strong motive for this application.

We therefore entreat your Excellency to desist from your design, assuring your Excellency that the people of this county are by no means disposed to injure his Majesty's troops; they think themselves aggrieved and oppressed by the late Acts of Parliament, and are resolved, by divine assistance, never to submit to them, but have no inclination to commence a war with his Majesty's troops, and beg leave to observe to your Excellency, that the ferment now excited in the minds of the people is occasioned by some late transactions, by seizing the powder in the Arsenal at Charlestown, by withholding the powder lodged in the Magazine of the town of Boston from the legal proprietors, insulting, beating, and abusing passengers to and from the town by the soldiery, in which they have been encouraged by some of their officers, putting the people in fear, and menacing them in their nightly patrol into the neighbouring town, and more particularly by the fortifying the sole avenue by land into the town of Boston.

In duty therefore to his Majesty, and to your Excellency, and for the restoration of order and security to this county, we, the Delegates from the several towns in this county, being commissioned for this purpose, beg your Excellency's attention to this our humble and faithful address, assuring you that nothing less than an immediate removal of the ordnance and restoring the entrance into that town to its former state, and an effectual stop of all insults and abuses in future, can place the inhabitants of this county in that peace and tranquillity in which every free subject ought to live.

His Excellency was waited on to know if he would receive the Committee with the above written Address, but desiring he might have a copy of it in a private way, that so when he received it from the Committee he might have an answer prepared for them, he was accordingly furnished with a copy. His Excellency then declared that he would receive the Committee on Monday at twelve o'clock.

Saturday, September 10, 1774.

GOVERNOUR GAGE'S ANSWER,

GENTLEMEN: I hoped the assurances I gave the Selectmen of Boston on the subject you now address me, had been satisfactory to every body. I cannot possibly intercept the intercourse between the town and the country; it is my duty and intent to encourage it; and it is as much inconsistent with my duty and intent to form the strange scheme you are pleased to suggest of reducing the inhabitants to a state of humiliation and vassalage, by stopping their supplies; nor have I made it easier to effect this than what nature has made it. You mention the soldiers insulting, beating, and abusing passengers as a common thing; an instance, perhaps, may be given of the bad behaviour of some disorderly soldiers; but I must appeal to the inhabitants of both town and country for their general good behaviour, from their first arrival to this town.

I would ask what occasion there is for such numbers going armed in and out of the town, and through the country, in an hostile manner? Or why were the guns removed privately in the night from the battery at Charlestown?

The refusing submission to the late Acts of Parliament I find general throughout the Province, and I shall lay the same before his Majesty.

THOMAS GAGE.

Boston, September 12, 1774.

The Committee of the Delegates from the several towns in the County of Suffolk, who presented the Address to the Governour, on receiving his Answer met together, and having carefully perused the same, were unanimously of opinion that his Excellency's answer could not be deemed satisfactory to the county. And further, that his Excellency in his reply had been pleased to propose several questions, which, if unanswered by the Committee, would leave on the minds of persons, not fully acquainted with the state of facts, some very disagreeable impressions concerning the conduct and behaviour of the people in this county and Province. And the following Address was unanimously voted to his Excellency:

May it please your Excellency:

The answer you have been pleased to favour us with to the address of this day presented to you, gives us satisfaction, so far as it relates to your intentions; and we thank your Excellency for the declaration which you have made, that it is your duty and interest to encourage an intercourse between town and country; and we entreat your indulgence while we modestly reply to the questions proposed in your answer. Your Excellency is too well acquainted with the human heart, not to be sensible that it is natural for the people to be soured by oppression, and jealous for their personal security, when their exertions for the preservation of their rights are construed into treason and rebellion. Our liberties are invaded by Acts of the British Parliament; troops are sent to enforce those Acts. They are now erecting fortifications at the entrance of the town of Boston; upon the completing these the inhabitants of the town of Boston will be in the power of a soldiery who must implicitly obey the orders of an Administration who have hitherto evinced no singular regard to the liberties of America. The town is already greatly impoverished and distressed by the operation of the barbarous Port Bill. Your Excellency, we are persuaded, from principles of humanity, would refuse to be an actor in the tragical scene that must ensue upon shutting up the avenues to the town, and reducing the inhabitants, by distress and famine, to a disgraceful and slavish submission; but that cruel work may possibly be reserved for a successor, disposed and instructed thereto. Daily supplies of provisions are necessary for the subsistence of the inhabitants of the town. The country disgusted and jealous at the formidable operations now carrying on, survey with horror a plan concerted - whereby the inhabitants of the town of Boston may be imprisoned, and starved at the will of a military commander. They kindly invite them to abandon the town, and earnestly solicit them to share the homely banquet of peace in the country. Should their refusal involve them in miseries hitherto unheard of, and hardly conceived of, the country must stand acquitted, and will not hold their liberties so loosely as to sacrifice them to the obstinacy of their brethren in Boston.

Your Excellency has been pleased to order the powder from the Magazine in Charlestown; to forbid the delivery of the powder in the Magazine of Boston to the legal proprietors; to seize the cannon at Cambridge, and bring a formidable number from Castle William, which are now placed at the entrance of the town of Boston; and have likewise, in addition to the troops now here, been pleased to send for reinforcements to Quebec and other parts of the Continent. These things, sir, together with the disposition of the ships of war, we humbly think, sufficiently justify the proceedings for which your Excellency seems to be at a loss to account.

Your Excellency has suggested that nature has made it easy to cut off the communication between town and country. Our only request is, that the entrance into the town may remain as nature has formed it.

If security to his Majesty's troops is the only design in the late manoeuvre, we beg leave to assure your Excellency that the most certain, and by far the most honourable method of making them secure and safe will be to give the people of the Province the strongest proof that no design is forming against their liberties. And we again solicit your Excellency, with that earnestness which becomes us on this important occasion, to desist from every thing which has a tendency to alarm them, and particularly from fortifying the entrance into the town of Boston.

We rely on your Excellency's wisdom and candour, that, in your proposed representation to our common Sovereign, you will endeavour to redeem us from the distresses which we apprehend were occasioned by the grossest misinformation; and that you will assure his Majesty that no wish of independency - no adverse sentiments or designs towards his Majesty or his troops now here, actuate his good subjects in this Colony, but that their sole intention is to preserve pure and inviolate those rights to which, as men and as English Americans, they are justly entitled, and which have been guaranteed to them by his Majesty's royal predecessors.

A copy of the foregoing was delivered to Mr. Secretary Flucker, by the Chairman, with a desire that he would, as soon as was convenient, present it to the Governour, and request his Excellency to appoint a time for receiving it in form. The Secretary informed the Chairman the ensuing day, that he had seen the Governour, and had given him the copy of the Address, but that he declined receiving it in form. The Chairman mentioned to him the importance of the business, declaring his belief that the troops were not in any danger; and that no person has, so far as he had been informed, taken any steps which indicated any hostile intention, until the seizing and carrying off the powder from the Magazine in the County of Middlesex; and that if any ill consequences should arise, that should affect the interest of Great Britain, the most candid and judicious, both in Europe and America, would consider the author of the ferment now raised in the minds of the people as accountable for whatever consequences might follow from it. He therefore desired the Secretary once more to make application to his Excellency, and to state the affair to him in that serious manner which the case seemed to require. The Secretary accordingly made a second application to the Governour; but received for answer, that he had given all the satisfaction in his power, and he could not see that any further argumentation upon the subject would be to any purpose.

Upon this the Committee were again convened, and it was unanimously resolved, that they had executed the commission entrusted to them by the county, to the utmost of their ability. And after voting the Reply to his Excellency's Answer, should be inserted in the publick papers as soon as possible, they adjourned without day.

It is observable, that every vote passed by the Delegates of the county, and by the Committee appointed to wait on the Governour, was unanimous.

New-York, September 15, 1774.

On Friday last numbers of the following Card were distributed about this city:

New-York, September 9, 1774.

A Card. - The thanks of the publick are presented to those worthy citizens, who have, to their immortal honour, nobly refused to let their Vessels for the base purpose of transporting troops, ammunition, &c., to oppress the brave defenders of American liberty, who are already suffering in the common cause. Such patriotick conduct merits applause, as much as a contrary one would the contempt and indignation of every generous mind.

Yesterday evening numbers of the following Handbill were distributed about this city:

To the Publick. - As the Merchants of this city have nobly refused letting their vessels to the tools of Government for the base purpose of transporting troops and military stores to Boston, for enforcing the cruel and arbitrary edicts of a corrupt Ministry, on that virtuous people, now suffering in the glorious cause of American freedom, it is therefore hoped that no Pilot will be found so lost to all sense of duty to his country, as to assist in that detestable work. Mr. Francis Post inadvertently engaged to make some chests for the transportation of arms; and Mr. Jonathan Hampton, in like manner, undertook to contract with house carpenters, for the purpose (as is supposed) of building barracks at Boston; but when their fellow-citizens represented to them the tendency of their conduct, they immediately declined the abominable service. After these laudable examples of the merchants and tradesmen of this city, there is no doubt but their patriotick conduct will be followed by all their fellow-citizens. But notwithstanding, should any sordid miscreant be found amongst us, who will aid the enemies of this country to subvert her liberties, he must not be surprised if that vengeance overtakes him, which is the reward justly due to parricides.

THE FREE CITIZENS.

New-York, September 14, 1774.

EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO LIEUT. GOVERNOUR COLDEN,

Whitehall, September 10, 1774.

SIR: I have received your letters of the 6th July, and 2d August, Nos. 3 and 4, and have laid them before the King.

You certainly are right in thinking that it is your duty to transmit a particular account of all publick occurrences in the Province under your Government and will not fail to embrace every opportunity that offers of writing to me.

The King has seen with concern that his subjects in the different Colonies in North America, have been induced upon the grounds stated in their different Resolutions, to nominate Deputies to meet in general Congress at Philadelphia.

If the object of this Congress be humbly to represent to the King any grievances they may have to complain of, or any propositions they may have to make on the present state of America, such representations would certainly have come from each Colony with greater weight, in its separate capacity, than in a channel of the propriety and legality of which there may be much doubt.

I fear, however, the measure has gone too far to encourage any hope that it has been retracted; and I can only express my wish that the result of their proceedings may be such as may not cut off all hope of that union with the mother country which is so essential to the happiness of both.

Among the many objects that will deserve your attention in the present state of America, the contraband trade carried on between New-York and Holland is not the least important. The number of vessels that continually load in Holland for that Province is a melancholy evidence of the extent of that illicit commerce; and it is more particularly alarming now, from the intelligence received of very large quantities of gunpowder shipped there for New-York.

My information says that the Polly, Captain Benjamin Broadhelp, bound from Amsterdam to Nantucket has, among other articles, received on board no less a quantity than three hundred thousand pounds weight of gunpowder; and I have great reason to believe that considerable quantities of that commodity, as well as other military stores, are introduced into the Colonies from Holland, through the channel of St. Eustatia.

You will therefore, sir, with as much secrecy and prudence as possible, endeavour to inform yourself of the nature and extent of this contraband trade in general; and to attend particularly to the intelligence I now send you with respect to the ship Polly, Captain Benjamin Broadhelp.

It is most probable, that the object of her voyage will be completed before this reaches you; but if any measures can be fallen upon that may lead to a discovery of the circumstances above stated, it will be of great use, and may possibly suggest a means of putting a stop to so dangerous a correspondence. I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,

DARTMOUTH.

Lieutenant Governour Colden.

ISRAEL PUTNAM TO CAPTAIN TRUMBULL.

Pomfret, September 11, 1774.

DEAR SIR: As you were chosen by the Congress at Norwich to attend the Congress at Hartford, I thought it my indispensable duty to send you the copy of a letter I received from the Committee of Correspondence at Boston. And also an extract of a letter from Dr. Young to me, which is as follows:

"Tuesday, arrived at Salem, Captain Fea, in seven weeks from London; brought thirty-three chests of tea with her, consigned to Smith and Atkinson. They both waited on the Committee of Correspondence and assured them that they would do every thing in their power to return it, or dispose of it in any manner that would be agreeable to the people. Smith went early this morning to Salem to see about it, and this evening I am informed there are one hundred soldiers put on board the ship that brought the tea. Another great cargo is coming for Portsmouth, so that you see we are to be plagued with that detested weed. And nothing but a non-consumption agreement can save America."

The above extract, and the letter enclosed, may be very proper to be laid before the Congress at Hartford.

I am, &c.,

ISRAEL PUTNAM.

WILLIAM COOPER TO ISRAEL PUTNAM,

Boston, September 7, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: Your kind letters of the 4th current, came yesterday to hand by your envoys. We immediately transmitted them to a Congress of our county, then to sit, where they had their effect. Nothing can alleviate the distresses of our brethren in this State prison, more than the countenance and assistance which on all occasions we receive from our generous fellow-countrymen. How soon we may need their most effectual support, we cannot determine; but agreeable to your wise proposal, shall give you authentick intelligence by express on such emergency.

Our military enemies in this place, by the request of the civil destroyers of our Constitution, are now with all diligence erecting a fortification at the south entrance of the town, which is the only avenue to it by land. Application has been made to the General to know his design, and to urge him to desist; informing him the people were greatly alarmed at being made prisoners within the walls of the town, and the communication of the country cut off by means of this fortress; he replied, that his design was for the protection of his Majesty's troops, and his good subjects, from the people who were rising in the county; and as he thought such defence necessary, he should not desist upon their application, but was determined to prosecute his intention. This, as it reasonably may, has produced a great ferment and uneasiness here; insomuch that a number of the most timorous seemed inclined to desert the town, while the unconstitutional Counsellors, Officers of the Customs, addressers, sycophants, and betrayers of all denominations, are flocking in.

We wait with impatience for the decision of the Congress. Another application will speedily be made to his Excellency concerning this formidable preparation, the result of which you will speedily be advised. We learn by private letters from England, that prodigious quantities of goods are now shipping for the Colony of Rhode Island, New-York, and Philadelphia. Can there be such base deserters of their country in America? Your non-consumption agreement must be diligently prosecuted and rigidly adhered to. Thus shall we defeat the selfish and ruinous designs of a detested cabal of traitors.

Thirteen transports set sail this morning for Quebec, to bring the troops from thence to Boston, and others are said to be gone to New-York to bring two regiments more from thence, and the Jerseys. Still more and more menace.

We are last evening informed that Governour Gage told a person embarking for England that he seized the powder in Charlestown Magazine on purpose to bring the people to an insurrection. It is more than probable he may repent the hasty experiment, as the late insurrection may eventually produce a glorious revolution.

We cannot but admire at the generous, brave, and patriotic spirit which actuated our noble friends in Connecticut on this occasion. The hour of vengeance comes lowering on; repress your ardour, but let us adjure you do not smother it. We wait with equal impatience to make a serious demand of right and justice, which if obtained in no other way must be thundered from the tongue of Mars, which shall penetrate the ears of Monarchs.

We are with due affection and esteem, your friends, &c.

Signed by order, and in behalf of the Committee of Correspondence for Boston,

WILLIAM COOPER, Clerk.

To Colonel Israel Putnam, Chairman of the Committee of Correspondence for Brooklyn, in the town of Pomfret.

A LETTER FROM WILLIAM COOPER TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK.

Boston, September 13, 1774.

SIR: Last week I received your favour of the 26th ultimo, and showed your letter to some of the Committee appointed to receive donations and employ the poor.

I have to observe that our streets are supported by a common tax, and that the town did not pass any vote directing the Committee to lay out their money upon the streets, but left it entirely to their best judgment.

Enclosed you have a list of the names of the gentlemen appointed by the town for this important trust, who meet every day, Saturday and Sunday excepted.

I am directed by then to give you the following account of their proceedings. The Committee, after several consultations, notified the inhabitants that they should attend at Faneuil Hall, every afternoon for ten days, (Lord's day excepted) for all classes of people, suffering by the Port Bill, to lay their circumstances before them; that they might be employed, if possible, in their several departments; accordingly a great number appeared, of all classes of mechanicks and labourers, but of the latter a much greater number, whose circumstances called for immediate relief.

Several plans were proposed, but none that could be put into immediate execution and employ the mere labourer so effectually, as mending the pavements, upon which it was proposed to the Selectmen, who are overseers of the streets, that if they would undertake to mend the streets, the Committee would assist them in paying part of the labour, out of the donations collected for the employment of the poor; which was agreed to, and a great number of our most indigent inhabitants enabled to earn their bread; but being sensible that the money thus laid out could not make any returns for future use, they have for some time desisted. The Committee procured leave from the town to lay out a brick-yard upon the Neck, in which they employ upwards of eighty men a day in making bricks, which they are in hopes to sell for their cost. The Committee have agreed to build a house for sale, as soon as materials can be collected, and several vessels will be set up as soon as the ship-builders are out of some present employ, given them by private gentlemen, and the stocks shall be sufficient to undertake them; but, that the employment may be as universal as possible, the Committee have purchased a stock of wool, flax, and cotton, to be distributed to all the spinners, and are erecting looms for weaving them into baizes and shirt-cloth; they also distribute leather to the shoemakers and take their manufacture in pay, and with them, in part, pay labourers. The Committee are in daily expectation of a quantity of nail-rods, with which they hope to employ most of the blacksmiths through the winter; and they have reason to expect a quantity of hemp, which will enable the ropemakers to recall their journeymen.

It is hoped this short account of the proceedings of the Committee of Donations will meet with the approbation of the donors;

It must be acknowledged the Committee are charged with an important and laborious trust, it is, therefore requested that the most charitable construction may be put upon their conduct by those abroad, as it is impossible that any stranger can be acquainted with the various difficulties that attend this business. As the Committee have no interest but that of the publick to serve, they earnestly request the advice of all friends respecting the discharge of their commission, and engage that every plan proposed shall have a serious attention. It may not be improper to observe that the Committee have opened a regular set of books, in which they record all their proceedings, and give credit to the several Provinces, towns, and particular persons from whom they receive any donations.

The town of Charlestown being in the same predicament with this town, it has been mutually agreed, that seven per cent. of all the donations should be delivered to the town of Charlestown.

The number of persons, of all ranks, thrown out of employment, by the sudden and universal stagnation of business is very great. The Committee confine their employ to such as are immediately affected by the Port Bill, while the regular overseers take the usual care of the town's poor. I am, with great respect, sir, your most obedient servant,

WILLIAM COOPER

P. S. The Committee are about publishing to the world an account of their proceedings thus far. If some part of your collections should be invested in iron-rods for nails, it would be agreeable to the Committee. Your care in collecting subscriptions for this distressed town will be gratefully noticed and acknowledged.

A list of the names of the gentlemen appointed by the town of Boston to receive the donations, and for employing the poor sufferers by the Port Bill: Mr. Samuel Adams, John Rowe, Esquire, Thomas Boylston, Esquire, William Phillips, Esquire, Doctor Joseph Warren, Honourable John Adams, Esquire, Josiah Quincy, Esquire, Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esquire, Mr. Thomas Inches, Mr. William Mollineaux, Mr. Nathaniel Appleton, Captain Fortesque Vernon, Captain Edward Proctor, Mr. John White, Captain Gibbons Sharp, Captain William Mackey, Mr. Thomas Greenough, Captain Samuel Partridge, Honourable Benjamin Muslin, Esquire, Mr. Jonathant Mason, Mr. John Brown, Mr. James Richardson, Mr. Thomas Crafts, Junior, Mr. Henry Hill, Mr. Joshua Henshaw, David Jeffries, Esquire, Treasurer of the town of Boston and of this Committee.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM GOVERNOUR WENTWORTH TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED NEW-HAMPSHIRE, SEPTEMBER 13, 1774.

On the 8th instant, about sunset, arrived in the port of Piscataqua, the Fox, mast-ship, having on board thirty chests of Bohea tea, consigned to Mr. Edward Parry of this town. Previous to this arrival it had been reported that such an event was expected. I therefore early instructed Captain Cochran, of his Majesty's Castle William and Mary, in this Province, to render all the aid and assistance in his power, upon the first application, as by the copy, No. 1, which I beg leave to enclose to your Lordship herewith. Accordingly Captain Cochran, always indefatigable in his duty, went off to the ship while at sea and proffered his service. Some few days before this arrival letters were received from London, mentioning the shipping of the tea to sundry persons, whence it became very publick.

A ship last week arrived at Salem with a quantity of tea on board, also confirmed the expectation of the like here. These things, added to a report from Salem, that the people would not admit the tea to be landed, entered, or pay the duty there, and the enthusiastick spirit of that Province daily gaining ground both there and here, notwithstanding my utmost efforts and vigilance, rendered the event of this importation more precarious than the former, and raised almost insurmountable obstacles against its preservation.

As soon as it was generally known that the tea was arrived here, the disquiet broke forth among the populace, and at a quarter past ten at night I received a letter, No. 2, from Mr. Parry, informing me of his windows being broken by a mob, and desiring protection. At half past ten I sent Mr. McDonah, my Private Secretary, and my brother, who happened to be at my house, to inquire of Mr. Parry what was necessary, and, if any danger, to offer him the protection of my house, which they did; but the attempted mob having subsided, he saw there was no danger, and remained quietly and safely in his own lodgings. At three-quarters past nine, A. M., of the ninth instant, Mr. Parry brought me a petition to the Governour and Council, praying the protection of the Government, as in the enclosed copy, No. 3, whereupon I convened the Council within an hour, and received advice from them to call in the Justices that were in town, and require their execution of their duty, which they with laudable prudence and firmness immediately proceeded upon, and with desirable success.

Mr. Parry and Captain Norman were informed of these proceedings, and by me told at the Council Board, that the Governour, Council, and Magistrates, would, upon the least notice, support and protect them and their property, and that we should all be in readiness. At six P. M., I adjourned till nine o'clock next morning, and sent for the Chief Justice, Sheriff, and Attorney General, from Exeter, where the Superiour Court was and is yet sitting; also Mr. Gildman and Waldron, from Exeter and Dover, to make a full Council. That nothing might be wanting to execute the law and preserve the publick peace, the Council sat till two o'clock; and no further application made, nor any appearance of riot or violence whatever, I proposed to the Council to consider and advise me what further was needful to be done upon the petition; this was referred to a Committee to report upon, and I adjourned them till Monday, the twelfth instant, at ten o'clock, A.M.

During this period, viz: the ninth and tenth instant, the town meetings were agitated. At length a Committee were chosen to consult with Mr. Parry and the Captain, who agreed to export the tea to Halifax, after being duly entered, and paying the duty. About five o'clock, P. M., of tenth, Mr. Parry and Captain Norman came to me and informed me of this agreement, and that they were obliged to the Government for their protection, which they imagined was no longer necessary on this occasion. However, I judged it prudent to meet the Council on the adjournment, and to have the Council convened in the afternoon, as there was a town meeting sitting, and I could not be certain of established quiet till that was over. The vessel with the tea sailed on the eleventh instant, with a fair wind, for Halifax, and the town is in peace. The whole proceedings in Council, on this affair, I beg leave herewith to transmit to your Lordship in the papers, No. 4.

Notwithstanding, I can still have the pleasure to represent to your Lordship that this Province continues more moderate than any to the Southward; yet, at the same time, truth requires me to suggest, that the union of the Colonies in sentiment is not divided or lost in New-Hampshire, although they have hitherto been prevailed upon to abstain from acts of general violence and outrage, and the laws have their course. How long it will remain so is impossible to foresee. I confess much good may not reasonably be counted upon, while the unhappy distractions in the Massachusetts Bay gain ground, and spread with such violence as cannot but be extremely deplored by every considerate man.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM FREDERICKSBURG, VIRGINIA,
SEPTEMBER 14, 1774.

Since Colonel Preston's letter to you, we have advice, by one Bell, who is just arrived in this town from Kentucky, that Hancock Taylor and James Strother were both killed as they were returning from the mouth of that river, where they had been to survey some lands. Hempenstall, who was missing when Colonel Preston wrote to you, is since come in; he was with Taylor and Strother when they were fired upon by the Indians. Taylor lived several days after he received his wounds, and came with Hempenstall and Bell at least a hundred miles towards the settlements. John Willis, John Ashby, and several others, are still missing, but they are gone down the river it is believed.

Very liberal contributions have been made, in this place, for the relief of the poor in Boston. Mr. Mann Page, Junior, one of our Representatives, has taken uncommon pains to promote the subscriptions, and I dare say his most sanguine expectations are fully answered.

JOSEPH SPENCER TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL.

East Haddam. September 14, 1774.

HONOURED SIR: Doctor Beebe, who will deliver this, will wait on your Honour in hopes of the favour of your Honour's advice with respect to an unhappy affair that concerns himself. The zeal of people here, in general, runs very high for what is called Liberty; and there being a few amongst us that don't agree with the rest, who are called Tories, many people here have thought proper to visit the Tories and demand some satisfaction with relation to their principles and practices; and they have accordingly visited several in this society, and I think they have, except Doctor Beebe, given them satisfaction. They have, a large number of them, visited the Doctor this week, and he refused to say any thing that gave satisfaction, and the people have been so rough with him as to give him the new fashion dress of tar and feathers; and he thinks himself extremely abused, and has been desirous that I would grant surety; of the peace against a few of them, but I declined; he seems to think he is obliged, in duty, to prosecute some of them; but, however, has finally applied to your Honour for advice as to the necessity or expediency of his prosecuting in this case. I hope, also myself, to have your Honour's advice as to my duty with respect to signing a precept for the Doctor in this case. I believe if one should be granted, it will not be executed to any advantage, without force from abroad to govern our people; for although these rough measures, lately taken place with us, are contrary to my mind, yet I am not able to prevent it at present.

I am, honoured sir, your Honour's most obedient and humble servant,
JOSEPH SPENCER.
To Jonathan Trumbull, Governour.

Norwich, Connecticut, September 15, 1774.

A correspondent of the Packet begs leave to propose to the consideration of the publick, since the grand American controversy grows, and daily appears more serious, whether it is not expedient, very important and necessary, for the Colonies, forthwith, to raise an Army of Observation, and send it near the expected scene of action; and let them be increased, from time to time, as our enemies increase, and kept in constant exercise and discipline. A preparation and readiness for the defensive or offensive operations may, and often has, prevented the necessity of execution; but, if necessity does take place, as there is a great probability it will, should we not, in such a case, be in an infinitely better situation than to have our scattered forces, though almost innumerable, to collect from all parts of the Continent, after our antagonists are well fortified; their numbers full; and have struck some important and fatal blow.

At a Meeting of Delegates, from the Towns in the Counties of Hartford, New-London, and Windham, and a part of the County of Litchfield, held at Hartford, in Connecticut, on the 15th of September, 1774,

WILLIAM WOLCOTT, Esquire, Chairman,
Captain SAMUEL WYLLYS, Clerk.

This Meeting taking into their serious consideration the absolute necessity of a non-consumption agreement, as shall be recommended by the general Congress of Delegates from all the free British Colonies in America, now convened at Philadelphia, and also that their opinion and resolution thereon hath not been yet fully made known to the Delegates from this Colony in said Congress,

Do Declare and Resolve, That, in case the said general Congress shall recommend a non-importation of British goods only, or of British and West India goods, we will enter into a solemn contract and agreement not to purchase or consume any articles that shall be prohibited by such non-importation agreement, and use our utmost endeavours to render the same general and effectual; and we do hereby make known that we have, in general, been assured, by the towns we represent, that they will readily accede to, adopt, and religiously observe such non-consumption agreement, as aforesaid.

And whereas this meeting is informed that great quantities of English and India goods are ordered by sundry sordid and avaricious men, in our neighbouring Colonies, to be purchased in England, and imported this fall, to give them an unreasonable advantage, and prevent the salutary effects of a non-importation agreement,

Resolved, That such mercenary wretches, whose avarice can seek for gratification in the distress and ruin of their country, are wholly unworthy of our confidence, friendship, or support; and, that our non-consumption agreement may be useful to any good purpose, we will not purchase any merchandise of them, or transact any business for them, or suffer them to transact any for us, but will wholly withdraw from them, and leave them to the consolation of possessing and contemplating the curious moments of British industry and American slavery, which they would so greedily amass to themselves for such sordid and wicked purposes; and shall consider in the same light, and treat in the same manner, every person that shall purchase any such goods of them, or do business for them, or employ them in their business.

Resolved, That the Committees of Correspondence for the several towns we represent be desired to make diligent inquiry after the persons who have ordered goods, as aforesaid, and inform the next County and Colony Meeting of what they shall discover, that their names may be published, their conduct exposed, and their persons avoided.

Resolved, That if any merchant or trader in the towns aforesaid, shall attempt to engross any great or unusual quantity of goods, with design to forestall and elude a non-importation agreement, we will find ways and means, without violating his private rights, to defeat his views, and make him sensible that virtue and publick spirit will be more for his interest, than low selfishness and avarice can be.

These measures, dictated by necessity, we enter upon for the preservation of our liberties, which we have received from our Creator, and may not resign or suffer to be ravished from us; at the same time, his the warmest wish of our hearts, that the wisdom and equity of the British Parliament may relieve us from our fears and danger; and that we may once more, and forever, look up to our parent country with confidence and pleasure; and, secure of our own rights, contribute all in our power to promote the honour, interest, and happiness of our elder brethren in Great Britain; and,

Whereas we cannot yet be advised what measures the general Congress will recommend, and therefore are unable at present to adjust the particulars of a non-consumption agreement, we think it may be of use to the merchants and traders in the aforesaid towns, to be made acquainted with our resolutions aforesaid, and that we determine in proper time to carry them into execution.

Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting be given the Committee of Correspondence for the town of Hartford, for their care and attention to the interest of the publick, in calling this meeting; and that they be desired to call a Colony Meeting, at a suitable time and place, to finish the business now begun and entered upon, taking the advice of the Committee of Correspondence for the towns of Windsor, Wethersfield, and Middletown therein.

The foregoing resolutions and resolves, voted and passed nemine contradicente.

SAMUEL WYLLYS, Clerk of the Meeting.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Thursday, 15th September, 1774, Present: The Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governour, William Logan, Richard Peters, James Tilghman, Edward Shippen, Junior, and Benjamin Chew, Esquires.

The Council having some time since represented to the Governour the absolute necessity of establishing, by an ex-parte Proclamation, the lines of jurisdiction between the Province of Maryland and the Province of Pennsylvania and Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, according to the lines and boundaries agreed upon, run and marked by the Commissioners appointed for that purpose by the Proprietaries of the said respective Provinces, and the Governour having, with the consent and concurrence of the Honourable Thomas Penn, Esquire, in England, approved of the said measure, a draught of a Proclamation lind been accordingly prepared, and is now laid before the Board, which, being read and duly considered, was agreed to be issued, and ordered to be published in the several newspapers of this Province, and a number of printed copies thereof made and dispersed through the Province and the lower counties on Delaware. The Proclamation follows in these words, viz:

By the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, and Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, in pursuance of certain Articles of Agreement made the tenth day of May, Anno Domini 1732, between Charles Lord Baltimore, Proprietor of the Province of Maryland, and the honourable the Proprietaries of the Province of Pennsylvania and Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, and of the Decree of the Lord High Chancellor of England, hearing date the fifteenth day of March, Anno Domini 1750, for the specifick performance and execution of the said Articles; and also in pursuance of certain other Articles of Agreement made the fourth day of July, Anno Domini 1760, between the Right Honourable Frederick Lord Baltimore, son and heir of the said Charles Lord Baltimore, and the honourable the Proprietaries of the said Province and counties; and of one other Decree of the Lord High Chancellor of England, bearing date the sixth day of March, 1769, for the specifick performance of the said last mentioned Articles; the several lines mentioned and described in the said Articles, and thereby finally agreed upon and settled by the said parties to be and forever remain the boundaries and division lines between the said Provinces and Counties; have been run by Commissioners, for that purpose appointed and authorized by the said respective Proprietors, and marked out in exact conformity to the said Articles, with visible stones, pillars, and other land marks, as by the said Articles and Decrees, and the return of the said Commissioners, under their hands and seals, and an exact plan or map of the lines, so as aforesaid by them run and marked may at large appear. And whereas, in the year 1767, a joint petition was referred to his present most gracious Majesty by the said Frederick Lord Baltimore, and the Proprietaries of the said Province and Counties, reciting the above mentioned Articles and Decrees, and setting forth that their Commissioners were then proceeding in the work; that they, the said Proprietors, were desirous, as much as in them lay, to quiet the minds of all his Majesty's subjects inhabiting in the lately disputed parts of the said Provinces, and three Lower Counties, and to promote the peace and welfare of those parts. And in order to give a further testimony of their firm agreement, and that a final end and period had been put to all their contests and litigations by the said Agreement of 1760, they, by their said petition, most humbly prayed his Majesty that he would be most graciously pleased to give his royal allowance, ratification, and confirmation of the several and respective Articles of Agreement and enrolled Decrees above mentioned, and every article, clause, matter, and thing in them, and each of them contained, and that the same might be forever established between them. Whereupon his Majesty, by his Order in Council, dated the eleventh day of January, 1769, was pleased to signify his royal approbation of the said agreements and proceedings mentioned in the petition of the said Proprietaries. Whereof as well the Proprietaries of the said Provinces, as all others whom it might concern, were ordered to take notice and govern themselves accordingly, as by the said petition and royal order may more at large appear. I have, therefore thought fit, by the advice of the Council, to issue this my Proclamation, to publish and make known all and singular the premises to all whom it may concern, hereby requiring all persons dwelling and residing to the northward and eastward of the lines and boundaries so as aforesaid run and marked between the Provinces of Maryland and Pennsylvania, as far to the westward as the Province of Maryland extends, to yield obedience to the laws of the said Province and Counties, and govern themselves according thereto. And I do also require all Magistrates, Sheriffs, and other officers of justice appointed, or to be appointed, in the said Province and Counties, to put in execution the respective laws thereof, against all offenders within the lines and limits aforesaid, as they will answer the contrary at their peril.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said Province of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, the fifteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, and in the fourteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth.

JOHN PENN.

By his Honour's command,

JOSEPH SHIPPEN, Jun., Secretary.
GOD save the King.

N. B. The Land Office is not yet open for taking up vacant lands in the Lower Counties, or receiving applications for the same. Whenever it is thought proper to open the office for that purpose, publick notice thereof will be given.

By his Excellency JOHN, Earl of DUNMORE, Lieutenant and Governour-General in and over his Majesty's Colony and Dominion of VIRGINIA, and Vice Admiral of the same:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, the rapid settlement made on the west side of the Alleghany Mountains, by his Majesty's subjects, within the course of these few years, has become an object of real concern to his Majesty's interest in this quarter. And whereas, the Province of Pennsylvania have unduly laid claim to a very valuable and extensive quantity of his Majesty's territory; and the Executive part of that Government, in consequence thereof, has most arbitrarily and unwarrantably proceeded to abuse the laudable advancements in this part of his Majesty's Dominions, by many oppressive and illegal methods, in the discharge of this imaginary authority. And whereas, the ancient claim laid to this country by the Colony of Virginia, founded in reason upon pre-occupancy, and the general acquiescence of all persons, together with the instructions I have lately received from his Majesty's servants, ordering me to take this country under my administration; and as the evident injustice manifestly offered to his Majesty by the immediate strides taken by the Proprietors of Pennsylvania, in prosecution of their wild claim to this country, demand an immediate remedy, I do hereby, in his Majesty's name, require and command all his Majesty's subjects west of the Laurel Hill, to pay a due respect to this my Proclamation, strictly prohibiting the execution of any act of authority on behalf of the Province of Pennsylvania, at their peril, in this country; but, on the contrary, that a due regard and entire obedience to the laws of his Majesty's Colony of Virginia under my administration, be observed, to the end that regularity may ensue, and a just regard to the interest of his Majesty in this quarter, as well as to the subjects in general, may be the consequence.

Given under my hand and seal, at Fort Dunmore, September 17th, 1774. DUNMORE

By his Excellency's command.

GOD save the King.

Quebec, September 22, 1774.

On Sunday afternoon, September 17, about five o'clock, arrived in the basin before this city, the ship Canadian, Captain William Abbott, in sixty days from Cowes, having on board his Excellency Major General Carleton, Captain-General, Governour, and Commander-in-chief of the Province of Quebec, Lady Maria Carleton, with her two children, and Lord Viscount Pitt, son to the Earl of Chatham. They landed on the beach about six, under a discharge of cannon, where they were received by the Lieutenant Governour, the citizens, and a numerous concourse of people, who expressed their joy on the occasion, by repeated acclamations of long live the King. The regiments in garrison under arms, lined the streets on both sides, from the landing place to the Castle of St. Louis, the several officers paying military honours to the General as he passed; and in the evening, the religious houses and many of those of the principal inhabitants of the upper town, were handsomely illuminated.

On this Excellency's landing, he was complimented with the following Address, by the Chevalier De Lanaudiere:

"SIR: The arrival of your Excellency in this Province has filled the minds of the citizens with joy and gratitude, on account of your known good disposition towards them. May Heaven grant a long and happy life to so illustrious a hero, for which our prayers are daily offered, and for the health of your amiable consort, whom we shall ever hold in the most respectful remembrance."

TRANSLATION OF THE ADDRESS OF THE CLERGY.

To his Excellency GUY CARLETON, Esq., Major General and Commander-in-chief over the Province of QUEBEC.

SIR: Permit us, when we congratulate your Excellency on your happy return, likewise to felicitate ourselves and the Province, on having you for the protector of our laws and religious liberties. History will rank your name among the bravest of warriors and the wisest of politicians; but gratitude is already imprinted in the heart of every Canadian. We know with what firmness you have supported our interests, and the testimony you bore of our fidelity to his most gracious Majesty and the Parliament. We want words to express our sincere gratitude; but the universal joy, and the fervent expressions of allegiance, those publick demonstrations on the moment of your Excellency's arrival with your worthy family, are proofs too convincing to need any arguments to support them.

Your name will be ever held in the highest esteem in Canada, and[you will always find the Clergy to be good and faithful subjects.

JOHN OLIVER, Bishop of Quebec.

H. F. GRAVE, Superiour of the Seminary.

LOUIS AUG. DE GLAPION; Superiour General of the Jesuits.

EMANUEL CRESPEL, Superiour of the Recollets.

To his Excellency GUY CARLETON, Esq., Captain-General and Commander-in-chief of the Province of QUEBEC, &c., &c.

May it please your Excellency:

We, his Majesty's Canadian subjects in the city of Quebec, are deeply impressed with the most lively gratitude for the protection your Excellency has afforded us; and the care and solicitude you have taken to render us happy and easy, call upon us to congratulate you on your happy arrival in this Metropolis.

Suffer us to express the satisfaction we feel for the favour which his most excellent Majesty our Sovereign Lord has conferred on us, by placing you, sir, (who are very justly styled our protector and father,) at our head, to rule over us; to guide and establish the Government of this Province upon a happy, firm, and lasting foundation, by putting in force the Act which his most gracious Majesty and his Parliament have been pleased to pass for this Province. We know what we owe to your Excellency alone; the gracious treatment of his most sacred Majesty and the Parliament are obligations we never shall forget, but always acknowledge with the most respectful gratitude.

We desire, through you, to offer at the foot of the Throne of our most gracious and beloved Sovereign, our assurances of the most profound respect, our attachment and inviolable fidelity, (confirmed by an oath,) and to assure him that he has no subjects more faithful or dutiful than the Canadians; and that we will be, at all times and on all occasions, ready to sacrifice our lives and fortunes in the defence of his sacred person, his Crown, his Parliament, and his arms. Knowing your prudence, moderation, equity, the uprightness and goodness of your heart, we flatter ourselves your administration will prove propitious to our wishes; and that your Excellency will be pleased, according to the tenour of the Act you have obtained in our favour, to suffer us to participate in the rights and privileges of English citizens.

We shall never cease to offer up our prayers to Heaven for the prosperity and preservation of your Excellency, her Ladyship, your illustrious consort, and your family, who will forever be held dear in the remembrance of the Canadians.

CÆSAR :RODNEY TO CAPTAIN THOMAS RODNEY.

Philadelphia, Saturday, September 17, 1774.

SIR: By express which arrived here yesterday from the Committee of the town of Boston to the Continental Congress, we are informed the County of Suffolk, of which the town of Boston is the capital, had entered into certain resolutions, a copy of which was enclosed us, generally to the purport of not suffering the Commander-in-chief to execute the Act of Parliament changing their Government, by persuading, protecting, and compelling officers under the new regulation to resign, and by a refusal in jurymen to serve, &c. That they have ordered all those able to bear arms, to keep in readiness to defend their inherent rights, even with loss of blood and treasure; that they are determined not to injure the General, or any of the King's troops, unless compelled thereto by an attack made by the troops on them. They complain of the General seizing of the powder at Cambridge, which they say was private property; and also, that he is now fortifying the only pass that leads from the town of Boston into the country, from whence the inhabitants of the town are daily supplied. This pass is a narrow neck of land about one hundred and twenty yards wide, at which he has placed a number of troops and twenty-eight cannon; that the country people passing and repassing this place, are suffered to be insulted by the soldiery; and that the inhabitants feared, (from those movements of the General,) he had designs of apprehending and sending to England those persons who have stood foremost in the great cause of liberty; that, in consequence of his conduct, and those their suspicions, the inhabitants of Suffolk sent, (by a Committee appointed for that purpose,) an address to the General, inquiring the cause of his stopping up and fortifying the pass, seizing and securing the magazines, &c., and their disapprobation of his conduct, and that they had no intention to assault either him or his soldiers; but that, if he continued to block up the pass, and thereby prevent them of the only means of supplying the town with necessaries, they should look upon it as a commencement of hostilities. Upon the whole, they sent an express to the general Congress here, for their instructions as to their future conduct. The Congress met on that business this day, and have resolved thereon, which you will see in the "Packet" of Monday, being ordered immediately to be printed, as well that the General as the people might know what they thought of the matter.

I am yours, &c., CÆSAR RODNEY.
Captain Thomas Rodney.

SAMUEL ADAMS TO DOCTOR CHAUNCY.
Philadelphia, September 19, 1774.

REVEREND SIR: I have had the pleasure of receiving a letter from you since my arrival in this city. Our friend, Mr. Quincy, informed me before I left Boston, of his intention to take a passage for England. I am persuaded he may do great service to our country there. Agreeably to his and your requests, I have desired gentlemen here to make him known to their friends and correspondents.

Last Friday Mr. Revere brought us the spirited and patriotick Resolves of our County of Suffolk. We laid them before the Congress. They were read with great applause, and the enclosed Resolutions were unanimously passed, which give you a feint idea of the spirit of the Congress. I think I may assure you that America will make a point of supporting Boston to the utmost. I have not time to enlarge, and must therefore conclude with assuring you that I am, with great regard, your affectionate and humble servant,
SAMUEL ADAMS.

CÆSAR RODNEY TO MR. THOMAS RODNEY.
Philadelphia, Monday, September 19, 1774.

SIR: Sometime ago I do not doubt but you were all much alarmed, on a report that the King's ships were firing on the town of Boston. When that news came to this city the bells were muffled, and kept ringing all that day; however, in a few days after, that news was contradicted here, and hope by this time it is so with you. By some late very authentick accounts from Boston Government to the gentlemen of that place now at the Congress, we are informed that there was about three days between this report's passing through the Massachusetts and Connecticut Governments, and its being contradicted; that when the expresses went to contradict this false report, they found in those two Governments, in different parties, upwards of fifty thousand men, well armed, actually on their march to Boston, for the relief of the inhabitants; and that every farmer who had a cart or wagon, (and not able to bear arms,) was with them, loaded with provisions, ammunition, &c., all headed by experienced officers, who had served in the late American war; and that vast numbers more were preparing to march. Upon the news being contradicted, they returned peaceably to their several places of abode; but not till they had sent some of their officers, from the different parties, to Boston to know the real situation of affairs there, and to direct them what principal officers in the different parts of the country they should hereafter send expresses to, in case they should stand in need of their assistance. It is supposed by some of the friends of liberty at Boston, that the alarm was set on foot by some of the friends to the Ministerial plan, in order to try whether there was that true valour in the people. If this was the case, I suppose you will think with me, that, by this time, they can have no doubts remaining. Indeed, I think it is proved by the General's own conduct; for, ever since that, he has been fortifying himself, which, I imagine, is more for his own security than to attack the inhabitants.

I am yours, &c., CÆSAR RODNEY.
Mr. Thomas Rodney, Dover.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM CÆSAR RODNEY TO MR.
THOMAS RODNEY.
Philadelphia, September 24, 1774.

SIR: Mr. R. Penn is a great friend of liberty, and has treated the gentlemen Delegates with the greatest respect. More or less of them dine with him every day; and his brother wishes his station would admit of his acting, the same part. All these matters are for your own private speculation, and not for publick view. By this you may see that some people with you are mistaken in their politicks, and you may also take for granted every body here is not well pleased with the coalition of the two brothers.

I am, as usual, your friend and humble servant,
CÆSAR RODNEY.

Mr. Thomas Rodney.

PENNSYLVANIA ASSEMBLY.

Monday, September 19, 1774. Mr. Speaker, with nineteen Members met, pursuant to adjournment; and a quorum not appearing, they adjourned to four o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Tuesday, September 20. - Ordered, That Mr. Miles and Mr. Humphreys wait on the Governour, and acquaint him, that the House having met, in pursuance of their adjournment, they are ready to receive any business he may be pleased to lay before them.

Mr. Rhoads delivered at the table a Letter to the Committee of Correspondence from Benjamin Franklin, Esq., dated London, the seventh of May last, acquainting them with the result of the Board of Trade on sundry Acts of the General Assembly of this Province, passed February the 26th, 1773, and that two other Acts of the same sitting will probably be repealed, for certain reasons mentioned in the said Letter.

Wednesday, September 21. - The Members appointed to wait on the Governour with the Message of yesterday, reported that they had delivered the same according to order, and that his Honour was pleased to say, he had no business at present to lay before the House.

September 26. - The Governour, by Mr. Secretary, sent down a written Message to the House, which was read, by order, and follows in these words, viz:

GENTLEMEN: As it does not appear to me that the causes of the unhappy Indian disturbances are yet at an end, but, on the contrary, that the Governour of Virginia is still prosecuting an expedition against the Shawanese, I cannot avoid recommending to your consideration the expediency of keeping the troops employed by this Government, or at least a part of them, in pay till our affairs upon the frontiers may happily have a more favourable aspect.
JOHN PENN.

September 28. - A Remonstrance from the Overseers of the Poor of the City of Philadelphia was presented to the House, setting forth that the sum of money granted last year by the Legislature for the relief and support of such aged, sick, and infirm Neutrals as are yet residents in the said city, is wholly laid out for the purpose for which it was granted, as by the accounts herewith laid before the House will appear; that the Remonstrants therefore think it their duty to inform the honourable House, that there is at present a considerable number of the said Neutrals, who, from their age, sickness, or infirmities, are incapable of supporting themselves, and must suffer greatly, unless speedy and constant supplies are afforded them in such manner as their particular circumstances may from time to time require. That the Remonstrants therefore request the House will be pleased to take the premises into consideration, and grant such relief therein as shall appear necessary.

Ordered to lie on the table.

The House resumed the consideration of the Governour's Message of the 26th instant, and, after some debate thereon, the question being put by the Speaker, whether one hundred men (officers included) of the rangers, now employed on the frontiers, shall be kept up, and continued in pay till the meeting of the next Assembly?

Carried in the affirmative.

Resolved, That it be, and is hereby recommended to the succeeding Assembly to make provision for paying and victualling the said one hundred rangers until the 14th of October next.

An Answer to his Honour's Message being then drawn at the table, and agreed to, it was ordered to be transcribed.

September 29. - The Answer of the House to the Governour's Message being transcribed according to order, was signed by the Speaker, and is as follows, viz:

The House taking into their consideration your Message of the 26th instant, recommending the expediency of keeping up the troops employed by this Government, "or a part of them," have agreed to continue one hundred men (officers included) until the meeting of the next Assembly, and have recommended it over to that Assembly to make provision for their support and maintenance.

Signed by order of the House,

JOSEPH GALLOWAY, Speaker.

September 29, 1774.

Upon motion, the Petition from the Overseers of the Poor of the City of Philadelphia, in behalf of the French Neutrals, was again read, and, after some debate thereon, Ordered, That the Provincial Treasurer do pay into the hands of the Overseers of the Poor of the City of Philadelphia, the sum of one hundred pounds, for the relief and support of the said French Neutrals.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 20, 1774.

Since my letters by the Scarborough, ship of war, I have received some letters and papers, which I transmit your Lordship, relative to the proceedings in the distant counties against the Courts of Justice, and Resolves of a County Meeting.

It is needless to trouble your Lordship with daily publications of determined resolutions not to obey the late Acts of Parliament or to allow any civil officer acting under them, from the Governour to the Justice, to be constitutional officers.

They talk of fixing a plan of Government of their own, and it is somewhat surprising, that so many of the other Provinces interest themselves so much in the behalf of this. I find they have some warm friends in New-York and Philadelphia, and I learn by an officer that left Carolina, the latter end of August, that the people of Charlestown are as mad as they are here.

The country people are exercising in arms, in this Province, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, and getting magazines of arms and ammunition in the country, and such artillery as they can procure, good and bad.

They threaten to attack the troops in Boston, and are very angry at a work throwing up at the entrance of the town; on which account I have had two messages from the Selectmen, and a third from the County of Suffolk.

People are daily resorting to this town for protection; for their is no security for any person deemed a friend to Government, in any part of the country. Even places always esteemed well affected have caught the infection. The Commissioners of the Customs have thought it no longer safe or prudent to remain at Salem, considering the present distracted state of every part of the Province, and are amongst others come into the town, where I am obliged likewise now to reside on many accounts.

Mr. Willard has been obliged to resign his seat in Council since my last. The rest remain firm, notwithstanding daily threats of plunder, devastation, and ruin, and even of assassination.

WORCESTER COUNTY (MASSACHUSETTS) RESOLUTIONS.

At a Convention of Committees for the County of Worcester, held by adjournment at the Court House, on the 29th of August, 1774, and continued by adjournments to the 21st of September, the following Votes and Resolves passed, viz:

Voted, That if there be an invasion, or danger of an invasion, in any town in this county, then, such town shall, by their Committee of Correspondence, or some other proper persons, send letters by post immediately to the Committees of the adjoining towns, who shall send to the other Committees in the towns adjoining them, that they all come properly armed and accoutred to protect and defend the place invaded.

Voted, That it be recommended to the military officers in this county that they resign their offices to their respective Colonels.

Voted, That the field officers in this county resign their offices, and publish such resignation in all the Boston newspapers.

Voted, That it be recommended to the several towns in this county to choose proper and a sufficient number of military officers for each of their towns.

Voted, To accept the Report of the Committee respecting the civil officers of this County, which is as follows:

Whereas the late Act of Parliament, entitled "An Act for the better regulating his Majesty's Government of the Massachusetts Bay," is evidently designed to prevent any civil officers from holding their places by virtue of the Charter thereof; and as it is necessary to have officers till further provision may be made; Therefore,

Resolved, That the Justices of the Peace for this county, who were in said office the last day of June past, except Timothy Ruggles, John Murray, and James Putnam, Esquires, be hereby directed to act in said office as single Justices, except in judicial proceedings merely civil; also, that the Judges of Probate, Sheriff, and Coroners who were in said offices on the last day of June past, exercise their respective offices till the Provincial Congress, proposed to sit at Concord, on the second Tuesday of October next, notwithstanding any pretended supersedeas that may be sent them, or any of them, or any Proclamation designed to prevent them from holding and exercising their said offices; and we hereby also recommend to the people in this county that they consider and treat them as being in their said offices, and support and defend them in the execution thereof, according to the laws of this Province.

Voted, As the opinion of this body, that the Sheriff do not adjourn the Superiour Court, appointed by law to be held this day, and that he retain such as are or may be committed as criminals in his custody until they have a trial.

Resolved, That as the ordinary Courts of Justice will be stayed in consequence of the late arbitrary and oppressive Act of the British Parliament, we would earnestly recommend it to every inhabitant of this county to pay his just debts as soon as possible, without any disputes or litigations; "and if any dispute concerning debts or trespasses should arise, which cannot be settled by the parties, we recommend it to them to submit all such cases to arbitration; and if the parties, or either of them, shall refuse so to do, they ought to be considered as co-operating with the enemies of this country."

Voted, To accept the Report of the Committee relative to the instructing the Representatives for this county, which is as follows:

That it be recommended to the several towns and districts, that they instruct their Representatives who may be chosen to meet at Salem, in October next, absolutely to refuse to be sworn by any officer or officers but such as are or may be appointed according to the Constitution, or to act as one branch of the Legislature in concert with the other, except such as are or may be appointed and supported according to the Charter of this Province; and they refuse to give their attendance at Boston while the town is invested with troops and ships of war; and should their be any thing to prevent their acting with such a Governour and Council, as is expressly set forth in the Charter, that then they immediately repair to the town of Concord, and there join in a Provincial Congress with such other Members as are or may be chosen for that purpose, to act and determine on such measures as they shall judge proper to extricate this Colony out of their present unhappy circumstances.

Voted, That it be recommended to the several towns and districts in this county that they provide themselves immediately with one or more field pieces, mounted and fitted for use; and also a sufficient quantity of ammunition for the same; and that the officers appoint a suitable number of men out of their respective companies, to manage said field pieces.

Whereas the people of this county are under solemn obligations not to purchase any goods that shall be imported from Great Britain after the last day of August, 1774, which they determine most sacredly to adhere to until our many grievances be redressed; therefore,

Voted, That it be recommended, and we do earnestly recommend it to the Committees of Correspondence or Selectmen in the several sea-port towns in this Province to appoint, or cause to be appointed, Committees to inspect the imports that have been or shall be made since the last day of August aforesaid, and publish all such in the Boston newspapers, with the names of the importers, that so we may carefully avoid all such in our dealings for the future.

Voted, To choose a Standing Committee for the county, to correspond with the Committees of Correspondence for the several counties, and elsewhere, as they shall think proper; also, to prepare matters proper to lay before this body at their several meetings; to give the earliest intelligence to the several Committees in this county of any new attack upon the liberties of this people, and call a County Convention at any time, as occasion may require. - Therefore,

Voted, That the Committees of Correspondence for the towns of Worcester and Leicester, be a Committee for the purposes aforesaid; and that Messrs. Thomas Denny, Joseph Henshaw, and Joshua Bigelow, be added to the above Committee.

Voted, To take notice of Mr. Sheriff Chandler, for carrying aa Address to Governour Gage.

Voted, That a Committee wait on the Sheriff, and require his attendance before this body, for presenting, (with others, the Justices of the County of Worcester;) the Address to Governour Gage.

Voted, That the following Declaration, signed by the Sheriff, should be accepted:

"Whereas the Convention of Committees have expressed their uneasiness to the Sheriff of this county, now present before the Convention, for presenting, with others, an Address to Governour Gage, which he frankly declares was precipitately done by him; though he is sorry for it, and disclaims any intention to do any thing against the minds of the inhabitants of this county; and had he known it would have given offence, he would not have presented said Address.

G. CHANDLER."

As the several Regiments in this county are large and inconvenient, by the increase of its inhabitants since the first settlement of said regiments Therefore,

Voted, That they be divided into seven distinct Regiments, in the following manner, viz:

1st. Worcester, Leicester, Holden, Spencer, and Paxton.

2d. Sutton, Oxford, Sturbridge, Charton, and Dudley.

3d. Lancaster, Bolton, Harvard, Lunenburgh, Leominster, Fitchburgh, Ashburnham, and Westminster.

4th. Brookfield, Western, Braintree, Hardwick, and Oakham.

5th. Rutland, Hutchinson, Petersham, Athol, Templeton, Winchendon, Royalston, Hubbardstown, and Princeton.

6th. Southboro', Westboro', Northboro', Shrewsbury, and Grafton.

7th. Mendon, Uxbridge, Northbridge, Upton, and Douglass.

Voted, That it be recommended to the several towns in this county to choose proper, and a sufficient number of military officers for each of their towns; and that the Captains, Lieutenants, and Ensigns in each regiment, who are chosen by the people, do convene on or before the tenth day of October next, at some convenient place in each regiment, and choose their field officers, to command the militia, until they be constitutionally appointed; and that it be recommended to the officers in each town in this county, to enlist one-third of the men in their respective towns, between sixteen and sixty years of age, to be at a minute's warning; and that it be recommended to each town in this county to choose a sufficient number of men as a Committee to supply and support those troops that shall move upon any emergency.

Voted, That this meeting be adjourned to the first Tuesday in December next.

WILLIAM HENSHAW, Clerk.

Boston, September 26, 1774.

At a Meeting of the Freeholders of this town, on Wednesday, the 21st instant, at Faneuil Hall, the following gentlemen were chosen to represent them in the General Assembly, to be held on the 5th of next month, viz: the Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esquire, Mr. Samuel Adams, the Honourable John Hancock, Esquire, and William Phillips, Esquire; and on Friday, the town made choice of Dr. Joseph Warren, Dr. Benjamin Church, and Mr. Nathaniel Appleton, to serve as Delegates in the Provincial Congress, to be held at Concord, on the second Tuesday in October next, in addition to the four Representatives of this town; and the following Instructions for our Representatives were voted, viz:

GENTLEMEN: As we have chosen you to represent us in the Great and General Court, to be holden at Salem, on Wednesday, the 5th of October next ensuing, we do hereby instruct you, that in all your doings, as members of the House of Representatives, you adhere firmly to the Charter of this Province, granted by their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and that you do no act which can possibly be construed into an acknowledgment of the validity of the Act of the British Parliament for altering the Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay; more especially that you acknowledge the Honourable Board of Counsellors elected by the General Court, at their session in last May, as the only rightful and constitutional Council of this Province. And we have reason to believe, that a conscientious discharge of your duty will produce your dissolution as an House of Representatives; we do hereby empower and instruct you to join with the members, who may be sent from this and the other towns in the Province, and to meet with them at a time to be agreed on in a General Provincial Congress, to act upon such matters as may come before you, in such a manner as shall appear to you most conducive to the true interest of this town and Province, and most likely to preserve the liberties of all America.

CUMBERLAND COUNTY (MASSACHUSETTS) RESOLVES,

At a Meeting of the following gentlemen chosen by the several towns in the County of Cumberland, held at Falmouth, in said county, on the 21st day of September, 1774, at the house of Mrs. Greele, viz: from FALMOUTH, The Honourable Enoch Freeman, Esquire, Stephen Longfellow, Esquire, Mr. Richard Codman, Captain John Waite, Mr. Enoch Ilsley, Mr. Samuel Freeman.

SCARBOROUGH, Captain Timothy McDaniel, Captain Reuben Fogg, Mr. Joshua Fabyan.

NORTH YARMOUTH, Mr. John Lewis, David Mitchell, Esquire, Messrs. Jonathan Mitchell, John Gray, William Cutter.

GORHAM, Solomon Lombard, Esquire, William Gorham, Esquire, Captain Edmund Phiney, Captain Briant Morton, Mr. Joseph Davis.

CAPE ELIZABETH, Dr. Clement Jordon, Messrs. Peter Woodbury, Samuel Dunn, Captain Judah Dyer, Dr. Nathaniel Jones, Mr. George Strout.

BRUNSWICK, Messrs. Samuel Thompson, Samuel Stanwood, Captain Thomas Moulton.

HARPSWELL, Mr. Joseph Ewing, Captain John Stover, Mr. Andrew Dunning.

WINDHAM, Messrs. Zerubabel Honywell, Thomas Trott, David Barker.

NEW-GLOUCESTER, Messrs. William Harris, Isaac Parsons.

The Hon. Enoch Freeman, Esq., was chosen Chairman, Mr. Samuel Freeman, Clerk.

A Committee from the body of people, who were assembled at the entrance of the town, waited on this Convention to see if they would choose a Committee of one member out of each town to join them, to wait upon Mr. Sheriff Tyng to see whether he would act in his office, under the late act of Parliament for regulating the Government.

On a motion made, Voted, that a messenger be sent to the said Sheriff Tyng, to desire his attendance at this Convention. A messenger then waited upon Mr. Tyng, with the following Billet, viz:

"Mr. Sheriff Tyng's company is desired at the Convention of the County, now sitting at Mrs. Greele's.

"SAMUEL FREEMAN, Clerk.

"Wednesday, September 21st, 1774, 11 o'clock, A. M."

Mr. Tyng accordingly attended, and after some interrogations, subscribed to the following Declaration, viz:

County of Cumberland, Falmouth, September 21, 1774.

"Whereas, great numbers of the inhabitants of this county are now assembled near my house, in consequence of the false representations of some evil-minded persons, who have reported that I have endeavoured all in my power to enforce the late Acts of Parliament, relating to this Province: I do hereby solemnly declare, that I have not in any way whatever acted or endeavoured to act in conformity to said Acts of Parliament; and in compliance with the commands of the inhabitants so assembled, and by the advice of a Committee from the several towns of this county now assembled in Congress, I further declare I will not as Sheriff of said county, or otherwise, act in conformity to, or by virtue of said Acts, unless by the general consent of the said county. I further declare, I have not received any commission inconsistent with the Charter of this Province, nor any commission whatever, since the first day of July last.

WILLIAM TYNG."

"County of CUMBERLAND:

"At the Convention of Committees from the several towns in the said county, held at the house of Mrs. Greele, in Falmouth, in said county, September 21, 1774, voted that the foregoing, by William Tyng, Esq., subscribed, is satisfactory to this Convention.

Attest,

SAMUEL FREEMAN."

The Convention then formed themselves into a Committee, to accompany Mr. Tyng to the body of the people, to present the above Declaration, and adjourned to the old Town House, at 3 o'clock, P. M. - the deliberation to be in publick.

The Committee accordingly went with Mr. Tyng, who read the Declaration to the people, which they voted to be satisfactory, and after refreshing themselves, returned peaceably to their several homes.

Three o'clock, P. M. Met according to adjournment.

Voted, That Mr. Samuel Freeman, Solomon Lombard, Esq., Stephen Longfellow, Esq., David Mitchell, Esq., John Lewis, Captain John Waite, Samuel Thompson, Captain Timothy McDaniel, Doctor Nathaniel Jones, Isaac Parsons, Enoch Freeman, Esq., David Barker, and Captain John Stover, be a Committee to draw up the sentiments of this Convention, and report the same at the adjournment.

Then adjourned to Thursday morning at eight o'clock.

September 22d. Met according to adjournment, when the Committee presented the following Report, which, after being read paragraph by paragraph, was unanimously accepted, viz:

The great concern with which the people of this county view the increasing differences which now subsist between the mother country and the Colonies, and the dark prospect which some late Acts of the British Parliament have in particular opened to them, has occasioned the several towns herein represented, to choose Committees for this "Convention, to consider what measures it would be "thought expedient to adopt for the general interest of "the county, in the present alarming situation of our publick affairs;" we, therefore, the said Committees, pursuant to the request of our respective towns, guided by a strong attachment to the interests of our oppressed country, think it proper, with respect and deference to our brethren in other counties, to make known our minds, as follows:

We think it the indispensable duty of every subject of the English Constitution, for our own sakes, as well as that of future generations, to use his utmost care and endeavour, according to the station he is in, to preserve the same inviolate and unimpaired; for we regard it not only as the foundation of all our civil rights and liberties, but as a system of Government the best calculated to promote the people's peace and happiness. And we lament, that in the present Administration there are men so lost to all the principles of honour, equity, and justice, as to attempt a violation of the rights which we have long enjoyed, and which while we profess ourselves, as we now declare we do, allegiant subjects to George the Third, our rightful Sovereign, we have a right still to enjoy entire and unmolest; and it is a melancholy consideration, that the acknowledged head of this respected State, should be induced to pass his sanction to such laws as tend to the subversion of that glorious freedom which preserves the greatness of the British Empire, and gives it reputation throughout all the Nations of the civil world. It is too apparent that the British Ministry have long been hatching monstrous Acts to break our Constitution, and some they have at length brought forth. We think the Colonies deserve a better treatment from his Majesty, than this which he assents to. We are his loyal subjects and merit his regard; and cannot help thinking that, if he would pursue his own unbiassed judgment, and lay aside the selfish counsel of wicked and designing men, he and his subjects would be mutually happy, and provocations on both sides cease. But since the Ministry have borne their tyranny to such a length as to endeavour to execute their wicked designs by military force in our Metropolis, we fear it is their aim to introduce despotick monarchy. But though their tyranny and oppression seems now with hasty strides to threaten all the Colonies with ruin and destruction, we hope no vengeance will afright, no wiles allure us, to give up our dear-bought liberty, that choicest boon of Heaven, which our fathers came into these regions to enjoy, and which we, therefore, will retain while life enables us to struggle for its blessings.

We believe our enemies supposed we must submit, and tamely give up all our rights. It is true a vigorous opposition will subject us to many inconveniences; but how much greater will our misery be if we relinquish all we now enjoy, and lay our future earnings at the mercy of despotick men? We cannot bear the thought; distant posterity would have cause to curse our folly, and the rising generation would justly execrate our memory. We therefore recommend a manly opposition to those cruel Acts, and every measure which despotism can invent to "abridge our English liberties;" and we hope that patience will possess our souls till Providence shall dissipate the gloomy cloud, and restore to us our former happy state.

The late Act for regulating the Government of this Province, we consider, in particular, as big with mischief and destruction; tending to the subversion of our Charter and our Province laws; and, in its dire example, alarming to all the Colonies. This, through the conduct of some enemies among ourselves, will soon bring us into difficulties, which will require some able council to remove. We therefore recommend to each town in this county to instruct their several Representatives to resolve themselves, with the other Members of the House, at their approaching session, into a Provincial Congress for this purpose.

To this Congress we shall submit the general interests of the Province; but for the particular benefit of this county, we do advise and recommend -

1. That the Justices of the Sessions and Court of Common Pleas, and every civil officer in this county, whom no authority can remove, but that which constituted them agreeable to Charter and our own Provincial laws, would religiously officiate in their several departments, as if the aforesaid Act had never been invented; and that every private person would pay a strict obedience to such officers; be always ready to protect and support them, and promote a due observance of our own established laws. And if any person whatsoever shall henceforth, in any manner, dare to aid the operation of the said tyrannick Act, they should be considered as malignant enemies to our Charter rights, unfit for civil society, and undeserving of the least regard or favour from their fellow-countrymen.

2. That every one would do his utmost to discourage law suits, and likewise compromise disputes as much as possible.

3. That it be recommended to the Honourable Jeremiah Powell, Esq., and Jedediah Preble, Esq., constitutional Counsellors of this Province, residing in this county, that they would take their places at the Board the ensuing session as usual.

4. We cannot but approve of the recommendation given by the Convention of Suffolk County, to the several Collectors of Province taxes, not to pay one Farthing more into the Province treasury, until the Government of the Province is placed on a constitutional foundation; or until the Provincial Congress shall order otherwise; and we recommend the same to the several Collectors of this county. But we think it the duty of the several Collectors of county, town, and district taxes, to perfect their collections, and pay the same into their several treasuries as soon as possible. And here we think it proper to observe, that though we do not coincide in every instance with our Suffolk brethren, which may be owing to a want of knowing all the circumstances of affairs, yet we highly applaud their virtuous zeal and determined resolutions.

5. We recommend to every town in this county charitably to contribute to the relief of our suffering brethren in our distressed Metropolis.

6. Lest oppression, which maketh even wise men mad, should hurry some people into tumults and disorders, we would recommend that every individual in the county use his best endeavours to suppress, at all times, riots, mobs, and all licentiousness; and that our fellow-subjects would consider themselves, as they always are, in the presence of the great God, who loveth order, and not confusion.

7. That when a general non-importation agreement takes place, we shall look upon it to be the duty of every vender of merchandise to sell his goods at the present rates; and if any person shall exorbitantly enhance the prices of his goods, we shall look upon him as an oppressor of his country; and, in order to prevent imposition in this respect, we recommend that a Committee be chosen in each town to receive complaints against any who may be to blame herein; and if he shall refuse to wait on such Committee, err notice given, or be found culpable in this respect, his name shall be published in the several towns in the county, as undeserving of the future custom of his countrymen.

8. That every one who has it in his power would improve our breed of sheep, and, as far as possible, increase their number; and also encourage the raising of flax, and promote the manufactures of the country.

9. As the very extraordinary and alarming Act for establishing the Roman Catholick religion and French laws in Canada, may introduce the French or Indians into our frontier towns, we recommend that every town and individual in this county should be provided with a proper stock of military stores, according to our Province law; and that some patriotick military officers be chosen in each town to exercise their several companies, and make them perfect in the military art.

10. Our general grievances being the subject of deliberation before the Continental Congress, renders it inexpedient to consider them particularly. On their wisdom we have a great dependence, and we think it will be our duty to lay aside every measure to which we have advised, that may be variant from theirs, and pay a due regard to their result.

And now we think it proper to declare, that as we have been recounting the hardships we endure by the machinations of our enemies at home, we cannot but gratefully acknowledge our obligations to those illustrious worthies, our friends of the minority, who constantly opposed this wicked measure, and would heartily wish that some great and good men would invent and mark out some plan that will unite the parent state to these its Colonies, and thereby prevent the effusion of Christian blood. Then,

Voted, That every Member of this Convention be severally interrogated whether he now has, or will hereafter take any commission under the present Act of Parliament for regulating the Government of this Province.

The Members were accordingly interrogated, and each and every of them answered in the negative.

Voted, That the several Committees which compose this Convention, or the major part of each, be and hereby are desired to interrogate the civil officers and other persons whom they may think fit, in their respective towns, whether they now have or will hereafter take any commission under the aforesaid Act.

Voted, That the whole proceedings of this Convention be by the Clerk transmitted to the press, and also to the Town Clerks in the respective towns in this county, as soon as may be.

Voted, That this Convention be continued, and that the Committee of Falmouth, or the major part of them, be and hereby are empowered, on any occasion that in their opinion requires it, to notify a meeting of the Delegates thereof, at such time and place as they may think proper, setting forth the occasion thereof.

Voted, That the thanks of this Convention be given to the Honourable Enoch Freeman, Esq., for his faithful services as Chairman.

SAMUEL FREEMAN, Clerk.

Boston, September 24. 1774.

At a Meeting of the Selectmen and Committee of Correspondence of Boston, September 24, 1774:

Our friends in the neighbouring towns and country in general, having expressed their uneasiness lest the workmen in this town, by assisting the army in building barracks, would give occasion of umbrage to their friends who dwell more remote, whether in this or the neighbouring Colonies, particularly to our brethren of New-York, who have nobly rejected the application of the Barrack-master for mechanics and other assistants from that place; therefore, having debated this matter, in compliance with the applications of our friends in the country, it is the opinion of this Joint Committee, that should the mechanicks or other inhabitants of this town assist the troops, by furnishing them with artificers, labourers, or materials of any kind, to build barracks or other places of accommodation for the troops, they will probably incur the displeasure of their brethren, who may withhold their contributions for the relief of the town, and deem them as enemies to the rights and liberties of America, by furnishing the troops with conveniences for their residence and accommodation in this town.

TO THE PRINTERS OF THE BOSTON GAZETTE.

Boston, September 24, 1774.

As I have been informed that the conduct of some few persons of the Episcopal denomination, in maintaining principles inconsistent with the rights and liberties of mankind, has given offence to some of the zealous friends of this country, I think myself obliged to publish the following extract of a letter, dated September 9, 1774, which I received from my worthy and patriotick friend, Mr. Samuel Adams, a Member of the Congress now sitting in Philadelphia, by which it appears, that however injudicious some individuals may have been, the gentlemen of the established Church of England are men of the most just and liberal sentiments, and are high in the esteem of the most sensible and resolute defenders of the rights of the people of this Continent; and I earnestly request my countrymen to avoid every thing which our enemies may make use of to prejudice our Episcopal brethren against us; by representing us as disposed to disturb them in the free exercise of their religious privileges, to which we know they have the most undoubted claim; and which, from a real regard to the honour and interest of my country, and the rights of mankind, I hope they will enjoy as long as the name of America is known in the world.

J. WARREN.

"After settling the mode of voting, which is by giving each Colony an equal voice, it was agreed to open the business with prayer. As many of our warmest friends are members of the Church of England, I thought it prudent, as well on that as some other accounts, to move that the service should be performed by a clergyman of that denomination. Accordingly, the lessons of the day and prayer were read by the Reverend Doctor Duché, who afterwards made a most excellent extemporary prayer, by which he discovered himself to be a gentleman of sense and piety, and a warm advocate for the religious and civil rights of America."

Rye, New-York, September 24, 1774.

We the subscribers, Freeholders and Inhabitants of the town of Rye, in the County of Westchester, being much concerned with the unhappy situation of publick affairs, think it our duty to our King and country, to declare that we have not been concerned in any resolutions entered into, or measures taken, with regard to the disputes at present subsisting with the mother country. We also testify our dislike to many hot and furious proceedings in consequence of said disputes, which we think are more likely to ruin this once happy country, than remove grievances, if any there are.

We also declare our great desire and full resolution to live and die peaceable subjects to our gracious Sovereign King George the Third, and his laws.

We the subscribers, having been suddenly and unwarily drawn in to sign a certain paper published in Mr. Livingston's Gazetteer, of the 18th instant; and being now, after mature deliberation, fully convinced that we acted preposterously, and without advertng properly to the matter in dispute between the mother country and her Colonies, are therefore sorry that we ever had any concern in said paper, and we do by these presents utterly disclaim every part thereof, except our expressions of loyalty to the King, and obedience to the constitutional laws of the Realm.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Mechanicks of this city, at the house of Mr. David Philips, a Letter to them was received from the Mechanicks of the town of Boston, which being read, it was resolved unanimously that the same be printed, and is as follows:

Boston, September 8, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: General Gage being determined to cut off the communication of this town with the country, by fortifying the sole pass between them, by land, has applied to several tradesmen in this town, and found none base enough to engage in so villainous an enterprise. And it is now said he intends to apply to New-York for workmen to complete his designs. Our tradesmen, therefore, apprehending that your zeal for the common safety is not less to be depended upon than their own, requested us to give you the earliest intimation of the matter, that you might take your measures accordingly.

We cannot entertain a doubt but the tradesmen of New-York will treat an application of this kind as it deserves. The subject is of the last importance; and for any one part of America to shew a readiness to comply with measures destructive of any other part, will inevitably destroy that confidence so necessary to the common salvation.

* The above paper, like many others, being liable to misconstruction, and having been understood by many to import a recognition of a fight in the Parliament of Great Britain to bind America in all cases whatsoever and to signify that the Colonies labour under no grievances, which is not the sense I meant to convey, I think it my duty to explain my sentiments upon the subject, and thereby prevent future mistakes. It is my opinion that the Parliament have no right to tax America, though they have a right to regulate the trade of the Empire. I am further of opinion, that several Acts of Parliament are grievances, and that the execution of them ought to be opposed in such manner as may be consistent with the duty of a subject to our Sovereign; though I cannot help expressing my disapprobation of many violent proceedings in some of the Colonies.

We are, gentlemen, your friends and fellow-countrymen, By order of the Committee,

JOHN WARREN, Chairman.

To the Committee of Mechanicks of the City of New-York.

Upon which it was unanimously Resolved, That the thanks of this Committee be returned to those worthy Mechanicks of this city, who have declined to aid or assist in the erecting of fortifications on Boston Neck, which, when completed, would probably be improved to spill the blood of their fellow-subjects in the Massachusetts Bay; cut off the communication with the country, whereby the soldiery might be enabled to inflict on that town all the distresses of famine, and reduce those brave and loyal people to terms degrading to human nature, repugnant to Christianity, and which, perhaps, might prove destructive of British and American liberty.

Resolved, Likewise, that the thanks of this Committee be returned to those merchants of this place, for their truly worthy and patriotick conduct, who have virtuously refused to let their vessels to transport the army and the horrid engines of war, for the detestable purpose of destroying his Majesty's faithful subjects in the Massachusetts Bay; who are a people well known to trove been constant in supporting, and firm in defending, the Protestant succession, as settled in the illustrious House of Hanover.

Signed by order, and in behalf of the Committee of Mechanicks,

ABEL HARDENBROOK, Jun., Chairman.

COPY OF A LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE GOVERNOUR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED BOSTON, SEPTEMBER 25, 1774.

MY LORD: The enclosed extract of a letter from General Haldimand, with a printed bill posted at New-York, serve to shew a bad disposition of too many in that place; but I hope the General will find means to secure the stores, and that the transports will get up to the town to receive them. It was found impossible to put the troops under cover here without erecting some temporary lodgements; and on the supposition that workmen could not be procured here, it was thought expedient to send to New-York; but the printed bill deterrent the carpenters of that place from coming here, whilst, contrary to what was imagified, the Boston artificers have undertaken our work.

The messages and addresses delivered by me to the Selectmen of Boston, and the Delegates of the County of Suffolk, concerning a work at the entrance of the town, where I propose to lodge a regiment, was mentioned to your Lordship in a former letter, and I now transmit printed copies of them. Your Lordship will observe that the Delegates complain of misinformation, and deny a wish of independency.

Many members are chosen for the General Court that was appointed to meet at Salem, on the fifth of next month, and I have information that the old Council has been summoned to attend there. The new Council, appointed by the King, who have taken refuge in this town, dare not attend at Salem, unless escorted there and back again by a large force, which as affairs are circumstanced will answer no end. The Assembly will not act with them, and I cannot act with the old Council, so that nothing but confusion can arise from a meeting of the General Court, on which account I mean to fall on measures to postpone the sessions.

We hear of nothing but extravagances in some part or other, and of military preparations fi'om this place to the Province of New-York, in which the whole seems to be united. Upon a rumour, propagated with uncommon despatch through the country, that the soldiers had killed six people, and that the ships and troops were firing upon Boston, the whole country was in arms and in motion, and numerous bodies of the Connecticut people had made some marches before the report was contradicted.

Your Lordship will know, from various accounts, the extremities to which affairs are brought, and how this Province is supported and abetted by others beyond the conception of most people, and foreseen by none. The disease was believed to have been confined to the town of Boston, from whence it might have been eradicated, no doubt, without a great deal of trouble, and it might have been the case some time ago; but now it is so universal there is no knowing where to apply a remedy.

I am, &c., THOMAS GAGE.

P. S. I enclose two Resolutions of the Congress, just arrived from Philadelphia, approving the Resolutions of the County of Suffolk, in this Province, transmitted in my letter to your Lordship, No. 13. T.G.

MEETING OF FREEHOLDERS OF MIDDLESEX, ENGLAND.

Account of the transactions at the Meeting, at Mile End, of the Freeholders of the County of Middlesex, on the 26th of September, 1774.

At twelve o'clock about forty Freeholders were assembled, who had paid each one shilling for admittance. They now began to come in faster, and several gentlemen refused to pay the admittance money. At this instant the two Sheriffs arrived, and a contest arose about paying the previous shilling, which at length subsided on the Sheriffs agreeing to give ten guineas for the use of the room, and those gentlemen who had paid received their money again, and the doors were thrown open. About one o'clock the Sheriffs took the chair, and Mr. Sheriff Sayre having apologized for the obstruction that had happened, which arose from a misunderstanding between the Under Sheriff and the master of the house, the business began.

Mr. Sayre, in a very handsome speech, reminded the Freeholders of the very important occasion of their being assembled; he expatiated on the rights and privileges of Englishmen, and hoped they would, while they were yet at liberty to assemble, nominate such men for their Representatives in Parliament as would be zealous to transmit their rights to the latest posterity.

Mr. Sheriff Lee then desired leave to read a letter which intimated the wish of several gentlemen to know whether persons possessed of freeholds in London had a right to vote as freeholders of Middlesex, and requesting that the question might be agitated at the Mile End Meeting; but no person in company avowing the latter, the matter subsided.

A Freeholder now moved that the gentlemen to be returned as proper persons to represent the county in Parliament, should sign a declaration to the following effect: That they would endeavour to obtain Acts for shortening the duration of Parliament; for limiting the number of placemen and pensioners, &c.; and to procure the repeal of the Quebec Act; the Boston Port Bill; the Bill for the administration of justice in the Province of the Massachusetts, and the Bill to subject persons offending in America to be brought to England for trial.

Mr. Sawbridge proposed, in addition hereto, that the candidates should also sign a general declaration of their principles as being founded on those of the Revolution. After some debate, the last article was put separately, and when it had appeared that it was the general sense of the Freeholders that this article should make part of the declaration to be signed by the candidates, a gentleman objected to the proceedings as irregular, insisting that the other part of the proceedings should have been first proposed. This occasioned some hesitation, till Mr. Sawbridge set the company right by informing them that it was a rule in the House of Commons, when any question was proposed, and an amendment afterwards offered, to submit the amendment first, and then the whole question as amended. The whole conditions were, therefore, now submitted to the opinions of the Freeholders, which, with only seven dissenting hands, were, that the candidates should sign a declaration to the purport above mentioned.

Mr. Wilkes declared his perfect willingness to sign the paper, and said that Mr. Glynn had seen all of it but the proposed amendment, which he was likewise willing to sign. There seemed to be no doubt of Mr. Glynn's equal readiness to sign the declaration respecting the Revolution principles; and it was proposed, first the name of each candidate separately, and then both together, "That John Wilkes and John Glynn, Esquires, be proper persons to "represent this county in Parliament, on condition of their "signing the above mentioned obligation;" to which all hands, except about five, readily assented with the loudest plaudits.

The following is a copy of the Engagement signed by John Wilkes and John Glynn, Esquires.

We (John Wilkes and John Glynn) do solemnly promise and engage ourselves to our constituents, if we have the honour of being chosen the Representatives in Parliament of the County of Middlesex, that we will endeavour, to the utmost of our power, to restore and defend the excellent form of government modelled and established at the Revolution, and to promote acts of Legislature for shortening the duration of Parliaments; for excluding placemen and pensioners from the House of Commons; for a more fair and equal representation of the people; for vindicating the injured rights of the Freeholders of this county, and the whole body of electors of this United Kingdom; and an Act for the repeal of the four late Acts respecting America; the Quebec Act, establishing Popery, and the system of French Canadian laws in that extensive Province; the Boston Port Act; the Act for altering the Charter of the Province of Massachusetts Bay; and the Act for the trial in Europe of persons accused of criminal offences in America; being fully persuaded that the passing of such Acts will be of the utmost importance for the security of our excellent Constitution, and the restoration of the rights and liberties of our fellow-subjects in America

JOHN WILKES,
JOHN GLYNN.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM WORCESTER, DATED SEPTEMBER 27, 1774.

Yesterday we had a meeting of all the male inhabitants from the age of sixteen to seventy, who formed themselves into companies and proceeded to the choice of officers; those who held their commissions under Governour Hutchinson (except a few) having resigned them. One-third part of the inhabitants were appointed to be in readiness to march to whatever place their assistance may be wanting.

On Friday next there will be a meeting of the County Committee, in order to remonstrate to General Gage respecting his fortifications at the only entrance by land into our much esteemed capital.

Boston, September 27, 1774.

A few days ago General Gage paid for, and deposited in his Majesty's Magazine, a quantity of military stores, which had been provided many years since at the desire of Colonel Bradstreet, and had laid from that time on the hands of Mr. Scott. The Selectmen and the Committee of Correspondence sent for Mr. Scott, and told him he deserved immediate death for selling warlike stores to the enemy; and a number of people instantly assembled to put this sentence in execution; but Mr. Scott was so fortunate as to make his escape; his house however suffered very much before the people separated, at the desire of the Selectmen.

Dr. Warren, the President of the Committee of Correspondence, came about nine o'clock at night to the General, acquainting him that he was to write to the Congress immediately, and he desired for their information, that the General would answer the following questions: viz: What is the meaning of the fortifications? What is the meaning that the General buys military stores? Are the people at Boston to be made hostages, in order to compel the people of the country to comply with the new laws?

Dr. Warren received for answer, that as the country people were all armed, and collecting cannon and military stores from all quarters, which, as they were not soldiers by profession, or under the least apprehension of any invasion, could indicate nothing but their intention of attacking his Majesty's forces in that town, it became therefore the General, and it would be inexcusable in him to neglect to provide for their defence, and to enable them effectually to resist the attempts which it is no longer doubtful the people meditate against them. That the very construction of the fortifications show them to be defensive; and every body might easily discern that they are not calculated, in any respect, to annoy the town or disturb the inhabitants, or even to lay them under the least restraint. That it is notorious that many cannon have been conveyed, notwithstanding the works, from thence; and arms are carried out openly by every man that goes out of Boston without molestation.

That though the General, to ease the town of the burden of furnishing quarters for the troops, and to keep the troops from every possibility of giving offence to the inhabitants, hath ordered barracks to be erected for them, which he conceives to be of equal utility to the town as to the troops, nevertheless the Selectmen and the Committee have ordered all the workmen to quit this employ, though they were paid by the King. That orders are given to prevent all supplies for English troops. Straw, purchased for their use, is daily burnt; vessels, with bricks, sunk; carts, with wood, overturned; and thus even the property of the King is destroyed in every manner in which it can be effected. Yet such is the General's desire to preserve to the last, as far as in his power, the peace and quiet of the people, that all these disorders, though not the effect of rash tumult, but of evident system, are endured with patience. There can therefore be no reality in the apprehensions which it appears the people conceive of dangerous designs entertained by the troops against them, when these very people are not afraid to provoke the troops by every wanton insult they can devise.

Boston, September 27, 1774.

At a Meeting of the several Committees of the Towns of Boston, Roxbury, Dorchester, Watertown, Charlestown, Cambridge, Mistick, Dedham, Milton, Malden, Braintree, Woburn, and Stow, September 27th, the following Resolves and Vote were passed, viz:

Whereas the inhabitants of the towns of Boston and Charlestown, by the operation of the detested and oppressive Port Bill, are now suffering unspeakable distress, arising from the entire prohibition of commerce, and the transportation of even necessities of life by water, from one town to another: And whereas, in addition to the severity of said execrable Bill, General Gage, the military commander of this Province, and the Admiral on this station, are now in exercise of the most licentious and arbitrary acts of oppression, by withholding provisions from this town, allowed by said Act of Parliament, by embarrassing, unnecessarily detaining, and thereby preventing the usual supplies of fuel to said town; by harassing, insulting, and vilifying the inhabitants passing and repassing to and from the town of Boston; by alarming the people with the most formidable fortifications at the entrance of said town; by continuing and increasing their apprehension% with a design of erecting batteries and pickets to surround the town; thereby to awe and intimidate, if not to subjugate the inhabitants to a tame and unresisting state of servitude:

Therefore, Resolved, That it is the opinion of these Joint Committees, that should any person or persons, inhabitants of this or the neighbouring Provinces, supply the troops now stationed in the town of Boston, acting in open hostility to the persons and properties of the inhabitants, with labour, lumber, joists, spars, pickets, straw, bricks, or any materials whatsoever, which may furnish them with requisites to annoy or in any way distress said inhabitants, he or they so offending shall be held in the highest detestation; be deemed the most inveterate enemies of this people; and ought to be prevented, opposed, and defeated, by all reasonable means whatsoever.

Voted, That it is the opinion of the Committees, that Committees of Observation and Prevention should be appointed by each town, particularly in Roxbury, Milton, Dedham, Cambridge, Braintree, Mistick, Charlestown, and Watertown, and that the Committees of Correspondence be desired to appoint Committees to see that the Resolves of the Joint Committees entered into this day be faithfully executed.

The following is a copy of a Letter which was sent to every Town and District in this Province,

Boston, September 27, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: The Committees of Correspondence of this and several of the neighbouring towns, have taken into consideration the vast importance of withholding from the troops now here, labour, straw, timber, slitwork, boards, and in short, every article excepting provisions, necessary for their subsistence; and being under a necessity from their conduct of considering them as real enemies, we are fully satisfied that it is our bounden duty to withhold from them every thing but what mere humanity requires; and therefore we must beg your close and serious attention to the enclosed resolves, which were passed unanimously. And as unanimity in all our measures in this day of severe trial is of the utmost consequence, we do earnestly recommend your co-operation in this measure, as conducive to the good of the whole. We are, &c., your friends and fellow-countrymen.

Signed by order of the Joint Committee.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM COLONEL WILLIAM PRESTON, DATED FINCASTLE, SEPTEMBER 28, 1774.

That part of the army under the command of Colonel Lewis, which is to meet Lord Dunmore at the mouth of the Great Kenhawa, or New River, assembled at the Great Levels of Greenbrier, to the amount of about fifteen hundred rank and the. Colonel Charles Lewis marched with six hundred men on the 6th instant, for the mouth of Elk, a branch of New River, which empties some distance below the Falls, there to build a small Fort, and prepare canoes. Colonel Andrew Lewis marched with another large party the 12th instant, for the same place; and Colonel Christian was to march yesterday with the remainder, being about four hundred, and the last supply of provisions. This body of militia being mostly armed with rifle guns, and a great part of them good woodsmen, are looked upon to be at least equal to any troops for the number that have been raised in America. It is earnestly hoped that they will, in conjunction with the other party, be able to chastise the Ohio Indians for the many murders and robberies they have committed on our frontiers for many years past.

On the 8th instant, one John Henry was dangerously wounded, and his wife and three children taken prisoners, on the head of Clinch River. The man at that time made his escape, but is since dead of his wounds. The same day a man was taken prisoner by another party of the enemy on the north fork of Holston. On the 13th a soldier was fired upon by three Indians on Clinch River; but, as he received no hurt, he returned the fire, and it is believed killed an Indian, as much blood was found where he fell, and one of the plugs which burst out of his wound was also found. The soldier was supported by some men who were near, and gave the two Indians a chase; who, it is supposed threw the wounded one into a deep pit that was near. These parties of the enemy were pursued several days by Captain Daniel Smith, who could not overtake them, they having stolen horses to carry, them off.

On the 23d, two negroes were taken prisoners at Blackmore's Fort, on Clinch River, and a great many horses and cattle shot down. On the 24th, a family was killed and taken at Reedy Creek, a branch of Holston, near the Cherokee line; and on Sunday morning, the 25th, hallooing, and the report of many guns were heard at several houses, but the damage done was not known when the express came away. These last murders are believed to be perpetrated by the Cherokees, as two men lately returned from that country and made oath that two parties had left the towns, either to join the Shawanese or fall upon some of our settlements; and that the Cherokees in general appealed in a very bad temper, which greatly alarmed the traders.

It is impossible to conceive the consternation into which this last stroke has put the inhabitants on Holston and Clinch Rivers, and the rather, as many of their choice men are on the expedition, and they have no ammunition. Two of these people were at my house this day, and, after travelling above an hundred miles offered ten shillings a pound for powder; but there is none to be had for any money. Indeed it is very alarming; for should the Cherokees engage in a war at this time it would ruin us, as so many men are out, and ammunition so scarce. Add to this the strength of those people, and their towns being so near our settlements on Holston.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER RECEIVED IN LONDON FROM MARY" LAND, DATED SEPTEMBER 28, 1774.

The general Congress is now sitting, and consists of Deputies from every Colony on the Continent, except Quebec and the two Floridas. You shall hear soon again from me if they do not recommend a stop to all mercantile commerce with Great Britain. This Congress is truly respectable. It consists of about seventy Members, men of integrity, men of talents, chosen without solicitation, bribery, or corruption; chosen only on account of their integrity and talents. I will not compare them to the House of Commons in point of fortune and property; but I will not degrade them by making it a doubt whether the American Congress does not excel both Houses of Parliament in honour, honesty, and publick spirit. All your publick papers tell us both Houses of Parliament are corrupt and venal; their acts against America speak them tyrannical. Why is England put to the immense expense of sending troops and ships of war to awe us into obedience; is she able, under such a load of debts, to bear an increase? Is the Ministry weak enough to think we shall draw the sword, when patience and forbearance of commerce will very effectually answer our purpose? America does not yet contain five millions of souls. In fifty years, according to the common course of population, she may contain at least sixty millions. Will Great Britain then pretend to tax us, and enforce payment by her troops and Navy?

New-York, September 29, 1774.

Yesterday great numbers of the following, in a Handbill, were distributed in this city:

To the Publick. - An application having been made to the Merchants of Philadelphia, by the Agents of the British Ministry: for supplying the troops now in the town of Boston, and parts adjacent, with blankets and other necessaries; and they conceiving that the complying with the said offer would be attended with the most fatal consequences to the common cause of America (by enabling General Gage to continue his despotick and arbitrary designs against our distressed brethren in that devoted capital) nobly and generously refused, thereby sacrificing their private interest to the publick good. And, a report prevailing, that a number of persons in this city have, inconsiderately, contracted to furnish the Ministerial Agents with sundry articles for the aforesaid purpose, contrary to the sense of the Continental Congress, as appears by their resolves respecting the town of Boston and Province of Massachusetts Bay, a body of freeholders and freemen convened at the house of William Marriner yesterday evening in order to take the said report into consideration. And being deeply impressed with the distressing consequences that such imprudent conduct will be productive of to their already greatly oppressed fellow-subjects, appointed a Committee to wait on those gentlemen who may have engaged, as aforesaid, in order to learn a true state of the case, and obtain their answer in writing, and also report the same, this evening, at five o'clock, at the house of Edward Bardin, to the inhabitants of this city, then and there to be convened. This is, therefore, to notify all the friends of liberty there to attend the delivery of the said report, and adopt such measures as the exigency of this alarming occasion may require.

New-York, September 28, 1774.

In consequence of the above Notice there was a very numerous meeting at the time and place appointed, when several reports were made, and resolutions entered into, but as the time was not sufficient to finish the business, the Meeting was adjourned till this evening at six o'clock, at the same place.

PROVINCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

By the Governour. - A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, on the first day of September, instant, I thought fit to issue writs for calling a Great and General Court or Assembly, to be convened and held at Salem, in the County of Essex, on the fifth day of October next; and whereas, from the many tumults and disorders which have since taken place, the extraordinary Resolves which have been passed in many of the counties, the Instructions given by the town of Boston, and some other towns, to their Representatives, and the present disordered and unhappy state of the Province, it appears to me highly inexpedient that a Great and General Court should be convened at the time aforesaid; but that a session, at some more distant day, will best tend to promote his Majesty's service and the good of the Province. I have, therefore, thought fit to declare my intention not to meet the said General Court at Salem, on the said fifth day of October next. And I do hereby excuse and discharge all such persons as have been, or may be, elected and deputed Representatives to serve at the same, and giving their attendance, any thing in the aforesaid writs contained to the contrary notwithstanding; whereof all concerned are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

And the Sheriffs of the several counties, their Under Sheriffs or Deputies, and the Constables of the several towns within the same, are commanded to cause this Proclamation to be forthwith published and posted within their Precincts.

Given at Boston, the twenty-eighth day of September, seventeen hundred and seventy-four, in the fourteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c.

THOMAS GAGE.

By his Excellency's command,

THOMAS FLUCKER, Secretary.
GOD save the King.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE COMMITTEE OF CORRESPONDENCE FOR THE TOWN OF BOSTON TO THE CONGRESS, DATED SEPTEMBER 29, 1774.

Yesterday it appeared that Joseph Scott, Esquire, had sold to the army a number of cannon, some cohorns, shells, chain, and other shot. Upon the matter being discovered, and Mr. Scott's being acquainted with the resentments of the people, he forbade the party who were sent for them to take them away; they nevertheless proceeded and carried them on board their ships. This created much disturbance, and a guard was offered to Mr. Scott by the General; but Mr. Scott was informed that no military guard could save him, and would but stimulate the people to acts of greater violence. Many gentlemen, who foresaw what must have ensued, endeavoured to dissuade the people from attacking the house; and, finally, some persons engaged, that if no guard was set to the house they would do all in their power to disperse the people. This was complied with, and the exertions of the gentlemen of the town proved effectual, some dirt and filth thrown upon his warehouse being all the injury he sustained. We have given an account of this affair because we expect some untrue representation will be made, perhaps much to the disadvantage of the town.

London, October 1, 1774.

Yesterday his Majesty came from Kew to St. James's, where there was a levee, and afterwards a Council was held, at which the Lord Chancellor, Lord North, the Lords Dartmouth and Barrington, &c., assisted, when his Majesty signed the following Proclamation for dissolving the Parliament, and for calling another:

BY THE KING.

A Proclamation for Dissolving this present Parliament, and declaring the Calling of another.

GEORGE R.

Whereas we have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, to dissolve this present Parliament, which now stands prorogued to Tuesday, the 15th day of November next; we do, for that end, publish this our Royal Proclamation, and do hereby dissolve the said Parliament accordingly; and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, and the Commissioners for shires and burghs, of the House of Commons, are discharged from their meeting and attendance on Tuesday, the said 15th day of November next. And we, being desirous and resolved, as soon as may be, to meet our people and to have their advice in Parliament, do hereby make known to all our loving subjects our royal will and pleasure to call a new Parliament. And do hereby further declare, that with the advice of our Privy Council, we have this day given order to our Chancellor of Great Britain to issue out writs in due form for calling a new Parliament, which writs are to bear test on Saturday the first of October next, and to be returnable on Tuesday the 29th of November following.

Given at our Court at St. James's, the 30th of September, 1774, in the fourteenth year of our reign.

GOD save the King.

Philadelphia, October 1, 1774.

Among the variety of means that have been proposed for obtaining a repeal of the three Boston Bills, (as they are called,) and the Tea Act, a general non-remittance is one. This proposal stands condemned by many, merely from its supposed injustice. It may, perhaps, with some propriety, be compared to a sheep in a wolf's coat; and if so, the general disapprobation it has met with is not at all to be admired at. We are apt to judge from appearances, without sufficiently examining the nature and merits of the cause; and our prejudices frequently lead us into hasty and wrong conclusions. Thus, a sheep in a wolf's coat, however harmless and useful the animal might be, would probably, on its first appearance, be condemned and destroyed. And as we are all, from our cradles, prejudiced against and taught to detest the fraudulent withholding of a debt, therefore, whatever bears such appearance, though, perhaps, from certain concomitant circumstances rendered perfectly just, shall, like the sheep in the wolf's coat, be instantly condemned.

In order, however, a little to divest ourselves of this prejudice, let us suppose that two neighbours, A and B, for instance, have dealt together and supported a good understanding many years; but that A, at length, takes it in his head, without any cause or provocation, to seize and detain one of B's children, with a design to enslave it; that B is at this time one hundred pounds in debt to A, and has no way to prevail on him to relinquish his child, but by withholding payment till he does; and then ask yourselves seriously, whether, in this case, it would really be unjust to withhold payment; or rather, whether the purest laws of God and nature, would not absolutely enjoin and require it? Must not the parent who would voluntarily, in such case, put the means of his child's redemption out of his power, for only the frivolous purpose, comparatively speaking, of paying a debt, be totally destitute of the generous feelings of compassion, or utterly ignorant of the real value of liberty.

But the people of Great Britain, (among whom our creditors are included,) are not only endeavouring to enslave our children, but enslave us also. The means we see are already contrived, and with horrid force carrying into execution. And if to obtain freedom for an individual, a just debt ought to be withheld, surely to obtain it for and secure it to millions, will justify an act of the same nature. If payment in that case would have been criminal, must it not be infinitely more so in this? Where so great and general a good is depending, to give up any part of the means requisite for obtaining it, must approach near to unpardonable.

I said the people of Great Britain are endeavouring to enslave us. I consider their conduct in that light. The Acts which have that tendency were passed by their Deputies - by their servants, and they have not so much as remonstrated against them. Their silence is an evidence of consent. But we have further evidence. Our friends in Parliament, by way of complaint, openly declared that the people of that country approve those measures, and wish to see them carried into execution as much as the majority of that House. The Minister might invent, and the Parliament might enact, but it is the people that are to support and enforce them.

It is, therefore, Great Britain, in her collective capacity, that we have to dispute with; which seems to render the most general and powerful mode of opposition that we can possibly devise and carry into execution, consistent with the laws of God and our country, absolutely necessary. Partial measures, it is true, may irritate - they may distress and even ruin many individuals, both at home and here; but an arbitrary Minister, with a venal Parliament at his heels, will easily brave the storm of their resentment. Whereas, if we adopt measures that will send distress to every part of the whole Empire, our enemies must soon yield to the force of our argument. Here, I presume, will be the time for us to remonstrate; to send the mother country a state of our grievances, with a boundary line sketched out between her power and our own. Being convinced of her error in supposing herself omnipotent, she may, perhaps, have an ear to hear, and a heart to yield to right reason.

Nor can I but be of opinion, that we shall stand firmer to our engagements, in a short, general, and vigorous opposition, that will diffuse its burden and loss upon us all, than in a partial lingering one, borne only by a few. To throw the whole burden of the contest on our dry goods merchants, appears too replete with injustice to bear a vindication. If we all wish to partake of the advantage, let us all be willing to pay a part of the price.

The farmer, who insists that the dry goods merchant shall cease to import, though the measure should even deprive him of bread; and yet, through fear of some frivolous loss to himself, very wisely protests against non-exportation, certainly merits the utmost contempt. Nor does the farmer, in this case, stand alone. The miller lays claim to publick spirit; talks loudly for liberty; and also insists upon a non-importation; and in order to enforce the scheme upon the merchant, will readily agree to a general non-consumption; but no sooner is non-exportation sounded in his ear, than his mighty publick spirit, like Milton's devils at their Pandemonium consultation, is instantly dwarfed. "My interest, sir! I cannot part with that! "Alas! if a general non-exportation takes place, what shall "I do with my mill?"

Liberty is, in this good man's opinion, a Goddess, and he passionately wishes to live under the benign influence of her smiles; and yet, rather than forego the profits of his mill for the space of a year, this goddess of his may perish, and his country be bound in ever-during chains of slavery. Oh! shameful partiality! Shameful meanness! Such selfish souls even taint the very air they breathe in; their disorder is infectious and spreads among the people; our councils are enfeebled by the schisms they produce; and the laudable spirit of liberty is sickened by their breath.

We have, however, farmers and millers who breathe forth sentiments of a different nature; and who well deserve to be ranked with the foremost of our patriots.

Soon after William the Third came to the Crown of Great Britain, there appeared divisions amongst the people respecting his right. The Parliament empowered him to borrow money on his revenues; and the advice of his friends was, borrow what you can; the more you borrow the more friends you make; interest is a stronger tie than principle. The King took their advice, and soon secured in his favour the moneyed part of the Nation.

The same reason will operate in favour of non-remittance. The more we owe the British merchants, the more they will exert themselves in our behalf. In proportion to the debt, it will ever be their interest to ward off such measures as may tend to work our ruin, or cause us to revolt. But the moment we pay them their demands, we release them from this obligation; and, in some degree, set them at liberty to unite with our enemies in working our ruin. They may, perhaps, find other customers for their goods; but the debts we owe them they can never expect to receive from any other quarter; and, therefore, should we be drove to the utmost extremity, they are sure of losing the whole. Nor will this loss affect them only, for it must very sensibly affect the Nation in general.

It is I know said, that some of these creditors are our friends; and that it would be unjust to do any thing tending to injure them. But then it is also said, and as truly, that necessity has no law. We are, indeed, very sorry that British measures have laid us under the disagreeable necessity of using means of opposition injurious to British merchants; and more especially such as are really our friends. But I know of no law either moral or divine, that requires us to love our friends better than ourselves. If the best friends we have should be unfortunately obliged to suffer with us, all that they can ask, or we can grant, consistent with the laws of nature and self-preservation, will only be to sympathize with them in their affliction, and endeavour to obtain their relief by obtaining our own. They must have too much good sense, I presume, to think hard of us for adopting a measure so essential to our preservation. They know, they feel, that self-preservation is the first law of nature, and that it ought to be, above all others, religiously regarded. Their breasts may indeed swell with indignation against the men whose callous and corrupt hearts have compelled us to do things so injurious to them and unpleasant to ourselves.

Whatever the British merchants might lose, however, by a general non-remittance, I am clearly of opinion they would lose far more by a general non-importation. For although non-remittance will operate most speedily, and, with regard to influencing their conduct, probably do us most service; yet, upon a supposition that trade will again revive, and remittance be made, it must do them less damage; they will then have the satisfaction of receiving their whole original demands, with interest. Whereas, if a non-importation takes place, their usual profits on trade thereby withheld, together with the losses on perishable articles, and the interest on the value of goods lying upon their hands, must be dead loss to them forever; which will probably far exceed any loss that could possibly attend their lying out of their money. But then, if matters should be carried so far as to prevent remittances ever being made, their loss must be prodigious; and this is what it will put them upon to prevent; and the fear of this, we may reasonably suppose, will stimulate them to exert every nerve in our favour.

When I consider the importance of what we are contending for, I own I cannot but think it would betray a great weakness in us to decline adopting any one salutary measure, either through fear of loss to our friends or to ourselves. If every means in our power to use will no more than insure us success, how fatal may prove the disuse of any one? Hath it not been consistent with the wisdom of whole Empires, to spend great part of their wealth, and the purest of their blood, in defence of their liberty? And when their dreadful struggles have been crowned with success, have they not ever thought the enjoyment far superiour to the price it cost them?

If it is Britain collectively that we have to contend with, then in this as in all other national contests, the innocent must unavoidably suffer with the guilty - our friends with our foes. It is impossible for us to point our weapons against our enemies only; or, indeed, in this case, to point them against the principals at all. But it is not impossible for us so to wound a lion in his foot as soon to disorder his whole body, and grievously sicken his head.

We are not now to consider what will affect individuals in Britain; but what will affect Britain in general. We ought not to regard the sentiments and conduct of particular persons there, so as to model our measures to screen them; but we ought to attend to and regard the sentiments of Britain collectively as one great individual; and in like collective capacity ought we to consider ourselves, and also to act.

If, then, Britain has a demand of debt against us, and we a demand of a different nature, but superiour in value, against her; with what propriety or justice can she expect payment, when she refuses to allow us our superiour demand? We must certainly, agreeable to the strictest rules of honesty, and the general practice between neighbour and neighbour, have clearly a right to withhold payment until she condescends to come to a settlement. When this settlement is obtained, and the demands on each side are fully and fairly stated, and the balance struck; this balance, whether it fails in favour of her or of us, will be the sum total that ought to be paid. But as the articles of our demand against her are inconceivably valuable, being no less than liberty, peace, and a free trade, I believe we may venture to anticipate the settlement, and safely conclude that the balance will certainly prove in our favour; and that it will be by much too high for all the wealth in Britain to pay. And if this be the case, as I presume it is, then it will necessarily follow that she can never have a balance in her favour, nor equitable demand of debt against us, until those three articles of our demand are again restored to our possession.

As these articles, however, are seldom if ever met with in books of account, some people may, perhaps, affect to sneer at their being considered as articles of charge, proper to balance the demand of debt the mother country has against us. But whatever ideas, with regard to proper articles of charge, custom may have riveted in these men's heads, I imagine the unprejudiced will conceive with me, that whatsoever is of value to mankind is, with mankind, a proper article of charge. And our lawyers will tell these gentlemen, that whoever illegally deprives another of his liberty, peace, or trade, is not only liable to a charge therefor, but to an action also.

And if Britain denies us the benefit of the law, for the recovery and enjoyment of those invaluable articles of our demand against her; totally refusing to listen to our plea of legal constitutional rights - of solemnly granted Charter privileges, and of her faith plighted and confirmed to our forefathers, she sets us a striking example to deny her merchants the benefit of the law and the assistance of our courts, for the recovery of their demands against us; even though we had no equitable right to withhold them. Such equitable right, however, I suppose really and fairly to exist; and yet am I far from holding it just, that those merchants, if innocent with regard to the malepractices which gave that right existence, should bear the loss; for their rulers, who have so wantonly and wickedly brought the mischief on them, ought, no doubt, upon the purest principles of equity, to make them whole.

And now, before I conclude, let me just observe, that I remember to have seen in some of our papers, a very sounding protest against a resolution of a respectable county, in a neighbouring Colony, in favour of shutting our courts against the British merchants, in order to withhold payment for a time. The protesters might possibly imagine that such high terms of censure as they were pleased to express their disapprobation in, would awe people into a detestation of the measure, without considering the ground on which it was proposed. In this, perhaps, they were not wholly mistaken. It frequently happens that we are misled to condemn an effect, without first comparing it with and weighing it against the cause that produced it. To withhold a just debt without just cause, would certainly be wrong; but then, to withhold a just debt with just cause, would as certainly be right. I have not only endeavoured to show that such just cause may exist, but also that it really does exist, in the case now depending between us and the mother country, and which gave rise to the resolve I just now mentioned. If I have been so happy as to succeed in these two points, then I presume it will follow, that to stop payment agreeable to the spirit and design of that resolve, will neither injure our consciences as Christians, nor our credit as traders.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE GOVERNOR GAGE TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED BOSTON, OCTOBER 3, 1774.

MY LORD: Your Lordship's letter of the 3d of August, No. 8, was received on the 27th ultimo, and its duplicate by packet next day. The change that has happened in the affairs of this country, your Lordship will have been made acquainted with, since the date of the above despatch, from various parts, and know with what violence the other Colonies have espoused the cause of the Masachusetts Bay, though some more moderate than others. The Congress is still sitting, and from some previous resolves they have published, particularly one transmitted your Lordship, approving the resolves of Suffolk County, and another recommending non-importation, we do not expect much good from their deliberations.

I mentioned to your Lordship my intention to postpone meeting the Assembly, and you will see the Proclamation to that end in the enclosed papers, together with the resolves of Worcester, and some publications against supplying the King's troops with necessaries; so that I was premature in telling your Lordship that the Boston artificers would work for us. This refusal of all assistance has thrown us into difficulties, but I hope to get through them, and to be able to put the troops under cover, though not so comfortably as I could wish.

I do not find that the spirit abates any where, for it is kept up with great industry.

They are shortly to have a Provincial Congress in this Colony, composed chiefly of the Representatives lately chosen to meet at Concord, where it is supposed measures will be taken for the government of the Province.

DEPUTY GOVERNOUR PENN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH.

Philadelphia, October 3, 1774.

MY LORD: Since I had the honour to write to your Lordship on the 6th of last month, the Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies have continued sitting in this city; but as they have agreed to keep all their proceedings secret, I have it not as yet in my power to transmit to your Lordship any account thereof, except what they themselves have published in the newspapers, which is comprised in three resolves. One of them is a request to the merchants in the several Colonies not to send any orders to Great Britain for goods, and to direct the execution of all orders already sent to be suspended until the sense of the Congress, on the means to be taken for the preservation of the liberties of America be made publick. The other two are expressive of their feelings for the sufferings of the people of Massachusetts Bay; their approbation of a set of resolves entered into by the Delegates of the County of Suffolk, in that Province, and their opinion that the contributions from all the Colonies for supplying the necessities of the people of Boston, ought to be continued as long as their occasions may require. But as these resolves, as well as those of the County of Suffolk, are inserted at large in the public newspapers, I beg leave to enclose two of the papers which contain them, and as soon as any further transactions of the Congress are made known, I shall not fail to communicate them to your Lordship by the first opportunity.

I have the honour to be, &c.,

JOHN PENN.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LONDON, TO A GENTLEMAN IN NEW-YORK, DATED OCTOBER 3, 1774.

The critical situation of affairs at present, and the important consequences which will flow from the conduct of your Congress, are very interesting to every lover of his country, and have induced me to address to you a few indigested sentiments on the topicks of the day.

The grounds on which your opposition to the claims of Parliament are founded seem to be consonant to natural equity and the first principles of civil society. The proper mode of asserting your liberties is at present the material question. No person loves America and the rights of mankind more than I do; you will, therefore, if I should happen to differ in sentiment with you, impute that difference rather to defect of knowledge, than want of zeal for the interest in the cause in which you are engaged.

I have ever been an enemy to all attempts of deciding the present contest by violence; the issue of which is generally not owing to the goodness of a cause, but to superiour strength or art, and the ill consequences are as commonly felt as well by the successful as the subdued. The dispute between America and Great Britain is a dispute between two grand branches of the same state, and therefore an injury done to either must be detrimental to the common body. In this view every person of prudence must have seen the propriety of avoiding the introduction of violence, and the wisdom of endeavouring to settle the difference by friendly debate and argument. On this foot I confess I disapprove of the conduct of the Bostonians, in first recurring to force by violently destroying the teas of the Company. Any excuse drawn from the danger of their being purchased by their own people is an argument against their virtue, and an inadmissible plea: because, if the teas had been landed without their consent, and the duties (which is putting it in the most favourable light) paid without their concurrence, it could never have been urged as a precedent against them. I mean not this as an apology for the severe measures which have been adopted against them.

The Boston Port Bill seems to be replete with injustice and cruelty, and utterly indefensible; yet as they were undoubtedly aggressors, by their rashness and violence, it would have been an honour to your cause if their proceedings had been disavowed, and a compensation made at the same time that you declared your resolutions of supporting them in defence of the same general rights, and of uniting in the maintenance of your common liberties.

The instructions of the Philadelphians to their Committee are drawn up with the true spirit of patriotism, and have gained more proselytes to your cause than any other procedure; the prudence, love of liberty, and attachment to Great Britain, which they breathe, and the firmness and moderation which they express, are more alarming to your opponents than all the enthusiastick ravings and indiscriminate abuse which have been poured out from every quarter. In a letter which I wrote you some time since, I briefly stated the mode of conduct, which, if your Congress pursued, it was thought by men acquainted with the views of Government, would tend to the amicable adjustment of the present unhappy dispute: "That if the Members of your Congress unitedly advise their several Assemblies to present an humble and resolute petition, stating what you demanded as your rights, and what you would concede; such a petition from your Assemblies would be attended to, and perhaps produce a Convention which might terminate in a firm and lasting settlement of the dispute." I am afraid that letter came too late to be of any service, as well as others on the same subject, addressed to persons of some weight amongst you.

The Congress has, I suppose, by this time met, and the decisive measure been adopted. Whatever it may be, let me conjure you, as a lover of your country, to promote mild and peaceful measures; if the sword of civil war is once unsheathed, mutual injuries will but produce the more raging animosity, and those who are now your friends may become your enemies.

Some time since I scarce met a person who was not violently opposed to you from indignation at the insult which they conceived was offered by the destruction of the teas at Boston; since that time their resentment has been subsiding, and an unforeseen incident made them loud in your favour, and as vindictive against the Ministry. You have undoubtedly seen the Quebec Bill, and carefully considered its contents; occasion has been taken from it to attack the Ministry as friends to Popery, and to represent them as intending by it to induce the Papists to assist in reducing the Protestants in America to slavery. The project has answered beyond expectation; the cry of the enjoyment of Popery, and the cruelties exercised against you, has reached all parts of the country, and inflamed the people with zeal in your favour, and indignation against the Administration.

As the issue of your Congress would be the subject of the most important debates, and probably require vigorous measures, it was thought proper to dissolve the present Parliament, and suddenly issue out writs for a new one; for it was judged that if the present, or rather late members, had been obliged to use measures against you which were unpopular, they might not have had a chance of being re-elected, but a majority unfavourable to the Ministry brought in, the consequences of which you may easily conjecture. All parties are now, therefore, busy in making interest for the ensuing election.

The election for Mayor of London is now carrying on, and there is no doubt but Mr. Wilkes will be appointed to that office. Mr. Bull and he are candidates in opposition to Esdale and Kennet, two Ministerial gentlemen. You will ask me whether the Ministry will be able to gain a majority in the ensuing Parliament? Had not the House been so artfully and unexpectedly dissolved, I am of opinion that they would not; but by this project they will undoubtedly succeed, as they have had an advantage of making their interest sure, while their opponents were off their guard; and to leave those measures, which would have been fatal to them, to the sanction of the future Parliament.

The bulk of the people, especially of the lower class, is now in your favour, but if you adopt violent measures, I dare assert that they will not continue so. Should any of their countrymen be insulted in America; should the blood of any of the soldiery be shed, national pride (which is so characteristick in all their wars) will prompt them to espouse the cause of this country against you, and to look upon the quarrel as not with the Ministry only, but with them. On this account, as well as from the uncertainty and miseries which will flow from a contest by force, I entreat you to exert your influence in the promotion of moderate councils and measures; let not persons who are desirous of change, and fond of confusion and disorder (because from them they can expect that eminence which they are not willing to aspire after by the slow methods of industry) assume the lead in your deliberations, but men whose honesty and wisdom have been long tried by their fellow-citizens, and whose property may give you security of their being really interested in the welfare of the community."

MEETING OF THE LIVERY OF LONDON, AT GUILD HALL,
OCTOBER 3, 1774.

Pursuant to advertisements in the publick papers for that purpose, there appeared at Guildhall, on Monday afternoon, October 3, a very numerous and respectable part of the Livery, to nominate four gentlemen to represent this great city in the ensuing Parliament.

Mr. Stavely being voted into the chair, he opened the business of the meeting in a very spirited speech, wherein he set forth the vast importance of the business about which they were met; that the eyes of the whole Nation were upon them; and this being the first city in the world, it was expected they would set a glorious example, and not elect any persons but such as were known friends to liberty, not only by professions, but experience. He begged the Livery to consider that such another opportunity would not offer itself for seven years, a time, in his opinion, much too long; that they ought to consider and proceed on their business with coolness, candour, and deliberation; that were we only to cast our eyes to America, we should see to what a dreadful situation those brave people were reduced, through the iniquitous conduct of the late corrupt Houses of Parliament, and the unanimity the Americans have shewn to resist all such arbitrary acts; and the noble struggle they make to preserve their liberties, ought to be an example to us; that we might depend upon it the persons who wished to enslave America, would, if it lay in their power, shackle us.

After Mr. Stavely had concluded, Mr. Compton moved, that a paper of Instructions, which had been drawn up by a very respectable Committee, for the candidates to sign before they were put in nomination, might be read; which was accordingly read, and is as follows:

"We do most solemnly promise and engage ourselves to our constituents, if we have the honour of being chosen to represent this city in Parliament, that we will endeavour, to the utmost of our power, to restore and defend the excellent form of Government modelled and established at the Revolution; and promote and procure, and having procured, to maintain and continue Acts of the Legislature for shortening the duration of Parliaments; for excluding pensioners and placemen from sitting in the House of Commons; for subjecting each candidate for a seat in Parliament to an oath against his having used bribery, or any other illegal or unconstitutional means of gaining his election; for establishing a more fair and equal representation of the people in Parliament; for vindicating the injured rights of the freeholders of Middlesex, and through them, of the whole body of electors in this United Kingdom; for restoring to our fellow-subjects the essential right of taxation by Representatives of their own free election, and for repealing the universal excise which has lately been substituted in the Colonies instead of the laws of Customs; for repealing the four late iniquitous Acts respecting America, viz: the Quebec Act, establishing Popery, and the arbitrary system of French Canadian laws in that extensive Province; the Boston Port Act; the Act for altering the Charter of the Province of Massachusetts Bay; and the Act for the trial in Europe of persons accused of criminal offences in America; being fully persuaded that the passing such Acts will be of the utmost importance for the security of our excellent Constitution, and the restoration of the rights and liberties of our fellow-subjects in America. We do also solemnly promise never to accept from the

FOURTH SERIES.

Crown, or its Ministers, place, pension, contract, title, gratuity, or emolument of any kind whatsoever; and we do farther promise to follow, on all occasions, such instructions as our constituents, in Common Hall assembled, shall think proper to give us."

Mr. Wilkes then came forward, and addressed the Livery to the following purport:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE LIVERY: Last year, on the vacancy of a person to represent you in Parliament, I had the honour to nominate our present excellent Chief Magistrate, knowing him to be a person of an upright, honest, and fair character. I so far succeeded, gentlemen, in my wishes, as to see him elected; and I trust that his conduct, through a long and interesting session of Parliament, has been such as will merit your future favours: therefore, gentlemen, if he has no objection to sign the articles proposed, I will, with your permission, nominate him again for the same important trust."

After Mr. Wilkes had concluded, the Chairman acquainted the Livery, that the Lord Mayor, the Aldermen Crosby, Sawbridge, and Harley, had subscribed to the articles proposed.

On this declaration of the Chairman, W. Baker, Esquire, came forward, and informed the Livery that it might appear rather extraordinary that he should offer himself a candidate, and at the same time refuse to sign their articles. He commented upon each article separately, and objected to that one which obliges the candidate to vote for the expulsion of all placemen and pensioners; observing, that some men in office were necessary for the carrying on business, therefore, in his opinion, the number ought to be limited; that as to repealing the Quebec Act, the Boston Port Bill, the Bill for regulating the Government of Massachusetts Bay, and the Bills for trials of persons in England accused of crimes in America, he thought they ought to be repealed; that he had given his vote against those Acts, yet he did not choose to be tied down in articles, as it was his firm opinion that a Member should approach the doors of the House of Commons free as the open air. He was proceeding, but the Livery became very clamorous, crying out sign or decline. He attempted several times after to speak, but was not suffered; upon which William Lee, Esquire, one of the late Sheriffs came forward, and addressed the Livery to the following effect:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE LIVERY: I beg your attention; I promise you, on my word, I will not detain you three minutes. I think there is something so extraordinary in the behaviour of the gentleman who spoke last as to merit notice. He solicits your favour, and in the same breath refuses to sign your requisition. When a person becomes your Representative he is your servant, and consequently ought to do as his masters direct."

Mr. Baker attempted to answer him, but the Livery would not allow him to speak; upon which the Chairman put up the Lord Mayor, Aldermen Crosby, Sawbridge, and Hayley, separately. Each had a very great show of hands and many loud claps, huzzas, &c., after which W. Baker, Esquire, was nominated, when there appeared for him a few hands, but many hisses. The Chairman then called aloud several times to know if any gentleman had any other person to nominate, when Mr. Townsend nominated Richard Oliver, Esquire; but on his name being put up, there was groaning and hissing for near five minutes, and but few hands held up.

The Chairman then declared the choice to have fallen on Messrs. Bull, Crosby, Sawbridge, and Hayley; upon which the Lord Mayor came forward and addressed the Livery as follows:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE LIVERY: I return you my sincerest thanks for the honour you have conferred on me, by again nominating me to represent you in Parliament. Should I be the happy object of your choice, depend upon my serving you to the utmost of my abilities."

Mr. Crosby next came forward, and addressed the Livery to the following purport:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE LIVERY: I return you my sincerest thanks for the honour you have conferred on me, and I assure you that I will live and die in the cause of liberty. Should I be so fortunate as to be elected, I will do the utmost in my power to protect your rights and franchises."

Mr. Sawbridge next came forward, saying,

"GENTLEMEN OF THE LIVERY: I return you my most cordial thanks for the high opinion you have expressed of my past, and the great confidence you put in my future conduct. I have been bred up in the principles of liberty, and I assure you I will remain in the same until the latest hour of my life."

Mr. Harley next addressed the Livery, as follows:

"GENTLEMEN OF THE LIVERY: It is now my turn to express my duty to you for the generous support I have met with to-day. Should I gain the honour I now solicit, depend upon my exerting the utmost of my abilities to do you justice."

The above speeches were received with loud shouts of applause, after which a motion was made that the Resolutions and Nominations should be published; which being agreed to, Mr. Baker came forward and acquainted the Livery, that although he had not been fortunate enough to meet with so cordial a reception as he imagined, owing to his not having signed the articles, for reasons which he had mentioned; yet at the same time informed the Livery, that he would stand the poll to the last, and doubted not but between this and the poll, his character, both in publick and private life, would be well known, and be of such a cast as to gain him many friends.

Mr. Lee then moved, that the thanks of the Hall be given to Mr. Stavelly for his impartial and spirited conduct as Chairman of that meeting, which was unanimously consented to, and thus ended the business of the day.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM LIEUTENANT GOVERNOUR COLDEN TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED NEW-YORK, OCTOBER 5, 1774.

By my letter of the 7th of September your Lordship would find I entertained hopes that the people of this Province would adopt moderate measures, and avoid giving any new offence to the Parliament. I knew such were the sentiments of the farmers and country people in general who make a great majority of the inhabitants.

A great deal of pains has been taken to persuade the counties to choose Delegates for the Congress, or to adopt those sent by this city. Several of the counties have refused to be concerned in the measure. In Queen's County, where I have a house, and reside the summer season, six persons have not been got to meet for the purpose; and the inhabitants remain firm in their resolution not to join in the Congress. In the counties that have joined in the measures of the city, I am informed the business has been done by a very few persons, who took upon themselves to act for the freeholders. A gentleman who was present when the Delegates were chosen in Orange County, says there were not twenty persons at the meeting, though there are above a thousand freeholders in that county; and I am told the case was similar in other counties that are said to have joined in the Congress.

The violent men in this city, who lost the lead among the people when the Committee of fifty-one were appointed, as mentioned in my former letters to your Lordship, hoped they had got an opportunity to regain their importance, and to throw the city into confusion, on occasion of orders which were received by some of our merchants to furnish articles wanted by the army at Boston. These violent men last week called a meeting of the citizens, which few but the lower class of people attended, and not a great many of them; yet they had the impudence to send a Committee to the merchants who were engaged in supplying the articles wanted by the army at Boston, with a very impertinent message, and endeavoured to deter them and all others from furnishing the army and transports with any thing whatever. These manoeuvres occasioned some bustle among the people for a few days, and obliged the Committee of fifty-one to desire a meeting of the inhabitants on Friday last, when a large body of the principal people and merchants appeared, and declared, that those who had taken upon them to threaten the merchants had acted without any authority from the publick., and that they highly disapproved of their conduct, which has once more silenced the turbulent factious few, who are never easy when the people are quiet and orderly. The merchants now go on completing their orders without farther interruption.

It is my duty to give your Lordship the best information I am able of the disposition of the people of this Province. With this view I mention the most material transactions among them. It is extremely difficult at such times to give an opinion of what may happen. The most trifling unforeseen incident may produce the greatest events. I have already said, my Lord, that I am well assured almost the whole inhabitants in the counties wish for moderate measures; they think the dispute with Great Britain is carried far enough, and abhor the thoughts of pushing it to desperate lengths. In the city, a large majority of the people wish that a non-importation agreement may not be proposed, and were very much surprised on finding that such a measure would probably be resolved on by the Congress. I have some hopes that our merchants will avoid a non-importation agreement, even if proposed by the Congress. I am certain a majority of the most considerable are convinced it is a wrong measure, and wish not to come into it, but whether they will have resolution enough to oppose the sentiments of all the other Colonies, can only be known when they are put to the trial.

The speeches in Parliament, and other inflammatory papers published in London, and reprinted in America, make the worst impression on the minds of the people. They are opposed in this place by publishing more papers in favour of Administration, and against measures which must be offensive to Parliament, than in all the other Colonies put together.

New-York, October 5, 1774.

By Mr. Revere, who left Boston on Friday last, and arrived here last night, in his way to the general Congress, we have received certain intelligence that the Carpenters and Masons, who had inadvertently undertaken to erect barracks for the soldiers in that town, upon being informed that it was contrary to the sentiments of their countrymen, unanimously broke up, and returned to their respective homes, on the 26th of last month; which, it is hoped, will convince the mechanicks of this city, how disagreeable it will be to the inhabitants of that place, for them to afford any manner of assistance to those who are made subservient to the destruction of our American brethren.

The following Handbill was brought by Mr. Revere from Boston:

Whoever has candidly traced the rapid growth of these Colonies from their little beginnings to their present flourishing state in wealth and population, must eye the distinguished hand of Heaven, and impress every mind with a humble confidence that "no design formed against us shall prosper." The poor devoted town of Boston has suffered, and is still suffering all that the unmerited malice of men and devils could invent for her destruction; but although impoverished and distressed, she is not yet subjugated and enslaved; though immured within the fortresses of their enemies, the free and generous bosoms of the inhabitants beat strongly in the cause of liberty. But it appears that the measure of Ministerial wrath is not yet full; that detested parricide Hutchinson has vaunted to his few friends, that should the people submit to the villainous exactions of the present Governmental knot of tyrants,* "yet still "the town of Boston would forever remain a garrisoned "town," as a check upon the country, lest they should hereafter be induced to clamour against the edicts of their sovereign lords and masters the British Parliament.

The following plan was providentially detected, and is now offered to the publick, with this solemn question - Will the people sit tame and inactive spectators of the hostile designs of our inveterate enemies, and exercise such degrees of moderation and forbearance as to suffer those enemies to complete their works, and so far effect their dangerous purpose, that resistance would finally be in vain?

"MEMORANDUMS FOR A REPORT. - We have agreeably to your commands viewed and inquired what cover can be hired, with the consent of the proprietors, for the troops next winter.

"We find that out-houses, distilleries and store houses can be hired to contain the Sergeants &c., and private men of four regiments. That as these want fire-places, windows, and even floors, the expense of setting up these, and for rent and returning them in the condition they now stand, will be nearly to one thousand pounds a regiment. This expense would be greatly lessened, and the troops more comfortably quartered, if the publick buildings, such as the manufacturing house, &c., can be appropriated for the accommodation of the troops.

"It appears that barracks can be built on a more thrifty footing than they can be hired, and fitted up. But as nobody in this place will aid such works, Captain Montrefor with the assistance he can at present depend upon, thinks he cannot undertake to furnish barracks before the end of November, for more than three regiments; the officers of one of these regiments to be quartered.

"It appears, on inquiry, difficult to find houses for quartering officers of the regiments, whose private men are to be lodged in out-houses; lodging money should be given to officers whom we cannot provide for.

"In choosing situations for barracks to be built, it might be wished to place them so as to make the present erection part of some general plan that may be formed, with a view commanding the obedience of the town on future occasions; but if they are confined to situations where the ground is reputed to belong to the publick, we would propose to build barracks for two regiments, including officers, an the Common, or on a field near it, which could be hired or purchased from Mr. Brattle.

"To put two companies into a solid barrack or block house, on the top of Bacon Hill, which should be enclosed with a trench and pallisade.

"A barrack should be built on Fort Hill, which might lodge eight companies and the Artillery.

"As soon as it is proper to let each regiment have its quarters, their efforts to get themselves lodged would contribute greatly to have the work finished early."

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, October 6, 1774.

It has been clearly and fully proved that the Assemblies or Parliaments of the British Colonies in America have an exclusive right, not only of taxation, but of legislation also; and that the British Parliament, so far from having a right to make laws binding upon those Colonies in all cases whatsoever, has really no just right to make any laws at all binding upon the Colonies.

Yet, notwithstanding this inherent right of the Colonies, and their having, by their Representatives, actually asserted their sole right of taxation, the writers in favour of the British Administration generally take for granted the right of Great Britain as claimed by her Parliament, and emphatically call that Administration Government. One who styles himself a New-York Freeholder, is of that class. In Mr. Gaine's paper of 19th September, after painting the horrors of a civil war, he asserts, that "America is now threatened with a civil war," which he seems to confound with a foreign invasion; for he presently terms it entering "into a war with Great Britain." As he has displayed his eloquence in describing the calamities of a civil war, it would have been but fair in him, with equal elegance, to have painted the miseries of slavery; for the Americans can be no other than slaves, in the most absolute sense, if a British or any foreign power has a right to their all. I shall, without attempting a description of the horrors of slavery, only observe, that even a civil war, which is the most cruel of all wars, is a less evil than slavery; for that can be only temporary, but slavery, once established, becomes an entail upon posterity, perhaps perpetual; and certainly that evil which is entailed for generations is more to be dreaded than an evil that in its nature can be only for a time; nor does a civil war always ter-minute in tyranny. If it was fatal to the liberties of Rome, it was propitious of those of England. The Romans contended for ambitious citizens, the English for their liberties.

After alarming us with the miseries of civil war, he would terrify us with the power of Great Britain. I believe no one doubts the naval power of Great Britain being very great. They may beat down all the sea-port towns which are accessible to large ships; a French fleet may do the same, though they have not so formidable a fleet as the English. But to what purpose? Will the destroying one or more towns on the sea-coast give any Nation the possession of this country without the consent of the inhabitants? If it will not, to what end destroy? This is really describing the British Nation as more cruel than any of their neighbours, contrary to their natural character. For since the reformation of manners in Europe, I don't recollect an instance of a declared enemy destroying open towns by any of their Princes. This is a piece of barbarity that some bucaniers have exercised upon the Spanish settlements in America, but surely they are not an example to one of the first Kingdoms in Europe. But supposing an event so unlikely to happen, the consequences are not so much to be dreaded as slavery. Earthquakes, hurricanes, conflagrations, are terrible things, and produce still more dire effects than a bombardment, yet, in a very few years, many cities that have suffered these calamities, have risen again to splendour. The instances are too many and recent to require illustration. But from slavery when have a people recovered? how rare the instances! As for the "veterans now in the country or that may be sent hereafter," allowing them all due merit as mere soldiers, they can do very little harm; but it ought to be remembered that they are men as well as soldiers; it is not to be presumed that their profession as soldiers will generally divest them of a prior character which they derive from human nature; it is not to be supposed they would act contrary to the latter, their superiour character. The Indians are now held up in terrorem; they may do some mischief to the back settlements, they have heretofore done it - yet population has increased in this country at a rapid rate. The New England Colonies had to deal with both French and Indians, without assistance from Great Britain, and drove them back to the interior parts; this they did, and still more, they even assisted their neighbours. It is only of late years that any of the old Colonies had any British troops (excepting four independent companies in New-York Government.) They, however, did very well without them, although the Indians were then more numerous, and assisted by the French. But why is mention made of the Indians? Are the British troops now employed against them? or are they placed in the frontiers for garrisons? They have been withdrawn from those places, at least from many of them, to protect the tax gatherers of the duties, in consequence of British usurpation.

Whether or not the Indians are now "let loose on our back settlements," or may be hereafter let loose, for the horrid purpose of scalping, they are not more formidable at this time than they were formerly, when the first English settlers, though few in number, were more than a match for them and drove them out. However, Mr. Freeholder does not pay any great compliment to British Administration by saying the Indians would infallibly be let loose on our back settlements to scalp, &c, * Although

* The British Colonies in America have been, for many years past, not only injured and oppressed, but treated with every species of insolence and contempt by the Ministry in England, who have frequently insulted them, even with wantonness. Among numerous instances of this that might be produced, I think the following a remarkable one: We all remember that a few years ago, we were told by the Ministry that his Majesty had been graciously pleased to resign the management of Indian affairs to the Colonies contiguous to the several Indian Nations respectively. The favour thus conferred upon the Colonies I take to be, that of allowing them to be at the expense of making presents to the Indians, which they, through an absurd custom, conceived to be rightfully due to them, or of guarding against the effects of their resentment if those presents were withheld. According to this new regulation, the presents from England to the Indians were discontinued, the regular troops from the outposts and forts on the back settlements and frontiers, the only places in America where, in time of peace, they could be of any manner of service; were withdrawn; the fortifications were demolished, and the inhabitants left defenceless, and exposed to a cruel and exasperated enemy. These were all the advantages, that I know of, that his Majesty's Ministers were graciously pleased to confer upon the Colonies by this new regulation, for which, it was intimated, that they were expected to be ex-

they and the Canadians should be "at the beck of Government." The regular troops introduced here last war, were rather for conquest than defence, and that conquest was in a good measure effected by the assistance of the Colonists, who, for their pains, have those very conquests which were partly achieved with their own blood and treasure, now held up as a rod to subjugate them to their fellow-subjects in Great Britain. For which purpose the regular troops have been kept in this country ever since the last war.

Notwithstanding the New-York Freeholder has so elegantly described the miseries of a civil war, he says, "what has been said hitherto is on the supposition that all the British Americans would unite in a war against Great Britain." How then would it be a civil war? He thinks, however, that this could not happen, and asks, "are not several Provinces as much in the bands of Government as Canada?" I know of none that are; most of the Governments are indeed Royal Governments, but surely that don't affect their rights - would that tie their hands from asserting and defending their liberties? The contrary is, I apprehend, generally understood here. He indeed says, "were a war to break out the Americans themselves would be divided." Very truly said, if a civil war should happen to break out there would be a civil war. Wherefore then would he insinuate that an opposition to the tyrannical claims and usurpations of Great Britain, should be deemed a civil war? Or, if the Americans should be compelled to take up arms to defend their liberties, why must it be construed that they make war against the King? Should the British Parliament think proper to legislate for, and tax Hanover, and the Act should be signed by the King, does any one imagine the Hanoverians would pay any regard to such Act? Or, if the British Parliament should take upon themselves to alter the form of their Government, would they submit? There can be no doubt but that they would defend their Constitution with arms against whoever was to attempt enforcing their submission; nor by their doing so would they forfeit their allegiance to their Prince.

The introducing the last rebellion in Scotland as a ease in point, or as any parallel to the present disputes, is not a mark of the Freeholder's candour, even if a civil war was certain; and if he does not adduce it as a case in point, it is invidious; that it is not a parallel case, is plain to the most common understanding; for the rebellion in Scotland was not for grievances unredressed, liberties invaded, or oppression; no, it was an attachment to the person of the Pretender, a competitor to the British Crown against the late King. What is there similar between that rebellion and the disputes in America? The Americans are loyal to their Sovereign King George the Third. It is much to be doubted if there is a single native of North America, who is a Jacobite; they have no dispute with the King as exercising his rightful authority as King of these Colonies; it is against the usurpations of the Parliament of Great tremely thankful to his Majesty; and thanks were accordingly returned for the supposed favour by some of the Colony Assemblies - when, by the following anecdote, and many other circumstances, we have the greatest reason to think that this very measure, for which the thanks of the Colonies were required and obtained, was planned with the most hostile intentions against them, or to subject them to the unconstitutional, arbitrary power of a British Parliament, and reduce them to the condition of slaves,

The substance of the following Conversation happened to be in the hearing of an inhabitant of New-York, of which he is willing to make oath if necessary:

Sometime in March, 1769, being in company with Colonel R____, (then quartered in Philadelphia, but since embarked for Ireland) in the course of conversation, he mentioned the breaking up of the frontier garrisons, recalling the troops, and discontinuance of the usual presents to the Indians, as measures that would certainly be attended with very serious consequences to the Colonies; for that the Indians were very insolent before he left Michilimackinack, and that he daily expected to hear of their committing hostilities,

Being asked by an inferior officer, what could be the reason of such a great and sudden alteration in Indian affairs? He replied, it was supposed to originate at Head Quarters, as a scheme that would inevitably engage the attention of the Colonies, and of which Administration might avail itself. That in all probability it would lessen Sir William Johnson's influence and income, of which the Commander-in-chief was then supposed to be jealous.

The foregoing intelligence from Colonel R____, was confirmed to the person who heard it, by two other officers with whom he was soon after in company, Query, Is not the above account of the design of the Acts, relative to Indian affairs further corroborated by the Acts themselves, notwithstanding the ministerial puffs of the majestic emanation which graciously favoured the Colonies, with the liberty of providing for the exigencies of the Indian trade &c.

Britain - they contend for their most sacred rights as free-men, invaded by that Parliament - which claims the disposal of them as their slaves, and are doing their utmost effectually to exert those claims. Therefore, to introduce the tears of Scotland, seems merely for the sake of the unhappy issue to the Pretender and his adherents. Had the Freeholder been candid enough to introduce a case in point, he could not well be at a loss for one - he cannot be supposed ignorant of the rise of the states of Holland; the encroachments which Philip the Second, King of Spain, made on the civil and religious liberties of his subjects in the Netherlands, produced a revolt of seven from seventeen Provinces; and notwithstanding the very great power of Philip, his having an army of twenty thousand veterans (esteemed the best soldiers in Europe) in the neighbourhood, commanded by the ablest General of his time, and the assistance he drew from the Provinces which did not revolt, yet, under all these disadvantage, in the course of some years (with some small assistance from England and France) they effected their liberty, though not without spending some of their best blood; nor could it be expected otherwise in a contest of such importance, against a Prince as obstinate and cruel as he was powerful.

This case, although it be very much like the present dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies - save only that Philip was the lawful Sovereign of those Provinces, and the Parliaments of Great Britain have only their own claim of sovereignty, yet, the Freeholder did not choose it for a parallel, perhaps, because it had an happy issue, which would not so well answer the intention of intimidating the Americans, in order to their submission to the usurpations of the British Parliament.

In Mr. Gaine's paper of the 26th September is another letter from a New-York Freeholder, who again introduces his subject with a pathetic declaration on the miseries of a civil war. It might be imagined that, by a civil war, he would mean any forcible resistance to the unconstitutional measures pursued by the British Administration, did he not make mention of, "friends, brethren, parents, and children imbruing their hands in each others' blood." If the inhabitants of this Continent were not very generally determined to oppose those measures; if they were not resolved to refuse submission to the usurpations of the British Parliament; or that the advocates for despotism were numerous, and would risk their all in favour of those usurpations, there might perhaps be some reason to fear a civil war; but such a fear will appear to be groundless, when it is considered that by far the most of the Colonies, although not absolutely unanimous, yet have so very great a majority who are ready to defend their liberties, that the very few who may differ from them would hardly attempt to counteract their brethren and friends with force. In a single Colony, or perhaps a few Colonies, though the majority, in support of their liberties, may not appear so great, it is, however, by much too formidable for the few enemies of American liberty to venture upon so hardy an undertaking, as by force of arms to oppose such measures as may be adopted by the great number of the friends of freedom in defence of their liberties. If such enemies there be, their situation must be truly deplorable, as they would be deemed traitors to their King and country, notwithstanding their acting in virtue of any commission from Administration, founded on unconstitutional Acts of the British Parliament; "for an illegal commission is so far from conveying a power unto any man to act, that it is a greater crime to do any thing upon the imaginary authority of it, than it would be to commit the same fact without all colour and pretence of power and warrant, seeing, the injury of the one case doth affect and terminate in him that receives it; whereas, in the other, it affects the King, the Government, and the whole body of the people." - Lord SOMMERS'S Judgment, &c.

Now as the King cannot lawfully in Great Britain, by his sole authority, make any law that an officer can be either bound or authorized to act upon, (seeing a law to be binding there must have the sanction of Parliament) in like manner, the King with his British Parliament cannot rightfully make any law which ought to be binding upon the Colonies. As the King with his Parliament of Great Britain will be, at most, to the Colonies, what the King alone is to Great Britain; but to speak more properly, the Lords and Commons of Great Britain having no constitutional right to act or do any thing that will be binding upon the Colonies, the only legal power in Great Britain respecting the Colonies, centres in the person of the King our Sovereign; and every Act passed there which respects America, receives no more authority than what it may derive from the King's assent to such Act; but as that amounts really to no more than a law made by the King's sole authority, which by the Constitution is not binding on the subject, the Colonies cannot in duty be bound to obey any such law. The law binding of right in the Colonies is that law only which is enacted in the Colonies, and receives the King's assent, either in person or by his Representative; and all officers acting by virtue of any other than a law according to the Constitution, will fall within the description above cited from Lord Sommers.

The New-York Freeholder has with much art endeavoured to reduce the rise of the present disputes with Great Britain to the three penny duty on tea. It is a pity that abilities should be prostituted to give a false colouring to facts, which, without that disguise, appear in their true light to a common understanding; without it, it is very clear that the contention is not about the three penny duty only, but the claim of taxation by the British Parliament, and their actual exercise of the powers founded on that claim, over the Colonies. The precedents which he has alleged do not invalidate my preceding argument; for though it be granted that the Colonies have not opposed the operation of those precedents, it neither proves the Parliamentary right for having exercised that power, nor deprives the Colonists of their right of asserting and resuming all those rights usurped from them; and they are at any time at full liberty to oppose their future operation; any acquiescence on their part in time passed notwithstanding; for the bare submission to power unconstitutionally exercised, does in no wise Confer right to those who thus exercise it, any more than it confers right to a robber, who by force obtains a submission from those whom he despoils; nor will it render the case better if the submission be obtained by deception; nor indeed may any people rightfully surrender any of their rights, further than necessary for the publick good; if they do, such surrender will be a mere nullity. the Freeholder very kindly assigns a reason in behalf of the British Parliament for the Tea Act. He says, "that commercial states should always encourage the consumption of their own manufactures, which is of general utility, as it promotes industry; but articles of foreign luxury, and tea is one, are the proper objects of taxation, &c." I don't recollect to have any where read that the British Parliament ever pretended this as the motive for their taxation of the Americans, but rather have avowed it as a test of their right to tax them. Be their motive what it may, he treats the Act as if made by rightful authority, when he knows that the right to that authority is the very thing which the Colonists disclaim.

In the same manner he takes it for granted that the East India Company had a good right to send their tea to America; when it is well known that the intention of it was generally understood to be expressly to enforce the Tea Act, as the duty was payable when the tea was landed. This was clearly the view of the Ministry; and the East India Company's tea was made use of as an instrument for affecting that purpose. Why then talk of individuals? It was in the light of an instrument of destruction to American liberty that their tea was considered; yet notwithstanding it was thus considered, the people at Boston made use of every method in their power for its preservation, consistent with their getting clear of it, without having it landed there; but that was the point insisted on - that was the desirable thing so earnestly sought for by the Ministerial agents; otherwise the tea might have been preserved by being secured in the Castle, or by the King's ships. These agents therefore left the people no alternative but to destroy it, or suffer it to be entered for duty. To compare it then with the Stamp papers shows what candour may be expected from this writer. The Stamp papers were liable to no duty on being landed and stored - the tea was liable; whether that at Charlestown paid the duty, is what I cannot affirm or deny; the Act requires the payment,

The Freeholder's feeble attempt to apologize for the severity of the Boston Port Bill, and other Acts relative to that Province, is at once a proof of his willingness for that service, and of the indefensibility of those tyrannical Acts, since even with his abilities he passes over them briefly. But what can be said in the defence of them which may not with equal propriety be said in defence of every species of usurpation and cruelty which disgrace the history of mankind? - the difference between them being rather in degree than kind. The severity of the Boston Port Bill, singly considered, will render it the abhorrence of all good men, even supposing the British Parliament had a just right to the sovereignty of that Province; but when viewed in the light of usurpation, as having no rightful authority to act as they have, it adds the highest injustice to cruelty. The opposition to the Board of Commissioners, &c., the impeachment of the Chief Justice of both Houses, has been vindicated, and the two Houses have fully justified their conduct, notwithstanding any thing "determined after a full hearing." After the Freeholder's declaration of his impartiality, &c., he again recurs to his topick of a civil war, and asserts that the Colonies South of New England have really no other contest with the parent state but the three penny duty on tea, "and that if they should be plunged any deeper, or further involved in trouble, they will undeniably be dragged into it by the Massachusetts Bay." Does he not know the contrary to be true? Can he expect this to be believed on his bare assertion? Does he really believe it himself? His compliments to the American people will not palliate this insult to their understandings, nor atone for his apparent design of disuniting them. He says, "an American Constitution, not a civil war, is what will relieve them." I have not heard it asserted that a civil war was to be sought after for relief! But a manly defence of their sacred rights, even by force of arms, whenever absolutely necessary against a foreign force, may and probably will insure effectual relief.

An American Constitution is what is required; however, it ought to be remembered, that such a Constitution is required as a matter of right, not as a grace to be obtained by petition to the Parliament of Great Britain, who have indeed no true authority for that purpose. Let that august Assembly only relinquish all pretence of right to govern the British Colonies in America, and leave that to whom it solely and exclusively belongs, namely, the King, our lawful Sovereign, with his Parliament in the respective Colonies, and the Americans have a Constitution without seeking further; then would the Colonies be united with Great Britain by the strong ties of mutual interest and sincere affection, without any jealousies or resentment; the cause taken away, the effects would cease; and the strictest harmony, cemented by the bands of ancient consanguinity and similarity of manners, would take place, which would probably continue for ages united under one and the same head of the whole British Empire.

He asks, "But does not Parliament claim a right to tax the Colonies, which must in the end enslave them?" He admits that the Parliament "asserts this claim;" and says, "but whilst it proceeds no further, it cannot hurt us. It is sufficiently balanced by our assertions to the contrary." Had he been able to prove that they had barely asserted it, he had done something to the purpose; but there being such glaring proofs to the contrary, one may reasonably ask him what he means by saying, "But surely it is time enough to run to extremities when the claim is oppressively put in execution." Need he be told that this is already done? The Boston Port Bill is a proof, with a witness. Or does he think, that, not sufficiently oppressive, or oppressively put in execution, but that the Americans must wait till the "Harpies of taxation" were actually and every-where tearing our substance "from us?" I think it justifiable to say, that then it would be rather too late for obtaining an adequate remedy. He asks, "What, is America then to be exempted wholly from the burthen of supporting Government?" Here again he calls the British Administration (which, with respect to its exercise in America, is mere tyranny) emphatically Government; and from the great obligations he supposes British America lies under to Great Britain, he thinks we ought to bear our just share of the burthen of National expense. Let me ask, wherefore? It is very certain that British America has her own expenses of constitutional Government; which, notwithstanding its economy, is considerable, and, upon emergencies, so great as to be burthensome; and if the American Governments were to lavish on the administrators of Government large salaries, and pay a long list of pensioners, according to the present mode in Great Britain, they must be very soon ruined. What reason then for their contributing towards the extravagance of the parent state? He says, he is "not so ungrateful as to forget the vast obligations we are "under to Great Britain for her fostering parental protection and aid on every occasion, when necessary." He would have been better understood, had he pointed them out; for it is well known that Great Britain, while the Colonies were really in an infant state, left them to themselves; her attention to them began with their importance; when the Parliament of Great Britain found they could be benefitted by them, and Administration have places for the support of Court dependents; and latterly their fears, lest some other power might obtain footing on this Continent, to their damage, is a sufficient reason for their occasionally guarding against such an event. Where, then, the vast obligations?

An exclusive trade to these Colonies is much more than an equivalent for the protection afforded. Great Britain has lent the same, or greater, occasional assistance to Portugal, for only a partial trade, and perhaps on the score of keeping a balance of power; and without doubt they find their account in so doing. Why then should the protection afforded this country be rated so highly? And yet highly as this protection is rated, it is certain that in the war before the last, it afforded the Colonies no security from an invasion by a very formidable armament; for, notwithstanding the naval power of Great Britain, or any thing done by the British Government to prevent it, Boston, which was the designed victim to that French armament, might have been laid in ruins. It was the Divine Providence only that protected that town. The exertions of the Province of Massachusetts Bay in favour of Great Britain, rendered her the subject of French resentment at that time; at present, the same Province is the object of resentment of British Administration for her exertions in favour of British, as well as American freedom. As her protection from a French invasion was not the arm of flesh, so, may the same Divine protection shield her and all these Colonies from the dominion of tyranny; and may virtue, liberty, and peace, have their abode, and flourish in this land for ages yet to come.

STAMFORD (CONNECTICUT) TOWN MEETING

At a Meeting of the Inhabitants of the Town of Stamford, legally warned and convened on the 7th day of October, 1774.

The inhabitants of this town, sensibly affected with the distresses to which the town of Boston and Province of Massachusetts Bay are subjected by several late unconstitutional Acts of the British Parliament, and also viewing the Quebec Bill, whereby the Roman Catholick religion is established over a great part of his Majesty's extensive Continent of America, as an attempt not barely to destroy our civil liberties, but as an open declaration that our religious privileges, which our fathers fled their native country to enjoy, are very soon to be abolished, (hoping to convince the people of this extensive Continent, that, notwithstanding our long silence, we are by no means unwilling to join with our sister towns to assert our just rights, and oppose every design of a corrupt Ministry to enslave America,) do declare, that we acknowledge our subjection to the Crown of Great Britain, and all the constitutional powers thereto belonging, as established in the illustrious House of Hanover, and that it is our earnest desire that the same peaceable connection should subsist between us and the mother country that has subsisted for a long time before the late unconstitutional measures adopted by the Parliament of Great Britain; and we hope that some plan will be found out by the general Congress to effect the reconciliation we wish for. Yet we are determined, in every lawful way, to join with our sister Colonies, resolutely to defend our just rights, and oppose all illegal and unconstitutional Acts of the British Parliament that respect America.

That we are pleased that a Congress of Deputies from the Colonies is now met at Philadelphia, and, relying upon the wisdom of that body, we declare that we are ready to adopt such reasonable measures as shall by them be judged for the general good of the inhabitants of America.

Voted, That Messrs. John Lloyd and Samuel Hulton, Captain Samuel Youngs, Captain David Hait, and Charles Weed, be a Committee to receive subscriptions for the supply of the poor in the town of Boston, who suffer in consequence of an Act of Parliament, called the Port Act; and that the said Committee cause any thing that shall be collected to be transported to the care of the Committee of Ways and Means in the town of Boston, to be employed by them as they shall think fit.

The above is a true copy of record, it being a very full meeting - almost an unanimous vote.

S. JARVIS, Town Clerk.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER, DATED LONDON, OCTOBER 8, 1774.

Never did I feel myself so anxious about publick affairs as at this moment. Our own interest is intimately connected with the perseverance of our American brethren in their opposition to the tyranny of our Government. Should they continue firm, it will be scarcely possible that they should not succeed in preserving their liberties: and the preservation of their liberty ought to be an object of the last concern to all in this country; for it is only among them we can hope to find it, after luxury, dissipation, a servile Parliament, and an overwhelming load of debts and taxes have completed its ruin here. I cannot help believing that this will be the last struggle which America will have with us; if they are now steady, and succeed, they will have no reason to fear any future attempts to enslave them. But if they now submit, they will be subdued for ever, and the only nursery of freemen now in the world will be lost. May Heaven avert such a calamity! I cannot indeed imagine a state of worse slavery than that in which the Colonies would be were they, on this occasion, to submit, - to be not only subject to many hard restraints in acquiring their property, but to hold it, after being acquired, at the discretion of our rulers; to have no constitution of Government of their own, but to have their laws made and their Governments modelled by a Legislature on the other side of the Atlantic, which cannot judge of their circumstances, in which they have no voice, and all whose acts are but little more than the echoes to the will of the fool of the tyrant who happens to be Minister in this country. What an abject condition would this be! The present state of our Parliament is such that it is our own greatest calamity to be governed by it. How base would it be to wish the Americans involved in the same calamity? The mode of opposition which the Americans are likely to adopt must do them the greatest service, by checking luxury among them, and obliging them to save the money they now spend among us in purchasing superfluities, at the same time it must eventually injure us; for such are our present circumstances, that we hang upon the American trade, and the loss of it would sink the revenue, and soon bring on riots and insurrections, and a publick bankruptcy. But I am not frightened by these consequences; the preservation of American liberty I think of unspeakably more importance than any temporary sufferings which can come upon us. I also consider our present state as so corrupt, and our excellent Constitution of Government as so entirely subverted by the unbounded influence of the Crown, that my only hope arises from the prospect of a convulsion (dreadful while it lasts) which shall destroy artificial wealth and all the means of corruption; reduce us to poverty and simplicity, overturn the whole present system of policy, and be followed by the re-establishment of publick liberty and virtue.

I have been concerned to see in the Pennsylvania Instructions to their Deputies, a proposal that, previous to any other measures, a memorial or remonstrance should be presented to our Government. The Colonies have, I think, already sufficiently tried such methods as these. Our Government, if consistent, would not receive any memorial from an Assembly which they consider as illegal; it is now too late for negotiation; nor can it issue in any good to the American cause. Vigorous measures alone can be successful; and some think that, had the Americans fled immediately to the last resource the quarrel might by this time have been almost decided; for the present Ministry could not have found supplies for so horrid a service, and a change of men and measures must have soon taken place.

The sentiments I have expressed are those of the greatest part of my acquaintance, some of whom are persons of the first weight. I choose to mention this because I wish the Americans not to direct their resentment against all, indiscriminately, in this country; they may be assured that they have a large body of friends here, who, from a sense they have of the rights of human nature, detest what has been done against them. Perhaps the most provoking and mean of all the measures against them is the Quebec Bill, the plain design of which is to fix a body of Popish slaves behind them, subject to the King's will, who may serve as a curb upon them.

MASSACHUSETTS PROVINCIAL CONGRESS.

Wednesday, October 5, 1774, the Members chosen in consequence of Governour Gage's last writs for calling a General Assembly, met at the Court House in Salem, pursuant to the precepts; and, after waiting a day without being admitted to the usual oaths, which should have been administered by the Governour or other constitutional officers; and having chosen the Honourable John Hancock, Esq., to be their Chairman, and Benjamin Lincoln, Esq., Clerk, they proceeded to business, and passed the following Resolves:

PROVINCE OF THE MASSACHUSETTS BAY,

In the Court House at SALEM, OCTOBER 7, 1774.

Whereas, his Excellency Thomas Gage, Esq., did issue writs bearing date the first of September last, for the election of Members to serve as Representatives in a Great and General Court, which he did "think fit and appoint" to be convened and holden the fifth day of October instant, at the Court House in this place. And whereas, a majority of Members duly elected in consequence of said writs, did attend at said Court House the time appointed, there to be qualified according to Charter for taking seats and acting as Representatives in said Great and General Court; but were not met by the Governour, or other constitutional officer or officers by him appointed for administering the usual oaths, and qualifying them thereto. And whereas, a Proclamation, bearing date the 28th day of September last, and published in sundry newspapers, with the signature of his Excellency, contains many reflections on this Province, as being in a tumultuous and disorderly state; and appears to have been considered by his Excellency as a constitutional discharge of all such persons as have been elected in consequence of his Excellency's said writs. The Members aforesaid so attending, having considered the measures which his Excellency has been pleased to take by his said Proclamation, and finding them to be unconstitutional, unjust, and disrespectful to the Province, think it their duty to pass the following Resolves:

Therefore, resolved, As the opinion of said Members:

1st. That by the Royal Charter of the Province, the Governour, for the time being, is expressly obliged to convene, "upon every last Wednesday in the month of May, "every year forever, and at such other times as he shall "think fit, and appoint a Great and General Court." And, therefore, that as his Excellency had thought fit, and by his writ appointed a Great and General Court to be convened on the fifth day of October, instant, his conduct in preventing the same, is against the express words, as well as true sense and meaning of the Charter, and unconstitutional; more especially as, by Charter, his Excellency's power "to adjourn, prorogue, and dissolve, all Great and General Courts," doth not take place after said Courts shall be appointed, until they have first "met and convened."

2dly. That the constitutional Government of the inhabitants of this Province, being by a considerable military force at this time attempted to be superseded and annulled; and the people, under the most alarming and just apprehensions of slavery, having, in their laudable endeavours to preserve themselves therefrom, discovered, upon all occasions, the greatest aversion to disorder and tumult, it must be evident to all attending to his Excellency's said Proclamation, that his representations of the Province as being in a tumultuous and disordered state, are reflections the inhabitants have by no means merited; and, therefore, that they are highly injurious and unkind.

3dly. That, as the pretended cause of his Excellency's Proclamation for discharging the Members elected by the Province in pursuance of his writs, has for a considerable time existed, his Excellency's conduct in choosing to issue said Proclamation, (had it been in other respects unexceptionable,) but a few days before the Court was to have been convened, and thereby unavoidably putting to unnecessary expense and trouble a great majority of Members from the extremities of the Province, is a measure by no means consistent with the dignity of the Province; and, therefore, it ought to be considered as a disrespectful treatment of the Province, and as an opposition to that reconciliation between Great Britain and the Colonies so ardently wished for by all the friends of both.

4thly. That some of the causes assigned as aforesaid for this unconstitutional and wanton prevention of the General Court, have, in all good Governments, been considered among the greatest reasons for convening a Parliament or Assembly; and, therefore, the Proclamation is considered as a further proof, not only of his Excellency's disaffection towards the Province, but of the necessity of its most vigorous and immediate exertions for preserving the freedom and Constitution thereof.

Upon a motion made and seconded,

Voted, That the Members aforesaid do now resolve themselves into a Provincial Congress, to be joined by such other persons as have been or shall be chosen for that purpose, to take into consideration the dangerous and alarming situation of publick affairs in this Province, and to consult and determine on such measures as they shall judge will tend to promote the true interest of his Majesty, in the peace, welfare, and prosperity of the Province.

BENJA. LINCOLN, Clerk.

At a Congress of Delegates for the several Towns and Districts, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England, convened at Salem, on Friday the seventh day of October, A. D., 1774; with a list of persons chosen to represent them in the same.

The Congress proceeded to the choice of a Chairman, when the Honourable JOHN HANCOCK, Esquire, was elected.

BENJAMIN LINCOLN, Esquire, was chosen Clerk.

Upon a motion, Voted, That the Congress be adjourned to the Meeting House in Concord.

Tuesday, October 11, 1774.

The Congress having met at Salem,

Upon a motion, the question was put, whether they would reconsider their vote relative to the appointing a Chairman, and then proceed to the choice of a President, by written votes, and passed in the affirmative.

Upon a motion, Ordered, That Captain Heath, the Honourable Mr. Dexter, and the Honourable Colonel Ward, be a Committee to count and sort the votes for a President.

The Congress proceeded to bring in their votes for a President, and the Committee having counted and sorted the same, reported that the Honourable John Hancock, Esquire, was chosen.

The Congress then appointed Benjamin Lincoln, Esq., Secretary.

Upon a motion, Ordered, That Captain Barret, Doctor Warren, and the Honourable Colonel Ward be a Committee to wait on the Reverend Mr. Emerson, and desire his attendance on the Congress, that the business might be opened with Prayer.

The Committee appointed to wait on the Reverend Mr. Emerson, reported that they had attended to that service, and that the Reverend Mr. Emerson would soon attend on the Congress agreeable to their desire.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Three o'clock, P. M. - The Congress is further adjourned to half after eight o'clock to-morrow morning.

Wednesday, October 12, 1774.

Congress met agreeable to adjournment.

Upon a motion, Ordered, That Major Fuller, Colonel Prescott, Doctor Warren, and Doctor Holten, be appointed to return the Congress when necessary, in order the more easily to ascertain a vote, and that they observe the following Divisions, viz:

The wall pews on the right of the desk for one division; those on the left for another; the men's seats and the pews adjoining them, a third; the women's seats and the pews adjoining them, the fourth.

Upon a motion, the question was put whether the several Resolutions entered into by the Counties respectively, be now read, and passed in the affirmative. They were read accordingly.

Resolved, That a Doorkeeper be appointed.

Resolved, That Captain Barret be desired to appoint some suitable person for a Doorkeeper; he appointed accordingly Mr. Jeremiah Hunt for that purpose.

Ordered, That the Honourable John Hancock, Esquire, Honourable Joseph Hawley, Esquire, Doctor Warren, Honourable Samuel Dexter, Esquire, Honourable Colonel Ward, Honourable Colonel Warren, Captain Heath, Colonel Lee, Doctor Church, Doctor Holten, Mr. Gerry, Colonel Tyng, Captain Roberson, Major Foster, and Mr. Gorham, be a Committee to take into consideration the state of the Province, and report as soon as may be.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon.

Adjourned to nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Thursday, October 13, 1774.

Congress met agreeable to adjournment.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon.

The Committee on the State of the Province, reported the following Message to his Excellency. The same was considered and accepted by the Congress, with one dissenting voice only, and the President requested to attest the same.

May it please your Excellency:

The Delegates from the several Towns in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, having convened in general Congress, beg leave to address your Excellency: - The distressed and miserable state of the Province, occasioned by the intolerable grievances and oppressions to which the people are subjected, and the danger and destruction to which they are exposed, of which your Excellency must be sensible, and the want of a General Assembly have rendered it indispensably necessary to collect the wisdom of the Province by their Delegates in this Congress, to concert some adequate remedy for preventing impending ruin, and providing for the publick safety.

It is with the utmost concern we see your hostile preparations which have spread such alarm throughout this Province and the whole Continent, as threatens to involve us in all the confusion and horrors of a civil war; and while we contemplate an event so deeply to be regretted by every good man, it must occasion the surprise and astonishment of all mankind, that such measures are pursued against a people whose love of order, attachment to Britain, and loyalty to their Prince, have ever been truly exemplary. Your Excellency must be sensible that the sole end of Government is the protection and security of the people. Whenever therefore that power, which was originally instituted to effect these important and valuable purposes, is employed to harass, distress or enslave the people, in this case it becomes a curse rather than a blessing.

The most painful apprehensions are excited in our minds by the measures now pursuing. The rigorous execution of the Port Bill, with improved severity, must eventually reduce the capital and its numerous dependencies to a state of poverty and ruin. The Acts for altering the Charter and the administration of justice in the Colony, are manifestly designed to abridge this people of their rights, and to license murders; and if carried into execution, will reduce them to a state of slavery. The number of Troops in the capital, increased by daily accession drawn from the whole Continent, together with the formidable and hostile preparations which you are now making on Boston Neck, in our opinion greatly endanger the lives, liberties and properties, not only of our brethren in the town of Boston, but of this Province in general. Permit us to ask your Excellency, whether an inattentive and unconcerned acquiescence to such alarming, such menacing measures, would not evidence a state of insanity; or, whether the delaying to take every possible precaution for the security of this Province, would not be the most criminal neglect in a people heretofore rigidly and justly tenacious of their constitutional rights?

Penetrated with the most poignant concern, and ardently solicitous to preserve union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies, so indispensably necessary to the wellbeing of both, we entreat your Excellency to remove that brand of contention, the Fortress at the entrance of Boston. We are much concerned that you should have been induced to construct it, and thereby causelessly excite such a spirit of resentment and indignation as now generally prevails.

We assure you sir, that the good people of this Colony never have had the least intention to do any injury to his Majesty's troops; but on the contrary most earnestly desire that every obstacle to treating them as fellow-subjects may be immediately removed; but are constrained to tell your Excellency, that the minds of the people will never be relieved till those hostile works are demolished; and we request you, as you regard his Majesty's honour and interest, the dignity and happiness of the Empire, and the peace and welfare of this Province, that you immediately desist from the Fortress now constructing at the South entrance into the town of Boston, and restore the pass to its natural state.

Upon a motion,

Ordered, That a fair copy of the foregoing Report be taken and presented to his Excellency Thomas Gage, Esquire, and that a Committee be appointed to wait upon him early to-morrow morning with the same. Accordingly Colonel Lee, Honourable Colonel Ward, Colonel Orne, Captain Gardner, Henry Gardner, Esq., Mr. Doyens, Mr. Gorham, Captain Brown, Colonel Pomeroy, Honourable Colonel Prescott, Colonel Thayer, Mr. Williams, Captain Heath, Captain Upham, Mr. Barnes, Captain Doolittle, Mr. Lothrop, Major Thompson, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Pickering, and Captain Thompson, were appointed.

Resolved, That when this Congress shall adjourn over the Sabbath, that it be adjourned to the Court House in Cambridge.

Then the Congress adjourned till to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Friday, October 14, 1774.

Resolved, That the Message of his Excellency be printed in the Boston newspapers.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon.

The Committee on the State of the Province reported the following Resolve, which was read, considered and accepted, and ordered that it be printed in the Boston newspapers, and attested by the Secretary.

Resolved, That the several Constables and Collectors of Taxes throughout the Province, who have or shall have any Moneys in their hands collected on Province Assessments, be advised not to pay the same, or any part thereof, to the Honourable Harrison Gray, Esq., but that such Constables and Collectors, as also such Constables and Collectors as have or shall have any County Moneys in their hands, take and observe such orders and directions touching the same, as shall be given them by the several Towns and Districts by whom they were chosen. And that the Sheriffs and Deputy Sheriffs of the several Counties in the Province, who have in their hands any Province Moneys, be also advised not to pay the same to the said Harrison Gray, Esq., but that they retain the same in their hands respectively, until the further advice of a Provincial Congress, or order from a constitutional Assembly of this Province. And that the present Assessors of the several Towns and Districts in the Province be advised to proceed to make assessments of the Tax granted by the Great and General Court of the Province at their last May session, and that such assessments be duly paid by the persons assessed, to such person or persons as shall be ordered by the said Towns and Districts respectively. And the Congress strongly recommend the payment of the Tax accordingly.

The Congress then adjourned to the Court House in Cambridge, there to meet on Monday next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Monday, October 17, 1774.

The Congress met according to adjournment, and adjourned to the Meeting House in Cambridge.

Upon a motion,

Ordered, That Captain Gardner, Mr. Watson, and Mr. Cheever, be a Connnittee to wait on the Reverend Dr. Appleton, and desire that he would attend the Congress and open the meeting with Prayer.

The Committee reported that they had waited on the Reverend Dr. Appleton, and delivered the message, and that he would wait on the Congress immediately.

Upon a motion, the question was put, whether application be made to the Governour of the College, for leave for the Congress to sit in the New Chapel, and passed in the negative.

Resolved, That the seats now chosen by the Members in Congress, and those which may be chosen by them in future upon their first coming into the same, be their seats during the session thereof.

Resolved, That the Congress be returned in Divisions as agreed on at Concord.

Mr. President informed the Congress that he had in his hand his Excellency's Answer to our Message to him of the thirteenth instant, directed to Colonel Lee, the Honourable Colonel Ward, Colonel Orne, Captain Gardner, Henry Gardner, Esq., Mr. Devens, Mr. Gorham, Captain Brown, Colonel Pomeroy, Honourable Colonel Prescott, Colonel Thayer, Mr. Williams, Captain Heath, Captain Upham, Mr. Barnes, Captain Doohttle, Mr. Lothrop, Major Thompson, Mr. Palmer, Mr. Pickering, and Captain Thompson, said to be a Committee to wait on his Excellency with a Message.

GENTLEMEN: The previous menaces daily thrown out, and the unusual warlike preparations throughout the country, make it an act of duty in me to pursue the measures I have taken in constructing what you call a Fortress, which, unless annoyed, will annoy nobody.

It is surely highly exasperating, as well as ungenerous, even to hint that the lives, liberties or properties of any persons, except avowed enemies, are in danger from Britains; Britain can never harbour the black design of wantonly destroying, or enslaving, any people on earth. And notwithstanding the enmity shewn the King's Troops, by withholding from them almost every necessary for their preservation, they have not as yet discovered the resentment which might justly be expected to arise from such hostile treatment.

No person can be more solicitous than myself to procure union and harmony between Great Britain and her Colonies, and I ardently wish to contribute to the completion of a work so salutary to both countries: But an open and avowed disobedience to all her authority, is only bidding defiance to the mother country, and gives little hopes of bringing a spirited Nation to that favourable disposition, which a more decent and dutiful conduct might effect.

Whilst you complain of Acts of Parliament that make alterations in your Charter, and put you in some degree on the same footing with many other Provinces, you will not forget that by your assembling, you are yourselves subverting that Charter, and now acting in violation of your own Constitution.

It is my duty therefore, however irregular your application is, to warn you of the rock you are upon, and to require your to desist from such illegal and unconstitutional proceedings.

THOMAS GAGE

Province House, October 17, 1774.

Resolved, That his Excellency's Answer be committed to the Committee on the State of the Province.

Ordered, That the Letters on his Honour's table, said to be wrote by the Reverend Mr. Peters, be committed to the Committee on the State of the Province.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon.

Resolved, That in the absence of the President, the Secretary have power to adjourn the Congress.

Ordered, That the Committee appointed to wait on the Reverend Dr. Appleton this morning to desire his attendance on the Congress, and open the meeting with Prayer, again wait on him, and return him the Thanks of this Congress for his attendance and prayer with them this morning; and desire that he would officiate as their Chaplain during their session here.

Adjourned until to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Tuesday, October 18, 1774.

Congress met pursuant to adjournment.

Ordered, That the Galleries now be cleared, and the Doors of the House be kept shut, during the debates of the Congress, until the further order thereof.

Resolved, That a Doorkeeper be appointed; and that the Members of the Town of Cambridge appoint some suitable person for that purpose. Mr. Darling was appointed accordingly.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon.

Moved, That the Congress now determine whether they will, or will not, reply to his Excellency's Answer.

After some debate thereon, the question was put, whether the Congress will make a Reply to his Excellency's Answer; and it passed in the affirmative.

Adjourned to ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Committee on the State of the Province reported a Resolve relative to the payment and collecting of the outstanding Rates and Taxes; the same being read was ordered to be recommitted.

Upon a motion,

Ordered, That the Answer to his Excellency's Message remain on the table.

Adjourned to nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Friday, October 21, 1774.

Congress met agreeable to adjournment.

Ordered, That Mr. Gerry, Colonel, Warren and Colonel Lee, be a Committee to report a Letter to the Selectmen, Overseers of the Poor, Committee of Correspondence, and Committee of Donations, for the Town of Boston, desiring their attendance at this Congress, to consult measures for the preservation of the Town of Boston at this alarming crisis.

Upon a motion, the question was put, whether the Congress will now assign a time when they will take into consideration the propriety of recommending a day of Publick Thanksgiving throughout this Province, and passed in the affirmative; and three o'clock this afternoon was assigned for that purpose.

Upon a motion, the question was put, whether a time be now assigned to take into consideration the propriety of appointing an Agent or Agents, to repair to the Government of Canada, in order to consult with the inhabitants thereof and settle a friendly correspondence and agreement with them, and passed in the affirmative; accordingly five o'clock this afternoon was appointed for that purpose.

The Committee appointed to report a Letter to the Selectmen of the town of Boston, and others, reported a Letter accordingly, which was read and accepted, and the President requested to sign the same.

Ordered, That the gentlemen wrote to and expected from Boston, be requested to bring with them six or eight of Rivington's late newspapers.

The Committee on the State of the Province, reported several Resolves relative to the Counsellors and others who have acted in obedience to the late Act of Parliament for altering the Civil Constitution of this Government, and are now in Boston. The same being read and considered, was ordered to be recommitted for amendments; which was accordingly recommitted, amended, reported, accepted, and ordered to be printed in all the Boston newspapers, and is as followeth, viz:

Whereas, sundry persons now in Boston, have, as mandamus Counsellors, or in other capacities, accepted or acted under commissions or authority derived from the Act of Parliament passed last session, for changing the form of Government and violating the Charter of this Province; and by such disgraceful, such detestable conduct, have counteracted not only the sense of this Province, but of the United American Colonies, in Grand Congress expressed:

Therefore, Resolved, That the persons aforesaid who shall not give satisfaction to this injured Province and Continent, within ten days from the publication of this Resolve, by causing to be published in all the Boston newspapers, acknowledgments of their former misconduct, and renunciations of the commissions and authority mentioned, ought to be considered as infamous betrayers of their country; and that a Committee of Congress be ordered to cause their names to be published repeatedly, that the inhabitants of this Province, by having them entered on the Records of each town, as Rebels against the State, may send them down to posterity with the infamy they deserve; and that other parts of America may have an opportunity of stigmatizing them in such way as shall effectually answer a similar purpose.

Resolved, That it be and hereby is recommended to the good people of this Province, so far to forgive such of the obnoxious persons aforesaid, who shall have given the satisfaction required in the preceding Resolve, as not to molest them for their past misconduct.

Ordered, That Major Thompson, Mr. Devens, and Mr. Watson, be a Committee to cause the names of sundry persons now in Boston, having, as mandamus Counsellors, or in other capacities, accepted or acted under commission or authority derived from the Act of Parliament passed last session, for changing the form of Government and violating the Charter of this Province, to be published repeatedly, in case they shall not, within ten days, give satisfaction to this injured Province, by causing to be published in all the Boston newspapers, acknowledgments of their misconduct, and renunciations of the commissions and authority aforesaid.

Ordered, That Mr. Appleton, Mr. Gill, Mr. Pickering, Mr. Legate, and Major Thompson, be a Committee to report a Non-consumption Agreement relative to British and India goods.

Ordered, That Mr. Palmer, Captain Doolittle, Captain Greenleaf, Doctor Foster, and Colonel Danielson, be a Committee to report a Resolve recommending the total disuse of India Teas.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon.

Mr. President informed the Congress that he had in his hands a number of Rivington's newspapers; Whereupon, Ordered, That Mr. Gerry, Captain Farley, and Doctor Church, be a Committee to look over the same; and if any thing therein should appear to have been written with a design to injure this Province, that they report it to the Congress.

Ordered, That Mr. Gill, Major Fuller, Colonel Prescott, Mr. Hall, Mr. Gardner, of Slow, Mr. Davis, and Captain Upham, be a Committee to wait on the gentlemen, Selectmen, and others, expected from Boston, and conduct them to this body.

The gentlemen Selectmen, Overseers of the Poor, Committee of Correspondence, and Committee of Donations, being introduced, a free conversation was had with them on means for preserving the town of Boston at this alarming crisis.

The Committee appointed to bring in a Resolve recommending the total disuse of India teas in this Province, reported. The Report was read and accepted, and is as followeth:

Whereas, the unnecessary and extravagant consumption of East India Teas in time past, has much contributed to the political destruction of this Province; and as Tea has been the mean by which a corrupt Administration have attempted to tax, enslave, and ruin us; Therefore,

Resolved, That this Congress do earnestly recommend to the people of this Province an abhorrence and detestation of all kinds of East India teas, as the baneful vehicle of a corrupt and venal Administration, for the purpose of introducing despotism and slavery into this once happy country; and that every individual in this Province ought totally to disuse the same. And it is also recommended that every Town and District appoint a Committee to post up in some publick place the names of all such in their respective Towns and Districts, who shall sell or consume so extravagant and unnecessary an article of luxury.

The Committee appointed to consider what is necessary to be done for the defence and safety of this Province, reported. The Report was read, and ordered that the consideration thereof be referred until to-morrow morning.

Adjourned to nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Saturday, October 22, 1774.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the Report of the Committee appointed to consider what is necessary to be done for the defence and safety of this Province; and ordered the same to be recommitted for amendments.

Ordered, That the Honourable John Winthrop, Esq., Mr. Wheeler, and Mr. Lombard, be a Committee to bring in a Resolve recommending to the people of this Province that they observe a day of Publick Thanksgiving throughout the same; and that they sit immediately.

Resolved, That the consideration of the propriety of sending Agents to Canada be referred to the next meeting of this Congress.

Ordered, That Mr. Cushing, of Scituate, Captain Doolittle, Mr. Williams, and Mr. Palmer, be joined to the Committee appointed to prepare a Non-consumption Agreement relative to British and India goods; and that the Committee sit forthwith.

Moved, That a Committee be appointed to bring in a Resolve relative to the King's Troops providing themselves with straw. After a long debate had thereon, the question was ordered to subside.

The Committee appointed to bring in a Resolve recommending to the people of this Province to observe a day of Publick Thanksgiving throughout the same, reprov'd; which Report was read, amended, and accepted, and is as followeth, viz:

From a consideration of the continuance of the Gospel among us, and the smiles of Divine Providence upon us with regard to the seasons of the year, and the general health which has been enjoyed; and in particular, from a consideration of the union which so remarkably prevails, not only in this Province, but throughout the Continent, at this alarming crisis, it is resolved, as the sense of this Congress, that it is highly proper that a day of Publick Thanksgiving should be observed throughout this Prov-lace; and it is accordingly recommended to the several religious assemblies in the Province, that Thursday, the fifteenth day of December next, be observed as a day of Thanksgiving, to render thanks to Almighty God for all the blessings we enjoy; and, at the same time, we think it incumbent on this people to humble themselves before God, on account of their sins, for which he hath been pleased, in his righteous judgment, to suffer so great a calamity to befall us as the present controversy between Great Britain and the Colonies; as also to implore the Divine blessing upon us, that, by the assistance of his grace, we may be enabled to reform whatever is amiss among us, that so God may be pleased to continue to us the blessings we enjoy, and remove the tokens of his displeasure, by causing harmony and union to be restored between Great Britain and these Colonies, that we may again rejoice in the smiles of our Sovereign, and in possession of those privileges which have been transmitted to us, and have the hopeful prospect that they shall be handed down to posterity under the Protestant succession in the illustrious House of Hanover.

Afternoon.

The Report of the Committee appointed to consider what is necessary to be done for the Defence and Safety of the Province, being amended, was again read, and ordered to be recommitted for further amendment; and was committed accordingly.

Resolved, That the order recommending that a day of Thanksgiving be observed throughout this Province, be printed, and a copy thereof sent to all the religious assemblies in this Province; and that the President sign the same.

Ordered, That Mr. Appleton, Doctor Foster, and Mr. Devens, be a Committee to agree with Messrs. Edes and Gill, to print the Resolve entered into by this Congress, recommending to the inhabitants of this Province to observe a day of Publick Thanksgiving; and that they send a copy thereof to all the religious assemblies therein.

Adjourned to Monday next, at ten o'clock, A. M.

Monday, October 24, 1774.

The Report of the Committee appointed to consider what is necessary to be done for the defence and safety of the Province, being amended, was taken into consideration, and a long debate had thereon.

Adjourned to three o'clock, P. M.

Afternoon.

Congress met pursuant to adjournment.

Ordered, That Colonel Lee, Mr. Palmer, Captain Batchelder, Captain Keith, and Colonel Orne, be a Committee to consider of and report to this Congress the most proper time for this Province to provide a stock of Powder, Ordnance, and Ordnance Stores; and that they sit forthwith.

Ordered, That the Committee appointed to bring in a Non-consumption Agreement, report forthwith.

Resolved, That the debates had in Congress this afternoon, and that all those which may be had in future, be kept secret by the Members thereof, until leave shall be had from the Congress to disclose the same.

Ordered, That Mr. Bliss wait upon the Committee appointed to consider of the most proper time for this Province to provide themselves with Powder, Ordnance, &c. He waited on the Committee accordingly, and reported that they would attend on the Congress in a few minutes. The Committee came in accordingly, and reported, as their opinion, that now was the proper time for the Province to procure a stock of powder, ordnance, and ordnance stores.

Ordered, That Colonel Lee, Mr. Palmer, Captain Batchelder, Captain Keith, Colonel Orne, Captain Gardner, Captain Heath, Colonel Warren, and Colonel Pomeroy, be a Committee to take into consideration and determine what number of Ordnance, what quantity of Powder and Ordnance Stores will be now necessary for the Province stock, and estimate the expense thereof.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the Report of the Committee appointed to consider what is necessary to be done for the defence and safety of the Province, and ordered it to be recommitted for further amendments, and that Captain Roberson, Major Foster, Captain Bragdon, and Mr. Gerry, be added to the Committee.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Tuesday, October 25. 1774.

Congress met agreeable to adjournment.

Ordered, That the Committee appointed to report a Non-consumption Agreement, sit forthwith.

Mr. Wheeler brought into Congress a Letter directed to Doctor Appleton, purporting the propriety, that while we are attempting to free ourselves from our present embarrassments, and preserve ourselves from slavery, that we also take into consideration the state and circumstances of the Negro Slaves in this Province. The same was read, and it was moved that a Committee be appointed to take the same into consideration. After some debate thereon, the question was put, whether the matter now subside, and it passed in the affirmative.

Ordered, That Mr. Patterson, Mr. Devens, and Doctor Holten, be a Committee to inquire into the state of all the stores in the Commissary General's office.

Upon a motion, the question was put, whether a Committee be appointed to take into consideration the propriety of having the Donations which shall be made to the Poor of the town of Boston, stored in the country, and passed in the negative.

Resolved, That four o'clock this afternoon be assigned to take into consideration the state of the Executive Courts throughout this Province.

Ordered, That the Committee appointed to inquire into the state of all the Stores in the Commissary General's office, report forthwith.

Afternoon.

Ordered, That the Doorkeeper be directed to call in the Members.

The Committee appointed to take into consideration what number of Ordnance, what quantity of Powder and Ordnance Stores are now necessary for the Province stock, and estimate the expense thereof, reported. The Report was read, considered, and accepted; which is as followeth:

The Committee appointed to take into consideration and determine what number of Ordnance, quantity of Powder and Ordnance Stores will be necessary for the Province stock at this time, and estimate the expense, beg leave to report the following schedule of articles as necessary to be procured at this time, in addition to what we are already possessed of, with the estimate of expenses attendant, amounting in the whole to ten thousand seven hundred and thirty-seven pounds, viz:

Ordered, That all the matters which shall come under consideration before this Congress, be kept secret, and that they be not disclosed to any but the Members thereof, until the further order of this body.

The Committee appointed to consider what is necessary to be done for the defence and safety of the Government, reported. The Report was read.

Adjourned to eight o'clock to-morrow morning.

Wednesday, October 26, 1774.

Congress met pursuant to adjournment.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the Report of the Committee appointed to consider what is necessary to be done for the defence and safety of the Province, and ordered that it be read and considered by paragraphs.

Adjourned to three o'clock this afternoon.

Afternoon.

Ordered, That the Doorkeeper be directed to call in the Members.

The Congress then resumed the consideration of the above Report, relative to what is necessary to be done for the defence and safety of the Province, and ordered that it be recommitted for amendments; which was amended, read, and accepted, almost unanimously, and is as followeth, viz:

Whereas, in consequence of the unhappy disputes between Great Britain and the Colonies, a formidable body of troops, with warlike preparations of every sort, are already arrived at, and others destined for the metropolis of this Province; and the express design of their being sent is to execute Acts of the British Parliament utterly subversive of the Constitution of the Province. And whereas, his Excellency General Gage has attempted, by his troops, to disperse the inhabitants of Salem, whilst assembled to consult measures for preserving their freedom, and to subjugate the Province to arbitrary government; and proceeding to still more unjustifiable and alarming lengths, has fortified against the country the capital of the Province, and thus greatly endangered the lives, liberties, and properties of its oppressed citizens; invaded private property, by unlawfully seizing and retaining large quantities of ammunition in the arsenal at Boston, and sundry pieces of ordnance and warlike stores of all sorts, provided at the publick expense for the use of the Province; and by all possible means endeavoured to place the Province entirely in a defenceless state; at the same time having neglected and altogether disregarded the assurances from this Congress of the pacifick disposition of the inhabitants of the Province, and entreaties that he would cease from measures which tended to prevent a restoration of harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies.

Wherefore, it is the opinion of this Congress, that notwithstanding nothing but slavery ought more to be deprecated than hostilities with Great Britain; notwithstanding the Province has not the most distant design of attacking, annoying, or molesting his Majesty's troops aforesaid; but, on the other hand, will consider and treat every attempt of the kind, as well as all measures tending to prevent a reconciliation between Great Britain and the Colonies, as the highest degree of enmity to the Province; nevertheless, there is great reason, from the consideration aforesaid, to be apprehensive of the most fatal consequences, and that the Province may be in some degree provided against the same; and under full persuasion that the measures expressed in the following Resolutions are perfectly consistent with such Resolves of the Continental Congress, as have been communicated to us;

Resolved, That

be a Committee of Safety, to continue in office until the further orders of this or some other Congress or House of Representatives of the Province; whose business it shall be most carefully and diligently to inspect and observe all and every such person and persons as shall, at any time, attempt or enterprise the destruction, invasion, detriment, or annoyance of this Province, &c.; which said Committee, or any five of them, (provided always, that not more than one of the said five shall be an inhabitant of the town of Boston;) shall have power, and they are hereby directed, whenever they shall judge it necessary for the safety and defence of the inhabitants of this Province, and their property, against such person or persons as aforesaid, to alarm, muster, and cause to be assembled, with the utmost expedition, and completely armed, accoutred, and supplied with provisions sufficient for their support in their march to the place of rendezvous, such and so many of the militia of this Province, as they shall judge necessary for the ends aforesaid, and at such place or places as they shall judge proper, and then to discharge them as soon as the safety of the Province shall permit. And this body do most earnestly recommend to all the officers and soldiers of the militia in this Province, who shall from time to time, during the commission of the said Committee, receive any call or order from the said Committee, to pay the strictest obedience thereto, as they regard the liberties and lives of themselves and the people of this Province.

Also, Resolved, That

or the major part of them, be a Committee, in case of any such muster and assembling of the militia as aforesaid, to make such provision as shall be necessary for their reception and support, until they shall be discharged by the order of the said Committee of Safety; and also sufficient provisions to support them in their return to their respective homes; and shall also, without delay, purchase and provide, upon the credit of the moneys already granted by the Province, not paid into the Treasury, so many pieces of cannon and carriages for the same, small arms, such quantities of ammunition and ordnance stores as they shall judge necessary, not exceeding the value of twenty thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven pounds, to be deposited in such secure places as the said Committee of Safety shall direct.

Also, Resolved, That

be and they hereby are appointed officers to command, lead, and conduct, such of the militia as shall be mustered and assembled by order of the said Committee of Safety, in manner and for the purposes aforesaid, so long as they shall be retained by the said Committee of Safety, and no longer, who shall, while in the said service, command in the order in which they are above named.

Also, Resolved, That all the said officers and soldiers who may be mustered and retained in service by the above said Committee of Safety, for the purpose aforesaid, shall be entitled to such an allowance from this Province, as shall be adequate to their services from the time that they shall march from their respective places of abode, until they shall be discharged from the said service, and reasonable time for their return home.

Also, Resolved, That it be recommended to the several companies of militia in this Province, who have not already chosen and appointed officers, that they meet forthwith and elect officers to command their respective companies; and that the officers so chosen assemble as soon as may be; and where the said officers shall judge the limits of the present regiments too extensive, that they divide them and settle and determine their limits, and proceed to elect field officers to command the respective regiments so formed; and that the field officers so elected, forthwith endeavour to enlist one quarter, at the least, of the number of the respective companies, and form them into companies of fifty privates, at the least, who shall equip and hold themselves in readiness, on the shortest notice from the said Committee of Safety, to march to the place of rendezvous; and that each and every company so formed choose a captain and two lieutenants to command them on any such emergent and necessary service as they may be called by the Committee of Safety aforesaid; and that the said captains and subalterns so elected from the said companies into battalions, to consist of nine companies each; and the said captains and subalterns of each battalion so formed, proceed to elect field officers to command the same. And this Congress doth most earnestly recommend that all the aforesaid elections be proceeded in and made with due deliberation and patriotick regard for the publick service.

Also, Resolved, That, as the security of the lives, liberties, and properties of the inhabitants of this Province, depend, under Providence, on their knowledge and skill in the art military, and in their being properly and effectually armed and equipped, it is therefore recommended that they immediately provide themselves therewith; that they use their utmost diligence to perfect themselves in military skill; and that, if any of the inhabitants are not provided with arms and ammunition according to law, and that, if any Town or District within the Province, is not provided with the full town stock of arms and ammunition, according to law, that the Selectmen of such Town or District take effectual care, without delay, to provide the same.

Resolved, That the blanks in the foregoing Report be filled up to-morrow morning at ten o'clock; and that the Committees and Officers therein recommended be chosen by ballot.

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to prepare, in the recess of this Congress, a well digested Plan for the Regulating and Disciplining the Militia, placing them in every respect on such a permanent footing as shall render them effectual for the preservation and defence of the good people of this Province.

Ordered, That Captain Heath, Captain Gardner, Mr. Bigelow, Colonel Orne, and Colonel Thayer, be a Committee to take into consideration what Exercise will be best for the people of this Province at this time to adopt, and report.

Adjourned to nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Thursday, October 27, 1774.

The Order of the Day was moved for.

Ordered, That Colonel Warren, Doctor Holten, and Colonel Lee, be a Committee to sort and count the votes for the Committees and Officers this day to be elected.

Resolved, That the Congress will proceed to the choice of the Committee of Safety, which is to consist of nine members, viz: three in the town of Boston, and six in the country, in the manner following, viz: they will give their votes first for the three members of the town of Boston, and then for the six in the country.

The Congress accordingly proceeded to bring in their votes for the three members of the town of Boston, and the Committee appointed to count and sort the votes, reported that the following gentlemen were chosen, viz: Honourable John Hancock, Esquire, Doctor Warren, and Doctor Church.

The Congress then proceeded to bring in their votes for six gentlemen of the country; after sorting and counting the same, the Committee reported that the following were chosen, viz: Mr. Devens, Captain White, of Brookline, Mr. Palmer, Norton Quincy, Esquire, Mr. Watson, and Colonel Orne.

Afternoon.

The Congress proceeded to bring in their votes for five Commissaries; and the Committee having sorted and counted the votes, reported that the following gentlemen were chosen, viz: Mr. Cheerer, Mr. Gill, Colonel Lee, Mr. Greenleaf, Colonel Warren.

Upon a motion made by Colonel Warren, that he might be excused from serving on the Committee for Supplies; and having offered his reasons therefor, the question was put, whether he be excused from serving on said Committee, and passed in the affirmative.

The Congress then proceeded to bring in their votes for a person to serve in the place of Colonel Warren, who hath been excused, and after sorting and counting the same, they reported that Colonel Lincoln was chosen.

It was then moved, that the Congress proceed to the choice of three General Officers; and, Resolved, That they would first make choice of the gentleman who should have the chief command; and the Committee having sorted and counted the votes, reported that the Honourable Jedediah Preble, Esquire, was chosen.

The Congress then proceeded to bring in their votes for the second in command, and the Committee having sorted and counted the votes, reported the Honourable Artemas Ward, Esquire, was chosen.

the Congress then proceeded to bring in their votes for the third in command, and the Committee having sorted and counted the votes, reported that Colonel Pomeroy was chosen.

The Congress then proceeded to bring in their votes for a Committee to set in the recess of this Congress, agreeable to the Resolve of yesterday, and the Committee having sorted and counted the votes, reported that the following gentlemen were chosen, viz:

The Honourable Joseph Hawley, Esquire, Honourable John Hancock, Esquire, Honourable Samuel Dexter, Esquire, Mr. Elbridge Gerry, Captain Heath, Major Foster, Honourable James Warren, Esquire.

Resolved, That to-morrow morning, nine o'clock, the Congress will take into consideration the propriety of appointing a Receiver General.

Ordered, That the Members be enjoined to attend, and that they do not absent themselves for any cause save that of absolute necessity.

Resolved, That the Replication of his Excellency's Answer which was ordered to lie on the table for the Members to review, be now taken up and recommitted for some amendments.

Upon a motion the question was put, whether the Honourable Samuel Danforth, Esquire, be desired to attend this Congress upon the adjournment, and passed in the negative.

Upon a motion, the question was put, severally, whether the Honourable James Pitts, Esquire, Honourable Artemas Ward, Esquire, Honourable Benjamin Greenleaf, Esquire, Honourable Caleb Cushing, Esquire, Honourable Samuel Phillips, Esquire, Honourable Richard Derby, Esquire, Honourable James Otis, Esquire, Honourable William Seaver, Esquire, Honourable Walter Spooner, Esquire, Honourable Benjamin Chadburn, Esquire, Honourable Jedediah Preble, Esquire, and the Honourable George Leonard, Esquire, be desired to attend this Congress at the next meeting upon the adjournment, and passed in the affirmative.

The question was then put, whether the Honourable John Erving, Esq., and the Honourable Jeremiah Powell, Esquire be desired also to attend this Congress, upon its being evident that they had not accepted, and upon their having given full assurances that they would not accept of their commission as mandamus Counsellors, and it passed in the affirmative.

Ordered, That Mr. Cushing, Colonel Prescott, and Captain Greenleaf, be a Committee to bring in a Resolve inviting the Counsellors aforesaid to attend accordingly.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning, nine o'clock.

Friday, October 28, 1774.

the Order of the Day was moved for.

Resolved, That the Congress now proceed to the choice of a Receiver General.

Ordered, That Colonel Warren, Doctor Holten, and Colonel Lee, be a Committee to count and sort the votes for a Receiver General.

The Congress then proceeded to bring in their votes for a Receiver General; the Committee having counted and sorted the same, reported that the Honourable Samuel Dexter, Esquire, was chosen. But upon a motion by him made, that he might be excused from serving in that office, and having offered his reasons for his motion, the question was put, whether he be excused accordingly, and it passed in the affirmative.

Resolved, That the choice of a Receiver General be put off till three o'clock this afternoon.

The Committee on the State of the Province reported a Resolve, relative to the removal of the inhabitants of the town of Boston from thence, which was read.

Afternoon.

Upon a motion made by Mr. Greenleaf, one of the Committee for providing stores, that he might be excused from serving in that office, and having offered his reasons for his motion, the question was put, whether he be excused accordingly, and it passed in the affirmative.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the Report of the Committee, recommending the removal of the inhabitants of the town of Boston from thence. Ordered to be recommitted, and that the Committee sit forthwith.

Resolved, That the Congress now proceed to the choice of a Receiver General. The votes being carried in, and the Committee having sorted and counted the same, reported that Henry Gardner, Esquire, was chosen.

Resolved, That the Congress now proceed, according to their order in the forenoon, to bring in their votes for the choice of a person to fill up the Committee for providing stores, in the place of Mr. Greenleaf, who was excused. The Committee having sorted and counted the same, reported that Mr. Benjamin Hall was chosen.

The Committee on the State of the Province reported a Resolve relative to the Collecting and Paying the outstanding Taxes, which was read and accepted; but, upon a motion, the above vote was reconsidered, and the Report was committed to Major Hawley, Mr. Gerry, and Major Foster, for amendments, which was done, was again considered and accepted, and is as followeth, viz:

Whereas, the Moneys heretofore granted and ordered to be assessed by the General Court of this Province, and not paid into the Province Treasury, will be immediately wanted to supply the unexpected and pressing demands of this Province, in its present distressed circumstances, and it having been recommended by this Congress that the same should not be paid to the Honourable Harrison Gray, Esquire, for reasons most obvious; Therefore,

Resolved, That Henry Gardner, Esquire, be, and he hereby is, appointed Receiver General until the further order of this or some other Congress, or House of Representatives of this Province, whose business it shall be to receive all such moneys as shall be offered to be payed into his hands for the use of the Province by the several Constables, Collectors, and other persons, by order of the several Towns or Districts, and to give his receipt for the same; and the same moneys to pay out to the Committee of Supplies, or a major part of them, already appointed by this Congress, or the order of said Committee, or the major part of them, for the payment of such disbursements as they shall find to be necessary for the immediate defence of the inhabitants of this Province. And it is hereby recommended to the several Towns and Districts within this Province, that they immediately call Town and District Meetings, and give directions to all Constables, Collectors, and other persons who may have any part of the Province Money collected by Taxes of such Towns or Districts in their respective hands or possession, in consequence of any late order and directions of any Towns or Districts, that he or they immediately pay the same to the said Henry Gardner, Esq., for the purposes aforesaid.

And it is also recommended, that the several Towns and Districts in said directions signify and expressly engage, to such Constables, Collectors, or other persons, who shall have their said moneys in their hands, that their paying the same in manner as aforesaid, and producing a receipt therefor, shall ever hereafter operate as an effectual discharge to such persons for the same. And it is hereby recommended, that the like order be observed respecting the Tax ordered by the Great and General Court at their last May session.

And it is hereby further recommended to all Sheriffs who may have in their hands any moneys belonging to the Province, that they immediately pay the same to the said Receiver General, for the purposes aforesaid, taking his receipt therefor.

And the said Henry Gardner, Esquire, the Receiver General, shall be accountable to this or some other Congress or House of Representatives of this Province, for whatever they shall do touching the premises. And to the end that all the moneys heretofore assessed in pursuance to any former grants and orders of the Great and General Court or Assembly of this Province, and hitherto uncollected by the several Constables and Collectors, to whom the several lists of assessments thereof were committed, may be effectually levied and collected, and also to the end, that all the moneys granted, and ordered to be assessed by the General Court at their session in May last, which have been assessed, or which may be assessed, may be also speedily and punctually collected, it is earnestly recommended by this body, to the several Constables and Collectors respectively, who have such assessments in their hands, or to whom any assessments yet to be made, may be committed by the Assessors of any Towns or Districts, that in the levying and collecting the respective part or proportion of the total of such assessments, therein set down to the several persons named therein, they should act and proceed in the same manner as is expressed and prescribed in the form of a Warrant given and contained in one act or law of this Province, entitled, "An Act prescribing the form of a Warrant for collecting of Town Assessments," &c. And it is also hereby strongly recommended to all the inhabitants of the several Towns and Districts in this Province, that they, without fail, do afford to their respective Constables and Collectors all that aid and assistance which shall be necessary to enable them in that manner to levy the contents of such assessments, and that they do oblige and compel the said Constables and Collectors to comply with and execute the directions of this Resolve, inasmuch as the present most alarming situation and circumstances of this Province does make it absolutely necessary for the safety thereof.

Ordered That Mr. Appleton, Mr. Cushing, and Mr. Palmer be a Committee to bring in a Resolve relative to a Non-consumption Agreement.

Ordered, That Major Hawley, Mr. Cushing, and Mr.

Gerry, be a Committee to prepare and bring in a Resolve relative to an Equal Representation of the Province in Congress at the next meeting thereof.

The Committee appointed to bring in a Resolve inviting the constitutional Counsellors of this Province to attend this Congress at the next meeting thereof upon adjournment, reported; which Report was read and accepted, and is as followeth, viz:

Resolved, That the Honourable John Erving, Esquire, Honourable Samuel Pitts, Esquire, Honourable Artemas Ward, Esquire, Honourable Benjamin Greenleaf, Esquire, Honourable Caleb Cushing, Esquire, Honourable Samuel Phillips, Esquire, Honourable Richard Derby, Esquire, Honourable James Otis, Esquire, Honourable William Seaver, Esquire, Honourable Walter Spooner, Esquire, Honourable Jeremiah Powell, Esquire, Honourable Benjamin Chadburn, Esquire, Honourable Jedediah Preble, Esquire, and the Honourable George Leonard, Esquire, constitutional Members of his Majesty's Council of this Colony, by the Royal Charter, chosen to said office last May session, be desired to give their attendance at the next meeting of this Congress upon adjournment, that this body may have the benefit of their advice upon the important matters that may then come under consideration. And the Secretary of this Congress is hereby directed to transmit to those gentlemen severally a copy of this Resolve.

The Committee appointed to bring in a Resolve relative to a Non-consumption Agreement, reported. The Report was read and ordered to be committed for amendments. It was accordingly amended, read again, and accepted, and is as followeth, viz:

Whereas, this Province have not, as yet, received from the Continental Congress such explicit directions respecting Non-importation and Non-consumption Agreements as are expected; and whereas, the greatest part of the inhabitants of this Colony have lately entered into Non-importation and Non-consumption Agreements, the good effects of which are very conspicuous. Therefore,

Resolved, That this Congress approve of the said Agreements, and earnestly recommend to all the inhabitants of this Colony, strictly to conform to the same, until the further sense of the Continental or the Provincial Congress is made publick. And further, this Congress highly applaud the conduct of those patriotick Merchants who have generously refrained from importing British goods since the commencement of the cruel Boston Port Bill; at the same time reflect with pain on the conduct of those who have sordidly preferred their private interest to the salvation of their suffering country, by continuing to import as usual; and recommend it to the inhabitants of the Province that they discourage the conduct of said Importers by refusing to purchase any articles whatever of them.

Resolved, That the foregoing Report be published.

The Committee appointed to inquire into the state of the warlike stores in the Commissary General's office, reported; and it was thereupon Ordered, That Captain Heath, Doctor Warren, and Doctor Church, be a Committee to take care of, and lodge in some safe place in the country, the warlike stores now in the Commissary General's office, and that the matter be conducted with the greatest secrecy.

Resolved, That the Committee of Correspondence of the town of Worcester be desired to take proper care that the bayonets, the property of this Province, now in the hands of Colonel Chandler, be removed to some safe place at a distance from his house.

Adjourned to nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Saturday, October 29, 1774.

The Committee appointed to take into consideration what Military Exercise is best for the people of this Province now to adopt, reported; the Report was read and accepted, and Ordered, That Major Foster bring in a Resolve accordingly; who, in obedience to the above order, reported the following Resolve, which was read and accepted, and ordered to be published in the Boston newspapers:

Resolved, That it be recommended to the inhabitants of this Province, that in order to their perfecting themselves in the Military Art, they proceed in the method ordered by his Majesty in the year 1764, it being, in the opinion of this Congress, best calculated for appearance and defence.

Upon a motion, the question was put, whether the Congress will now go into the consideration of the propriety of keeping the Records of the County of Suffolk in the Town of Boston, and passed in the affirmative.

After a very considerable debate on the question, it was ordered that the matter now subside.

Resolved, That the consideration of the state of the Executive Courts in the Province be referred to the next meeting of this Congress.

Ordered, That Captain Gardner, Mr. Wheeler, and Mr. Watson, be a Committee to wait on the Reverend Doctor Appleton, with Thanks of this body for his constant attendance on, and praying with them, during their session in the Town of Cambridge.

Ordered, That the payment of the several expenses of this Congress be referred until the next meeting thereof.

Resolved, That the Committee of Safety be desired to write to the Continental Congress, showing them the grounds and reasons of our proceedings, and enclose them a copy of our Votes and Resolutions.

Ordered, That Major Foster, Doctor Holten, and Mr. Appleton, be a Committee to look over the Resolves and Orders of this Congress, and point out what is necessary now to be made publick.

The Committee appointed to wait on the Reverend Doctor Appleton with the Thanks of this Congress, reported that they had attended to that service, and that the Doctor informed them that the Congress were welcome to his services, and that he wished them the blessing of Heaven.

Resolved, That when this Congress shall adjourn that it be adjourned to the 23d day of November next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, then to meet at this place.

The Committee on the State of the Province having amended the Replication to his Excellency's Answer to our Message to him, the same being read, was accepted unanimously.

Ordered, That Captain Heath, Captain White, Captain Gardner, Mr. Cheever, and Mr. Deaven, be a Committee to wait on his Excellency with the following Replication to his Excellency:

May it please your Excellency:

The Province having been repeatedly alarmed by your Excellency's unusual and warlike preparations since your arrival into it, and having by this Congress expressed a reasonable expectation that you would desist from, and demolish your Fortifications on Boston Neck, it must afford matter of astonishment not only to the Province, but the whole Continent, that you should treat our importunate applications with manifest insensibility and disregard.

The Congress are possessed of a writing with your signature, which purports itself to be a Message to this body, although addressed to sundry gentlemen by name, who, officiating as our Committee, presented an Address to your Excellency. We are surprised at your saying, that "what we call a Fortress, unless annoyed, will annoy nobody;" when, from your acquaintance with the Constitution of Britain, and of the Province over which you have been by his Majesty commissioned to preside you must know that barely keeping a Standing Army in the Province, in time of peace, without consent of the Representatives, is against law, and must be considered as a great grievance to the subject - a grievance which this people could not, with a due regard to freedom, endure, was there not reason to hope that his Majesty, upon his being undeceived, would order redress? Is it not astonishing then, sir, that you should have ventured to assert that a "fortress," by whatever name your Excellency is pleased to call it, which puts it in the power of the Standing Army which you command to cut off the communication between the country and the capital of tiffs Province; to imprison the many thousand inhabitants of the Town of Boston; to insult and destroy them upon the least, or even without any provocation, and which is evidently a continual annoyance to that oppressed community, "unless annoyed, will annoy nobody?"

A retrospect of your Excellency's conduct, since your late residence in this Province, we conclude will convince you of that truth, the mere hinting of which, you tell us,

"is highly exasperating as well as ungenerous." We presume your Excellency will not deny that you have exerted yourself to execute the Acts made to subvert the Constitution of the Province, although your Excellency's connections with a Ministry inimical to the Province, and your being surrounded by men of the worst political principles, preclude a prospect of your fully exercising towards this Province your wonted benevolence and humanity; yet, sir, we pray you to indulge your social virtues so far as to consider the necessary feelings of this people under the hand of oppression. Have not invasions of private property, by your Excellency, been repeatedly made at Boston? Have not the inhabitants of Salem, whilst peaceably assembled for concerting measures to preserve their freedom, and unprepared to defend themselves, been in imminent danger from your Troops? Have you not, by removing the Ammunition of the Province, and by all other means in your power, endeavoured to put it in a state utterly defenceless? Have you not expressly declared that "resentment might justly be expected" from your Troops, merely in consequence of a refusal of some inhabitants of the Province to supply them with property undeniably their own? Surely these are questions founded on incontestible facts, which, we think, must prove that while the "avowed enemies" of Great Britain and the Colonies are protected by your Excellency, the lives, liberties, and properties of the inhabitants of the Province, who are real friends to the British Constitution, are greatly endangered, whilst under the control of your Standing Army.

It must be matter of grief to every true Britain, that the honour of British Troops is sullied by the infamous errand on which they are sent to America; and whilst in the unjust cause, in which you are engaged, menaces will never produce submission from the people of this Province. Your Excellency as well as the Army can only preserve your honour by refusing to submit to the most disgraceful prostitution of subserving plans so injurious, so notoriously iniquitous and cruel to this people.

Your Excellency professes to be solicitous for "preserving union and harmony between Great Britain and the "Colonies;" and we sincerely hope that you will distinguish yourself by exertions for this purpose; for should you be an instrument of involving in a civil war this oppressed and injured land, it must forever deprive you of that tranquillity which finally bids adieu to those whose hands have been polluted with innocent blood.

Your Excellency reminds us of the spirit of the British Nation; we partake, we rejoice in her honours, and especially revere her for her great national virtues; we hope she never will veil her glory, or hazard success by exerting that spirit in support of tyranny.

Your Excellency's strange misconception of facts is not less conspicuous in the close of your Message than in many other parts of it. You have suggested that the conduct of the Province, for supporting the Constitution, is an instance of its violation. To declare the truth, relative to this matter, must be a full vindication of our conduct therein.

The powers placed in your Excellency, for the good of the Province, to convene, adjourn, prorogue, and dissolve the General Court, have been perverted to ruin and enslave the Province, while our constituents, the loyal subjects of his Majesty, have been compelled for the laudable purposes of preserving the Constitution, and therein their freedom, to obtain the wisdom of the Province in a way which is not only justifiable by reason, but under the present exigencies of the State, directed by the principles of the Constitution itself; warranted by the most approved precedent and examples, and sanctified by the British Nation, at the Revolution; upon the strength and validity of which precedent the whole British Constitution now stands, his present Majesty wears his Crown, and all subordinate officers hold their places. And although we are willing to put the most favourable construction on the warning you have been pleased to give us of the "rock on which we are," we beg leave to inform you that our constituents do not expect that, in the execution of that important trust which they have reposed in us, we should be wholly guided by your advice. We trust, sir, that we shall not fail in our duty to our country and loyalty to our King, or in a proper respect to your Excellency.

Resolved, That the foregoing Replication to his Excellency's Answer be published in the newspapers.

Ordered That Major Hawley, Colonel Lee, and Mr. Gerry, be a Committee to extract such parts of the Resolves which passed in this Congress, the 26th and 28th current, and are necessary now to be published; who reported as followeth:

Whereas it has been recommended by this Congress that the Moneys heretofore granted and ordered to be assessed by the General Court of this Province, and not paid into the Province Treasury, should not be paid to the Honourable Harrison Gray, Esquire, for reasons most obvious.

Therefore, Resolved, That Henry Gardner, Esquire, of Stow, be, and hereby is, appointed Receiver General until the further order of this or some other Congress or House of Representatives of this Province, whose business it shall be to receive all such Moneys as shall be offered to be paid into his hands for the use of the Province, by the several Constables, Collectors, or other persons, by order of the several Towns or Districts, and to give his receipt for the same. And it is hereby recommended to the several Towns and Districts, within this Province, that they immediately call Town and District Meetings, and give directions to all Constables, Collectors, and other persons who may have any part of the Province Tax of such Town or District in their respective hands or possession, in consequence of any late order and directions of any Town or District, that he or they immediately pay the same to the said Henry Gardner, Esquire, for the purposes aforesaid. And it is also recommended that the several Towns and Districts in said directions signify and expressly engage to such Constable, Collector, or other persons as shall have their said Moneys in their hands, that their paying the same to Henry Gardner, Esquire, aforesaid, and producing his receipt therefor, shall ever thereafter operate as an effectual discharge to such persons for the same. And it is hereby recommended that the like order be observed respecting the Tax ordered by the Great and General Court at their last May sessions. And it is further recommended to all Sheriffs or Deputy Sheriffs, or Coroners who may have in their hands any Moneys belonging to the Province, that they immediately pay the same to the said Receiver General, taking his receipt therefor. And the said Henry Gardner, Esquire, the Receiver General, shall be accountable to this or some other Congress or House of Representatives of this Province.

And to the end that all the Moneys heretofore assessed in pursuance of any former grants and orders of the Great and General Court or Assembly of this Province, and hitherto uncollected by the several Constables and Collectors to whom the several lists of assessment thereof were committed, may be effectually levied and collected; and also to the end that all the Moneys granted or ordered to be assessed by the General Court at their sessions in May last, which have been assessed, or which may be assessed, may be also speedily and punctually collected, it is earnestly recommended by this body to the several Constables and Collectors, respectively, who have such assessments in their hands, or to whom any assessments yet to be made may be committed by the assessors of any Towns or Districts, that, in levying and collecting the respective part or proportion of the total of such assessments therein set down to the several persons named therein, they should act and proceed in the same way and manner as is expressed and provided in the form of a warrant, given and contained in one Act or Law of this Province, entitled "An Act prescribing the form of a Warrant for collecting of Town Assessments," &c.

And it is hereby strongly recommended to all the inhabitants of the several Towns and Districts in this Province, that they without fail do afford to their respective Constables and Collectors all that aid and assistance which shall be necessary to enable them in that manner to levy the contents of such assessments; and that they do oblige and compel the said Constables and Collectors to comply with and execute the directions of this Resolve; and inasmuch as the present most alarming situation and circumstances of this Province do make it absolutely necessary for the safety thereof.

Whereas, in consequence of the present unhappy disputes between Great Britain and the Colonies, a formidable body of Troops, with warlike preparations of every sort, are already arrived at, and others destined for the metropolis of this Province; and the express design of their being sent is to execute Acts of the British Parliament utterly subversive of the Constitution of the Province; and whereas his Excellency General Gage has attempted by his Troops to disperse the inhabitants of Salem, whilst assembled to consult measures for preserving their freedom, and to subjugate the Province to arbitrary Government; and, proceeding to still more unjustifiable and alarming lengths, has fortified against the country the capital of the Province, and thus greatly endangered the lives, liberties, and properties of its oppressed citizens; invaded private property by unlawfully seizing and retaining large quantities of Ammunition in the arsenal at Boston, and sundry pieces of Ordnance in the same Town; committed to the custody of his Troops the Arms, Ammunition, Ordnance, and warlike Stores of all sorts, provided at the publick expense, for the use of the Province; and by all possible means endeavoured to place the Province entirely in a defenceless state, at the same time having neglected and altogether disregarded assurances from this Congress of the pacifick dispositions of the inhabitants of the Province, and entreaties that he would cease from measures which tended to prevent a restoration of harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies:

Wherefore it is the opinion of this Congress, that notwithstanding nothing but slavery ought more to be deprecated than hostilities with Great Britain, notwithstanding the Province has not the most distant design of attacking, annoying, or molesting his Majesty's Troops, aforesaid, but on the other hand will consider and treat every attempt of the kind, as well as all measures tending to prevent a reconciliation between Great Britain and the Colonies as the highest degree of enmity to the Province, nevertheless there is great reason, from the considerations aforesaid, to be apprehensive of the most fatal consequences; and that the Province may be in some degree provided against the same, and under fidl persuasion that the measures expressed in the following Resolves are perfectly consistent with such Resolves of the Continental Congress as have been communicated to us, it is resolved, and hereby recommended to the several Companies of Militia in this Province, who have not already chosen and appointed officers, that they meet forthwith, and elect officers to command their respective Companies; and that the officers so chosen assemble as soon as may be; and where the said officers shall judge the limits of the present Regiments too extensive that they divide them, and settle and determine their limits, and proceed to elect field officers to command their respective Regiments; and that the field officers, so elected, forthwith endeavour to enlist one-quarter, at least, of the number of the respective Companies, and form them into Companies of fifty Privates, at the least, who shall equip and hold themselves in readiness to march at the shortest notice; and that each and every Company, so formed, choose a Captain and two Lieutenants to command them on any necessary and emergent service, and that the said Captain and Subalterns, so elected, form the said Companies into Battalions, to consist of nine Companies each, and that the Captain and Subalterns of each Battalion, so formed, proceed to elect field officers to command the same. And the Congress doth most earnestly recommend that all the aforesaid elections be proceeded in and made with due deliberation and generous regard to the publick service.

Also Resolved, That the security of the lives, liberties, and properties of the inhabitants of this Province depends, under Providence, on their knowledge and skill in the Art Military, and in their being properly and effectually armed and equipped; if any of said inhabitants are not provided with Arms and Ammunition, according to law, that they immediately provide themselves therewith, and that they use their utmost diligence to perfect themselves in the military skill; and that if any Town or District within the Province is not provided with the full Town stock of Arms and Ammunition, according to law, that the Selectmen of such Town or District take effectual care, without delay, to provide the same.

The Committee on the State of the Province, reported a Resolve relative to the Removal of the inhabitants of the Town of Boston. After the same was read and some debate had thereon, the question (upon a motion made) was put, whether the matter now subside, and it passed in the affirmative.

Resolved, As the opinion of this Congress, that Cambridge is the most eligible place for the Committee of Safety, at present, to sit in.

Resolved, That two gentlemen be added to the Committee of Safety.

Ordered, That Colonel Prescott, Doctor Holten, and Mr. Gill, be a Committee to count and sort the votes for two gentlemen to be added to the Committee of Safety.

The Congress then proceeded to bring in their votes. After counting and sorting the same, the Committee reported that Mr. Pigeon and Captain Heath were chosen.

Resolved, That the extracts of the Resolves, relative to the Militia, which passed this day be printed, and a copy thereof sent to all the Towns and Districts in this Province.

The Congress adjourned till the 23d day of November next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, then to meet in this place.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM A GENTLEMAN IN MONTREAL, TO HIS FRIEND IN NEW-YORK, DATED OCTOBER 9, 1774.

I must beg leave to trouble you to get the enclosed printed in Mr. Holt's Paper as soon as possible. The paper contains the Resolves of all the English inhabitants of Montreal, at a full meeting, where they showed their abhorrence of the Quebec Act, which establishes the French laws in this Province, and puts the lives and properties of every person in it in the power of the Governour, who, when the Act takes place, will have a much greater power than a Spanish Viceroy.

The Canadians, in general, are greatly alarmed at being put under their former laws, of which they had long severely felt the bad effects; though the French Noblesse and gentry, indeed, are very well pleased with the new Act, which restores the old, as they expect to lord it over the industrious farmer and trader, and live upon their spoils, as they did before the conquest. These latter, though greatly dissatisfied and alarmed at this Act, dare not complain, for fear of the displeasure of their Priests, who rule and govern this whole country as they please; however, all the English in the Province (except a few tools and dependants of the Governour) are unanimous, and determine to struggle hard to obtain a repeal of this abominable Act; which, if continued, would greatly hurt the trade of New-York and the other Colonies joining on us. It has been said that some Canadian regiments would be raised and sent against you; but depend on it none will go willingly, except their officers; and for the others, it will require a regiment of soldiers to a regiment of Canadians, to oblige them to go; besides, they cannot, without ruining the country, spare two thousand men out of it.

"At a General Meeting of the English Inhabitants of the Town of Montreal, to consult on the most proper and best method to represent to his Majesty and the Parliament a true state of this Province, by acquainting them of the share we have of the trade; the landed property we possess; the miserable state we found this Province in, and the flourishing state we have brought it to; - the recompense we are to receive by a late Act of Parliament, is, to be deprived of those valuable parts of our Constitution - the trial by jury and the Habeas Corpus Act, and subjected to laws made by a Legislative Council, composed of people entirely dependent on the Governour, and agreeable to the despotick laws of France. And that if such an Act takes place, as we shall have no security for our property nor religion, (the Roman Catholick religion being by said Act the established religion of the country,) we must be reduced to the unhappy necessity of living as slaves, or abandoning the country and a great part of our property; and the Province must return to its former miserable situation. There was the greatest unanimity amongst the English, when the following gentlemen, viz: Thomas Walker, Esq., Isaac Todd, Esq., Mr. James Price, Mr. John Blake, Mr. Alexander Paterson, and Mr. John Porteus, were chosen a Committee to repair to Quebec, to act in conjunction with the English there on this alarming occasion. They likewise entered into a very generous subscription for the expense that might attend their obtaining relief."

Philadelphia, October 10, 1774.

SIR: We arrived in this city the 1st of September last, and the Delegates from Virginia, North Carolina, and New-York, not being come, the Congress was not formed until the fifth, when the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esquire, was unanimously chosen President, and Charles Thomson, Esquire, Secretary. A list of the Members we enclose.

The mode of voting in this Congress was first resolved upon; which was, that each Colony should have one voice; but as this was objected to as unequal, an entry was made on the Journals to prevent its being drawn into precedent in future.

Committees were then appointed to state American rights and grievances, and the various Acts of the British Parliament which affect the trade and manufactures of these Colonies. On these subjects the Committees spent several days, when the Congress judged it necessary, previous to completing and resolving on these subjects, to take under consideration that of ways and means for redress.

On the 16th arrived an express from Boston, with letters to the Delegates, and the Suffolk Resolves. These were laid before the Congress, and were highly approved of and applauded, as you will see by the enclosed paper of the 19th, in which the proceedings of the Congress thereon is published at large by their order. A general non-importation of British goods and manufactures, or of any goods from thence, appearing to the Congress one of the means of redress in our power, and which might probably be adopted to prevent future difficulties and altercations on this subject, among those who might now, or for some time past had been sending orders for goods, the Congress unanimously came into the enclosed Resolution on the 22d, and the same was ordered to be published immediately. Since this a non-importation and non-consumption of goods, &c., from Great Britain and Ireland, from and after the first of December next, has been unanimously resolved on; but to carry so important a Resolution into effect, it is necessary that every possible precaution should now be taken, on the one hand to prevent wicked and desperate men from breaking through and defeating it, either by fraud or force, and on the other, to remove as far as possible every temptation to or necessity for the violation thereof. For this a Committee is appointed, who, not having as yet completed their report, nothing is published particularly on this subject, more than what we now are at liberty in general to relate.

We have the pleasure of finding the whole Congress, and through them the whole Continent, of the same sentiment and opinion of the late Proceedings and Acts of the British Parliament; but, at the same time, confess our anxiety for greater despatch of the business before us than it is in our power, or perhaps in the nature of the subject, to effect.

An assembly like this, though it consists of less than sixty members, yet, coming from remote Colonies, each of which has some modes of transacting publick business peculiar to itself - some particular Provincial rights and interests to guard and secure, must take some time to become so acquainted with each one's situations and connections, as to be able to give an united assent to the ways and means proposed for erecting what all are ardently desirous of. In this view, our President, though a gentleman of great worth, and one who fills and supports the dignity of his station to universal acceptance, yet cannot urge forward matters to an issue with that despatch which he might in a different assembly. Nor, considering the great importance of something more than a majority, an unanimity, would it be safe and prudent - unanimity being, in our view, of the last importance. Every one must be heard even on those points or subjects which in themselves are not of the last importance; and, indeed, it often happens, that what is of little or no consequence to one Colony, is of the last to another.

We have thus hinted to your Honour our general situation, which we hope will account for our being delayed here beyond the time which either the Colony or we ourselves expected.

Though our private concerns and connections, as well as the publick expectation and interest of the Colony, urge us to make all possible despatch, yet, as we find it would not only be of dangerous consequence, but perhaps impracticable to attempt pushing matters to a decision faster than they now come to it in the course they now are, we find it most prudent patiently to wait the issue. We shall be able to write you more particularly in a few days, but could not omit this opportunity of writing thus far on the subject of our Delegation here.

We take the liberty to enclose a copy of Lord Dunmore's Proclamation, [dated Fort Dunmore, September 17,] on which we shall only say it appears in some parts of it very extraordinary, and would occasion much greater speculation here than it does, were it not that few or none, save the Proprietors, consider themselves interested in the controversy; and the whole attention of the publick is taken up on more important subjects.

Laurel Hill is about forty miles on this side of Fort Duquesne, alias Fort Pitt, and is a range of mountains running northerly nearly in a line with the west boundary of the Province of Maryland, and cuts off from this Province one whole County lately erected, by the name of Westmoreland. His Lordship is now in those parts near the Ohio, with an Army of fifteen hundred Virginians, reducing the Indian Tribes to subjection, or driving them off the land.

We cannot be positive as to the time of our return, but hope to be at New-Haven before the rising of the Assembly, and may probably be able to write with greater certainty in our next. We are, with the greatest respect, your Honour's most obedient and most humble servants,

ELIPHALET DYER,
ROGER SHERMAN,
SILAS DEANE.

P. S. Since writing the above, we see the Resolutions of the Congress, Suffolk County, &c., are printed in the Commissioners' papers, therefore judge it unnecessary to enclose them.

Newport (Rhode Island) October 17, 1774.

On Tuesday, the 11th instant, arrived here the ship Charlotte, Captain Rogers, from London, which he left the 15th of August, and brought with him Mr. Samuel Dyre, of Boston, who gives this account of himself: That, on the 6th of July last, early in the morning, he was kidnapped by the soldiers in Boston, in consequence of orders from Colonel Maddison, and carried into the camp, confined in irons, and kept so till early the next morning, when he was conveyed on board the Captain, Admiral Montagu, still in chains. When he was first confined in the camp, Colonel Maddison asked him who gave him orders to destroy the tea; to which he replied, nobody. The Colonel said he was a damned liar, it was King Hancock and the damned Sons of Liberty; and if he did not tell he should be sent home in the ship Captain, where he should be hung like a dog; then told him to prepare a good story, as General Gage would come to examine him, &c.; but General Gage never did come. He was kept on board the Admiral's ship three or four days, in irons, before she sailed. When the ship arrived at Portsmouth, Dyre was sent up to London in irons, and examined three times before Lord North, Lord Sandwich, and the Earl of Dartmouth, respecting the destruction of the tea; but finding nothing against him, they sent him back, to the ship in irons; and when he got on board again he was discharged, without receiving one farthing of wages. He then travelled up to London, seventy miles, having but six coppers in his pocket, and made his complaint to the Lord Mayor, who treated him with great humanity, as did the Sheriffs of London, and many other gentlemen; who will supply him with any sum of money to carry on a suit against those Governmental kidnappers in Boston, in case he can prove his charge, for which purpose he set out for Boston the day he arrived here. Dyre farther said, he was offered purses of guineas in England, to accuse certain gentlemen in Boston with ordering him to help to destroy the tea. Mr. Lee, one of the Sheriffs of London, wrote several letters by Dyre, in his favour, to some gentlemen in Boston.

By the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, and Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, I have received information that his Excellency the Earl of Dunmore, Governour-General in and over his Majesty's Colony of Virginia, hath lately issued a very extraordinary Proclamation, setting forth, "that the rapid settlement made on the West of the Alleghany Mountains, by his Majesty's subjects, within the course of these few years, had become an object of real concern to his Majesty's interest in that quarter; that the Province of Pennsylvania had unduly laid claim to a very valuable and extensive quantity of his Majesty's territory; and the Executive part of that Government, in consequence thereof, had most arbitrarily and unwarrantably proceeded to abuse the laudable adventurers in that part of his Majesty's Dominions, by many oppressive and illegal measures, in discharge of their imaginary authority; and that the ancient claim laid to that country by the Colony of Virginia, founded in reason, upon pre-occupation, and the general acquiescence of all persons, together with the Instruction he had lately received from his Majesty's servants, ordering him to take that country under his administration; and as the evident injustice manifestly offered to his Majesty, by the immoderate strides taken by the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania, in prosecution of their wild claim to that country, demanded an immediate remedy, he did thereby, in his Majesty's name, require and command all his Majesty's subjects west of the Laurel Hill, to pay a due respect to his said Proclamation, thereby strictly prohibiting the execution of any act of authority on behalf of the Province of Pennsylvania, at their peril, in that country; but, on the contrary, that a due regard and entire obedience to the laws of his Majesty's Colony of Virginia, under his administration, should be observed, to the end that regularity might ensue, and a just regard to the interest of his Majesty in that quarter, as well as to his Majesty's subjects, might be the consequence."

And whereas, although the Western Limits of the Province of Pennsylvania, have not been settled by any authority from the Crown, yet it has been sufficiently demonstrated by lines accurately run by the most skilful artists, that not only a great tract of country West of the Laurel Hill, but Fort Pitt also, are comprehended within the Charter bounds of this Province, a great part of which country has been actually settled, and is now held under grants from the Proprietaries of Pennsylvania; and the jurisdiction of this Government has been peaceably exercised in that quarter of the country, till the late strange claim set up by the Earl of Dunmore, in behalf of his Majesty's Colony of Virginia, founded, as his Lordship is above pleased to say, "in reason, pre-occupancy, and the general acquiescence of all persons;" which claim to lands within the said Charter limits, must appear still the more extraordinary, as his most gracious Majesty, in an Act passed the very last session of Parliament, "for making mere effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec," has been pleased, in the fullest manner, to recognise the Charter of the Province of Pennsylvania, by expressly referring to the same, and binding the said Province of Quebec by the Northern and Western bounds thereof. Wherefore, there is the greatest reason to conclude, that any instructions the Governour of Virginia may have received from his Majesty's servants, to take that Country under his administration, must be founded on some misrepresentation to them respecting the Western extent of this Province. In justice, therefore, to the Proprietaries of the Province of Pennsylvania, who are only desirous to secure their own undoubted property from the encroachment of others, I have thought fit, with the advice of the Council, to issue this my Proclamation, hereby requiring all persons West of the Laurel Hill, to retain their settlements as aforesaid made under this Province, and to pay due obedience to the laws of this Government; and all Magistrates and other Officers who bold commissions or offices under this Government, to proceed as usual in the administration of justice, without paying the least regard to the said recited Proclamation, until his Majesty's pleasure shall be known in the premises; at the same time strictly charging and enjoining the said inhabitants and Magistrates to use their utmost endeavours to preserve peace and good order.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said Province, at Philadelphia, the twelfth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, and in the fourteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth.

JOHN PENN.

By Ifis Honour's command,

EDWARD SHIPPEN, Jr., Secretary.
GOD save the King.

Charlestown, S. C., October 17, 1771.

On Wednesday last the General Committee of this Colony chose a Committee of Inquiry to see that no India teas, from any place whatever, be imported or landed here, and ordered the following Advertisement to be published in the Gazette:

Charlestown, October 12, 1774.

The General Committee most earnestly recommend and request of those inhabitants of this Colony, who have not yet signed an Agreement for Non-consumption of India teas after the first day of November next, that they will subscribe the said Agreement as soon as possible, for which purpose copies thereof will be lodged in the hands of the gentlemen who were chosen to represent the several Parishes on the said Committee.

Information having been this morning given to the Chairman of the General Committee, that a day or two ago an order had been received by a gentleman in trade here, for the immediate purchase of a very large quantity of gunpowder for exportation; and many of the inhabitants appearing to be greatly alarmed thereat, in order to quiet the minds of the people, the said Committee was assembled, made every necessary inquiry, and came to the following Resolutions, viz:

That, as it appeared to the said Committee, upon the inquiries they had made, that there is at present a scarcity of both Arms and Ammunition, so it is their opinion that it will be extremely imprudent, and might be attended with very bad consequences to export of either.

That the gentleman to whom the above mentioned order was sent, be therefore applied to, and requested not to execute the same.

(The gentleman being accordingly sent for, he readily complied with the requisition made.)

That this Committee do also advertise all the gentlemen in trade, and others, to forbear exporting, or purchasing for exportation, any arms or ammunition whatsoever, during the present scarcity and gloomy appearance of publick affairs; and,

That the above Resolves be forthwith made publick.

One of the reasons which induced the Committee to come into the foregoing Resolutions, we may presume, was, that the inhabitants of this Colony, being always in a more peculiarly critical situation than those of any other, ought, therefore, never to be without the most ample supply of Arms and Ammunition, more especially at this time, when the extraordinary warlike preparations making by the Spaniards, both in Europe and America, particularly so near as at the Havana, do not promise a long continuance of peace, but rather strongly point out to us a necessity of immediately preparing for the defence of this valuable country, by a diligent application to acquire a thorough knowledge of the use of arms and discipline, which might easily be obtained without materially interfering with business, by devoting every Saturday afternoon to training, instead Of confining ourselves to the very letter of the militia law.

CONNECTICUT ASSEMBLY,

Anno Regni Regis Georgii Tertii, 14to.

At a General Assembly of the Governour and Company of the English Colony of Connecticut, in New England, in America, holden at New Haven, in said Colony, on the second Thursday of October, being the thirteenth day of said month, and continued by several adjournments, to the fourth day of November next following, Annoq. Dom. 1774.

Resolved by this Assembly, That the several Towns in this Colony be ordered, and they are hereby ordered to provide as soon as may be, double the quantity of Powder, Balls, and Flints, that they were before by law obliged to provide, under the same directions and penalties as by law already provided.

Resolved by this Assembly, That his Honour, the Governour be, and he is hereby directed to cause six hundred copies of the Queries from the Secretary of State, dated the 5th July, 1773, and the Answers thereto, prepared by his Honour, and laid before this Assembly, to be printed, and cause the same to be distributed to the several Towns in this Colony in proportion to their list of estates.

Resolved by this Assembly, That proper Carriages for the Cannon at New-London be procured, and properly mounted; and that the Arms and Accoutrements in store there be cleansed, repaired, and kept fit for service, and that a suitable quantity of Powder and Cannon Balls be speedily provided; and that Jabez Huntington and Joseph Spencer, Esquires, be a Committee for the purpose aforesaid, to view and examine the state of the Battery at said New-London, and to report their opinion as to the expediency of repairing the same, and in what manner, and the amount of the expense thereof.

Whereas a sum of Money is necessary for payment of incidental charges of Government, Be it therefore enacted by the Governour, Council, and Representatives in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, That there be forthwith imprinted the sum of fifteen thousand Pounds, in Bills of Credit in this Colony, equal to lawful money of suitable denominations, as the Committee herein appointed shall direct, and of the same tenor with the late emission of Bills of Credit of this Colony, without interest, payable at or before the second day of January, 1777, and dated the second day of January, 1775; and William Pitkin, George Wyllys, Elisha Williams, Benjamin Payne, and Thomas Seymour, Esquires, or any three of them, are appointed a Committee for the purpose aforesaid, to take care that said Bills be imprinted with all convenient speed, and to sign and deliver the same to the Treasurer of this Colony, taking his receipt therefor; and the said Committee shall be sworn to a faithful discharge of their trust; and the said Treasurer is hereby directed to pay out said Bills according to the orders of Assembly. And for providing an ample and sufficient fund to call in, sink, and discharge the aforesaid sum to be emitted as aforesaid,

Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That a Tax of one penny on the pound be, and is hereby granted and ordered to be levied on all the Polls and rateable Estate in this Colony, according to the list thereof, brought into this Assembly, October, A. D. 1774, with the additions, and also a further Tax of one penny on the pound be, and is hereby granted and ordered to be levied on all the Polls and rateable Estate in this Colony, according to the list thereof to be brought into this Assembly, in October, 1775, with the additions; which taxes shall be collected and paid into the Treasury of this Colony, viz: one half by the last day of December, 1775, and the other half by the last day of December, 1776, which taxes may be discharged by paying the Bills emitted by the Colony, or lawful money; and the Treasurer of this Colony is hereby ordered and directed to send forth the Warrants for collecting the same accordingly.

The Committee appointed by this Assembly at their session at Hartford, in May last, on the Memorial of the Mohegan Indians, having made their Report to this Assembly, and the same having been accepted and approved, it is now

Resolved, That the following Instructions and Regulations be given, and they are hereby given to the Overseers for the time being appointed or to be appointed by this Assembly for said Mohegan Indians:

1st. That the said Overseers at all times treat the said Indians with paternal care and tenderness, and are held obliged to assist them by their friendly and parental advice.

2d. That the said Overseers have full power and authority, and they are hereby authorized and empowered in the name of said Indians, to institute, bring forward, and prosecute to final judgment and execution, any suit or action against any person or persons that shall commit any trespass on the lands or possessions of the said Mohegan Indians, and shall be accountable for any sum or sums they may recover.

3d. If any Indian shall trespass upon the lands, goods, or possessions of any other Indian, upon complaint thereof made to said Overseers, they or any two of them are hereby ordered and directed to notify the parties to appear before them at such time and place as they shall appoint, when and where they shall proceed to hear and determine the case between them, and award such damages as they shall think just and reasonable to the party injured; and if the person adjudged to pay damages, shall neglect or refuse to pay the same, the said Overseers are hereby empowered to stop so much of the then next dividend of rent money belonging to such person so refusing, and pay and deliver the same over to him or them, to whom the same may be awarded in satisfaction of such award.

4th. When it shall so happen that any particular Indian or Indians shall want to take up any land for improvement in severalty, such person or persons shall apply to said Overseers, who are hereby to set out by meets and bounds to such person or persons such a quantity of land for improvement as they shall think just and reasonable, and whoever shall enter on any land without the approbation of said Overseers shall be deemed trespassers.

5th. And whereas since the death of their late Sachem, and their declining to choose a successor, there will be money due for rent of lands to the said Indians, as a common and undivided interest, the said Overseers are hereby directed to distribute the same to and among the families of said Indians, after deducting such sum as the said Indians shall agree upon, or shall be found necessary for the relief of the poor among them, and other publick charges. and so from time to time hereafter, as they shall have the common interest in their hands, observing as much as may be an equality among the families; and when any receive more benefit in the improvement of the land, it shall be considered in the distribution of the rent money.

6th. And no person to cut or carry away any timber, wood, or stones, except for their own buildings, firing, and fences, without liberty from the Overseers, upon the penalty said Overseers shall lay upon them, not exceeding for each offence treble the value of the timber, wood, or stone, so cut or carried away.

MEMORIAL OF ZEBULON BUTLER, OF WESTMORELAND.

To the Honourable General Assembly of the Colony of CONNECTICUT, to be holden at NEW-HAVEN, in said Colony, on the second THURSDAY of OCTOBER, instant.

The Memorial of Zebulon Butler, Esquire, and Joseph Sluman, of Westmoreland, in the County of Litchfield, and Colony of Connecticut, Agents for said Town of Westmoreland, also for the Proprietors and Settlers of lands lying within this Colony West of the West line of said Westmoreland, in the name and behalf of their constituents aforesaid, humbly show: That your Honours from principles of patriotick affection for the interests and emolument of this Colony, the increase and growth of its wealth and numbers, by and with advice of the principal Crown lawyers in England, Council to his Majesty, did at a General Court holden at New-Haven, in said Colony, on the second Thursday of October, A. D. 1773, resolve and declare that extent of country lying West of the West line of the Province of New-York, and within the limits and boundaries of the Charter and Patent of King Charles the Second to the Governour and Company of the English Colony of Connecticut, made and passed in the fourteenth year of his reign, was granted and confirmed to this Colony to hold, and according to the tenour of said Charter and Patent in free and common soccage, not in capite, &c., according to the tenour of East Greenwich, in the County of Kent; and that the same is within the jurisdiction of this Colony; and that your Honours would assert your right to and jurisdiction over the same.

And your Honours, to promote the wealth, increase, and future glory of this Colony, in pursuance of your Declaration and Resolve aforesaid, did, at a General Court, holden at Hartford, by adjournment, on the second Wednesday of January, A. D., 1774, incorporate and constitute a Town therein by the name of Westmoreland, with all the rights, franchises, immunities, and prerogatives which other Towns in this Colony are by law invested, and annex said Town to the County of Litchfield, and appointed civil authority therein; - And your Memorialists with their families, now at said Town of Westmoreland, consist of about one hundred and twenty-six persons, whose land that belongs to them lieth on the West Branch of the Susquehannah River, who are now waiting to remove themselves and settle thereon;# And your Memorialists, who are Proprietors and Settlers of the land lying West of your said Town of Westmoreland, and within the limits and jurisdiction of the Colony of Connecticut with their families, are upwards of two hundred families; - And your Memorialists having (from their birth and education) a most inviolable attachment to the Constitution and Government of your Honours, and impressed with sentiments of loyalty, affection, and zeal for the present and future greatness, tranquillity, and glory of this Colony; principles which in a far more eminent manner reside in your Honours' minds, and guide and influence all your publick measures, beg leave humbly to approach your Honours as the great parens patrie, the supreme power within this Colony, with grateful sentiments for your Honours' care for our good, peace, and safety heretofore exercised towards us, by incorporating us of said Westmoreland into a Town, do trust that the same benevolent intentions still influence your Honours, and that nothing will be wanting on the part of your Honours, to perfect the good which is begun towards us your dutiful subjects, who were but few in number when we first come up hither, but now by the good hand of our God upon us, are become a multitude; and to observe that the jurisdiction erected by your Honours, is inadequate to answer the ends and purposes of Government in our situation, for that all our writs which are not cognizable before a single Minister, are returnable to Litchfield, which necessarily occasions an enormous expense to the suiters - And our not having any jail, and being unable by law to transport any man's person across the Province of New-York, it being another jurisdiction, executions are thereby rendered in a great measure ineffectual; debtors enabled to avoid payment of their just debts; and criminals of every kind, almost, to escape justice; by reason whereof, your Memorialists are greatly embarrassed, perplexed, and exposed; living under civil Governments without most of its benefits; living in such a situation as that, it cannot with only the power already given be thoroughly administered, nor the noble end and design thereof fully answered; - And as many of your Memorialists, who are settlers and proprietors of lands lying West of said Town of Westmoreland within this Colony, labour under great difficulties, in continuing and proceeding in our just claims and settlements, without civil Government established amongst us; - And to relinquish our settlements and lands acquired with great hazard, labour, and expense, will be attended with risk of a total loss of them both to this Colony, and your Memorialists. And whereas the constituting and erecting a County within the following limits and boundaries, viz: to extend West to the Western boundaries of the Sasquehannah purchase; and to bound North and South on the Colony line, exclusive of that part of said purchase, as is taken off by the line lately settled with the Indians at Fort Stanwix, invested with powers, privileges, jurisdictions, &c., which other Counties in this Colony arc, viz: that of having and holding County Courts, and Courts of Probate, having a Sheriff, a jail, &c., would remedy most of the difficulties which your Memorialists labour under, and make your Memorialists happy and comfortable: Or if your Honours should not think it best at this time to erect a County, &c., as prayed for, that your Honours would at this time either extend the limits of said Town of Westmoreland to the Western boundaries of Susquehannah purchase, and North and South on the Colony line, exclusive of the land taken off by the Indians' line as above, or divide the same into two Towns by the Easternmost Branch of said Susquehannah River, and to extend as above described, or in some other way grant relief to your Memorialists, as in your wisdom you shall think best; and your Memorialists as in duty bound shall ever pray.

Dated at New-Haven, October 15, 1774.

ZEBULON BUTLER,
JOSEPH SLUMAN.

MEMORIAL OF EBENEZER HAZARD, OF NEW-YORK.

To the Honourable the General Asserably of the Colony of CONNECTICUT, now convened at HARTFORD.

The Memorial of Ebenezer Hazard, of the City and Province of New-York, Bookseller and Stationer, as well in behalf of himself, as of those who now are, or hereafter may become his associates: Humbly sheweth,

That Samuel Hazard, late of the City of Philadelphia, in the Province of Pennsylvania, Merchant, (father of your Memorialist,) actuated by motives truly benevolent, humane, and patriotick, projected a scheme for the settlemeat of a new Colony to the Westmoreland of the said Province of Pennsylvania; - which Scheme was as follows, viz:

SCHEME for the Settlement of a new Colony to the Westward of PENNSYLVANIA; for the Enlargement of his Majesty's Dominions in AMERICA; for the further Promotion of the Christian Religion among the INDIAN Natives, and for the more effectual securing them in his Majesty's Alliance.

That humble application be made either to his Majesty or the General Assembly of Connecticut, or to both, as the case may require, for a grant of so much land as shall be necessary for the settlement of an ample Colony, to begin at the distance of one hundred miles Westward of the Western boundaries of Pennsylvaoania, and thence to extend one hundred miles to the Westward of the River Mississippi; and to be divided from Virginia and Carolina by the great chain of mountains that runs along the Continent from the Northeastern to the Southwestern parts of America,

That humble application be made to his Majesty for a Charter to erect said Territory into a separate Government, with the same privileges which the Colony of Connecticut enjoys, and for such supplies of arms and ammunition as may be necessary for the safety and defence of the settlers, and that his Majesty would also be pleased to take the said new Colony under his immediate protection.

That application be made to the Assemblies of the several British Colonies in North America to grant such supplies of money and provisions as may enable the settlers to secure the friendship of the Indian Natives, and support themselves and families till they are established in said Colony in peace and safety, and can support themselves by their own industry.

That at least twelve Reverend Ministers of the Gospel be engaged to remove to the said new Colony, with such numbers of their respective congregations as are willing to go along with them.

That every person from the age of fourteen and upward, (slaves excepted,) professing the Christian Religion, being Protestant subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, and that will move to said new Colony with the first settlers thereof, shall be entitled to a sufficient quantity of land for a good plantation, without any consideration money, and at the annual rent of a pepper corn; said plantation to contain at least three hundred acres, two hundred acres of which to be such land as is fit for tillage or meadow.

That every person under the age of fourteen years (slaves excluded) who removes to said Province with the first settlers thereof, as well as such children as shall be lawfully born to said first settlers in said Province, or on the way to it, shall be entitled to three hundred acres of land when they come to the age of twenty-one years, without any purchase money, at the annual quit-rent of two shillings for every-hundred acres; the quit-rent arising from such lands to be applied to the support of Government, the propagation of the Christian Religion among the Indian Natives, and the relief of the poor, the encouragement of learning, and in general to such other publick uses as shall be judged by the Legislature of the Province to be most conducive to the general good.

That every person who is entitled to any land in the Province shall be at liberty to take it up when they please, but when taken up shall be obliged to clear and fence at least fifteen acres on every farm of three hundred acres, within five years after the appropriation of said land, and also to build a dwelling house of at least fifteen feet square, with a good chimney, on the premises within the said term, on pain of forfeiting said land, That the said plantations shall be laid out in townships, in such manner as will be most for the safety and convenience of the settlers.

That in order to prevent all jealousies and disputes about the choice of said plantations, they shall be divided by lot.

That as soon as possible, after a sufficient number of persons are engaged, a proper Charter obtained, and the necessary preparations are made for the support and protection of the settlers, a place of rendezvous shall be appointed, where they shall all meet, and from whence they shall proceed in a body to the new Colony; but that no place of rendezvous shall be appointed till at least two thousand persons, able to bear arms, are actually engaged to remove, exclusive of women and children.

That it be established as one of the Fundamental laws of the Province, that Protestants of every denomination who profess the Christian Religion; believe the Divine authority of the Sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testament; the doctrine of the Trinity of persons in the Unity of the Godhead, and whose lives and conversations are free from immorality and profaneness, shall be equally capable of serving in all posts of honour, trust, or profit, in the Government, notwithstanding the diversity of their religious principles in other respects. But that none of any denomination whatsoever who have been guilty of profaning the name of God, of lying, drunkenness, or any other of the grosser immoralities, either in their words or actions, shall be capable of holding any office in or under the Government, till at least one year after their conviction of such offence. The christianizing the Indian Natives, and bringing them to be good subjects, not only to the Crown of Great Britain, but to the King of all Kings, being one of the essential designs of the proposed new Colony, it is a matter of the utmost importance that these poor ignorant Heathen should not be prejudiced against the Christian Religion, by the bad lives of those in authority.

That Protestants of every denomination who profess the Christian Religion, shall have the free and unlimited exercise of their religion, and shall be allowed to defend it, both from the pulpit and the press, so long as they remain peaceable members of civil society, and do not propagate principles inconsistent with the safety of the state.

That no member of the Church of Rome shall be able to hold any lands, or real estate, in the Province, nor be allowed to be owners of, or have any arms or ammunition in their possession, on any pretence whatsoever; nor shall any Mass Houses or Popish Chapels be allowed in the Province.

That no person shall be obliged to pay any thing towards the support of a Minister of whose congregation he is not a member, or to a church to which he does not belong.

That the Indians shall, on all occasions, be treated with the utmost kindness, and every justifiable method taken to gain their friendship; and that whoever injures, cheats, or makes them drunk, shall he punished with peculiar severity.

That as soon as the Province is able to support Missionaries, and proper persons can be found to engage in the affair, a fund shall be settled for the purpose, and Missiouaries sent among the neighbouring Indian Nations: that it shall, in all time coming, be esteemed as one of the first and most essential duties of the Legislature. of the Province, by every proper method in their power, to endeavour to spread the light of the glorious Gospel among the Indians in America, even to its most Western bounds.

That as the conversion of the Indians is a thing much to be desired, from the weightiest considerations, both of a religious and political nature, and since the Colony, during its infancy, will be unable to provide the necessary funds for that purpose, some proper person or persons shall be sent to Europe, duly authorized from the Government, to ask assistance of such as desire to promote that great and good work.

To his Majesty George the Second, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth.

The humble Address of * * * * * persons, Inhabitants of his: Majesty's Plantations in NORTH AMERICA

May it please your Majesty:

We, the Subscribers, being ef the number of your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, inhabiting the British Plantations in North America, beg leave, with the utmost humility, to approach your Majesty's presence, by this token of our duty and regard, which we are encouraged to lay at the feet of our Sovereign, not only from the ideas we entertain of its being at all times agreeable to your Majesty to receive assurances of the loyalty and affection of your good subjects, but also from an apprehension that such proofs of sincere regard to the substantial interests of your Crown and Kingdoms, and thousands of your good people of America, as we have now to lay before your Majesty, will afford a more:sold satisfaction (at a time when all your American Dominions are threatened either with prscent or future ruin) than the most pompous professions of duty and loyalty, unaccompanied with corresponding actions. Emboldcned by this confidence, we beg leave to assure your Majesty, that we behold with horror and indignation the schemes which have long been secretly laid (and which our perfidious neighbours at length are openly executing) for the ruin and destruction of all your Majesty's Dominions in America. We are affected with equal horror and detestation at the prospect of that slavery to an arbitrary Prince and Popish church, which the completion of those schemes would necessarily bring upon us and our posterity; with a proportionable gratitude we behold your Majesty's paternal care in sending fleets and armies for our protection when we are unable to protect ourselves, and when it is out of our power, without such aid, to prevent that misery that seems to be breaking in upon us like a flood, and which, if not seasonably prevented, would deluge the whole land in ruin. In such a situation as this we should think ourselves inexcusable if we were either insensible of your Majesty's kindness, or unwilling to contribute - our mite towards repelling the common danger. Being bound then by the double ties of duty and gratitude to your Majesty, and by that regard to the dignity of your Crown, to our country, our posterity, and our holy religion, that ought to fill the breasts of every friend to liberty and the Protestant cause, we are now come, with the deepest humility, to offer our service in such a way as we verily believe will (if your Majesty is pleased to accept thereof,) promote the interest of your Crown and Kingdoms, and contribute to the safety of your American Plantations in the most effectual manner within the compass of our power. The service that we humbly offer, and of which we pray your Majesty's acceptance, is that of laying (as far as in us lies) a foundation for preventing the encroachments of the French, and for extending your Dominions in America, by removing with our families and fortunes to the new Colony beyond the Alleghany Mountains, which the scheme that is now laid at your Majesty's feet proposes, if it shall be found agreeable to your Royal pleasure to order such settlement, and graciously to grant such aid to the design as will be necessary for carrying it into execution.

And as the wise and seasonable measures which your Majesty, at a vast expense, has been pleased to take for the security of your American Dominions, affords the most unquestionable proofs of your Majesty's regard for their safety, so we doubt not your Royal wisdom and penetration has discovered the necessity and importance of settling strong and numerous Colonies in the neighbourhood of the Ohio and Mississippi, as well for the securing those important parts of your Dominions, as for doing it in a manner the least burdensome and the most advantageous to your good subjects of Great Britain and America.

Our most humble prayer therefore is, that your Majesty will graciously be pleased to grant such countenance and assistance to the present scheme for settling a new Colony, as will be necessary for the encouragement of a people on whose fidelity your Majesty may with the utmost confidence rely, and who, at the same time, esteem themselves bound by the most sacred and indissoluble ties, to hand down the blessings of civil and religious liberty inviolate to their posterity. And will our gracious Sovereign be pleased to permit us to hope for that favour from his Royal benignity which our zeal for his service and our country's cause inclines us with? Having cheerfully made tender of our best service, what now remains is, to offer up our humble fervent prayers to Almighty God, the Sovereign Ruler of the universe, by whom Kings reign and Princes decree judgment, that he would be pleased to crown your Majesty's arms with success, that your enemies may flee away and return no more; that your Majesty's life may long be continued a blessing to your people, and full of happiness to yourself; that when death puts a period to your reign on earth, your Majesty may receive a crown of immortal glory, and that there never may be wanting one of your illustrious race to sway the British scepter in righteousness. These then may it please your Majesty are our wishes, and these shall be our prayers.

Dated at Philadelphia, July 24, 1755.

That the said Samuel Hazard, sensible of the claim of the Colony of Connecticut to the lands upon which we proposed settling a new Colony, made humble application to the Honourable the General Assembly of the said Colony of Connecticut for a release of their claim to the said lands. His Memorial, containing the application aforesaid, bears date May 8th, 1755, and is in the words following, viz:

To the Honourable General Assembly of the English Colony of Connecticut, in New England, in America, now sitting at Hartford, viz: Thursday, May 2, 1755:

The Memorial of Samuel Hazard, of the City of Philadelphia, in the Province of Pennsylvania, in America, Merchant: Humbly sheweth,

That your Memorialist hath projected a scheme for the settlement of a new Colony to the Westward of Pennsylvania, a copy of which is hereunto annexed.

That he hath already engaged three thousand five hundred and eight persons, able to bear arms, to remove to the said new Colony, on the footing of said scheme, and does not in the least doubt of being able to procure ten thousand if it takes effect.

That among those already engaged are nine Reverend Ministers of the Gospel; a considerable number of persons who are in publick offices under the Governments of Pennsylvania and New-Jersey, as well as great numbers of persons of good estates, of the best characters for sobriety and religion in said Provinces, but more especially in the Province of Pennsylvania.

That it must be manifest to your Honours, and to every thinking person who has the slightest acquaintance with the state of the American Colonies, that it is of the last importance to their safety to have a new Colony settled in the country, which the present scheme proposes; and that such a settlement in the hands of a sober, prudent, and industrious people, who would treat the Indians in such a manner as both the rules of the Gospel, and good policy require, would (with the ordinary smiles of Providence) be attended with the happiest consequences to Great Britain and all the American Plantations.

That whoever will be at the pains to inform himself of the state and situation of that country, must be convinced, that if it be not seasonably settled, it will be impossible to secure it to the Crown of Great Britain, without running into an expense that would be an intolerable burden to the Nation or ruinous to the Plantations.

That as the designs of the French have long been obvious to every intelligent inquirer, so the fatal consequences of their destructive schemes are too horrid to be disregarded by any whose breasts are capable of those impressions which ought naturally to flow from a well-guided affection to their God, their King, their country, and the human species. Were your Memorialist to pursue the consequences of those schemes through all the scenes of blood, of rapine, and of violence, and through all the mazes of Popish error and superstition, that they would naturally lead him, it would take up too much of your Honour's time, and be as disagreeable, as it would be tedious, Your Memorialist however, begs leave just to remind your Honours, that it is easy to demonstrate by rational arguments, that if the French are euffered to establish themselves in the country about the Ohio and Mississippi, that all America and Great Britain too must in the end fall a sacrifice to France, unless some remarkable interposition of Divine Providence prevent it.

That as these consequences can by no means be prevented, without prodigious expense, and vast as well as numerous inconveniences, but by the settlement of a new Colony, so it is absolutely necessary to have such settlement made by a sober, prudent, and orderly people, who would treat the Indians in such a manner as would gain their affections, as well as of those whose fidelity to the King could safely be relied on; for that the great and important ends which ought principally to be regarded in settling a new Colony about the Ohio and Mississippi will not be answered either by a herd of banditti, or a Colony of foreigners, is obvious at first view. Your Memorialist therefore persuades himself that such schemes as would engage persons of the above character, will not be suffered to drop, and become abortive for want of that assistance which your Honourable Assembly alone can give.

That as this Colony cannot be supposed to have people enough to spare to settle such vast Territories as are included within the limits of their Charter, as your Memorialist conceives, that when your Honours have considered the character and dispositions of the various Southern Provinces, it will manifestly appear, that any considerable numbers of persons fit to be depended upon for their fidelity to the King, cannot be found among any of the various religious denominations which inhabit those Provinces, except the Church of England, the Presbyterians, the Quakers, and the Baptists.

That as the members of the Church of England in those Provinces have not shown a disposition to remove into the wilderness to settle new Colonies, but are principally obliged to Presbyterians to the Northward for any settlements that are made on the frontiers, even of their own Provinces, it will be in vain to expect them to settle the proposed Colony. Nor would it be more reasonable to expect the Quakers, who are principled against war, to remove and defend the country; and since the Baptists are but few in number, and by no means sufficient for the purpose, it remains that Presbyterians must settle that country, or it must be left exposed to the French.

That as your Memorialist has already engaged so great a number of Presbyterians to remove, if this scheme takes effect, so he humbly conceives, that if they, and such others as he can still engage, are not suitably and seasonably encouraged, it will be in vain to attempt to settle Colonies from among them.

That as this Colony cannot settle those lands themselves, so your Memorialist is far from supposing that they will suffer their claims to hinder the settlement of that country by others, at a time when the safety and wellbeing of all the British Plantations in America, and even of Great Britain itself, is so highly interested in such settlements, and this he apprehends there is great reason to fear will in fact be the case if this Assembly does not at this present session transfer or relinquish their right to that country, in such a manner as will remove all obstacles to their claim out of the way of the present scheme; for as your Memorialist has already been at great expense of money and time to bring the scheme thus far to maturity, he shall (notwithstanding the success he has had in engaging three thousand five hundred and eight persons to remove,) hardly judge it consistent with the duties he owes either to them or his own family, to proceed any further in the affair, if he does not now succeed in his petition to this Honourable Assembly; and as he must spend the remainder of his days in this important service if the scheme goes on, so the thoughts of leaving his children, with many thousands of others, liable to disputes about every inch of ground that they possess, after having purchased it with the peril of their lives, would be such an objection both to them and him, as will hardly be got over. Nor will it be amiss to inform your Honours, that if those who are now willing to settle that country are once discouraged, and the spirit which at this time prevails among them is lost, it will be no easy task to revive it again.

That however arguments of a religious nature are esteemed in some places, your Memorialist presumes it will be no transgression to lay some stress upon them before this Honourable Assembly. He therefore begs leave to say, that as the Charter of this Colony expressly declares, that his Majesty's principal design in the Grant made to them, was the conversion of the Indians to Christianity, so your Honours will easily see that this scheme duly executed, would have a happy tendency to answer that important end; nor can your Memorialist help entertaining some distant hopes that it would be one mean at least (however small) of preparing the way for carrying the pure Religion of the Gospel, free from Popish superstition and Pagan idolatry, to the ends of the American Earth; for, surely the time will come, when God's name shall be great among the Heathen, from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof.

That as the mightiest arguments, both of a religious and political nature, might with the greatest truth and justice be urged in favour of the present scheme, so your Memorialist persuades himself that the inclinations of this Honourable Assembly to serve the real and important interests of their King and country, and to promote the best good of mankind, will be instead of a thousand arguments to excite them to it.

That as your Memorialist really means to do an important service to King and country, and to posterity by his scheme, so he is cheerfully willing that your Honours should take any measure they please to guard against the abuse of any right that they may grant to the country proposed to be settled, so as it does not prevent or hinder the important designs which the scheme proposes; nor does he desire that right on any other terms than that of his bona fide procuring the actual settlement of at least three thousand persons, able to bear arms, (or even a greater number) in that country, within any reasonable term that shall be limited and appointed for that purpose.

Your Memorialist therefore humbly prays that this Honourable Assembly will be pleased to transfer or relinquish their right to the lands mentioned in the scheme hereunto annexed, in such manner as shall be necessary for carrying said scheme into execution, or to so much of it as shall be absolutely necessary for answering the ends proposed by said scheme. And your Memorialist, as in duty bound, shall ever pray.

Dated at Hartford, May 8, 1755.

SAMUEL HAZARD

That the said General Assembly of the Colony of Connecticut, having taken the matter into their serious consideration, and being fully sensible of the utility and great importance of the design, did, at a meeting at Hartford, on the second Thursday of May, 1755, freely relinquish and give up to the said Samuel Hazard, for himself and in trust for those concerned, all the right, claim, or challenge, which was or might be made to such country or territory, by the Governour and Company of this Colony, as appears by the following Act, which is of the Record, viz:

At a Meeting of the General Assembly of the Governour and Company of the Colony of Connecticut, holden at Hartford, on the second Thursday of May, 1755.

Whereas, Sarnuel Hazard, of the City of Philadelphia, in the Province of Pennsylvania, Merchant, by his Petition or Memorial, preferred to the Governour and Company of this Colony, in the sessions of this present Assembly hath shown that he hath projected a scheme for settling a new Colony within his Majesty's Dominions, to begin at the distance of one hundred miles Westward of the Westerly boundaries of Pennsylvania, and thence extend one hundred miles to the Westward of Mississippi, and to be divided from Virginia and Carolina by the great chain of mountains that run along the Continent from the North-east to the Southwest parts of America; and hath represented and set forth the ends and motives, as well as the general plan thereof; and that as it is apprehended the said country, or a considerable part thereof, is situate and comprehended within the ancient lines and boundaries of the grant made by the Royal Charter given by his late Majesty, King Charles the Second, to the Governour and Company of this Colony, in the year of our Lord 1602; so there may arise an objection against his proceeding in so important an undertaking, unless the same be removed; and therefore has petitioned this Assembly for a grant or release to him of such right or claim as is, or may be supposed to be vested in said Governour and Company, that he might without any objections from that quarter, make his humble applications to his Majesty for his Royal grant and favour in the premises for the end and purposes aforesaid, as by the said Memorial and Scheme thereto annexed. Reference being thereunto had, may more fully and at large appear.

Whereupon this Court having taken the matter into their serious consideration, and apprehending the settlement of a Colony in the country aforesaid, with such limits and boundaries as his Majesty shall think proper on the plan aforesaid, or in some measure agreeable thereto, for the investing and securing of the rights, properties, and privileges of the Settlers, will greatly promote his Majesty's interest; secure his Dominions; and have a most happy tendency for the protection and defence of the British Plantations in America, and he an eminent means to win and invite the Natives of the country to the knowledge and obedience of the only true God and Saviour of mankind, and the Christian faith, and therein answer that which is expressed in the said Royal Charter to be the principal end of this Plantation; therefore this Court do most humbly recommend the said Samuel Hazard, and those who may undertake with him in this great and important design, to his sacred Majesty's gracious favour and notice; and if it may be consistent with his Royal wisdom and pleasure to order and direct the settlement of a Colony in the country, or part thereof; and grant unto said Petitioner, and those who shall engage therein, such lands, rights, privileges, and immunities as his Majesty shall be graciously pleased to determine for the purpose aforesaid,

This Court do declare their free consent thereunto; and for promoting so extensive and beneficent a design, do freely relinquish and give up to the said Samuel Hazard for himself, and in trust for those concerned, and to be engaged therein, all the right, claim, or challenge that is or may be made to such country, or territories as his Majesty shall judge proper to settle as aforesaid, by the Governour and Company aforesaid, or any from them, that no objection or obstruction may arise, be made, or suggested against so great a service for our King and country, on account of such claim or right, or by pretence or colour thereof.

Provided the Petitioner obtain his Majesty's Royal Grant and order for settling the said Colony, and proceed therein, under, and according to such limitations, restrictions, and orders, as his Majesty shall be pleased to appoint.

That the said Samuel Hazard having obtained from the General Assembly the before recited release of their claim; and in confident dependence upon it, proceeded in the matter with a spirit becoming the importance of the undertaking; and at a very great expense of money and time, and with much trouble, procured the subscription of between four and five thousand persons, able to bear arms, some of whom were worth thousands, and great numbers of persons of the best character for sobriety and religion, among whom were fifteen ministers; and some "bore publick offices in Pennsylvania and New-Jersey;" all of whom agreed to remove with their families to the proposed Colony, and become settlers there, as your Honours' Memorialist collects from copies of his father's Letters now in his possession.

That, as your Honours' Memorialist well remembers, the said Samuel Hazard had frequent meetings of Indians at his house, with whom he treated about the said country and territories.

That it appears from the said Samuel Hazard's Letters, that he personally explored that part of the country proposed for the situation of the new Colony; that he had corresponded with some of the nobility, and with other persons of note and influence in England, who appear to have favoured and encouraged the design; and that having, as he apprehended, brought the scheme to a proper degree of maturity, he proposed embarking for England in the fall of the year 1758, in order to procure its final accomplishment.

That his death, in July, 1758, prevented his completing his design, and your Memorialist was left an infant, and his father's associates without a guide sufficient to conduct so important an enterprise.

That your Honours' Memorialist proposes carrying into execution the Plan laid by his father, as nearly as the alteration of the times and circumstances of things will permit. He does not mean to trouble your Honours with a tedious repetition of the many and cogent arguments urged by his deceased father in his Memorial, in favour of such settlement; nor minutely to show how far the same reasons still operate respecting the prosecution of that design. These must be fresh in your Honours' memories, as the Petition and Plan annexed have been just now read in your hearing. He begs leave, however, just to observe, that they all remain in equal force at this day, that of making the proposed settlement a frontier against the French, only excepted, instead of which the cession of Territory West of the Mississippi, by the last Treaty of Peace, to the French, and the subsequent one made by them of the same territory, to the Crown of Spain, is worthy of serious consideration. He begs leave further to suggest, under this head, the peculiar necessities of the present times, as an additional reason for the immediate settlement of the Western lands. Many who are otherwise disposed, are thereby obliged to turn their attention to agriculture; and for these a proper provision is now more than ever become necessary; as the experience of the present day demonstrates that populous seaport Towns cannot now, as formerly, afford employment to multitudes of industrious Mechanicks; and, instead of serving as a protection and defence for us, are used by the enemies of America as their most effectual engine at once to crush our manufactures and subvert our liberty.

That your Memorialist has already considerable interest engaged towards making the proposed settlement, and apprehends, that adding such persons in this Colony as would join in the undertaking, to such of his father's associates as still remain and are willing to proceed upon this business, he could, in a reasonable time, have two thousand actual settlers upon the land, which may now, with great propriety, be styled a vacuum domicilium, as it has no Christian or civilized inhabitants, and but very few even of the natives now remain there.

That your Honours' Memorialist apprehends his Majesty, considering what has been already done respecting this matter, and for political reasons, which it is unnecessary to mention at present, would be easily induced to grant liberty of erecting a new Colony to the Westward of Pennsylvania; but as your Honours, Memorialist considered himself as under obligations to the Colony of Connecticut, for their kindness to his father, and thinks himself in honour bound to consult their interest as well as his own, he wishes not to be obliged to carry the matter to England; but proposes to your Honours a settlement under the claim and jurisdiction of the Colony of Connecticut; and humbly offers to your Honours' consideration the following conditions, viz:

1st. That whereas the Honourable General Assembly at their meeting in May, 1755, released to your Memorialist's father their claim to lands, beginning at the distance of one hundred miles Westward of the westerly bounds of Pennsylvania, and thence to extend one hundred miles to the Westward of Mississippi. And whereas, by the last Treaty of Peace, the one hundred miles beyond the Mississippi, included in the aforesaid release, were ceded by the Crown of Great Britain to France; that, therefore, a release or quit-claim may be given by your Honours to your Memorialist and his associates, of the right of the Governour and Company to lands beginning at the Western boundary of Pennsylvania, and thence extending to the Mississippi.

2d. That your Honours' Memorialist and his associates, or their attorney, may have uninterrupted access to and the free use of such authentick documents, conveyances, records, and other writings, as may be useful in ascertaining; prosecuting, and establishing the claim under this Colony, whenever it may be necessary to refer thereunto for those purposes.

3d. That the whole expense of defending the claim of this Colony to such lands as shall be granted to your Honours' Memorialist and his associates; and also the whole expense attending the exercise of jurisdiction in the proposed settlement, shall be defrayed by your Memorialist and his associates.

4th. That the purchase of the native right shall be made wholly at the expense of your Memorialist and his associates.

5th. That your Memorialist and his associates shall pay into the Publick Treasury of this Colony ten thousand pounds lawful money, in such annual payments as your Honours shall see meet to appoint; the first annual payment to be made within one year after the date of the grant or quit-claim.

Respecting a grant upon the conditions aforesaid, your Honours' Memorialist begs leave, with due submission, to suggest, that as it will not interfere with any preceding grant, either from the Crown of Great Britain or any of the Colonies, it of consequence cannot involve this Colony in any dispute or litigation of any kind whatever; and that as all expenses respecting the defence of the claim, the exercise of jurisdiction, and the purchase of the native right, will fall upon your Memorialist and his associates, the Colony Treasury cannot be impoverished by such a grant being made; but, on the contrary, will be much enriched by the ten thousand pounds to be paid into it, the income of which may serve to give additional support to the College at New-Haven, or the inferiour but important Seminaries throughout the Colony, or may greatly contribute to the publick emolument, in such other way as to your Honours' superiour wisdom may seem meet. More need not be added here, as your Honours will doubtless see the benign aspect the foregoing Plan has upon the interest of the Colony in general; and,

Your Memorialist, therefore, humbly prays your Honours for a release or quit-claim to him and his associates, of the right of the Governour and Company to the lands before mentioned, beginning at the Western boundary of Pennsylvania, and extending from thence to the River Mississippi, together with your Honours' right to the said River, upon the foregoing conditions; or, if your Honours should not approve of the conditions aforesaid, that a Committee of your Honourable Body may be appointed to confer with him, and the grant aforesaid be made upon such conditions as may be agreed to. And your Memorialist, as in duty bound, shall ever pray, &c. EBEN. HAZARD.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM SIR JAMES WRIGHT, BART. TO the EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED SAVANNAH, OCTOBER 13, 1774.

MY LORD: In my letter of the 24th August, No. 26, I mentioned that some Protests and Dissents were preparing in different parts of the Province which were not then completed. These were not sent to Town till lately, and only published in yesterday's paper, and which I now enclose; they have been wrote by the people themselves, just in their own way, as your Lordship will see by the style. However they certainly show that the sense of the people in this Province is against any Resolutions, and that those attempted by a few in Savannah, are held in contempt.

ADDRESS FROM THE COUNTY OF WORCESTER, PRESENTED TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOUR, OCTOBER 14, 1774.

To his Excellency THOMAS GAGE, Esquire, Governour of his Majesty's Province of MASSACHUSETTS BAY, and Commander-in-chief of the King's Forces in NORTH AMERICA.

May it please your Excellency:

The people of the County of Worcester being earnestly solicitous for the peace and welfare of the Province in general, cannot view the measures now pursuing by your Excellency but with increasing jealousy, as they apprehend there has not, nor does at present exist, any just occasion for the formidable hostile preparations making on the Neck, leading to our distressed capital.

It is a matter of such notoriety, that your Excellency must be sensible there was not the least opposition made to obstruct the introduction of the King's Troops at their first landing, nor have the people since that time discovered any intention to disturb them, till your Excellency was pleased to order the seizure of the Powder in the Arsenal at Charlestown, in a private manner, which occasioned the report that a skirmish had happened between a party of the King's Troops and the people at Cambridge, in which several of the latter fell; this caused the people to arm and march from divers parts of the country; but no sooner was that report proved false than they returned peaceably to their respective homes.

The inhabitants of the Province in general, and Town of Boston, have never given cause for those cruel and arbitrary Acts for blockading their Harbour and subverting the Charter, by altering the Civil Government of the Province, which, however, this people are determined, by the Divine favour, never to submit to but with their lives, notwithstanding they are aggrieved at the King's displeasure against them, through the instigation of artful and designing men.

This County finds it difficult to comprehend the motives for the present hostile parade, unless it be in consequence of some preconcerted plan to subject the already greatly distressed Town of Boston to mean compliances or military contributions. They are equally at a loss to account for your Excellency's conduct towards the County of Suffolk, as in your Answer to their Address, remonstrating against fortifying the only avenue to the Town, which by that means may, in some future time, be improved to cut off the communication between town and country, and thereby reduce the miserable inhabitants to the greatest straits, your Excellency is pleased, in answer, to observe, that you had not made it easier to effect this, than what nature has made it; if so, the country cannot conceive why this expense and damage of the Town to no purpose.

Your Excellency is likewise pleased to take notice of the general good behaviour of the Soldiers, but at the same time pass over that part, complaining of the detention of private property, and proceed to answer by way of quere, to which you would not permit a reply. This County are constrained to observe, they apprehend the people justifiable in providing for their own defence, while they understood there was no passing the Neck without examination, the Cannon at the North Battery spiked up, and many places searched, where Ammunition was suspected to be, and if found, seized; yet as the people have never acted offensively, nor discovered any disposition so to do, till as above related, the County apprehend this can never justify the seizure of private property.

It is with great anxiety this County observes the wanton exercise of power in the Officers of the Customs at Salem, and on board the King's ships, respecting the article of Fuel destined for the use of the inhabitants of Boston, who are obliged to have it with the additional charge of landing and reloading at Salem, before it can proceed; when your Excellency must be sensible the Act, which is the professed rule of conduct, expressly excepts Fuel and Victuals, which may be brought to Boston by taking on board one or more Officers at Salem, (without the aforesaid charge) while that destined for the Troops proceeds direct, free from the same. There are many other things which bear extremely hard on the inhabitants, while they are prohibited from transporting the smallest article from one part of the Town to another, water-borne, without danger of a seizure, or to get hay, cattle, &c., from any of the islands, notwithstanding there is no other way of transportation.

Your Excellency, we apprehend, must have been greatly misinformed of the character of this people to suppose such severities tend either to a submission to the Acts, or reconciliation with the Troops; and the County are sorry to find the execution of the Acts attempted with an higher hand than was intended, unless the Acts themselves should be thought too lenient.

Bringing into the Town a number of Cannon from Castle William, sending for a further reinforcement of Troops, with other concurring circumstances, strongly indicating some dangerous design, has justly excited in the minds of the people apprehensions of the most alarming nature, and the authors must be held accountable for all the blood and carnage made in consequence thereof. Therefore this County, in duty to God, their country, themselves, and posterity, do remonstrate to, and earnestly desire your Excellency, as you regard the service of the King, and the peace and welfare of the Province, to desist from any further hostile preparations, and give the people assurances thereof by levelling the Intrinchments and dismantling the Fortifications, which will have a tendency to satisfy their doubts, and restore that confidence so essential to their quiet and his Majesty's service.

By order of the Convention of Committees for the County of Worcester.

HIS EXCELLENCY'S ANSWER.

GENTLEMEN. I have repeatedly given the strongest assurances that I intended nothing hostile against the Town or Country, and therefore desire you to ease the minds of the people against any reports that may have been industriously spread amongst them to the contrary; my wish is to preserve peace and tranquillity.

With respect to the execution of the Port Bill, it is a matter belonging to other departments; and if any thing is done, not warranted by said Act, the law is open for redress.

THOMAS GAGE.

PENNSYLVANIA ASSEMBLY.

At an Assembly held at Philadelphia, the fourteenth day of October, Anna Domini 1774, P. M.

By the Returns of the Sheriffs of the several Counties, it appears that the following gentlemen were duly elected and chosen to serve in Assembly as Representatives of the freemen of the Province of Pennsylvania, for the ensuing year, viz:

For the County of PHILADELPHIA. - George Gray, Henry Pawling, John Dickinson, Joseph Parker, Israel Jacobs, Jonathan Roberts, Michael Hillegas, Samuel Rhoads.

For the City of PHILADELPHIA. - Thomas Mifflin, Charles Thomson.

For the County of Bucks. - John Brown, John Foulke, William Rodmn, Benjamin Chapman, Joseph Galloway, Robert Kirkbride, Gerardus Wynkoop. John Haney.

For the County of CHESTER. - Benjamin Bartholomew, John Jacobs, Joseph Pennock, James Gibbons, Isaac Pearson, Charles Humphreys, John Morton, Anthony Wayne.

For the County of LANCASTER. - James Webb, Joseph Ferree, Matthias Slough, George Ross.

For the County of YORK. - James Ewing, Michael Swoope.

For the County of CUMBERLAND. - Wm. Allen, John Montgomery.

For the County of BERKS. - Edward Biddle, Henry Chreist.

For the County of NORTHAMPTON. - Wm. Edmonds.

For the County of BEDFORD. - Bernhard Dougherty.

For the County of NORTHUMBERLAND. - Sam. Hunter.

For the County of WESTMORELAND. - Wm. Thompson.

A quorum of the Representatives being met, proceeded, according to the Charter of Privileges and Laws of this Province, to the choice of a Speaker, when Edward Biddle, Esquire, was unanimously chosen Speaker for the ensuing year, and placed in the Chair accordingly.

Ordered, That Mr. Gray, Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Brown, Mr. Bartholomew, Mr. Webb, Mr. Swoope, and Mr. Edmonds, be a Committee to wait on the Governour and acquaint him, that, pursuant to the Charter of Privileges and the Laws of this Province, a quorum of the Representatives being met, have chosen a Speaker for the ensuing year, and request to know at what hour to-morrow his Honour will be pleased to receive the House, that they may present their Speaker for his approbation.

The House adjourned to nine o'clock, to-morrow morning.

October 15. - The House met pursuant to adjournment.

The Members appointed to wait on the Governour with the Message of last night, reported they had delivered the same, according to order, and that his Honour was pleased to say he would be in the Council Chamber at eleven o'clock this morning, to receive the House with their Speaker.

A Message by Mr. Secretary:

"SIR: The Governour is at the Council Chamber, and requires the attendance of the House, to present their Speaker."

Then Mr. Speaker, with the whole House, waited on the Governour, and, being returned from the Council Chamber, the Speaker resumed the Chair, and reported that the House had waited on his Honour, and presented their Speaker, of whom the Governour had been pleased to approve, and that he (the Speaker) had then, in the name and on behalf of the House, claimed their usual privileges, viz:

First. That the Members of the House, during their sitting, may enjoy freedom of Speech in all their propositions and debates.

Secondly. That they may, at all seasonable times, have free access to the Governour, the better to enable them to discharge the business of the publick.

Thirdly. That their persons and estates may be free from all manner of arrests, molestations, and injuries during the time of accustomed privilege.

Fourthly. - That the Governour would be pleased to take no notice of any report concerning any matter or thing moved or debated in the House, until the same shall be passed into Resolves, nor give the least credit to such report.

Fifthly. - That his own (the Speaker's) unwilling mistakes may be excused, and not imputed to the House, but that he may have liberty of resorting to them for an explanation of their true intent and meaning, and of reporting the same to the Governour.

All which he had claimed as the just and indefeasible rights and privileges of the freemen of the Province of Pennsylvania, derived and confirmed to them by the Laws and Charter of the said Province; and that the Governour was pleased to say, "They were the undoubted rights and privileges of the House, in which they might rely on his protection."

The Qualification by law appointed to be taken by Members of Assembly, and the test of Abjuration, being prepared, were then taken and subscribed, first by Mr. Speaker, in the Chair, and afterwards by the Members present, in their order.

Resolved, unanimously, That John Dickinson, Esquire, be, and he is hereby, added to the Committee of Deputies appointed by the late Assembly of this Province to attend the General Congress now sitting in the City of Philadelphia on American Grievances.

Resolved, That this House will provide an Entertainment, to be given on Thursday next, to the Deputies from the several Colonies attending publick business in this City.

Ordered, That Mr. Gray, Mr. Hillegas, Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Rodman, Mr. Pearson, Mr. Wayne, and Mr. Ross, with the Speaker, be a Committee to provide and superintend the said Entertainment, and that Mr. Speaker do invite the gentlemen of the Congress accordingly.

It being represented by Mr. Hillegas, that Cayashuta, an Indian Chief of note, and a friend to his Province, is now in Town and in want of some necessities:

Ordered, That Mr. Hillegas do procure the necessities requested by the said Indian Chief, defray his expenses while in Town, and present him with the sum of ten pounds, in behalf of this Government.

October 17, P. M. - The Governour, by Mr. Secretary, sent down a written Message to the House, which was read by order, and is as follows, viz:

GENTLEMEN: By the latest intelligence from the Westward, the Earl of Dunmore was set out on an expedition down the Ohio against the Shawanese Indians, and it is very uncertain as yet whether the troubles on the Frontiers may subside: I therefore find it incumbent on me to recommend to your consideration the propriety of keeping in pay, for a longer time, the Rangers employed by this Government; or taking such other measures as you may judge, on this occasion, most proper for the publick security.

JOHN PENN.

October 17, 1774.

October 19, 1774. The House resumed the consideration of the Governour's Message of the seventeenth instant, relative to the Rangers employed on the Frontiers, and after some time spent therein,

Resolved, That the said Rangers be continued in pay until the first day of November next, and then disbanded, it not appearing to the House that their service on the Frontiers is any longer necessary.

Resolved, That George Gray, Michael Hillegas, Thos. Mifflin, and Charles Humphreys, Esquires, or any three of them, with the consent and approbation of the Governour of this Province for the time being, may draw orders on the Provincial Treasurer for any sum not exceeding fourteen hundred and fifty pounds, to be disposed of in discharging the arrears of pay, and the expense of victualing the said Rangers; the said sum to be paid out of the moneys remaining in his hands by virtue of an Act of Assembly, passed the twenty-ninth of September last, entitled "An Act for the Support of the Government of this Province, and Payment of the Publick Debts."

Ordered, That Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Thomson, and Mr. Rodman, be a Committee to prepare and bring in a draught of an Answer to the Governour's Message.

The Committee appointed to prepare an Answer to the Governour's Message, reported they had essayed a draught for that purpose, which being agreed to by the House, was transcribed by order, and follows in these words, viz:

"May it please your Honour:

"Having taken into our consideration the matter referred to us, in your Message of the seventeenth instant, we are of opinion that the Rangers employed by this Government should be disbanded by the first of November next, as their service on the Frontiers does not appear to us to be any longer necessary.

"We have provided, agreeable to the Resolution sent herewith, for the payment of the arrears that may be due, and for the incidental charges that have accrued for this service.

"As the safety of the Province, in a great measure, depends upon having a supply of Arms ready on any emergency, we trust your Honour will give orders, at the time of disbanding the men, that the Arms with which you have supplied them, may be collected and deposited in some place of security.

"Signed by order of the House,
"EDWARD BIDDLE, Speaker.

October 19, 1774."

Ordered, That Mr. Gray and Mr. Rodman wait on the Governour with the foregoing Answer to his Message, and acquaint him that the House incline to adjourn to Monday, the fifth of December next, if he has no objection thereto.

The Members appointed to wait on the Governour, reported they had delivered the Answer of the House, and their Verbal Message, according to order, and that his Honour was pleased to say he had no objection to the time of adjournment proposed by the House.

October 21. - "The House then adjourned to Monday, the fifth of December next, at four o'clock, P. M.

Williamsburg. Friday, October 14, 1774.

This day an Express arrived from his Excellency the Governour, who has sent copies of several Speeches that passed between him and the Chiefs of the Six Nations and Delawares; wherein they greatly disapprove of the murders and outrages committed by the Shawanese, and promise to use their best endeavours to bring them to a treaty with his Excellency, when it is hoped a permanent peace will be established, and an end put to an Indian war, so ruinous to the Frontier inhabitants, as well as expensive to the country.

COUNCIL BETWEEN LORD DUNMORE AND THE INDIANS.

At a Council held with the Indians: Present, his Excellency the Right Honourable the Earl of Dunmore, Lieutenant and Governour of Virginia, &c., Alexander McKee, Esquire, Deputy Agent, &c.; Indians - Delawares, King Custologa, Captain White Eyes, and Pluggy, a Six Nation Chief, and sundry others.

Captain White Eyes spoke:

First. - Brother: I wipe the sweat and dust from your eyes by this string, and remove the fatigue that you have had during your journey; and also, I clear and open your ears, that you may readily comprehend and hear what your brothers have now to say to you; I also remove every concern from your heart, owing to any bad impressions which have been made upon you during your journey to this place, that you may believe the sincerity of us towards you and all our brethren the English. (A String.)

Second. - Brother: I will now inform you of what I know concerning the Shawanese. Our uncles, the Mohawks, have been sent by the Shawanese here, in order to know in what manner they should act, so as to be admitted to a conference with their brethren, the English of Virginia. Our uncles, the Mohawks, desire to inform you that the principal men of that Nation continue to hold first by the ancient chain of friendship; but that some foolish young men had loosened their hands therefrom, and that it was not in their power to prevent them heretofore. Brother, I have now told you of what our uncles, the Mohawks, have told us, of what the Chiefs of the Shawanese say, and hope you will the strong, and consider upon what you may have to say to them, that whenever you choose to speak, we may be ready to join you in so doing.

Third. - Brother: I desire you to listen to your brethren, the Five Nations and Mohawks, the Wyandots, and also your brethren the Delawares. These are the people who have taken pains to keep every thing quiet since those unhappy troubles. All the Western Nations are quiet, but keep their eyes fixed upon this quarter. Brother, I am rejoiced to see you, as I was troubled and afraid before; but now my apprehensions are dispersed on seeing you, which is the cause of nay pleasure. Brother, I now esteem our women and children restored to life upon your arrival, and that even the foolish young people will have reason to be thankful on the conclusion of the present prospect. (A String.)

Fourth. Brother, I desire you to listen to us few of the numerous Chiefs who formerly were of our Nations; as the few now remaining have a due remembrance of the friendship subsisting between our forefathers. Brother, during the trouble which happened, owing to foolish people, I was apprehensive it might be the cause of universal trouble, so as to have shook our amity, and weakened the ancient friendship between us. Brother, I tell you that I am extremely rejoiced at your arrival here, as you are esteemed our elder brother; and I hope that, as you have it amply in your power, you will restore our ancient friendship, and establish it upon the former good footing; to promote which we will contribute our weak endeavours, by affording all our assistance. (A Belt.)

This is what your brethren have to say to you who are here present.

His Lordship said:

I am much obliged to you for this mark of your friendship, and I will consider of what you have said, and shall return you an answer hereafter.

His Excellency's Answer to the Delawares and Six Nation Chiefs.

Brethren: I now wipe the tears from your eyes, which you may have shed for the loss of any of your people. I remove the grief from your hearts which it may have oc-easoned. I also clear your ears from any bad reports, that you may now look upon your brethren, the Virginians, with friendship, and that you may believe what I am about to say to you in your hearts, and receive it with pleasure. (A String.)

Brethren: With these trifling goods I cover the graves of your deceased friends, that the remembrance of your grief upon that occasion may be buried in total oblivion. (Condolence Present.)

Brethren: Your desire is gratified; I do see clearly, and the sweat and fatigue I have experienced on my journey here, will be no cause of complaint to me, when I find an opportunity to convince my brethren, the Delawares and Six Nations, of my good intentions towards them. You may be assured, brethren, that as I am now here present, I shall be able to hear plainly, and to distinguish clearly what is just and unjust between me and my brethren, the Indians. (A String.)

Brethren: I am much obliged to you for the pains you have taken to heal the sores made by the Shawanese, and would have been very glad to have now given you a more favourable answer as to them; but you yourselves must be well acquainted how little the Shawanese deserve the treatment or appellation of brethren from me, when, in the first place, they have not complied with the terms prescribed to them by Colonel Bouquet, (and to which they assented,) of giving up the white prisoners; nor have they ever truly buried the hatchet; for the next summer after that treaty, they killed a man upon the frontiers of my Government; the next year they killed eight of my people upon Cumberland River, and brought their horses to their Towns, where they disposed of them, (together with a considerable quantity of peltry) to the traders from Pennsylvania. Some time after, one Martin, a trader from my Government, was killed with two men, on Hockhocking, by the Shawanese, only because they were Virginians; at the same time permitting one Ellis to pass, only as he was a Pennsylvanian. In the year 1771, twenty of my people were robbed by them, when they carried away nineteen horses, and as many owned by Indians, with their guns, clothes, &c., which they delivered up to one Callender and Spears, and other Pennsylvania traders in their Towns. In the same year, on the Great Kenhawa, in my Government, they killed * * * * one of my people and wounded his brother; and the year following, Adam Stroud, another of my people, his wife and seven children, were most cruelly murdered on Elk waters. In the next year they killed Richards, another of my people, on the Kenhawa. A few moons after, they killed Russell, one of my people, and five white men and two negroes, near Cumberland Gap; and also carried their horses and effects into their Towns, where they were purchased by the Pennsylvania traders. All these with many other murders, they have committed upon my people before a drop of Shawanese blood was spilt by them; and have continually perpetrated robberies upon my defenceless Frontier inhabitants, which at length irritated them so far that they began to retaliate. I have now stated the dispute between them and us, and leave it to you to judge what they merit. (A String.)

Brethren: You desire me to listen to my brethren, the Five Nations, the Mohawks, the Wyandots, and to my brethren, the Delawares. I do so with the utmost attention, and am well pleased to return you my thanks for the pains you have taken, and am extremely happy, and exceedingly desirous, that the eyes of the Western Nations, and all others, may be continually fixed upon me; for then they will plainly see that my real intention and sincere desire is only to do justice to all parties. Brethren, I hope our pleasure at meeting is mutual; and you may be assured, from my late proceedings, that my good will towards you is most sincere, and I rejoice equally with you at the new life your women and children have acquired by my arrival; and I most sincerely wish that they may long continue in a full enjoyment of peace and happiness, to which I will most cheerfully contribute my utmost assistance. (A String.)

Brethren: I am very glad to find that the Chiefs of the different Nations have a due and friendly regard to the friendship formerly subsisting between our forefathers, which I shall be happy at all times to continue. I am glad to observe that few (if any) of the foolish people who have been the authors of the late troubles, were in any wise particularly connected with you; and I hope that our ancient friendship is too strongly linked to be broke by a few banditti of a distant Nation. I own I am very much rejoiced at my arrival here, as I hope it will be the means of adding fresh strength to the ancient chain of friendship subsisting between us; and particularly so, as I see your inclinations are to facilitate this good work. I acknowledge myself your elder brother, and shall, upon every occasion, manifest my regard as such towards you; and I do expect that you will continually look up to me as your elder brother, from whom you may be assured of the strongest marks of brotherly kindness, either in peace or war. And as you may now be certain of protection from your elder brother, I flatter myself you will continue to tread the ancient path towards him here, when he will be answerable that the most ample justice shall be done you. (A Belt.)

At a Conference held with several of the Delaware and Mohawk Chiefs.

Intelligence received from Captain Pike.

At my arrival at the Lower Shawanese Towns, I was told by the Cornstalk that he was much rejoiced to hear from his brethren, the white people, in the Spring, upon the first disturbances; that he had, in consequence thereof, ordered all his young people to remain quiet, and not to molest the traders, but to convey them safe to their grandfathers, the Delawares, where they would be safe. The Shawanese Chiefs declared they were well pleased to hear from their brethren, the English, and that they had spoke to all their young people to remain quiet. Upon his arrival at the Standing Stone, he sent word to the Shawanese to assemble their Counsellors; but, as they were out a hunting, it could not be immediately effected. The principal warriors always listened to the Chiefs, and had no hostile intentions. The mischiefs which had been done were perpetrated by the foolish young people; but that now, as soon as they were assembled, they would be able to prevent any thing of that nature for the future. The Shawanese told me that a party of Twilightwees, one of Tawas, and a party of Wyandots, were as far advanced on their way to war against the white people, as their Towns; but that they had advised them to return; that they expected the war which threatened them would be extinguished, as they now endeavoured at peace.

Pluggy, a Mohawk, who was questioned whether he knew of these parties, said that some hunters who were of the Wyandots and Tawas, came to the Shawanese Towns to hear news, but were sent back.

Speech of the Mohegans to the Shawanese.

Brethren: Formerly you came to us on the other side of the Mountains, and told us we were your older brothers, desiring us to come over and show ourselves to your grandfathers, the Delawares, that they might know our relationship. We did so, and as one people held fast the same chain of friendship; but now we see you only holding with one hand, whilst you keep a tomahawk in the other; We desire you, therefore, to sit down and not be so haughty, but pity your women and children. We therefore take the tomahawk out of your hands, and put it into the hands of your grandfathers, the Delawares, who are good judges, and know how to dispose of it.

Answer of the Shawanese.

Brethren: We are glad to hear what you have said, and that you have taken the tomahawk out of our hands and given it to our grandfathers, the Delawares; but, for our parts, we are not sensible that we have had the tomahawk in our hands. It is true some foolish young people may have found one out of our sight, hid in the grass, and may have made use of it; but that tomahawk which we formerly held, has been long since buried, and we have not since raised it.

There was a great deal of consultation amongst the different Nations, while I was at their Towns, but nothing particularly relative to what is now in question.

Colonel Stephen demanded of Captain Pike how he was received by the Shawanese, who says that he arrived there about noon, and after having cleared their eyes and opened their ears in the common form, that they had a great dance, and afterwards came to him; and, upon hearing what he had to say, expressed their satisfaction by saying they hoped their friendship was now renewed. Though he heard some of the young people expressing a threatening at the Delawares' so much interfering in their quarrel with the white people; that if they had any thing to say, they wondered why the white people did not come themselves to speak.

The Delawares said, that as the sentiments of the Shawanese were now known, that if the Governour had an inclination they would join him in any thing he had to offer to them for the promotion of peace and the restoration of harmony to the country.

Reply of the Mohawks and Delaware Chiefs to his Lordship's Answer.

Present: Captain White Eyes, Captain Pipe, Captain Winganum, Delawares; Captain Pluggy and Big Apple Tree, Mohawks.

Captain White Eyes spoke in behalf of the Delawares:

Brother: Your brethren here present are very happy to have heard your good Speeches, and are glad to find you acknowledge yourself their elder brother. We acquainted you that our sincere desire was that the peace between us and our brethren, the English, should be upon a lasting footing. We now are convinced that it will be upon a sure and permanent foundation, as our children may have an opportunity of being instructed in the Christian religion. We shall acquaint all the Tribes of Indians of what has here passed between us, and we are satisfied that it will be very satisfactory to them to hear the good talk from our older brother. For my part, I can assure you, brother, that for my Tribe I can answer, even for the foolish young people thereof, that they will not be the cause of any disturbance in any manner whatever hereafter, either by theft or otherwise, or give cause of any trouble to your people. The Chiefs of the other Tribes of our Nation will confirm what I have now said, as soon as they have an opportunity. (A String.)

Brother: As your brethren, the Shawanese, are desirous to speak to you by themselves, I hope you will listen to them. I will desire them to speak to you; and that you may there have an opportunity of speaking together, I would be glad to acquaint them when they could see you to enter into conference. I am much obliged to you for the promise you have given me that justice shall be done us in the trade here, and that proper persons shall be appointed to see that we are fairly dealt with. I shall acquaint the young men with it, that they may come to trade in their usual manner.

The Big Apple Tree, Mohawk, spoke.

Brother: This day it hath pleased God that we should meet together; we who are sent on behalf of another Nation. The Shawanese told me that they heard there was something yet good in the heart of the Big Knife. They desired me to take their hearts into our hands, and speak strongly on their behalf to the Big Knife. I am glad the Shawanese, my younger brethren, have desired me to undertake this business, if I can serve them; and I am equally rejoiced at the appearance thereof, from your good speeches. You may be assured, that as they have delivered themselves into our care, we shall do our endeavour to induce them to pursue proper measures to restore peace. You may be also assured, that your brother, the Chief of the Wyandots, will also assist me in taking care that our younger brothers, the Shawanese, act a prudent part. Wheresoever, brother, you build your Council Fire to speak to the Shawanese, you may be assured that we, the Mohawks, with our brethren, the Wyandots, will come with them to speak also; and that we hope peace then will be restored and established on a permanent footing. (A String.)

His Lordship's Answer.

Brethren: I shall consider of what you have said, and will give you an answer this afternoon.

His Lordship's Answer to their Reply.

Brethren: I am glad to find that what I have said in our late Conference has been satisfactory to you; and you may be assured, that whatever I have promised shall be confirmed, so that my actions shall convince you of the sincerity of my heart. I am glad to find you have a desire of instructing your children in the Christian religion, which will be the cause of peace remaining between us on a lasting footing, and of adding happiness to your own Nation. (A String.)

Brethren: I have already informed you of the evil disposition of the Shawanese towards us; but to convince you how ready the Big Knife is to do justice, at all times, even to their greatest enemies, at the request of my good brethren, the Six Nations, and you, the Delawares, I will be ready and willing to hear any good speeches which the Shawanese may have to deliver to me, either at Wheeling, (where I soon purpose to be;) or, if they should not meet me there, at the Little Kenhawa, or somewhere lower down the river. (A String.)

Brethren, the Mohawks, you will hear by my Speech to my younger brethren, the Delawares, that I am prevailed upon to listen to the Shawanese, notwithstanding their bad behaviour towards my people; and as I am prevailed upon merely by the confidence I repose in the friendship of my brethren, the Wyandots and Five Nations, I expect this will be looked upon as a strong proof of my regard towards them. And, as it is your wish, I will meet the Shawanese at one of the places mentioned in my Answer to my younger brethren, the Delawares, provided they are led to the Council Fire by my brethren, the Mohawks, the Wyandots, and the Delawares, as I shall be satisfied that whatever they may then promise, you, my brethren, will see them strictly adhere to. (A String.)

The Delawares' Reply.

Brother: We are much rejoiced to hear what you have now said, and believe it to be sincere; and you may be satisfied, that I, in behalf of my people, will endeavour to convince you that we are so. When the Delawares, the Six Nations, the Shawanese, and you, our elder brother, meet together, you will then see who are sincere in their friendship. In a short time it will be seen; for those who are determined on good, will not fail to meet you. I shall speak to the Shawanese, and, if their intentions are equal to their professions, they will see you; but, on behalf of my people, I promise to meet you. This is all I have to say at this time; but you may be certain that myself, Captain Pipe, and Captain Winganum, will wait on you.

THE SPEECH OF EDMUND BURKE, ESQUIRE. ON OCCASION OF OFFERING HIMSELF A CANDIDATE TO REPRESENT THE CITY OF BRISTOL IN PARLIAMENT, DELIVERED BEFORE THE HUSTINGS, OCTOBER 16, 1774.

GENTLEMEN: I am come hither to solicit in person that favour which my friends have hitherto endeavoured to procure for me, by the most obliging, and to me the most honourable exertions.

I have so high an opinion of the great trust which you have to confer on this occasion, and by long experience, so just a diffidence in my abilities to fill it in a manner adequate even to my own ideas, that I should never have ventured, of myself, to intrude into that awful situation. But since I am called upon by the desire of several respectable fellow-subjects, as I have done at other times, I give up my fears to their wishes. Whatever my other deficiencies may be, I do not know what it is to be wanting to my friends.

I am not fond of attempting to raise public expectation by great promises. At this time there is much cause to consider and very little to presume. We seem to be approaching to a great crisis in our affairs, which calls for the whole wisdom of the wisest among us, without being able to assure ourselves that any wisdom can preserve us from many and great inconveniences. You know I speak of our unhappy contest with America. I confess it is a matter on which I look down as from a precipice. It is difficult in itself, and it is rendered more intricate by a great variety of plans of conduct. I do not mean to enter into them. I will not suspect a want of good intention in forming them. But how pure the intentions of their authors may have been, we all know that event has been unfortunate. The means of recovering our affairs are not obvious.

So many great questions of commerce, of finance, of Constitution, and of policy, are involved in this American deliberation, that I dare engage for nothing, but that I shall give it, without any predilection to former opinions, or any sinister bias whatsoever, the honest and impartial consideration of which I am capable. The publick has a full right to it, and this great city, a main pillar in the commercial interest of Great Britain, must totter on its base by the slightest mistake with regard to our American measures. Thus much, however, I think it not amiss to lay before you, that I am not, I hope, apt to take up or lay down my opinions lightly. I have held, and ever shall maintain, to the best of my power, unimpaired and undiminished, the just, wise, and necessary constitutional superiority of Great Britain. This is necessary for America as well as for us. I never mean to depart from it. Whatever may be lost by it, I avow it. The forfeiture even of your favour, if by such a declaration I could forfeit it, though the first object of my ambition, never will make me disguise my sentiments on this subject.

But I have ever had a clear opinion, and have ever held a constant correspondent conduct, that this superiority is consistent with all the liberties a sober and spirited American ought to desire. I never meant to put any Colonist, or any human creature, in a situation not becoming a free man. To reconcile British superiority with American liberty, shall be my great object, as far as my little faculties extend. I am far from thinking that both, even yet, may not be preserved.

When I first devoted myself to the publick service, I considered how I should render myself fit for it; and this I did by endeavouring to discover what it was that gave this country the rank it holds in the world; I found that our power and dignity rose principally, if not solely, from two sources, our Constitution and commerce. Both these I have spared no study to understand, and no endeavour to support.

The distinguishing part of our Constitution is its liberty. To preserve that liberty inviolate seems the particular duty and proper trust of a Member of the House of Commons. But the liberty, the only liberty I mean, is a liberty connected with order, and that not only exists along with order and virtue, but which cannot exist at all without them. It inheres in good and steady Government, as in its substance and vital principle.

The other source of our power is commerce, of which you are so large a part, and which cannot exist, no more than your liberty, without a connection with many virtues. It has ever been a very particular and a very favourite object of my study, in its principles and its details. I think many here are acquainted with the truth of what I say. This I know, that I have ever had my house open, and my poor services ready for traders and manufacturers of every denomination. My favourite ambition is to have those services acknowledged. I now appear before you to make trial, whether my earnest endeavours have been so wholly oppressed by the weakness of my abilities, as to be rendered insignificant in the eyes of a great trading city, or whether you choose to give weight to humble abilities for the sake of the honest exertions with which they are accompanied. This is my trial to-day. My industry is not on trial: of my industry I am sure, as far as my constitution of mind and body admitted.

When I was invited by many respectable merchants, freeholders, and freemen of this city, to offer them my services, I had just received the honour of an election at another place, at a very great distance from this. I immediately opened the matter to those of my worthy constituents who were with me, and they unanimously advised me not to decline it; that they had elected me with a view to the publick service; and that as great questions relative to our commerce and Colonies were imminent, that in such matters I might derive authority and support from the representation of this great commercial city; they desired me therefore to set off without delay, very well persuaded that I never could forget my obligations to them or to my friends, for the choice they have made of me. From that time re this instant I have not slept, and if I should have the honour of being freely chosen by you, I hope I shall be as far from slumbering or sleeping when your service requires me to be awake, as I have been in coming to offer myself a candidate for your favour.

DOCTOR SAMUEL COOPER TO MR. JOHN ADAMS, DATED
OCTOBER 16, 1774.

Having just been informed that Mr. Tudor is going to Philadelphia, I take this opportunity to thank you for the obliging favour of your letter of the 29th September. The struggle, as you justly observe, between fleets and armies and commercial regulations, must be very unequal. We hope, however, that Congress will carry this mode of defence as far as it will go, and endeavour to render it as early effectual as it can be, since the operation of it must necessarily be slow - were we at ease we would wait - but being first seized and griped by the merciless hand of power, we are "tortured even to madness," and yet, perhaps, no people would give a greater example of patience and firmness could the people be sure of the approbation and countenance of the Continent, in consolidating themselves in the best manner they are able, they should have, they say, fresh spirits to sustain the conflict. The report of an uncommon large quantity of British goods sent to New-York and Philadelphia naturally, carries our thoughts to a Non-consumption. Nothing could more thoroughly embarrass these selfish Importers, and none ever deserved more such a punishment.

Our Provincial Congress is assembled; they adjourned from Concord to Cambridge. Among them, and through the Province, the spirit is ardent. And I think the inhabitants of this Town are distracted to remain in it with such formidable fortifications at its entrance. Besides the Regiments expected from the Southward and Canada, we have several Companies from Newfoundland, of which we had no apprehension until they arrived. The Tories depend that the Administration will push their point with all the force that they can spare, and this I think we ought to expect and take into our account.

PENNSYLVANIA COUNCIL.

At a Council held at Philadelphia, on Monday, October 17, 1774:

Present: The Honourable John Penn, Esquire, Governour, William Logan, James Tilghman, Richard Peters, Edward Shippen, Jun., Benjamin Chew, Esquires.

Upon the application of John Patterson, Esquire, Deputy Collector of his Majesty's Customs for this Port, the Governour, with the advice of the Council, issued the following Proclamation, viz:

By the Honourable JOHN PENN, Esquire, Governour and Commander-in-chief of the Province of PENNSYLVANIA, and the Counties of NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas an information has been made to me by John Patterson, Esquire, Collector of his Majesty Customs for the Port of Philadelphia, supported by depositions taken before one of the Justices of the Peace for the County of Philadelphia, that in the night of the twenty-second day of last month, a considerable number of Hogsheads of foreign Sugar were taken from on board the schooner Felicity, Allen Moore, Master, lately arrived from Hispaniola, and put into a store in the Northern Liberties of this City, the said Sugars not having been first entered in the Custom House, nor the Duties thereof paid before they were landed, and that on the next day a great number of people, armed with clubs and staves, appeared at the said store and prevented the Officers of the Customs from breaking open the doors of the same in order to make seizure of the said Sugars; and that afterwards, in the evening of the same day, the said Sugars were violently and forcibly taken from the said store and carried away. I have, therefore, thought fit, with the advice of the Council, to issue this Proclamation; and do hereby strictly charge, enjoin, and require all Judges, Justices, Sheriffs, and all Civil Officers, as well as all others, his Majesty's subjects within this Province, to use their utmost endeavours, by all lawful ways and means, not only to bring to justice all offenders in the premises, but to discountenance and discourage all such violent, outrageous, and illegal proceedings for the future, and also upon all occasions to afford the most speedy and effectual aid and assistance to the Officers of his Majesty's Customs in the legal discharge of their duty.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the said Province, at Philadelphia, the eighteenth day of October, in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four.

JOHN PENN.

By his Honour's command,
JOSEPH SHIPPEN, Jun., Secretary.
GOD save the King.

The Board being of the opinion it would be expedient and necessary to continue in pay for a time longer the Rangers employed in the protection of the Western Frontiers of this Province, they advised the Governour to recommend it to the Assembly, to make provision for that purpose, and the following Message being prepared at the table, was fairly transcribed and delivered to the House by the Secretary, viz:

A Message from the Governour to the Assembly,

GENTLEMEN: By the latest intelligence from the Westward, the Earl of Dunmore was set out on an expedition down the Ohio, against the Shawanese Indians, and it is very uncertain as yet whether the troubles on the Frontiers may subside. I therefore find it incumbent on me to recommend to your consideration the propriety of keeping in pay, for a longer time, the Rangers employed by this Government, or taking such other measures as you may judge on this occasion most proper for the publick security.

JOHN PENN.

October 17, 1774.

CAPTAIN ST. CLAIR TO JOSEPH SHIPPEN, JR,
Ligonier, October 17, 1774.

SIR: Having accidentally met with my friend Mr. Mackay at this place, I take the liberty to introduce him to you. He has an answer to the Messages the Governour sent to the Shawanese and Delawares, not unfriendly, but which you will very well understand. Mr. Mackay is one of the Magistrates that was sent to Virginia. He is a warm friend to this Government, and has some idea of his own importance. I wish you would please to introduce him to the Governour, and let him tell his story. I need not tell you how far a little attention will go with people of a certain character; but this you may depend on, he is an upright, honest man. Excuse my mentioning it, but these gentlemen's expenses on that Virginia trip should certainly be paid them: I know, however, he will not mention it, nor would he forgive me if he knew that I had done it. I dent know how it is, but I am very apt to get into matters I have no sort of business with, and which indeed does not become me; but I will add that I am with the greatest esteem, sir, your very humble and most obedient servant,

AR. ST. CLAIR.

N.B. Past ten o'clock.

SPEECH TO THE GOVERNOUR FROM THE PIPE, A CHIEF OF THE DELAWARE INDIANS.

Brother, the Governour of Pennsylvania: As soon as the Chiefs of our Nation and the Six Nations had received your belts from Captain St. Clair, I was appointed to carry them through all our Villages, and from thence to the Shawanese and Wyandots at Sandusky. I am now returned, and can infom you and your wise men that your messages were well received by all the Tribes, and they all long to meet you or some of your wise men in Council, to renew and brighten the chain of friendship so long subsisting between our forefathers. For our parts, we never mean to let it slip out of our hands; and it is not our fault if it should; it is not in our powers to go to you; but we know it's in your power to come or send some of your wise men to meet us; and it never was more necessary, as this difference subsisting between the Governour of Virginia and the Shawanese gives us all great uneasiness in our minds, and though we have suffered much in some of our people being killed, yet we have done every thing in our power to get this unhappy difference made up, and have now sent a number of our wise men to assist in getting it settled at the places our brother the Governour of Virginia appointed to meet the Shawanese. but I cannot tell whether they will agree or not. (A String.)

In two nights after my return to Colonel Croghan's, some bad white man crossed the River in the night and stole four horses from me, which my friend Mr. Mackay can inform you of, which I hope you will consider and not let me be at the loss of.

THE PIPE, A Chief of the Delaware Nation.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM THE HONOURABLE GOVERNOUR GAGE, TO THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH, DATED BOSTON, OCTOBER 17, 1774,

MY LORD: I transmit your Lordship a number of enclosures, amongst which you will see the Resolves passed by the Representatives who met at Salem, notwithstanding my Proclamation to postpone the Sessions, and adjourned themselves, as was foreseen, to meet Delegates from the Counties and Towns, to Concord, there to form themselves into a Provincial Congress, from whence they have agreed to remove to Cambridge. Your Lordship has a Remonstrance which they have sent to me, and my Answer to it, which I had some difficulty in contriving, as I cannot consider them as a legal Assembly, and a handle would have been made of it had I refused; and it was, moreover, necessary to warn them of their conduct, and require them to desist from such unconstitutional proceedings. There are also copies of two Remonstrances from the County of Worcester, the first of which was so offensive to the King, and not addressed to me as Governor, that I refused to receive it; the last was answered, and the answer transmitted.

The above relate to works I have been making at the entrance of the Town, at which they pretend to be greatly alarmed, lest the inhabitants of the Town should be enslaved, and made hostages of, to force the country to comply with the late Acts: a scheme which they know is not feasible; but I believe the works have hitherto obstructed some pernicious projects they have had in view; which has determined me to refuse all applications for their demolition. And whilst their affected apprehensions for the Town of Boston are held forth, moderation and forbearance has been put to the test, by burning the straw, and sinking boats with bricks, coming for the use of the Troops, and overturning our wood carts. It appears to me to be a part of their system, to pick a quarrel with the Troops, for which reason I was the more cautious to give no pretence for it, that all misfortunes which might happen should be of their own seeking.

There are various reports spread abroad of the motions made at the Provincial Congress whilst at Concord; some it is said moved to attack the Troops in Boston, immediately; others to value the estates in the Town, in order to pay the proprietors the loss they might sustain, and to set the Town on fire; and others proposed to invite the inhabitants into the country, which has been talked off for some time.

By a Letter from General Carleton, of the 20th of September, he determined to send here the Tenth and Fifty-second Regiments, and I conclude them on their way from Quebec; as also General Haldimand with the Forty-seventh Regiment from New-York, where transports have been laying for some weeks to take on board the stores, and I apprehend they are mostly secured. I am to acquaint your Lordship likewise, that Commodore Shuldham, receiving intelligence at Newfoundland of the extraordinary commotions of this country, sent the Rose, man-of-war, immediately here, with two Companies of the Sixty-fifth Regiment, stationed at St. John's, desiring only that they might be replaced in the Spring. I am, &c.

THOMAS GAGE.

P.S. I had once hopes to have sent your Lordship accounts of some conciliatory measures, which I have urged strongly, and recommended the paying for the Tea for a beginning of a reconciliation; but I despair of any overtures of the kind, unless it comes recommended from the Continental Congress, by whose Resolves this people declare their intentions to abide, and use every artifice to engage the rest of the Continent in their own disputes with the mother country.

T.G.

THE EARL OF DARTMOUTH TO THE GOVERNOURS OF THE COLONIES.

[Circular.]

Whitehall, October 19, 1774.

SIR: His Majesty having thought fit by his Order in Council this day to prohibit the exportation from Great Britain of Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition, I herewith enclose to you a copy of the Order; and it is his Majesty's command that you do take the most effectual measures for arresting, detaining, and securing any Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition which may be attempted to be imported into the Province under your Government, unless the master of the ship having such Military Stores on board stroll produce a license from his Majesty or the Privy Council for the exportation of the same from some of the Ports of this Kingdom.

I am, sir, your most obedient humble servant,
DARTMOUTH.

ORDER IN COUNCIL.

At the Court of St. James's, the 19th day of October, 1774: Present, the King's most Excellent Majesty in Council, Earl of Rochford, Earl of Dartmouth, Earl of Suffolk, Lord Viscount Townshend, Lord Mansfield, Lord North.

Whereas an Act of Parliament was passed in the twentieth year of the reign of his Majesty King George the Second, entitled, "An Act to empower his Majesty to prohibit the importation of Saltpetre, and to enforce the law for empowering his Majesty to prohibit the exportation of Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms and Ammunition; and also to empower his Majesty to restrain the carrying coastwise of Saltpetre, Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition;" And his Majesty judging it necessary to prohibit the exportation of Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition out of this Kingdom, or carrying the same coastwise for some time, doth therefore, with the advice of his Privy Council, hereby order, require, prohibit, and command, that no person or persons whatsoever (except the Master General of the Ordnance for his Majesty's service,) do at any time during the space of six months from the date of this Order in Council, presume to transport into any parts out of this Kingdom, or carry coastwise any Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition, or ship or lade any Gunpowder, or any sort of Arms or Ammunition on board any ship or vessel, in order to transport the same into any parts beyond the seas, or carrying the same coastwise, without leave or permission in that behalf, first obtained from his Majesty or his Privy Council, upon pain of incurring and suffering the respective forfeitures and penalties inflicted by the aforementioned Act. And the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral of Great Britain, the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, the Master General of the Ordnance, and his Majesty's Secretary at War, are to give the necessary directions herein, as to them may respectively appertain.

G. CHETWYND.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE GENERAL COMMITTEE OF CHARLESTOWN, SOUTH CAROLINA, OCTOBER 20, 1774.

Whereas, from the prospect of a Non-Importation Agreement being entered into, there is great reason to apprehend that some mercenary individuals, intending to take advantages of the publick distress, are daily engrossing and buying up large quantities of Goods with a view to keep the same for sale, and hereafter to raise or regulate the prices of them; and it has been suggested, that commissions seeming of this tendency, have been received from such persons in some of our sister Colonies:

The General Committee having taken the same into consideration, and being apprehensive of some mischievous consequences, do recommend to, and request of, the Merchants, Shopkeepers, and others in this Colony:

That they will endeavour to detect all such engrossers, and, to the utmost of their power, discourage and defeat their mercenary schemes; and that if they should receive any commissions of this tendency, from any place whatever, they will decline executing the same.

The General Committee do also recommend to the Merchants, Shopkeepers, and others, as they prize the tranquillity and happiness of America, that they will not take advantage of the distresses; but that they will be content with, and demand no more than the usual advance upon such goods and merchandise as they now have by them, or hereafter may be allowed to import.

By order of the Committee,

PETER TIMOTHY, Secretary.

A large Committee was at the same time appointed to see and pursue every measure that shall be necessary for the due observance of the above recommendations, &c.

TO THE PEOPLE OF HALIFAX COUNTY, IN VIRGINIA.

October 20, 1774.

MY COUNTRYMEN: At a time when Ministerial power is exerting all its art, conjoined with threatened force, to deprive the Americans of their natural rights and liberties, and at a time when every true-born son of freedom, who has ever been sensible of the heartfelt satisfaction arising from its enjoyment, ought to unite cheerfully with the majority of the people of the community, of which he must consider himself a member, in all such measures as have been, or may be adopted by those gentlemen, chosen by the suffrages of the people, to guard against and defeat the alarming attack made on our liberty by the hand of arbitrary and unjust power; I say, when this at least may be expected of every individual amongst us, at this alarming conjuncture of affairs, as a duty naturally incumbent on him, how is my soul shocked to find a man, not long since of good fame, of property, and holding an office of some importance to the publick good, striving, with all possible fallacy, to disaffect you, my unsuspecting countrymen, against the noble and patriotic Resolves of the late Convention, entered into by our worthy Deputies, with all that reason and prudence which could possibly have governed men in their situation; the adherence to which, strictly, can alone (in the opinion of those whose known experience of the Constitution ought to give weight to their councils) bring us that relief which the people so ardently pray for, by obtaining a repeal of the oppressive and odious "Boston Port Act," so much the subject of consideration, and so much the important object of our present inquietude; a law, in short, my dear countrymen, which strikes at once at the root of our so long boasted liberties, and which, if submitted to, subjects us to the most abject state of slavery. Distracting ideal and sufficient to rouse the attention of the most careless of liberty! And lives there a man amongst us who dare call himself a free man, and yet so destitute of those exquisite feelings, natural to liberty, as to advise you to recede from the Articles of Association, so solemnly entered into as aforesaid, calculated for your happiness, and thereby yield yourselves up to those chains which tyranny and art have been so long preparing for you? Ignoble attempt! and worthy only of that unfortunate wretch who would prefer slavery to freedom, or, if not preferring it, whose dastardly soul would shrink into nothing at the bare idea of defending, with his life and fortune, that liberty which is his birth-right, and which nothing but the hand of arbitrary power can tear from him. And if the preservation of all that is dear to you, my countrymen, your civil rights, liberties, and property, depend on your strict attention to the Articles of Association, how greatly are you, and the cause of liberty, indebted to Thomas Yu_____, of your County, for the part he has acted towards the completion of this liberal plan? Vain, deluded man, who could think himself, and a few misguided adherents, of importance sufficient to disjoin that well connected plan of self-preservation, entered into by the wisest and best of men, and whose distinguished abilities, displayed on many important occasions, would do honour to the greatest Senate on earth.

But, to address myself more particularly to you, Mr. Yu_____, and for a moment to flatter those machiavelian talents you are known to possess in so great a degree, suppose, by creating, a division of the people, (which you seem so clearly aiming at,) you could thereby blast that noble plan of unanimity, so essentially necessary at this time in baffling the attempts of Ministerial tyranny to reduce us to slavery, and by which means you could be so happy as to find yourself the noble instrument of placing into the hands of the Ministry the only possible means of success, in their cruel and unwarrantable schemes against the now unhappy, but ever brave and loyal Americans; supposing, I repeat, you could thus see your favourite scheme crowned with the wished for success, what great reward could you promise yourself? Riches and honour? No, mistaken man, riches possibly might be the reward of so heroic an action, but honour would have no connection with such a dishonourable an action; and the humane part of mankind would shun you as the wretch who had been capable, from the blackest motives, of sacrificing a brave people to slavery and ruin, and to whom he stood in debt for his daily bread. Remorse must harrow up your soul, and as your crime would be equally as atrocious, so, like the murderer Cain, you would have cause to curse the day you was born. But to quit this horrid picture. You are, sir, and have been for many years, settled amongst us, and for many reasons, although a native of Scotland, you ought to consider yourself as one of us. You have taken a lady to wife, a native of the country, by whom you have several children, who owe their birth to this country, and whom you, no doubt, as you have possessions here, intend settling amongst us. Then, sir, (not to say any thing farther of your being indebted to this country for the fortune you now enjoy,) are you not obligated, by the strongest ties of nature, blood, and gratitude, to defend, with your life and fortune, your now adopted country and your posterity, from the sword of tyranny? And, in so acting, you shew yourself possessed of that gratitude, that private affection for the rights of a country, by whose laws your life and property are protected, and which, above all things, would strongly recommend you to the admiration and friendship of mankind.

This is but a faint drawing of the misery that would certainly follow the one case, or the happiness which would as certainly attend the other. Though faint as the delineation may be, common sense, I think, would not hesitate in her choice; and it is now submitted to you, sir, which side to cherish. To conclude, as to you, sir, let me advise you, as a well-wisher to mankind, to desist immediately in the ungenerous schemes practised on the unwary and unsuspecting people, to persuade, or scare them rather, out of that duty which they owe their country, and which their country at this distracted conjuncture stands so much in need of; or, otherwise, dread that resentment natural to a free but deluded people, who will discover, to your disgrace, that you have been officially active in seducing them from that love for their country which they had so long cherished, and which, as good ministers of the community, they would have brought into action, if they had not been prevented by your specious art. Permit me to ask upon what principles you purpose justifying your strange, presumptuous, and rash conduct? Upon those of self-interest? Sordid man! who had rather see all America involved in a general conflagration, than that he should lose the benefit resulting from his darling cent. per cent. For shame! such a wretch ought to howl out his days in a desert, excluded from all social intercourse with man, as totally unworthy of their society. There is a maxim, however, that I will remind you of, and if you are not totally absorbed in the idea of your own importance, perhaps reflection on your past conduct may induce an attention to it in future, "That private interest ought to yield to publick good." The times never more required such a sacrifice.

And now, my dear countrymen, permit me to conclude with a few more observations to you, and as they are dictated by an unaffected zeal for my country's good, and that ardent desire (which ought to fire the breast of every American) of seeing unanimity prevail not only through this country, but that it may spread its benign influence to every freeborn son of liberty, I hope, therefore, they may merit your serious attention.

You can no longer doubt, I trust, my countrymen, that our civil rights are now invaded by the hostile attack made on them, through the channel of the arbitrary law before alluded to, as by that law not only the right of taxing us when and as they pleased, but the right also of disposing of our private property, is assumed by the British Parliament; and to compel a slavish obedience to those laws, an armed power is sent over; the Town of Boston blocked up, and thousands of its inhabitants thereby deprived of that free trade on which they were immediately dependent. To descant fully on the arbitrary attempts to enslave us, by wicked and designing men in Great Britain, would be going out of the purpose of this address to you; indeed, so much has been said on this subject by abler men by far than myself, that I trust there is not a man so totally unacquainted with the principles of our Constitution as to hesitate now in pronouncing the measures planned by the Ministry against America to be the most arbitrary, unconstitutional, and subversive of our common rights and liberties that the most despotick power on earth could have concerted against a brave, free, and loyal people.

Being thus unhappily situated, can your patriotick friend now stand out in telling you that it is unwarrantable and repugnant to your common interests to break off all connection, in the commercial way, with Great Britain, until such time as the Parliament at home can be brought to a sense of the important injury done America, and as an act of justice due to an injured people, who have been misrepresented to our gracious Sovereign, by designing Ministers, repeal those laws which occasion the unhappy breach between Great Britain and her Colonies, and thereby restore that harmony which once subsisted between them, and which every loyal subject to the King of Great Britain so ardently prays to see take place?

Your strict attention to the political duties of every member of the community will, I am persuaded, enable you to guard yourselves against such flimsy and cobweb doctrines; and that you may not mistake the political duties just mentioned, you will direct your attention to the following lines, which, I trust, will not be thought unworthy of your consideration:

"A society, constituted by common reason, and formed on the plan of common interest, becomes immediately an object of publick attention, veneration, obedience, and inviolable attachment, which ought neither to be seduced by bribes, or awed by threats; an object, in fine, of all those extensive and important duties which arise from so glorious a confederacy; to watch over such a Constitution; to contribute all he can to promote its good, by his reason, his ingenuity, his strength, and every other ability, whether natural or acquired; to resist, and, to the utmost of his power, defeat every encroachment upon it, whether carried on by secret corruption, or open violence, and to sacrifice his ease, his wealth, his power, - nay life itself, in the defence of his country, is the duty, the honour, the interest, and the happiness of every member of it, as it undoubtedly will make him venerable and beloved while he lives, lamented and honoured if he falls in so glorious a cause, and transmit his name, with immortal fame, to the latest posterity."

This is, my countryman, a true sketch of the duty we owe our country, as worthy members of it. He who would attempt to persuade you from it is your professed enemy; and as such you ought to shun and despise him.

You are now put to the grand trial, to acquit yourselves in which, with honour, requires you to call to your aid all your prudence, firmness, and perseverance; for let me remind you once more, that on the event depends this important and truly alarming question, whether we are to be freemen or slaves? But remember that, whether you are the one or the other, ultimately depends altogether, in my humble conception, on the part you act with regard to the Association before spoken of; a steady attention to which will in time, we trust, awaken the attention of the trading people in Great Britain, whose united interest might, more than probable, obtain a repeal of those Acts of Parliament which have irresistibly drove us to the lengths we have now taken for our common preservation. On the contrary, should you, by too niggardly attention to your own immediate private good, violate any of the Articles of Association, and thereby destroy the purpose they were calculated to answer, you at once give the Minister of Great Britain an opportunity of humbling you at his feet, to use his own words, and convinces the world you are unworthy of that freedom which we are at present struggling to preserve.

These are, my countrymen, the sentiments of a man who is sincerely devoted to his country's cause, and such as he dares avow, at the expense of his life, should his country be so unhappy as to call for it, which may Heaven avert! In perusing of which, should any grammatical error present itself, kindly pass it over, as it is the substance, and not the form, which he has been labouring to recommend; and believe him when he tells you that he long since expected to find some abler pen than his exercised in this cause, as the object of this address to you (which he has shortened as much as the subject would possibly admit of) ought to be held up to public view, as an example which others ought carefully to shun.

BRUTUS.

Annapolis, October 20, 1774.

The Brig Peggy Stewart, Capt. Jackson, from London, having on board seventeen packages, containing two thousand three hundred and twenty pounds of that detestable weed Tea, arrived here on Friday last. The Tea was consigned to Thomas Charles Williams, and Company, Merchants in this City. Those of the Committee for Anne Arundel County who were in Town, hearing of the arrival of said vessel, met in the afternoon, and were informed the said vessel had been entered in the forenoon of that day, and the duty on the Tea paid to the Collector by Mr. Anthony Stewart, one of the owners of said brig. Four only of the Committee being present, it was thought advisable to call a meeting of the people. Notice was thereupon immediately given - many of the inhabitants, together with a number of gentlemen from Anne Arundel, Baltimore, and other Counties, who were attending the Provincial Court, met, and having called before them the Importers and the Captain of the ship, together with the Deputy Collector, the question was moved and seconded, whether the Tea should be landed in America or not? and the question being put, it was unanimously determined in the negative.

A Committee of twelve persons was thereupon appointed to attend landing the other goods on board said vessel, and to prevent landing the Tea; after which the meeting adjourned to Wednesday, the 19th, at eleven o'clock. At which time the Members of the Committee and other the inhabitants of the County, were requested to attend at this place.

In consequence of this adjournment a great number of very respectable gentlemen from Anne Arundel, Baltimore, and Prince George's Counties, met here, and amongst others, eight of the Committee for Anne Arundel County. Those of the Committee proceeded to examine into the affair, calling before them Messrs. James and Joseph Williams, and Anthony Stewart, and also took into consideration an offer made by said Williams's and Stewart to destroy the Tea, and make such concessions as might be satisfactory to the Committee and the people assembled. The Committee were of opinion, if the Tea was destroyed by the voluntary act of the owners, and proper concessions made, that nothing further ought to be required. This, their opinion, being reported to the assembly, was not satisfactory to all present. Mr. Stewart then voluntarily offered to burn the vessel and the Tea in her, and that proper acknowledgments should be made and published in the Maryland Gazette. Those acknowledgments were accordingly made, and are as follows:

"We, James Williams, Joseph Williams, and Anthony Stewart, do severally acknowledge that we have committed a most daring insult and act of the most pernicious tendency to the liberties of America; we, the said Williams's in importing the Tea, and said Stewart in paying the duty thereon; and thereby deservedly incurred the displeasure of the people now convened, and all others interested in the preservation of the constitutional rights and liberties of North America - do ask pardon for the same; and we solemnly declare, for the future, that we never will infringe any Resolution by the people for the salvation of their rights, nor will we do any act that may be injurious to the liberties of the people; and to show our desire of living in amity with the friends to America, we do request this meeting, or as many as may choose to attend, to be present, at any place where the people shall appoint, and we will there commit to the flames, or otherwise destroy, as the people may choose, the detestable article which has been the cause of this our misconduct.

"ANTHONY STEWART,

"JOSEPH WILLIAMS

"JAMES WILLIAMS."

After which Mr. Stewart, and Messrs. James and Joseph Williams, owners of the Tea, went on board said vessel, with her sails and colours flying, and voluntarily set fire to the Tea, and, in a few hours, the whole, together with the vessel, was consumed in the presence of a great number of spectators.

Annapolis, October 18, 1774.

The Committee for Anne Arundel County received information from Baltimore that a considerable quantity of Tea was expected on board the Generous Friends, Captain Nairne. The ship arrived on Saturday evening, the 15th instant, and, on examination, it did not appear by the cockets, or entry at the Collector's office, that any Tea had been on board. It appeared by a letter to Mr. Hodgkin, that six chests of Tea had been shipped, and that Captain Nairne refused to sail from London until the Tea was re-landed, for which conduct Captain Nairne had the thanks of this Committee.

By order,
JOHN DUCKET, Cl'k Committee.

TO THE MERCHANTS AND CITIZENS OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, October 20, 1774.

It has been deemed by some proper and eligible to return publick thanks to a set of Mechanics for bravely refusing their assistance in securing their Sovereign's Troops from the inclemencies of the seasons; what acknowledgments are not due to you, gentlemen, for asserting and preserving your rights of thinking and acting in a more humane and reasonable manner, against the unwarrantable and bold attempts of those persons who use the prostituted name of liberty only to infringe that of others with success and impunity. Suffer not then these sons of licentiousness and disorder to encroach further. The unbounded and lawless heights to which they have risen in a neighbouring Province, demands your serious attention; take heed that while the words tyranny and oppression are bandied about and fixed on Britain, you are not unawares enthralled at home, and subjected to a domination the most abject and slavish, viz: that of the idle, the vicious, and profane, for it is not among the industrious artisans, the honest farmers, or frugal tradesmen that you are to look for these children of mischief, tumult, and riot, but among those who either having nothing to lose, or, having wasted their own substance, would gladly become the masters of yours. These are the men who excite sedition and commotions, nay, would even blow the trumpet of rebellion through the land, so they might in the confusion of the times but divide and share in your property. Thanks, gentlemen, thanks for the noble stand on the late occasion, and may every Province, after your example, thus uphold the privileges of freemen and early crush these atrocious intruders on true and genuine liberty.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF NEW-YORK.

New-York, October 20, 1774.

Without entering into the dispute as to the right of the British Parliament to impose Duties in America, I would beg leave to submit some thoughts to consideration, which good policy and a regard to our own interest, might allow to have weight in influencing our judgments in this matter.

Before we make an alteration in any circumstance in life we should consider the value of the good we put to hazard, and the risk we run of being sufferers by the exchange. In the present political case we should place the benefits arising from obedience against the burthens that we are compelled to submit to.

To induce us to submit with cheerfulness we should consider that the Government to which we pay obedience has the power to protect us; and that from the genius of the British Constitution, from the commercial interest and good policy of that Nation, we have every desirable security that its authority over us will be exercised with justness and gentleness, and for our own real advantage, as that must be the best means of promoting its own, And to make us prize the blessings we enjoy under this Government we should consider the circumstances to which we should be reduced were we withdrawn from the protection of Great Britain. In the wide spread Colonies of America, where the country is continually increasing in inhabitants, and improving in cultivation, there will be frequent occasion for alterations and amendments in their Government, Laws, and Provincial Regulation. And where can those inhabitants find such a model of good Government as in the British Constitution? Where can they be directed so well as by the wisdom of a British Senate? How could the frequent jarring interests of different Provinces be adjusted without bloodshed, but by the interposition of the authority of that Government? And how could the power of the whole Continent be collected and applied on any exigency without its supreme direction? When we consider the many encouragements by bounties, and otherwise given by Great Britain for the cultivation of this country, and the production of articles of commerce, when we compare the Duties paid by the subject in Great Britain with those paid by the subject in America for that protection which is common to both, we shall see great cause to admire the tenderness and indulgence of Government towards us. In the infancy of societies, as in the early stage of life, there is an impatience under the restraint of authority. The violent passions of youth often plunge into the greatest distresses, and societies have often been thrown into confusion and disorder by the turbulence of factious demagogues, who have abused the license of the press and the credulity of the people, to serve their own interested or ambitious purposes.

If there should be any persons who endeavour to persuade us into a confidence of our sufficiency to our own government, defence, and protection, let us look well into the characters of such men, and the motives for their conduct, before we suffer ourselves to be influenced by their patriotick pretensions. It may answer the purposes of a present interest to flatter the passions of the multitude, but he who would secure a solid reputation to himself, by promoting the real good and happiness of his country, must not expect a present approbation; he will have to combat the views of particular persons and many popular prejudices, that will expose him to the reproaches of interested minds, and the general censure of his cotemporaries.

Let us consider our present state, our wide spread Continent, the different religious constitutions and interests of the Colonies, their capacity for offence and defence separately and collectively, dependent and independent on Great Britain, let us then ask ourselves by what means the present welfare of America can be best secured, and its future interest promoted. Can we say at this time that we of ourselves are sufficient to these things? Or shall we not be compelled to own that our present security and future happiness depend on maintaining the power and supreme authority of Great Britain. That under her auspices we must establish that order and government which must be the basis of every thing that shall make us great hereafter.

Let it be sufficient to our ambition to lay the firm foundation, and let posterity wait for those materials that may be furnished by the hand of Time, for erecting the goodly and lasting fabrick. But if ever we shall be led by designing men to a vain reliance on our own ability, and dare to the combat the only power that can protect us at present, and open the paths to our future greatness, we shall, by sad experience, be taught, that though we may, for a while, distress her, yet that we have mined ourselves.

For supposing Great Britain should require no allegiance from us, and in return withdraw its protection; or, that we, by an opposition to its authority, could compel it to acknowledge our independence; in either case we should find ourselves a prey to every foreign invader; our extension would be our weakness, and the several Provinces would, in their turn, become subject to the tyranny of demagogues, the disorder of anarchy, and all the calamities of civil war. How infatuated then are the people in a neighbouring Province, who continue to brave the power of Great Britain whilst under her correction? Can they imagine that instigating other Provinces to revolt from her authority will be the means to relieve them from chastisement? Having drawn on themselves her resentment, will they further incense her wrath, and persist in disobedience to their own destruction?

Will other Provinces forego the advantages of the protection and commerce of Great Britain because they are justly severely corrected? Will they not rather learn wisdom by their misconduct and misfortunes? In vain may we now expect that the merchants and manufacturers in Great Britain will rouse in our cause and join in our clamour, or that we can again prevail upon Parliament to repeal the laws of the Empire. The mercantile subjects in Great Britain are now well persuaded that a spirit for illicit trade is the principal motive for all our resistance; and they are satisfied, that to recover the debts due to them in this country, and to maintain the commerce of the Nation with America, it is necessary for them to join in supporting the authority of Government over us.

But supposing the Southern Provinces should shut up their Ports, put a stop to all commerce with Great Britain, and gratify all the sanguine expectations of the Bostonians, cannot Great Britain turn the course of commerce into other channels? Cannot it open other Ports, and give protection and encouragement to well-disposed subjects to establish therein? Yea, and can furnish both ships and mariners to carry on that commerce.

She can soon raise a small village into a great city, or reduce a proud and factious metropolis to a fishing hamlet.

Let us then see that we can only rise to greatness by a reflection of glory from Great Britain, that every assistance we lend her in support of her power, is repaid by the protection she yields us against outward enemies, and by the establishment she makes for the maintenance of order and government within, and that our present peace and welfare, and future happiness, and glory, depend upon securing that protection and support by our duty and affection.

FRANCES TOWN RESOLVES.

We the subscribers, being Inhabitants of Frances Town, having taken into our most serious consideration the alarming affairs of this Country at the present day, do most firmly enter into the following Resolutions, viz:

1st. That we will at all times defend our liberties and privileges, both civil and religious, even to the risk of our fortunes; and will not only disapprove of, but wholly despise, such persons as we have just and solid reason to think wish us deprived of the same.

2d. Resolved, That we do abhor and abominate all oppressive acts of persons in power, whether Magistrate or Officer, whereby the poor are distressed and unlawfully robbed of their properties in any unjust manner whatever; and we will always endeavour to treat them with such neglect and contempt as they justly deserve.

3d. Resolved, That we will at all times be ready to assist the Civil Magistrates in the due execution of their offices at the risk of our lives; and will at all times show our disapprobation of all unlawful proceedings of unjust men congregating together, as they pretend to maintain their liberties, and even trample under foot the very law of liberty, and wholly destroy that law our whole land firmly wish, and desire to maintain. And we,

4thly. Resolved, They are bold despisers of law, and that their proceedings directly tend to the utter subversion of all regularity and good order among his Majesty's good subjects in this land.

SILAS DEANE TO GOVERNOUR TRUMBULL,

Philadelphia, October 12, 1774.

SIR: The business lying before the Congress appears so nearly closed that we doubt not but that we shall be able to leave this City next Wednesday or Thursday; all the capital points are agreed on, and I have the pleasure of assuring your Honour that the greatest unanimity has subsisted through the whole of our proceedings. Our Resolves, Addresses, &c., are preparing for the press, having already been signed by each Member of the Congress.

But I find in this, like other Assemblies, that the finishing part of the business, which being the most critical, and requiring the greatest attention is too often left to the close of the session, and is of course ever in danger of suffering through the hurry of the Members. Our President is obliged to leave us to-morrow in order to meet the House of Burgesses of Virginia, and if we can set out on Thursday next I hope to be in New-Haven the Monday following.

I am with great truth and regard your Honour's most obedient most humble servant,
SILAS DEANE.
Governour Trumbull.

P.S. You will excuse my enclosing Mr. Hosmer's Letter with yours; the safety of the conveyance in this way is the cause.

GEORGIA.

By his Excellency Sir JAMES WRIGHT, Baronet, Captain General, Governour, and Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's said Province of GEORGIA, Chancellor and Vice Admiral of the same:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, by a Proclamation under my hand and the great seal of this Province, dated at Savannah, on the 11th day of June, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-three, it was set forth that in obedience to his Majesty's Royal Instructions a Congress was held at Augusta by his said Excellency and the Honourable John Stuart, Esquire, and sundry Kings, Headmen and Warriours of the Creek and Cherokee Indians, who were fully authorized and empowered to attend at the said Congress, and to act for their several Nations and Tribes respectively; and whereas the said Creek and Cherokee Indians did, at the said Congress, on the third day of the said month of June, duly make and execute a Treaty or Deed of Cession of certain Lands above Little River and Broad River, upon Savannah River, and cross the country towards the Oconee River, and also of certain other lands between the Altamaha River and Ogeechee River; and which lands by his Majesty's Instructions, are to be sold and disposed of to such of his good subjects who might remove into this Province to purchase and settle thereon. It was therefore thereby notified, that Surveyors are appointed, and were then running and marking out lines of the land ceded as aforesaid; and that the same would be parcelled out in different tracts as soon as conveniently might be, the better to accommodate the buyers according to their number in family, and which lands would be sold and granted to the purchasers agreeable to his Majesty's Instructions; that is to say, one hundred acres to the master or head of the family, and fifty acres for the wife and each child, and also fifty acres for each slave; and, for the further encouragement of the settling of the said lands, the masters or heads of families would be allowed to purchase fifty acres for each able-bodied white servant man who they should bring in to settle thereon, provided such servants were indentured for a term not less than two years, to commence from the time they came into the Province; and also twenty-five acres for every woman servant, from the age of sixteen years to forty years, provided such women servants were indentured for a term not less than two years, to commence from the time they came into the Province, and that the master made oath that said servant or servants were bona fide meant to be employed on the said lands, and should not, with his privacy or consent, remove out of this Province during the term of his or her servitude. And it was further notified that all persons were then at liberty to come into this Province to view the said lands, and to make choice for themselves of such tract of land as they might like best to purchase and settle upon, and which would be granted them on the most moderate terms according to the quality of the same; and it was further notified, that his most gracious Majesty, as an encouragement to his good subjects to purchase and settle on the said lands, had been pleased to authorize the Governour of the said Province to sign grants, exempted from the payment of quit-rents, for the term of ten years from the date thereof; and it was also expected that some other exemptions and privileges would be granted to the said settlers by the Legislature of this Province; and it was necessary also to declare for the information and satisfaction of such as might be disposed to purchase and settle as aforesaid, that the said lands are in general of the most fertile quality, and fit for the production of Wheat, Indian Corn, Indigo, Tobacco, Hemp, Flax, &c.; that it is a pleasant and healthy part of the Province, and that the said lands are extremely well watered by Savannah River, Ogeechee River, Little River, and Broad River, and a great number of Creeks and Branches which run through the whole country, and empty themselves into the aforesaid rivers; also, that there is abundance of springs and very fine water; that Little River, where the land ceded as aforesaid begins, is about twenty-two miles above the Town of Augusta, which Town is only one hundred and thirty miles above the Town of Savannah, which is the seat of Government in this Province; that the settlers will always find a ready sale and market at Augusta for every kind of produce and stock that may be raised by them, or if they prefer it, have very good and safe water carriage down Savannah River to the Town of Savannah; and if they rather choose to carry their produce by land there is a very good wagon road all the way from Little River to Savannah; and it was further notified and declared, that to the end the said settlers may be safe and secure with respect to their persons and properties, and in order to prevent any interruptions to them by disorderly hunters, vagrants, and wanderers, or by straggling Indians, a fort would be forthwith built, and garrisoned by a competent number of officers and men to be employed as rangers for the security and protection of the settlers; and that there is a very good and sufficient law in this Province for the punishment of vagrants and disorderly white people; and that the several officers of the troops of rangers would be put in the commission of the peace, in order the better to enable them to enforce and execute the law against vagrants, &c.; that the said lands adjoin a well settled part of the Province, where Law, Justice, and Government have their fill and free force, and effect great blessings to well disposed people, and which cannot be enjoyed in more remote new settlements; and that in general, every thing would be done in the power of this Province to establish good order in the said settlements, and to promote the interest and happiness of the settlers on the said lands. And it is hereby notified and declared, that all the several matters and things in the former Proclamation as are herein recited, are now fully confirmed: And whereas in the months of December and January last some murders were committed by the Creek Indians, which prevented many people from purchasing and settling said lands, notwithstanding which, a great many who had purchased, built upon, and settled their lands before the said murders were committed, have ever since continued on their Plantations without the least interruption from the said Indians, or any of them; and whereas it fully and clearly appears that the said murders were committed by the Creek Indians without the consent or knowledge of the Nation; and whereas satisfaction was demanded of the Creek Nation for the murders committed by some of their people as aforesaid; and whereas a great number of the Kings, Warriours, and Chiefs of the said Creek Indians have lately come to Savannah, and declared themselves fully authorized and empowered by the whole Nation of the Upper and Lower Creek Indians to negotiate and settle all matters relative to the aforesaid murders, and to solicit a renewal of peace, friendship, and commerce; and whereas a Congress hath been held by me, the Honourable John Stuart, Esquire, his Majesty's Superintendent, and his Majesty's Honourable Council for this Province with the said Indian Chiefs, and whereas the said Indians have entirely submitted to the demand made of satisfaction as aforesaid; and whereas by a Treaty of Peace, Friendship, and Commerce, made in his Majesty's name, and signed by me and all the parties aforesaid, on the twentieth day of this instant, all differences and disputes with the said Indians are thereby fully and wholly adjusted and agreed upon, and a full and firm peace settled with them. I have therefore, with the advice of his Majesty's

Council aforesaid, thought fit to issue this my Proclamation, notifying the same to all his Majesty's liege subjects. And whereas sundry persons before the month of November last past, had applied to purchase part of the lands ceded as aforesaid, and had paid down a deposite in part payment for the same: it is therefore hereby notified and declared to all such persons, that unless they apply and proceed to take out their grants, and settle upon the said land within six months after this date, the deposite money paid as aforesaid, will be forfeited according to the agreement made, and the lands will be sold and granted to any other persons who may apply to purchase the same.

Given under my hand and the great seal of his Majesty's said Province, in the Council Chamber at Savannah, the 24th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four, and in the fourteenth year of the reign of his Majesty King George the Third.

JAMES WRIGHT.

By his Excellency's command,
THOMAS MOODIE, Dep. Secretary.
GOD save the King.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER FROM QUEBEC TO A GENTLEMAN
IN BOSTON, DATED OCTOBER 24, 1774.

At the request of the gentlemen of a Committee from Montreal, I send the enclosed, with an assurance that it is a true translation from the French original, the sentiments of a very (if not most) considerable number of our Canadian brethren and fellow-subjects in this Province, may appear in a just light to our brethren in the Province of the Massachusetts.

Yours, &c.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE ENGLISH GENTLEMEN OF THE COM-MITTEE OF MONTREAL, FROM THE CANADIAN FARMERS,
&c.

We the Canadian Farmers and others, being greatly alarmed at a late Act of Parliament, which re-establishes the ancient laws of this country, the bad effects of which we too severely felt during the French Government, and being entirely satisfied under the English laws as administered in this Province, beg leave to acquaint the gentlemen of the Committee for Montreal, that any legal steps they shall take for the repeal of the said Act will be approved of by us; and we sincerely hope and pray that they will use all means in their power for the same, by petitioning his Majesty, and representing to the Merchants of London the flourishing state of the trade and agriculture of this Province since the conquest thereof, which we attribute to that freedom which every one has enjoyed under the English Laws; and we hereby declare that we never had any hand in a certain Petition said to be sent to his Majesty in the name and in behalf of all the Canadians for obtaining said Act; nor have we, or any part of the country where we reside, been in any wise consulted thereupon; therefore we verily believe that the said Petition was contrived and obtained in a clandestine and fraudulent manner by a few designing men, in order to get themselves into posts of profit and honour.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER DATED AT QUEBEC, OCTOBER
30, 1774.

A Committee is arrived here from the English Inhabitants in Montreal, who have met a Committee of the Inhabitants of this place, and are drawing up a Petition to his Majesty, against the Act of Parliament for regulating the Government of this Province, and hope they will meet with success.

ASSOCIATION SIGNED BY LADIES OF EDENTON, NORTH CAROLINA, OCTOBER 25, 1774.

As we cannot be indifferent on any occasion that appears to affect the peace and happiness of our country; and as it has been thought necessary for the publick good to enter into several particular Resolves by a meeting of Members of Deputies from the whole Province, it is a duty that we owe not only to our near and dear relations and connexions, but to ourselves, who are essentially interested in their welfare, to do every thing as far as lies in our power to testify our sincere adherence to the same; and we do therefore accordingly subscribe this paper as a witness of our fixed intention and solemn determination to do so.

Signed by fifty-one Ladies.

JOSEPH REED, ESQUIRE, TO J. QUINCY, JUNIOR.

Philadelphia, October 26, 1774.

DEAR SIR: I hope this will find you safely arrived in Great Britain, a country wherein I have spent many happy hours, before she began to play the tyrant over America. The cloud which hung over the Colonies, at the time of your departure, begins to disperse. Instead of divided counsels and feeble measures, which at one time there was too much reason to apprehend, all now is union and firmness; and I trust we shall exhibit such a proof of publick virtue and enlightened zeal, in the most glorious of all causes, as will hand down the present age with the most illustrious characters of antiquity. I have, with great difficulty, procured you the proceedings of the General Congress, which is now rising, but your Delegates, from whom I received it, beg you will not make any publick use of it, as the copy is incorrect. Your friend, Mr. John Adams, has written something to this effect in the first page. As the proceedings of this great Assembly are so important and interesting, I could not think of this vessel's going without carrying them to you; another ship will sail in a few days, by which I shall send you what remains, being the list of grievances and the claim of rights. The Congress would not adjourn, but have recommended another to be held the tenth of May, at this place. They part with each other on terms of the utmost friendship; at will have the most happy effect in cementing the union of the Colonies, not only by the ties of publick interest, but of private friendship.

This ship will carry you the account of the destruction, by fire, of both ship and cargo, which arrived at Annapolis. The owners of both, to avoid a more dreadful punishment for their presumption and folly, offered to set fire with their own hands, which they did. These proofs of the spirit of the people will, I trust, be of some service to Boston. The people of England must see that opposition to Parliamentary tyranny is not local or partial. It will also have a happy effect on the Non-Importation Agreement resolved by the Congress, as the owners of ships will not choose to hazard them with forbidden wares.

I congratulate you, my dear sir, upon the rising glory of America: our operations have been almost too slow for the accumulated sufferings of Boston, but I trust they will prove effectual for their relief. Should this bloodless war fail of its effect, an infinite majority of all the Colonies will make the last appeal before they resign their liberties into the hands of any Ministerial Tyrant.

I shall always be happy in hearing from you, by every opportunity; and you may rely on my sending you a faithful and speedy account of every transaction here. I have written to an old correspondent of mine, Mr. Hugh Bailie, a true friend to liberty and the cause of America, that if he will call and see you, you will show him the proceedings of the Congress, which I failed in procuring for him. I salute you with much esteem, and wishing you health and happiness, I am, dear sir, your most obedient humble servant,

J. R.

P. S. I only put the initials of my name, as I believe you remember the handwriting; if not, you will recollect to whom you wrote in this place just before you embarked.

October 27, 1774.

When I wrote you yesterday the Captain of the vessel which carries this had resolved to sail immediately; but having been induced to wait, in order to carry the Address of the Congress to the King, gives me an opportunity of sending you the addition, which we have since had from the press, of their Proceedings.

I congratulate you, my dear sir, on the spirit, and firmness, and unanimity of this great Assembly, the most respectable ever known in this country, and am, with real regard, your affectionate humble servant,

J. R.

PROCEEDINGS OF
THE CONGRESS HELD AT PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER 5, 1774.

Monday, September 5, 1774.

A number of the Delegates, chosen and appointed by the several Colonies and Provinces in North America, to meet and hold a Congress at Philadelphia, assembled at the Carpenter's Hall. Present:

From NEW-HAMPSHIRE. - Major John Sullivan, Esq., Col. Nathaniel Folsom, Esquire.

From MASSACHUSETTS BAY. - The Honourable Thomas Crashing, Esquire, Mr. Samuel Adams, John Adams, Esquire, Robert Treat Paine, Esquire.

From RHODE-ISLAND and PROVIDENCE Plantations. - The Hon. Stephen Hopkins, Esquire, the Hon. Samuel Ward, Esquire.

From CONNECTICUT. - The Hon. Eliphalet Dyer, Esq., Silas Deane, Esq., the Hon. Roger Sherman, Esquire.

From the City and County of NEW-YORK, and other Counties in the Province of NEW-YORK. - James Duane, Esq., John Jay, Esq., Philip Livingston, Esq., Isaac Low, Esquire.

From the County of SUFFOLK, in the Province of NEW-YORK. - Colonel William Floyd, Esquire.

From NEW-JERSEY. - James Kinsey, Esquire, William Livingston, Esq., John De Hart, Esq., Stephen Crane, Esq., Richard Smith, Esquire.

From PENNSYLVANIA. - The Hon. Joseph Galloway, Esq., Samuel Rhoads, Esquire, Thomas Mifflin, Esquire, Charles Humphreys, Esq., John Morton, Esq., Edward Biddle, Esquire.

From NEW-CASTLE, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE. - Cæsar Rodney, Esq., Thomas M'Kean, Esq., George Read, Esquire.

From MARYLAND. - Robert Goldsborough, Esq., William Paca, Esquire, Samuel Chase, Esquire.

From VIRGINIA. - The Hon. Peyton Randolph, Esq., George Washington, Esq., Patrick Henry, Esq., Richard Bland, Esquire, Benjamin Harrison, Esquire, Edmund Pendleton, Esq.

From SOUTH CAROLINA. - Henry Middleton, Esquire, John Rutledge, Esq., Christopher Gadsden, Esq., Thomas Lynch, Esquire, Edward Rutledge, Esquire.

The Congress proceeded to the choice of a President, when the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esq., was unanimously elected.

Mr. Charles Thomson was unanimously chosen Secretary.

The gentlemen from the several Colonies produced their respective Credentials, which were read and approved as follows:

FOR THE PROVINCE OF NEW-HAMPSHIRE

At a Meeting of the Deputies appointed by the several Towns in this Province, held at Exeter, in the County of Rockingham, 21st July, 1774, for the election of Delegates, on behalf of this Province, to join the General Congress proposed: Present eighty-five members.

The Hon. John Wentworth, Esq., in the Chair.

Voted, That Major John Sullivan, and Colonel Nathaniel Folsom, Esquires, be appointed and empowered, as Delegates on the part of this Province, to attend and assist in the General Congress of Delegates from the other Colonies, at such time and place as may be appointed, to devise, consult, and adopt measures, as may have the most likely tendency to extricate the Colonies from their present difficulties; to secure and perpetuate their rights, liberties, and privileges, and to restore that peace, harmony, and mutual confidence which once happily subsisted between the parent country, and her Colonies.

Attested: J. WENTWORTH, Chairman.

FOR THE PROVINCE OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

In the House of Representatives, JUNE, 17, 1774.

This House having duly considered, and being deeply affected with the unhappy differences which have long subsisted, and are increasing, between Great Britain and the American Colonies, do Resolve: That a meeting of Committees from the several Colonies on this Continent, is highly expedient and necessary, to consult upon the present state of the Colonies, and the miseries to which they are and must be reduced by the operation of certain Acts of Parliament respecting America, and to deliberate and determine upon wise and proper measures, to be by them recommended to all the Colonies, for the recovery and establishment of their just rights and liberties, civil and religious, and the restoration of union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies, most ardently desired by all good men. Therefore,

Resolved, That the Honourable James Bowdoin, Esq., the Honourable Thomas Cushing, Esquire, Mr. Samuel Adams, John Adams and Robert Treat Paine, Esquires, be, and they are hereby appointed a Committee on the part of this Province, for the purposes aforesaid, any three of whom to be a quorum, to meet such Committees or Delegates, from the other Colonies as have been or may be appointed, either by their respective Houses of Burgesses, or Representatives, or by Convention, or by the Committees of Correspondence appointed by the respective Houses of Assembly, in the City of Philadelphia, or any other place that shall be judged most suitable by the Committee, on the 1st day of September next; and that the Speaker of the House be directed, in a letter to the Speakers of the Houses of Burgesses or Representatives in the several Colonies, to inform them of the substance of these Resolves.

Attested: SAMUEL ADAMS, Clerk.

FOR RHODE-ISLAND.

By the Honourable Joseph Wanton, Esquire, Gavel:Hour, Captain-General, and Commander-in-chief of, and over the English Colony of Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, in New England, in America.

To the Honourable STEPHEN HOPKINS, Esquire, and the Honourable SAMUEL WARD, Esquire, Greeting:

Whereas the General Assembly of the Colony aforesaid, have nominated and appointed you, the said Stephen Hopkins and Samuel Ward, to represent the people of this Colony in a General Congress of Representatives from this and the other Colonies, at such time and place as should be agreed upon by the major part of the Committees appointed, or to be appointed by the Colonies in general; I do therefore hereby authorize, empower, and commissionate you, the said Stephen Hopkins and Samuel Ward, to repair to the City of Philadelphia, it being the place agreed on by the major part of the Colonies, and there, in behalf of this Colony, to meet and join with the Commissioners or Delegates from the other Colonies, in consulting upon proper measures to obtain a repeal of the several Acts of the British Parliament for levying Taxes upon his Majesty's subjects in America, without their consent, and particularly an Act lately passed for blocking up the Port of Boston, and upon proper measures to establish the rights and liberties of the Colonies upon a just and solid foundation, agreeable to the Instructions given you by the General Assembly.

Given under my hand and the seal of the said Colony, this 10th day of August, in the year of our [L. S.] Lord 1774, and the fourteenth of the reign of his most sacred Majesty George the Third, by the grace of God, King of Great Britain, &c.

HENRY WARD, Secretary.

FOR CONNECTICUT.

In the House of Representatives of the Colony of CONNECTICUT, JUNE 3, 1774.

Whereas a Congress of Commissioners from the several British Colonies in America, is proposed by some of our neighbouring Colonies, and thought necessary; and whereas it may be found expedient that such Congress should be convened before the next session of this Assembly:

Resolved, By this House, that the Committee of Correspondence be, and they are hereby, empowered, on application to them made, or from time to time, as may be found necessary, to appoint a suitable number to attend such Congress, or Convention of Commissioners, or Committees of the several Colonies in British America, and the persons thus to be chosen shall be, and they are hereby directed, in behalf of this Colony, to attend such Congress; to consult and advise on proper measures for advancing the best good of the Colonies, and such conferences, from time to time, to report to this House.

A true extract and copy from the Journal of the House.
Attest: WILLIAM WILLIAMS, Clerk

Colony of CONNECTICUT, SS.

New-London, July 13, 1774.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Correspondence for this Colony:

The Hon. EBENEZER SILLIMAN, Esq., Chairman.

The Honourable Eliphalet Dyer, the Honourable William Samuel Johnson, Erastus Wolcott, Silas Deane, and Richard Law, Esquires, were nominated, pursuant to the Act of the Honourable House of Representatives of the said Colony, at their sessions in May last, either three of which are hereby, authorized and empowered, in behalf of this Colony, to attend the General Congress of the Colonies, proposed to be held at Philadelphia, on the first day of September next, or at such other time and place as shall be agreed on by the Colonies, to consult and advise with the Commissioners or Committees of the several English Colonies in America, on proper measures for advancing the best good of the Colonies.

SIGNED, Ebenezer Silliman, William Williams, Benjamin Payne, Erastus Wolcott, Joseph Trumbull, Samuel H. Parsons, Nathaniel Wales, Junior, Silas Deane.

Colony of CONNECTICUT, SS.

Hartford, August, 1774.

At a Meeting of the Committee of Correspondence for this Colony:

ERASTUS WOLCOTT, Chairman.

The Honourable William Samuel Johnson, Erastus Wolcott, and Richard Law, Esquires, nominated by this Committee at New-London, on the 13th of July last, as persons proper to attend the General Congress, to be held at Philadelphia, on the first of September next, as by said appointment, being unable, by reason of previous engagements and the state of their health, to attend said Congress on behalf of this Colony; the Honourable Roger Sherman, and Joseph Trumbull, Esquires, were nominated in the place of the aforesaid gentlemen, as persons proper to attend said Congress, in behalf of this Colony, either of which are empowered, with the Honourable Eliphalet Dyer and Silas Deane, Esquires, for that purpose.

SIGNED, Wm. Williams, Benjamin Payne, Joseph Trumbull, Nathaniel Wales, Junior, Samuel H. Parsons, and Samuel Bishop.

FOR NEW-YORK.

By duly certified polls, taken by proper persons, in seven Wards, it appears that James Daane, John Jay, Philip Livingston, Isaac Low, and John Alsop, Esquires, were elected as Delegates. for the City and County of New-York, to attend the Congress at Philadelphia, the first day of September next; and at a Meeting of the Committees of the several Districts in the County of Westchester, the same gentlemen were appointed to represent that County; also by a letter from Jacob Lansing, Junior, Chairman, in behalf of the Committee for Albany, it appears that that City and County had adopted the same for their Delegates. By another letter it appears that the Committees from the several Districts in the County of Dutchess, had likewise adopted the same as Delegates to represent that County in Congress, and that Committees of other Towns approve of them as their Delegates.

By a writing, duly attested, it appears the County of Suffolk, in the Colony of New-York, have appointed Colonel William Floyd to represent them in Congress.

FOR NEW-JERSEY.

To JAMES KINSEY, WM. LIVINGSTON, JOHN DE HART, STEPHEN CRANE, and RICHARD SMITH, Esquires, each and every of you:

The Committees appointed by the several Counties of the Calmly of New-Jersey, to nominate Deputies to represent the same in the General Congress of Deputies from the other Colonies in America, convened at the City of New-Brunswick, have nominated and appointed, and do hereby nominate and appoint you, and each of you, Deputies to represent the Colony of New-Jersey, in the said General Congress.

In testimony whereof the Chairmen of the said several Committees here met, have hereunto set their hands, this twenty-third day of July, in the fourteenth year of the reign of our sovereign Lord George the Third, and in the year of our Lord 1774.

FOR PENNSYLVANIA.

Extract from Votes of the Assembly.

Friday, July 22, 1774, A. M.

The Committee of the Whole House taking into their most serious consideration the unfortunate differences which have long subsisted between Great Britain and the American Colonies, and been greatly increased by the operation and effects of divers late Acts of the British Parliament:

Resolved, N. C. D. That there is an absolute necessity that a Congress of Deputies from the several Colonies be held as soon as conveniently may be, to consult together upon the present unhappy state of the Colonies, and to form and adopt a plan for the purposes of obtaining redress of American grievances, ascertaining American rights upon the most solid and constitutional principles, and for establishing that union and harmony between Great Britain and the Colonies which is indispensably necessary to the welfare and happiness of both.

Eodem die, P. M.

The House resumed the consideration of the Resolve from the Committee of the Whole House, and, after some debate thereon, adopting and confirming the same,

Resolved, N. C. D. That the Honourable Joseph Galloway, Speaker, Samuel Rhoads, Thomas Mifflin, Charles Humphreys, John Morton, George Ross, and Edward Biddle, Esquires, be, and they are hereby, appointed a Committee on the part of this Province, for the purposes aforesaid, and that they, or any four of them, do meet such Committees or Delegates from the other Colonies, as have been or may be appointed, either by their respective Houses of Representatives, or by Convention, or by the Provincial or Colony Committees, at such time and place as shall be generally agreed on by such Committees.

For the three Counties NEW-CASTLE:, KENT, and SUSSEX, on DELAWARE.

August 1, 1774, A. M.

The Representatives of the Freemen of the Government of the Counties of New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, met at New-Castle, in pursuance of circular letters from the Speaker of the House, who was requested to forward the same to the several Members of Assembly, by the Committees of Correspondence for the several counties aforesaid, chosen and appointed for that among other purposes, by the Freeholders and Freemen of the said Counties respectively: and having chosen a Chairman, and read the Resolves of the three respective Counties, and sundry Letters from the Committees of Correspondence along the Continent, they unanimously entered into the following Resolution, viz:

We, the Representatives aforesaid, by virtue of the power delegated to us, as aforesaid, taking into our most serious consideration the several Acts of the British Parliament for restraining Manufactures in his Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in North America, - for taking away the property of the Colonists without their participation or consent, - for the introduction of the arbitrary powers of excise unto the customs here, - for the making all revenue excises liable without jury, and under the decision of a single dependent Judge, - for the trial, in England, of persons accused of capital crimes, committed in the Colonies, - for the shutting up the Port of Boston, for new-modelling the Government of the Massachusetts Bay, and the operation of the same on the property, liberty, and lives of the Colonists; and also considering that the most eligible mode of determining upon the premises, and of endeavouring to procure relief and redress of our grievances, would have been by us assembled in a legislative capacity, but that as the House had adjourned to the 30th day of September next, and it is not to be expected that his Honour the Governour would call us, by writs of summons, on this occasion, having refused to do the like in his other Province of Pennsylvania; the next most proper method of answering the expectations and desires of our constituents, and of contributing our aid to the general cause of America, is to appoint Commissioners or Deputies in behalf of the people of this Government, to meet and act with those appointed by the other Provinces in General Congress; and we do, therefore, unanimously nominate and appoint Cæsar Rodney, Thomas M'Kean, and George Read, Esquires, or any two of them, Deputies on the part and behalf of this Government in a general Continental Congress, proposed to be held at the City of Philadelphia, on the first Monday in September next, or at any other time or place that may be generally agreed on, then and there to consult and advise with the Deputies from the other Colonies, and to determine upon all such prudent and lawful measures as may be judged most expedient for the Colonies immediately and unitedly to adopt, in order to obtain relief for an oppressed people, and the redress of our general grievances.

Signed by order of the Convention,

CÆSAR RODNEY, Chairman.

FOR MARYLAND.

At a Meeting of the Committees appointed by the several Counties of the Province of Maryland, at the City of Annapolis, the 22d day of June, 1774, and continued by adjournment, from day to day, till the 25th of the same month: Matthew Tilghman, Esquire, in the Chair, John Duckett, Clerk:

Resolved, That Matthew Tilghman, Thomas Johnson, Jun., Robert Goldsborough, William Paca, and Samuel Chase, Esquires, or any two or more of them, be Deputies for this Province, to attend a General Congress of Deputies from the Colonies, at such time and place as may be agreed on, to effect one general plan of conduct, operating on the commercial connection of the Colonies with the mother country, for the relief of Boston, and preservation of American liberty.

FOR VIRGINIA.

MONDAY, first of August in the year of our Lord 1774.

At a General Meeting of Delegates from the different

FOURTH SERIES.

Counties in this Colony, convened in the City of Willam-burgh, to take under their consideration the present critical and alarming situation of the Continent of North America,

Honourable Peyton Randolph, Esq., in the Chair,

It was unanimously Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that it will be highly conducive to the security and happiness of the British Empire, that a General Congress of Deputies, from all the Colonies, assemble as quickly as the nature of their situations will admit, to consider of the most proper and effectual manner of so Operating on the commercial connection of the Colonies with the mother country as to procure redress for the much injured Province of Massachusetts Bay, to secure British America from the ravage and ruin of arbitrary taxes, and speedily as possible to procure the return of that harmony and union so beneficial to the whole Empire, and so ardently desired by all British America.

Friday, August 5, 1774,

The meeting proceeded to the choice of Delegates to represent this Colony in General Congress, when the Honourable Peyton Randolph, Richard Henry Lee, George Washington, Patrick Henry, Richard Bland, Benjamin Harrison, and Edmund Pendleton, Esquires, were appointed for that purpose.

FOR SOUTH CAROLINA.

In the Commons House of Assembly, Tuesday, the 2dday of August, 1774.

Colonel Powell acquainted the House, that during the recess of this House, viz: on the sixth, seventh, and eighth days of July last, at a General Meeting of the Inhabitants of this Colony, they having under consideration the Acts of Parliament lately passed with regard to the Port of Boston and Colony of Massachusetts Bay, as well as other American Grievances, had nominated and appointed the Honourable Henry Middleton, John Rutledge, Thomas Lynch, Christopher Gadsden, and Edward Rutledge, Esquires, Deputies on the part and behalf of this Colony, to meet the Deputies of the other Colonies of North America in General Congress, the first Monday in September next, at Philadelphia, or at any other time and place that may be generally agreed on, there to consider the Acts lately passed, and Bills depending in Parliament, with regard to the Port of Boston and Colony of Massachusetts Bay, which Acts and Bills in the precedent and consequences affect the whole Continent of America also the grievances under which America labours, by reason of the several Acts of Parliament that impose taxes or duties for raising a revenue, and lay unnecessary restraints and burdens on trade; and of the Statutes, Parliamentary Acts, and Royal Instructions, which make an invidious distinction between his Majesty's subjects in Great Britain and America, with full power and authority to concert, agree to, and effectually prosecute such legal measures as in the opinion of the said Deputies, and of the Deputies so to be assembled, shall be most likely to obtain a repeal of the said Acts, and a redress of those grievances: and thereupon moved that this House do resolve to recognise, ratify, and confirm the said appointment of the Deputies for the purposes aforesaid.

Resolved, N. C. D. That this House do recognise, ratify, and confirm the appointment of the said Deputies for the purposes mentioned in the said motion.

Attested,

THOMAS FARR, Jun., Clerk.

Wednesday, * September 14, 1774, A. M.

The Congress met according to adjournment.

William Hooper and Joseph Hewes, Esquires, two of the Deputies from North Carolina, attended the Congress and produced their credentials, as follows:

NORTH CAROLIAN. - At a General Meeting of Deputies of the Inhabitants of this Province, at Newbern, the twenty-fifth day of August, 1774:

Resolved, That we approve of the proposal of a General Congress, to be held in the City of Philadelphia, on

* On Friday, September 16th, the Honourable Delegates, now met in General Congress, was elegantly entertained by the gentlemen of Philadelphia. Having met at the City Tavern about three o'clock, they were conducted from thence to the State House by the Managers of the entertainment, where they were received by a very large company, composed of the Clergy, such genteel strangers as happened to be in Town, and a number of respectable citizens, making in the whole near five hundred.

After dinner the following Toasts were drank:

1. The King. 2. The Queen. 3. The Duke of Gloucester. 4. The Prince of Wales and Royal family. 5. Perpetual Union to the Colonies. 6. May the Colonies faithfully execute what the Congress shall wisely resolve. 7. The much injured Town of Boston and Province of Massachusetts Bay. 8. May Great Britain be just, and America free. 9. No unconstitutional Standing Armies. 10. May the cloud which hangs over Great Britain and the Colonies bust only on the heads of the present Ministry. 11. May every American hand down to posterity pure and untainted the liberty he has derived from his ancestors. 12. May no man enjoy freedom who has not spirit to defend it. 13. May the persecuted Genius of Liberty find a lasting asylum in America. 14. May British swords never be drown in defence of tyranny. 15. The Arts and Manufactures of America. 16. Confusion to the authors of the Canada Bill. 17. The Liberty of the Press. 18. A happy conciliation between Great Britain and her Colonies on a constitutional ground. 19. The virtuous few in both Houses of Parliament. 20. The City of London. 21. Lord Chatham. 22. Lord Camden. 23. Bishop of St. Asaph. 24. Duke of Richmond. 25. Marquis of Rockingham. 26. Sir George Savile. 27. Mr. Burke. 28. General Conway. 29. Mr. Danning. 30. Mr. Sawbridge. 31. Dr. Franklin. 32. Mr. Hancock.

The acclamations with which several of them were received, not only testified the sense of the honour conferred by such worthy guests, but the fullest confidence in their wisdom and integrity, and a firm resolution to adopt and support such measures as they shall direct for the publick good at this alarming crisis.

the twentieth of September next, then and there to deliberate upon the present state of British America, and to take such measures as they may deem prudent, to effect the purpose of describing with certainty the rights of Americans; repairing the breaches made in those rights, and for guarding them for the future from any such violations done under the sanction of publick authority.

Resolved, That William Hooper, Joseph Hewes, and Richard Caswell, Esquires, and every of them, be Deputies to attend such Congress, and they are hereby invested with such powers as may make any acts done by them, or consent given in behalf of this Province, obligatory in honour upon every inhabitant hereof, who is not an alien to his country's good, and an apostate to the liberties of America.

Signed, JOHN HARVEY, Moderator.
Attested, ANDREW KNOX, Clerk.

The above being read and approved, the Deputies took their seats.

Henry Wisner, a Delegate from the County of Orange, in the Colony of New-York, appeared at Congress, and produced a certificate of his election by the said County, which, being read and approved, he took his seat in Congress as a Deputy for the Colony of New-York.

George Ross, Esquire, one of the Delegates for the Province of Pennsylvania, and John Alsop, Esquire, one of the Delegates for the Colony of New-York, appeared and took their seats in Congress.

Ordered, That William Hooper and Joseph Hewes, Esquires, from North Carolina, be added to the Committee appointed to state the rights of the Colonies.

Ordered, That Willam Hooper, Esquire, be one of the Committee appointed to report the Statutes which affect the Trade, &c., of the Colonies.

The Delegates from the Province of Massachusetts Bay, agreeable to a request from the Joint Committees of every Town and District in the County of Middlesex, in the said Province, communicated to the Congress the Proceedings of those Committees at Concord, on the 30th and 31st days of August last, which were read.

Adjourned till to-morrow at nine o'clock.

No business being prepared, the Congress was adjourned from day to day, till Saturday morning at nine o'clock.

Saturday, September 17, 1774, A. M.

The Congress met according to adjournment.

Richard Caswell, Esquire, one of the Deputies from North Carolina, appeared and took his seat in Congress.

The Resolutions entered into by the Delegates from the several Towns and Districts in the County of Suffolk, in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, on Tuesday, the 6th instant, and their Address to his Excellency Governour Gage, dated the 9th instant, were laid before the Congress, and are as follows:

At a Meeting of the Delegates of every Town and District in the County of Suffolk, on Tuesday, the 6th of September, at the house of Mr. Richard Woodward, of Dedham, and, by adjournment, at the house of Mr. Vose, of Milton, on Friday, the 9th instant, Joseph Palmer, Esq., being chosen Moderator, and William Thompson, Esq., Clerk, a Committee was chosen to bring in a Report to the Convention, and the following being several times read, and put, paragraph by paragraph, was unanimously voted, viz:

Whereas the power, but not the justice, the vengeance, but not the wisdom of Great Britain, which of old persecuted, scourged, and exiled our fugitive parents from their native shores, now pursues us, their guiltless children, with unrelenting severity: And whereas, this then savage and uncultivated desert, was purchased by the toil and treasure, or acquired by the blood and valour of those our venerable progenitors; to us they bequeathed the dear-bought inheritance; to our care and protection they consigned it, and the most sacred obligations are upon us to transmit the glorious purchase, unfettered by power, unclogged with shackles, to our innocent and beloved offspring. On the fortitude, on the wisdom, and on the exertions, of this important day, is suspended the fate of this new world, and of unborn millions. If a boundless extent of continent, swarming with millions, will tamely submit to live, move, and have their being, at the arbitrary will of a licentious Ministor, they basely yield to voluntary slavery, and future generations shall load their memories with incessant execrations. On the other hand, if we arrest the hand which would ransack our pockets; if we disarm the parricide which points the dagger to our bosoms; if we nobly defeat that fatal edict which proclaims a power to frame laws for us in all cases whatsoever, thereby entailing the endless and numberless curses of slavery upon us, our heirs, and their heirs forever; if we successfully resist that unparalleled usurpation of unconstitutional power, whereby our capital is robbed of the means of life; whereby the streets of Boston are thronged with military executioners;

whereby our coasts are lined and harbours crowded with ships of war; whereby the Charter of the Colony, that sacred barrier against the encroachments of tyranny, is mutilated, and, in effect, annihilated; whereby a murderous law is framed to shelter villains from the hands of justice; whereby that unalienable and inestimable inheritance which we derived from nature, the Constitution of Britain, and the privileges warranted to us in the Charter of the Province, is totally wrecked, annulled, and vacated, posterity will acknowledge that virtue which preserved them free and happy; and while we enjoy the rewards and blessings of the faithful, the torrent of panegyrists will roll our reputations to that latest period when the streams of time shall be absorbed in the abyss of eternity: Therefore, we have resolved, and do resolve,

1. That whereas his Majesty, George the Third, is the rightful successor to the Throne of Great Britain, and justly entitled to the allegiance of the British Realm, and agreeable to compact, of the English Colonies in America; therefore, we, the heirs and successors of the first planters of this Colony, do cheerfully acknowledge the said George the Third to be our rightful Sovereign, and that said Covenant is the tenure and claim on which are founded our allegiance and submission.

2. That it is an indispensable duty which we owe to God, our country, ourselves, and posterity, by all lawful ways and means in our power, to maintain, defend, and preserve, those civil and religious rights and liberties for which many of our fathers fought, bled, and died, and to hand them down entire to future generations.

3. That the late Acts of the British Parliament for blocking up the Harbour of Boston; for altering the established form of Government in this Colony, and for screening the most flagitious violators of the laws of the Province from a legal trial, are gross infractions of those rights to which we are justly entitled by the laws of nature, the British Constitution, and the Charter of the Province.

4. That no obedience is due from this Province to either or any part of the Acts above mentioned; but that they be rejected as the attempts of a wicked Administration to enslave America.

5. That so long as the Justices of our Superiour Court of Judicature, Court of Assize, &c., and Inferiour Court of Common Pleas in this County, are appointed or hold their places by any other tenure than that which the Charter and the laws of the Province direct they must be considered as under undue influence, and are therefore unconstitutional officers, and, as such, no regard ought to be paid to them by the people of this County.

6. That if the Justices of the Superiour Court of Judicature, Assize &c., Justices of the Court of Common Pleas, or of the General Sessions of the Peace, shall sit and act during their present disqualified state, this County will support and bear harmless all Sheriffs and their Deputies, Constables, Jurors, and other Officers, who shall refuse to carry into execution the orders of said Courts; and, as far as possible, to prevent the many inconveniences which must be occasioned by a suspension of the Courts of Justice, we do most earnestly recommend it to all creditors that they show all reasonable and even generous forbearance to their debtors; and to all debtors, to pay their just debts with all possible speed; and if any disputes relative to debts or trespasses shall arise, which cannot be settled by the parties, we recommend it to them to submit all such causes to arbitration; and it is our opinion that the contending parties, or either of them, who shall refuse so to do, ought to be considered as co-operating with the enemies of this country.

7. That it be recommended to the Collectors of Taxes, Constables, and all other Officers, who have publick moneys in their hands, to retain the same, and not to make any payment thereof to the Provincial County Treasurer, until the Civil Government of the Province is placed upon a constitutional foundation, or until it shall otherwise be ordered by the proposed Provincial Congress.

8. That the persons who have accepted seats at the Council Board, by virtue of a mandamus from the King, in conformity to the late Act of the British Parliament, entitled "An Act for the regulating the Government of the Massachusetts Bay," have acted in direct violation of the duty they owe to their country, and have thereby given great and just offence to this people; therefore, resolved, that this County do recommend it to all persons who have so highly offended by accepting said departments, and have not already publicly resigned their seats at the Council Board, to make publick resignations of their places at said Board, on or before the twentieth day of this instant, September; and that all persons refusing so to do, shall, from and after said day, be considered by this County as obstinate and incorrigible enemies to this country.

9. That the Fortifications begun and now carrying on upon Boston Neck, are justly alarming to this County, and gives us reason, to apprehend some hostile intention against that Town, more especially as the Commander-in-chief has, in a very extraordinary manner, removed the Powder from the Magazine at Charlestown, and has also forbidden the keeper of the Magazine at Boston to deliver out to the owners the Powder which they had lodged in said Magazine.

10. That the late Act of Parliament for establishing the Roman Catholic religion and the French laws in that extensive country now called Canada, is dangerous in an extreme degree to the Protestant religion, and to the civil rights and liberties of all America; and, therefore, as men and Protestant Christians, we are indispensably obliged to take all proper measures for our security.

11. That whereas, our enemies have flattered themselves that they shall make an easy prey of this numerous, brave, and hardy people, from an apprehension that they are unacquainted with military discipline; we, therefore, for the honour, defence, and security of this County and Province advise as it has been recommended to take away all commissions from the Officers of the Militia, that those who now hold commissions, or such other persons be elected in each Town as Officers in the Militia, as shall be judged of sufficient capacity for that purpose, and who have evidenced themselves the inflexible friends to the rights of the people: and that the inhabitants of those Towns and Districts who are qualified, do use their utmost diligence to acquaint themselves with the art of war as soon as possible, and do, for that purpose, appear under arms at least once every week.

12. That during the present hostile appearances on the part of Great Britain, notwithstanding the many insults and oppressions which we most sensibly resent; yet, nevertheless, from our affection to his Majesty, which we have at all times evidenced, we are determined to act merely upon the defensive, so long as such conduct may be vindicated by reason and the principles of self-preservation, but no longer.

13. That, as we understand it has been in contemplation to apprehend sundry persons of this County, who have rendered themselves conspicuous in contending for the violated rights and liberties of their countrymen; we do recommend, should such an audacious measure be put in practice, to seize and keep in safe custody, every servant of the present tyrannical and unconstitutional Government, throughout the County and Province, until the persons so apprehended be liberated from the hand of our adversaries, and restored safe and uninjured to their respective friends and families.

14. That, until our rights are fully restored to us, we will, to the utmost of our power, and we recommend the same to the other Counties, to withhold all commercial intercourse with Great Britain, Ireland, and the West Indies, and abstain from the consumption of British merchandise and manufactures, and especially of East India Teas and Piece Goods, with such additions, alterations, and exceptions only, as the Grand Congress of the Colonies may agree to.

15. That, under our present circumstances, it is incumbent on us to encourage Arts and Manufactures amongst us, by all means in our

be and are hereby appointed a Committee to consider of the best ways and means to promote and establish the same, and to report to this Convention as soon as may be.

16. That the exigencies of our publick affairs demand that a Provincial Congress be called to concert such measures as may be adopted, and vigorously executed by the whole people; and we do recommend it to the several Towns in this County, to choose members for such a Provincial Congress, to be holden at Concord, on the second Tuesday of October, next ensuing.

17. That this County, confiding in the wisdom and integrity of the Continental Congress, now sitting at Philadelphia, pay all due respect and submission to such measures as may be recommended by them to the Colonies, for the restoration and establishment of our just rights, civil and religious, and for renewing that harmony and union between Great Britain and the Colonies, so earnestly wished for by all good men.

18. That whereas, the universal uneasiness which prevails among all orders of men, arising from the wicked and oppressive measures of the present Administration, may influence some unthinking persons to commit outrage upon private property; we would heartily recommend to all persons of this community, not to engage in any routs, riots, or licentious attacks upon the properties of any person whatsoever, as being subversive of all order and government; but, by a steady, manly, uniform, and persevering opposition, to convince our enemies, that in a contest so important, in a cause so solemn, our conduct shall be such as to merit the approbation of the wise, and the admiration of the brave and free of every age and of every country.

19. That should our enemies, by any sudden manœuvres, render it necessary to ask the aid and assistance of our brethren in the country, some one of the Committee of Correspondence, or a Selectman of such Town or the Town adjoining, where such hostilities shall commence, or shall be expected to commence, shall despatch couriers with written messages to the Selectmen, or Committees of Correspondence of the several Towns in the vicinity, with a written account of such matter, who shall despatch others to Committees more remote, until proper and sufficient assistance to be obtained; and that the expense of said couriers be defrayed by the County, until it shall be otherwise ordered by the Provincial Congress.

At a Meeting of Delegates from the several Towns and Districts in the County of Suffolk, held at Milton, on Friday, the 9th day of September, 1774:

Voted, That Doctor Joseph Warren, &c., be a Committee to wait on his Excellency the Governour, to inform him that this County are alarmed at the Fortifications making on Boston Neck, and to remonstrate against the same, and the repeated insults offered by the soldiery to persons passing and repassing into that Town, and to confer with him upon those subjects.

Attest, WILLIAM THOMPSON, Clerk.

To his Excellency THOMAS GAGE, Esquire, Captain-General and Commander-in-chief of his Majesty's Province of MASSACHUSETTS BAY.

May it please your Excellency:

The County of Suffolk being greatly, and, in their opinion, justly alarmed at the formidable appearanees of hostility now threatening his Majesty's good subjects of this County, and more particularly of the Town of Boston, the loyal and faithful capital of this Province, beg leave to address your Excellency, and represent, that the apprehensions of the people are more especially increased by the dangerous design now carrying into execution, of repairing and manning the Fortification at the south entrance of the Town of Boston, which, when completed, may, at any time, be improved to aggravate the miseries of that already impoverished and distressed City, by intercepting the wonted and necessary intercourse between the Town and Country, and compel the wretched inhabitants to the most ignominious state of humiliation and vassalage, by depriving them of the necessary supplies of provision, for which they are chiefly dependent on that communication We have been informed, that your Excellency, in consequence of the application of the Selectmen of Boston, has, indeed, disavowed any intention to injure the Town in your present manœuvres, and expressed your purpose to be for the security of the Troops and his Majesty's subjects in the Town. We are at a loss to guess, may it please your Excellency, from whence your want of confidence in the loyal and orderly people of this County could originate; a measure so formidable, carried into execution from a pre-conceived though causeless jealousy of the insecurity of his Majesty's Troops and subjects in the Town, deeply wounds the loyalty, and is an additional injury to the faithful subjects of this County, and affords them a strong motive for this application. We therefore entreat your Excellency to desist from your design assuring your Excellency that the people of this County are by no means disposed to injure his Majesty's Troops. They think themselves aggrieved and oppressed by the late Acts of Parliament, and are resolved, by Divine assistance, never to submit to them; but have no inclination to commence a war with his Majesty's Troops, and beg leave to observe to your Excellency, that the ferment now excited in the minds of the people, is occasioned by some late transactions: by seizing the Powder in the Arsenal at Charlestown; by withholding the Powder lodged in the Magazine of the Town of Boston, from the legal proprietors; insulting, beating, and abusing, passengers to and from the Town by the soldiery, in which they have been encouraged by some of their officers; putting the people in fear, and menacing them in their nightly patrolle into the neighbouring Town, and more particularly by the fortifying the sole avenue by land to the Town of Boston,

In duty, therefore, to his Majesty and to your Excellency, and for the restoration of order and security to this County, we, the Delegates from the several Towns in this County, being commissioned for this purpose, beg your Excellency's attention to this our humble and faithful Address, assuring you that nothing less than an immediate removal of the Ordnance, and restoring the entrance into the Town to its former state, and an effectual stop of all insults and abuses in future, can place the inhabitants of this County in that state of peace and tranquillity in which every free subject ought to live.

His Excellency was waited on to know if he would receive the Committee with the above written Address, but desiring he might have a copy of it in a private way, that so when he received it from the Committee, he might have an answer prepared for them; he was accordingly furnished with a copy. His Excellency then declared that he would receive the Committee on Monday, at 12 o'clock.

Saturday, September 10, 1774.

The Congress taking the foregoing into consideration,

Resolved unanimously, That this Assembly deeply feels the suffering of their countrymen in the Massachusctts Bay, under the operation of the late unjust, cruel, and oppressive Acts of the British Parliament; that they most thoroughly approve the wisdom and fortitude with which opposition to these wicked Ministerial measures has hitherto been conducted, and they earnestly recommend to their brethren a perseverance in the same firm and temperate conduct, as expressed in the Resolutions determined upon at a meeting of the Delegates for the County of Suffolk, on Tuesday the 6th instant, trusting that the effect of the united efforts of North America in their behalf, will carry such conviction to the British Nation, of the unwise, unjust, and ruinous policy of the present Administration, as quickly to introduce better men and wiser measures.

Resolved unanimously, That contributions from all the Colonies for supplying the necessities, and alleviating the distresses of our brethren at Boston, ought to be continued, in such manner, and so long as their occasions may require.

Ordered, That a copy of the above Resolutions be transmitted to Boston by the President.

Ordered, That these Resolutions, together with the Resolutions of the County of Suffolk, be published in the newspapers.

The Committee appointed to examine and report the several Statutes which affect the Trade and Manufactures of the Colonies, brought in their Report, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Adjourned till Monday morning.

Monday, September 19, 1774, A. M.

The Congress met according to adjournment.

The Report brought in on Saturday, being read, as follows :

* * * * *

Ordered, That the same be referred to the Committee appointed to state the Rights of the Colonies, &c., to which Committee the Honourable Thomas Cushing, Patrick Henry, and Thomas Mifflin, Esquires, were added.

Adjourned from day to day till Thursday.

Thursday, September 22, 1774.

The Congress met according to adjournment.

Upon motion,

Resolved unanimously, That the Congress request the Merchants and others in the several Colonies, not to send to Great Britain any orders for Goods, and to direct the execution of all orders already sent, to be delayed or suspended, until the sense of the Congress on the means to be taken for the preservation of the liberties of America is made publick.

Ordered, That this Resolution be made publick by handbills, and by publishing it in the newspapers.

The Committee appointed to state the Rights of the Colonies, &c., having brought in a Report of the Rights, the same was read, and the consideration of it referred till Saturday next.

Ordered, That a copy of this Report be made out for each Colony.

Saturday, September 24, 1774, A. M.

The Congress entered upon the consideration of the Report referred to this day, and after some debate, upon motion,

Resolved, That the Congress do confine themselves, at present, to the consideration of such rights only as have been infringed by Acts of the British Parliament since the year 1763, postponing the further consideration of the general state of American rights to a future day.

Hereupon, the Committee appointed to state the rights, &c., brought in a Report of the infringements and violations of American rights, which being read - upon motion,

Resolved, That the consideration of this Report be referred till Monday, and that the Congress in the mean while deliberate on the means most proper to be pursued for a restoration of our rights.

After some debate on that subject, the Congress adjourned.

Monday, September 26, 1774, A. M.

The Congress met according to adjournment.

John Herring, Esquire, a Deputy from Orange County, in the Colony of New-York, appeared this morning and took his seat as a Delegate for that Colony.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the means, &c., and after several hours spent thereon, it was referred till to-morrow, to which time the Congress was adjourned.

Tuesday, September 27, 1774, A. M.

The Congress met according to adjournment, and resuming the consideration of the means most proper to be used for a restoration of American rights,

Resolved unanimously, That from and after the 1st day of December next, there be no importation into British America from Great Britain or Ireland, of any Goods, Wares, or Merchandises whatsoever, or from any other place, of any such Goods, Wares, or Merchandises, as shall have been exported from Great Britain or Ireland, and that no such Goods, Wares, or Merchandises imported after the said 1st day of December next, be used or purchased.

Adjourned till to-morrow.

[Mr. Galloway submitted the following motion and Plan, on Wednesday, the 28th of September:

Resolved, That this Congress will apply to his Majesty for a redress of grievances, under which his faithful subjects in America labour, and assure him, that the Colonies hold in abhorrence the idea of being considered independent communities on the British Government, and most ardently desire the establishment of a political union, not only among themselves, but with the mother state, upon those principles of safety and freedom which are essential in the constitution of all free Governments, and particularly that of the British Legislature. And as the Colonies from their local circumstances cannot be represented in the Parliament of Great Britain, they will humbly propose to his Majesty, and his two Houses of Parliament, the following Plan, under whom the strength of the whole Empire may be drawn together on any emergency; the interests of both countries advanced; and the rights and liberties of America secured:

A Plan for a proposed Union between Great Britain and the Colonies of New-Hampshire, the Massachusetts Bay, Rhode-Island, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, the three lower Counties on the Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia.

That a British and American Legislature, for regulating the administration of the general affairs of America, be proposed and established in America, including all the said Colonies; within, and under which Government, each Colony shall retain its present Constitution and powers of regulating and governing its own internal police in all cases whatever.

That the said Government be administered by a President General to be appointed by the King, and a Grand Council to be chosen by the Representatives of the people of the several Colonies in their respective Assemblies, once in every three years.

That the several Assemblies shall choose Members for the Grand Council in the following proportions, viz:

New-Hampshire ,		Delaware Counties ,	***
Massachusetts Bay ,		Maryland ,	***
Rhode-island ,		Virginia ,	***
Connecticut ,		North Carolina ,	***
New-York ,		South Carolina ,	***
New-Jersey ,		Georgia ,	***
Pennsylvania ,	***

Who shall meet at the City of * * * * * for the first time, being call by the President General, as soon as conveniently may be after his appointment.

That there shall be a new election of Members for the Grand Council every three years; and on the death, removal, or resignation of any Member, his place shall be supplied by a new choice at the next sitting of Assembly of the Colony he represented.

That the Grand Council shall meet once in every year if they shall think it necessary, and oftener, if occasions shall require, at such time and place as they shall adjourn to at the last preceding meeting, or as they shall be called to meet at, by the President General on any emergency.

That the Grand Council shall have power to choose their Speaker, and shall hold and exercise all the like rights, liberties, and privileges as are held and exercised by and in the House of Commons of Great Britain.

That the President General shall hold his office during the pleasure of the King, and his assent shall be requisite to all Acts of the Grand Council, and it shall be his office and duty to cause them to be carried into execution.

That the President General, by and with the advice and consent of the Grand Council, hold and exercise all the Legislative rights, powers, and authorities, necessary for regulating and administering all the general police and affairs of the Colonies, in which Great Britain and the Colonies, or any of them, the Colonies in general, or more than one Colony, are in any manner concerned, as well civil and criminal as commercial.

That the said President General and Grand Council be an inferiour and distinct branch of the British Legislature, united and incorporated with it for the aforesaid general purposes; and that any of the said general regulations may originate, and be formed and digested, either in the Parliament of Great Britain or in the said Grand Council; and being prepared, transmitted to the other for their approbation or dissent; and that the assent of both shall be requisite to the validity of all such general Acts and Statutes.

That in time of war, all Bills for granting aids to the Crown, prepared by the Grand Council, and approved by the President General, shall be valid and passed into a law without the assent of the British Parliament.]

Wednesday and Thursday being taken up in the consideration and debates on the means, &c., the Congress met on Friday, 30th September - and upon the question,

Resolved, That from and after the 10th day of September, 1775, the exportation of all Merchandise and every commodity whatsoever to Great Britain, Ireland, and the West Indies, ought to cease, unless the grievances of America are redressed before that time.

Agreed, That Mr. Cushing, Mr. Low, Mr. Mifflin, Mr. Lee, and Mr. Johnson, be a Committee to bring in a plan for carrying into effect the Non-Importation, Non-Consumption, and Non-Exportation resolved on.

Saturday, October 1, 1774.

Simon Boerum, Esquire, appeared in Congress as a Deputy from King's County in the Colony of New-York, and produced the credentials of his election, which being read and approved, he took his seat as a Delegate for that Colony.

The Congress, resuming the consideration of the means, &c.; upon motion,

Resolved, unanimously, That a loyal Address to his Majesty be prepared, dutifully requesting the Royal attention to the grievances that alarm and distress his Majesty's faithful subjects in North America, and entreating his Majesty's gracious interposition for the removal of such grievances; thereby to restore between Great Britain and the Colonies that harmony so necessary to the happiness of the British Empire, and so ardently desired by all America.

Agreed, That Mr. Lee, Mr. J. Adams, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Henry, and Mr. J. Rutledge, be a Committee to prepare an Address to his Majesty.

Monday, October 3, 1774.

The Congress met according to adjournment, and after some debate,

Resolved unanimously That it be an Instruction to the Committee, who are appointed to draw up an Address to the King: Whereas Parliamentary taxes on America have been laid, on pretence of defraying the expenses of Government, and supporting the administration of justice, and defending, protecting, and securing the Colonies. That they do assure his Majesty, that the Colonies have or will make ample provision for defraying all the necessary expenses of supporting Government, and the due administration of justice in the respective Colonies; that the Militia, if put on a proper footing, would be amply sufficient for their defence in time of peace; that they are desirous to put it on such a footing immediately; and that in case of war, the Colonies are ready to grant supplies for raising any further forces that may be necessary.

The remainder of this day and the day following was taken up in deliberating and debating on matters proper to be contained in the Address to his Majesty.

Wednesday, October 5, 1774.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the subject in debate yesterday, and after some time spent thereon,

Resolved, That the Committee appointed to prepare an Address to his Majesty, be instructed to assure his Majesty that in case the Colonies shall be restored to the state they were in at the close of the late war, by abolishing the system of laws and regulations for raising a revenue in America for extending the powers of Courts of Admiralty for the trial of persons beyond sea for crimes committed in America - for affecting the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay and for altering the Government, and extending the limits of Canada, the jealousies which have been occasioned by such Acts and Regulations of Parliament, will be removed, and commerce again restored.

An Address from William Goddard to the Congress was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Thursday, October 6, 1774.

The Congress met according to adjournment, and resumed the consideration of the means proper to be used for a restoration of American rights. During the debate, an Express from Boston arrived with a Letter from the Committee of Correspondence, dated the 29th of September, which was laid before the Congress.

In this the Committee inform the Congress, that they "expected some regard would have been paid to the Petitions presented to their Governour, against fortifying their Town in such a manner as can be accounted for only upon the supposition that the Town and Country are to be treated by the soldiery as declared enemies - that the entrenchments upon the Neck are nearly completed - that Cannon are mounted at the entrance of the Town - that it is currently reported, that Fortifications are to be erected on Corse Hill, Beacon Hill, and Fort Hill, &c., so that the Fortifications, with the ships in the Harbour may absolutely command every avenue to the Town both by sea and land - that a number of Cannon, the property of a private gentleman, were a few days ago seized and taken from his wharf, by order of the General - that from several circumstances mentioned in the Letter, there is reason to apprehend that Boston is to be made and kept as a garrisoned Town - that from all they can hear from Britain, Administration is resolved to do all in their power to force them to a submission - that when the Town is enclosed, it is apprehended the inhabitants will be held as hostages for the submission of the Country, they apply therefore to the Congress for advice how to act - that, if the Congress advise to quit the Town, they obey - if it is judged that by maintaining their ground they can better serve the publick cause, they will not shrink from hardship and

"danger - finally, that as the late Acts of Parliament have made it impossible that there should be a due administration of justice, and all law therefore must be suspended that as the Governour has by Proclamation prevented the meeting of the General Court, they therefore request the advice of the Congress."

Ordered, That this Letter be taken into consideration to-morrow morning.

The Congress then resumed the consideration of the means, &c.

Resolved, That the Committee appointed to prepare the form of an Association, be directed to adopt the following clause, viz: - That from and after the 1st day of December next, no Molasses, Coffee, or Pimento from the British Plantations or from Dominica, or Wines from Madeira and the Western Islands, or foreign Indigo, be imported into these Colonies.

Friday, October 7, 1774.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the Letter from the Committee of Correspondence in Boston, and after some debate,

Resolved, That a Committee be appointed to prepare a Letter to his Excellency General Gage, representing "that the Town of Boston, and Province of Massachusetts Bay are considered by all America as suffering in the common cause for their noble and spirited opposition to oppressive Acts of Parliament calculated to deprive us of our most sacred rights and privileges." Expressing our concern, that while the Congress are deliberating on the most peaceable means for restoring American liberty, and that harmony and intercourse which subsisted between us and the Parent Kingdom, so necessary to both, his Excellency, as they are informed, is raising Fortifications round the Town of Boston, thereby exciting well-grounded jealousies in the minds of his Majesty's faithful subjects therein, that he means to cut off all communication between them and their brethren in the country, and reduce them to a state of submission to his will, and that the shirkers under his Excellency's command are frequently violating private property, and offering various insults to the people, which must irritate their minds, and if not put a stop to, involve all America in the horrors of a civil war. To entreat his Excellency from the assurance we have of the peaceable disposition of the inhabitants of the Town of Boston and of the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, to discontinue his Fortifications, and that a free and safe communication be restored and continued between the Town of Boston and the Country, and prevent all injuries on the part of his Troops, until his Majesty's pleasure shall be known after the measures now adopting shall have been laid before him.

Mr. Lynch, Mr. S. Adams, and Mr. Pendleton, are appointed a Committee to prepare a Letter agreeable to the foregoing Resolution.

Saturday, October 8, 1774.

The Congress resumed the consideration of the Letter from Boston, and upon motion,

Resolved, That this Congress approve the opposition of the inhabitants of the Massachusetts Bay, to the execution of the late Acts of Parliament; and if the same shall be attempted to be carried into execution by force, in such case all America ought to support them in their opposition.

Monday, October 10, 1774.

The Congress, resuming the consideration of the Letter from Boston,

Resolved, unanimously, That it is the opinion of this body that the removal of the people of Boston into the Country, would be, not only extremely difficult in the execution, but so important in its consequences, as to require the utmost deliberation before it is adopted; but, in case the Provincial Meeting of that Colony should judge it absolutely necessary, it is the opinion of the Congress, that all America ought to contribute towards recompensing them for the injury they may thereby sustain; and it will be recommended accordingly.

Resolved, That the Congress recommend to the inhabitants of the Colony of the Massachusetts Bay, to submit to a suspension of the administration of justice, where it cannot be procured in a legal and peaceable manner under the rules of their present Charter, and the Laws of the Colony founded thereon.

Resolved unanimously, That every person and persons whomsoever, who shall take, accept, or act under any commission or authority, in any wise derived from the Act passed in the last session of Parliament changing the form of Government, and violating the Charter of the Province of Massachusetts Bay, ought to be held in detestation and abhorrence by all good men, and considered as the wicked tools of that despotism which is preparing to destroy those rights which God, nature, and compact, have given to America.

The Committee brought in a draught of a Letter to General Gage, and the same being read and amended, was ordered to be copied, and to be signed by the President in behalf of the Congress.

Tuesday, October 11, 1774.

A copy of the Letter to General Gage was brought into Congress, and, agreeable to order, signed by the President, and is as follows:

Philadelphia, October 10, 1774.

"SIR: The Inhabitants of the Town of Boston have informed us, the Representatives of his Majesty's faithful subjects in all the Colonies from Nova Scotia to Georgia, that the Fortifications erecting within that Town, the frequent invasions of private property, and the repeated insults they receive from the Soldiery have given them great reason to suspect a plan is formed very destructive to them, and tending to overthrow the liberties of America,

"Your Excellency cannot be a stranger to the sentiments of America with respect to the Acts of Parliament, under the execution of which those unhappy people are oppressed, the approbation universally expressed of their conduct, and the determined resolution of the Colonies, for the preservation of their common rights to unite in their opposition to those Acts. In consequence of these sentiments, they have appointed us the guardians of their rights and liberties; and we are under the deepest concern that whilst we are pursuing every dutiful and peaceable measure to procure a cordial and effectual reconciliation between Great Britain and the Colonies, your Excellency should proceed in a manner that bears so hostile an appearance, and which even those oppressive Acts do not warrant.

"We entreat your Excellency to consider what a tendency this conduct must have to irritate and force a free people, however well disposed to peaceable measures, into hostilities, which may prevent the endeavours of this Congress to restore a good understanding with our parent state, and may involve us in the horrors of a civil war.

"In order therefore to quiet the minds and remove the reasonable jealousies of the people, that they may not be driven to a state of desperation, being fully persuaded of their pacifick disposition towards the King's Troops, could they be assured of their own safety, we hope sir, you will discontinue the Fortifications in and about Boston; prevent any further invasions of private property; restrain the irregularities of the Soldiers; and give orders that the communication between the Town and Country may be open, unmolested, and free.

"Signed by order, and in behalf of the General Congress, PEYTON RANDOLPH, President."

As the Congress have given General Gage an assurance of the peaceable disposition of the people of Boston and the Massachusetts Bay,

Resolved, unanimously, That they be advised still to conduct themselves peaceably towards his Excellency General Gage, and his Majesty's Troops now stationed in the Town of Boston, far as can possibly be consistent with their immediate safety and the security of the Town; avoiding and discountenancing every violation of his Majesty's property, or any insult to his Troops, and that they peaceably and firmly persevere in the line they are now conducting themselves; on the defensive,

Ordered, That a copy of the foregoing Resolve, and of that passed on Saturday, and the three passed yesterday, be made out, and that the President enclose them in a Letter to the Committee of Correspondence for the Town of Boston, being the sentiments of the Congress on the matters referred to them by the Committee, in their Letter of the 29th of September last.

Resolved unanimously, That a Memorial be prepared to the people of British America, stating to them the necessity of a firm, united, and invariable observation of the measures recommended by the Congress, as they tender the invaluable rights and liberties derived to them from the Laws and Constitution of their Country.

Also that an Address be prepared to the People of Great Britain.

Mr. Lee, Mr. Livingston, and Mr. Jay, are appointed a Committee to prepare a draught of the Memorial and Address.

Wednesday, October 12, 1774.

The Congress met according to adjournment

The Committee appointed to bring in a plan for carrying into effect the Non-Importation, Non-Consumption, and Non-Exportation Agreement, brought in a Report, which was read:

Ordered, That the same lie on the table for the perusal of the Members.

The Congress then resumed the Consideration of the Rights and Grievances of these Colonies, and after deliberating on the subject this and the following day, adjourned till Friday.

Friday, October 14, 1774.

The Congress met according to adjournment, and resuming the consideration of the subject under debate, came into the following Resolutions:

Whereas, since the close of the last war, the British Parliament, claiming a power of right to bind the people of America, by statute, in all cases whatsoever, hath, in some Acts, expressly imposed taxes on them, and in others, under various pretences, but in fact for the purpose of raising a revenue, hath imposed rates and duties payable in these Colonies, established a Board of Commissioners, with unconstitutional powers, and extended the jurisdiction of Courts of Admiralty, not only for collecting the said duties, but for the trial of causes merely arising within the body of a County:

And whereas, in consequence of other Statutes, Judges, who before held only estates at will in their offices, have been made dependent on the Crown alone for their salaries, and Standing Armies kept in times of peace: And it has lately been resolved in Parliament, that by force of a Statute, made in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, Colonists may be transported to England, and tried there upon accusations for treason, and misprisions, or concealments of treasons committed in the Colonies, and by a late Statute, such trials have been directed in cases therein mentioned:

And whereas, in the last session of Parliament, three Statutes were made, one, entituled "An Act to discontinue, in such manner, and for such time, as are therein mentioned, the landing and discharging, lading or shipping of "Goods, Wares, and Merchandise, at the Town, and within "the Harbour of Boston, in the Province of Massachusetts Bay, in North America;" another, entituled "An Act "for the better regulating the Government of the "Province "of Massachusetts Bay, in New England; and another, "entituled "An Act for the impartial administration of "Justice in the cases of persons questioned for any act done "by them in the execution of the law, or for the suppression "of riots and tumults in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay, in New England;" and another Statute was then made "for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec," &c. All which statutes are impolitick, unjust, and cruel, as well as unconstitutional, and most dangerous and destructive of American rights:

And whereas, Assemblies have been frequently dissolved, contrary to the rights of the people, when they attempted to deliberate on grievances; and their dutiful, humble, loyal, and reasonable Petitions to the Crown for redress, have been repeatedly treated with contempt by his Majesty's Ministers of State:

The good people of the several Colonies of New-Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New-York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, New-Castle, Kent, and Sussex, on Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, justly alarmed at these arbitrary proceedings of Parliament and Administration, have severally elected, constituted, and appointed Deputies to meet and sit in General Congress, in the City of Philadelphia, in order to obtain Such establishment as that their religion, laws, and liberties may not be subverted: Whereupon the Deputies so appointed being now assembled, in a full and free representation of these Colonies, taking into their most serious consideration the best means of attaining the ends aforesaid, do, in the first place, as Englishmen, their ancestors in like cases have usually done, for asserting and vindicating their rights and liberties, declare,

That the inhabitants of the English Colonies in North America, by the immutable laws of nature, the principles of the English Constitution, and the several Charters or Compacts, have the following Rights:

Resolved, N. C. D. 1. That they are entitled to life, liberty, and property, and they have never ceded to any sovereign power whatever a right to dispose of either without their consent.

Resolved, N. C. D. 2. That our ancestors, who first settled these Colonies, were at the time of their emigration from the mother country, entitled to all the rights, liberties, and immunities of free and natural born subjects, within the Realm of England.

Resolved, N. C. D. 3. That by such emigration they by no means forfeited, surrendered, or lost any of those rights, but that they were, and their descendants now are, entitled to the exercise and enjoyment of all such of them, as their local and other circumstances enable them to exercise and enjoy.
